The record indicates that these Management Analysts are within a single career ladder ranging from GS-5 to GS-13, with Analysts at the GS-11, 12, and 13 levels considered "senior analysts", and with those at the GS-5, 7, and 9 levels considered "junior analysts." They are engaged in the same general overall duties, performing various organizational studies involving work flow, work analysis and resource analysis pursuant to the direction of the Director of the Office of Management Organization, with the senior analysts performing more complex assignments as well as acting as "team leaders" when teams are utilized. Recommendations contained in the organizational studies may result in new organizational structures, new work procedures, or changes in staffing patterns. The record reflects that these Analysts' studies and resulting recommendations are developed within generally established policies and guidelines and that they are implemented only after review and approval by higher management authority. In this regard, the record indicates that the senior management analysts may be present during such review and approval sessions for the purpose of supporting, justifying, and/or clarifying their recommendations. At times, the management analysts herein may also be involved in the implementaion of their recommendations after approval, but the evidence establishes that such implementation, which may include the teaching of new work procedures to employees, does not proceed without the assurance that higher management is in accord with the implementation plan. Certain senior Management Analysts may also brief representatives of labor organizations at the PTO with respect to their study or implementation activities but, it appears from the record, that they do not have the authority to change implementation plans previously approved by higher management based on any labor organization comments made at such briefing meetings.

Aside from their general duties described above, the record reveals that certain senior Management Analysts also have or have had other individual duties. Thus, for example, from approximately April 1975, through April 1976, Bain was involved in writing certain procedures for the implementation of the Privacy Act at the PTO. However, he does not have an ongoing assignment in this area, and the record characterizes the assignment in the particular instance as a "once in a lifetime" assignment. On the other hand, Turowski spends approximately 75 percent of her time in the implementation of the Patent Cooperation Treaty (hereinafter called PCT) a world-wide, although as yet a nonoperational, agreement to harmonize the formalities of Patent applications. In this regard, the record reveals that in the past two years, she has attended two international conferences concerning the form and implementation of the PCT as one of three United States delegates. However, the record reveals also that the decision as to what the United States position would be at the conferences in which she had certain input was developed prior to being presented at the conferences with all position papers submitted to higher management authority for review.

The record indicates also that the Office of Management Organization and, more specifically, Primovich, has been delegated the authority to coordinate the acquisition and placement of copying machines within the PTO. Thus, any office within the PTO wishing to obtain new copying equipment funnels its request through Primovich who conducts a copier evaluation study based on generally established criteria, including cost and volume or projected volume, and then either recommends a particular copier or denies the request based on his delegated authority. However, if he is going to deny such a request, or has uncertainties, he generally consults with the Director of his office. An approved request is sent over Primovich's signature to the PTO's Procurement Office who handles the purchase order. However, it appears that the decision to acquire certain additional copying machines for use within the PTO was made by persons other than Primovich.

Under all of the circumstances herein, I find that none of the Management Analysts at issue are management officials within the meaning of the Order. Thus, in my view, the evidence fails to establish that such employees have the authority to make, or influence effectively, PTO policies with respect to personnel, procedures, or programs. Rather, I find that in their various job functions they serve as experts or resource persons rendering resource information or recommendations with respect to the implementation of existing policies. 10/ Nor do I find that their involvement in recommendations concerning PTO staffing patterns warrants their exclusion from the POPA's exclusively recognized unit as employees engaged in non-clerical Federal personnel work within the meaning of Section 10(b)(2) of the Order. 11/ In addition, I find that the Management Analysts herein are not confidential employees. 12/ Thus, 12/ See Virginia Air National Guard Headquarters, cited above, at footnote 4. In that decision, the Assistant Secretary held that employees who merely have access to personnel or statistical information would not be deemed to be confidential employees within his definition of the term.

while these employees may have access to various "confidential" records if needed and may be privy to contemplated staffing and/or general disciplinary problems of line management because of their rapport with such managers, the record clearly establishes that their studies do not directly concern labor relations matters, and that it is not part of their designated duties to act in a confidential capacity with respect to any specific labor relations matters. 13/

Frank S. Abate, Personnel Psychologist, GS-108-12, Office of Personnel

The PTO asserts that Abate is a management official, confidential employee, and/or an employee engaged in Federal personnel work other than in a purely clerical capacity and should, therefore, be excluded from the POPA's unit.

The record indicates that Abate, who works under the general supervision of the Employment and Classification Officer within the PTO's Office of Personnel, has responsibilities in two general areas: (1) implementing the PTO's Alcohol and Drug Abuse Program, and (2) designing and conducting attitudinal surveys for the purpose of improving employee morale and motivation. In carrying out these responsibilities, he provides counseling for employees with behavioral problems, has access to employee personnel files, and interacts with PTO Personnel Specialists in determining how to deal with specific problem employees. Thus, the record reveals that if the PTO's Personnel Office suspects that there is an emotional or medical problem behind a disciplinary problem, Abate is asked to investigate the situation and that the PTO's Personnel Specialists generally check with Abate prior to taking disciplinary action against an employee to ascertain whether the employee has "unique problems". Moreover, the record reflects that Abate is privy to essentially the same personnel related information that Personnel Specialists within the PTO's Office of Personnel are privy to.

Under these circumstances, I find that Abate is engaged in non-clerical Federal personnel work for the PTO. As Section 10(b)(2) of the Order specifically excludes employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity from units of exclusive recognition, 13/ Although, in its post hearing brief, the PTO asserted also "that the official duties of these employees on behalf of agency management are such that their inclusion in a bargaining unit results in a conflict or apparent conflict of interest as contemplated by Section 1(b) of the Order", it is noted that Section 1(b) of the Order refers to a conflict of interest regarding participation in the management of a labor organization, and does not preclude membership in such an organization and inclusion within an exclusively recognized unit.

I shall exclude Abate from the POPA's unit. 14/

Henry C. Rosicky, Jr., Information Systems Analyst, GS-301-13 and Alvin L. Dorsey, Gladys B. Dates, Theodore S. Miseveth and Miguel B. Perez, Program Analysts, GS-345-12, 11, and 7, Program Measurement System Staff 15/

The PTO asserts that the above named employees are management officials and/or confidential employees and should, therefore, be excluded from the POPA's exclusively recognized unit.

Despite their different position titles, the record indicates that these employees perform essentially the same duties, sometimes operating as a team, under common supervision with the only distinctions being the complexity of matters assigned to each and the degree of supervision required, although all are "actively" supervised. Among their duties, is the implementation throughout the PTO of the Program Measurement System, a time reporting system, developed and introduced into the PTO by the PTO's Assistant Commissioner for Administration, which records all specific tasks performed by individual employees, the time spent performing these tasks, the quantity of acceptable output, and the percentage of the employees' quantitative performance against the established production standard for the tasks. In this regard, the record reflects that the implementation of the Program Management System evolves from generally established policies developed by the Assistant Commissioner from which these employees may not substantially deviate without the approval of their supervisor and/or the chain of command in the affected area. The record also indicates that these employees perform manpower utilization studies, which are used to determine whether available manpower is sufficient to perform desired tasks, and work measurement studies which, in effect, are time studies from which specific quantitative production standards for given tasks are established. With respect to the preparation of these studies, the evidence establishes that generally established guidelines and procedures are followed.

14/ In view of the disposition herein, I find it unnecessary to decide whether Abate is a management official and/or a confidential employee.

15/ Prior to the hearing in this matter these employees were located within the Evaluation Division of the Office of Program Planning and Evaluation. However, a reorganization at the PTO, which apparently occurred while the instant hearing was in progress, resulted in the abolition of the Office of Program Planning and Evaluation. Although the former Evaluation Division is now called the Program Measurement System Staff, the record reflects that the duties of of these employees as described at the hearing herein did not change as a result of the reorganization.

Moreover, all final reports and recommendations arising from such studies 16/ are reviewed by these employees' supervisor, who may make substantive content changes in them, and are submitted to the managers in the areas studied, over the supervisor's signature, with the final determination of acceptance or rejection of recommendations contained therein made by higher management authority.

Based on the foregoing circumstances, I find that the Information Systems Analyst and the Program Analysts involved herein are not management officials within the meaning of the Order. Thus, in my view, the evidence fails to establish that these employees have the authority to make, or influence effectively, PTO policies with respect to personnel, procedures, or programs. Rather, I find that in their various job functions they serve as experts or resource persons rendering resource information or recommendations with respect to existing policies.

As noted above, the Activity asserts also that these employees are confidential employees. However, while the record indicates that they have access to certain personnel records and other statistical "confidential" information concerning employee productivity matters in connection with specific studies, the evidence does not establish that these employees serve in a confidential capacity to an individual or individuals involved in the formulation and effectuation of management policies in the field of labor relations. As noted above, employees who merely have access to personnel or statistical information will not be deemed to be confidential employees. Accordingly, I conclude that these employees should not be excluded from the POPA's exclusively recognized unit on this basis. 17/

Vaughan L. Beucler, Program Analyst, GS-345-14, Office of Planning and Evaluation

The PTO asserts that Beucler is a management official and/or a confidential employee. Beucler is employed in the Office of Planning and Evaluation, a three person "sub-unit" in the Office of the Commissioner of Patents and Trademarks, which "sub-unit" receives its assignments from the Commissioner. This unit performs program planning and evaluation studies involving the various major activities at the PTO in order to arrive at long range objectives by which an integrated plan of action for future years for all organizational units may be developed. In this regard, the record indicates that reports and recommendations evolving from such studies may involve such matters as staffing patterns, work flow, position ceilings, overtime, automation, and productivity goals. However, the record reveals also that any of Beucler's reports which contain significant recommendations regarding policy matters are reviewed by his supervisor, the Director of the Office of Planning and Evaluation, who may make changes prior to their submission to the Commissioner. Moreover, in most instances, Beucler's supervisor, rather than Beucler himself, discusses Beucler's recommendations with the Commissioner and/or the managers of the operating units involved. 18/ Thus, the record characterizes Beucler's role as essentially one of analyzing, recommending, and justifying, through his supervisor, the recommendations he makes, with the final determination of acceptance or rejection being the prerogative of higher management authority.

16/ The record establishes that Miseveth and Perez, Program Analysts at the GS-7 level and characterized as "trainees" by their supervisor, have not prepared any reports containing recommendations concerning changes in the policies of the PTO.

17/ See also footnote 13, above.

Under these circumstances, I find that Beucler is not a management official within the meaning of the Order. Thus, in my view, the studies performed by Beucler do not, in effect, extend beyond that of an expert rendering resource information or recommendations with respect to the future policy issue in question. It is also clear that Beucler's role does not extend to the point of active participation as to what the future policy, in fact, will be. 19/ In addition, I find that Beucler is not a confidential employee. While the record indicates that Beucler may, at times, make certain reports and recommendations directly to the Commissioner and also has access to certain "confidential" information, including PTO budgetary positions and aggregate employee productivity records, the record reveals that his studies do not directly concern labor relations and that he does not act in a confidential capacity with respect to any labor relations matters. 20/ Rather, the evidence establishes merely that Beucler has learned of PTO labor relations matters through the PTO's "grapevine."

18/ The record reveals that Beucler will meet with the Commissioner himself to discuss his recommendations only when the topic in question is in an area in which he has "99 percent of the expertise" or when Beucler's supervisor is on vacation and Beucler is acting in his place.

19/ Cf. Department of Transportation, National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, A/SLMR No. 193.

20/ Cf. Department of the Army, Tooele Army Depot, cited above, at footnote 10, and Virginia National Guard Headquarters, cited above, at footnote 4.

Accordingly, I find that Beucler is neither a management official nor a confidential employee and should be included in the POPA's exclusively recognized unit.

ORDER

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the recognition granted to the Patent Office Professional Association on September 3, 1965, be, and it hereby is, amended to exclude: management officials, employees engaged in Federal personnel work other than in a purely clericial capacity, confidential employees, Trademark professionals, nonprofessionals, and supervisors as defined in the Order.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the unit sought to be clarified herein, located at the United States Patent and Trademark Office, in which exclusive recognition was granted on September 3, 1965, to the Patent Office Professional Association, be, and hereby is, clarified by including in the said unit those employees or employee classifications set forth in Group A, attached hereto, and by excluding from said unit those employees or employee classifications set forth in Group B, attached hereto.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR
ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS
SUMMARY OF ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

U.S. ARMY MORTUARY,
OAKLAND ARMY BASE,
OAKLAND, CALIFORNIA
A/SLMR No. 857

The Petitioner, an employee of the Activity, sought the decertification of the Intervenor, American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1157, AFL-CIO, as the exclusive representative of a unit of all General Schedule and Wage Grade employees at the Activity. The Intervenor contended that there was a current negotiated multi-unit agreement covering employees in the exclusively represented unit which constituted a bar to the petition. The Petitioner and the Activity contended that the negotiated agreement terminated, insofar as it applied to the subject exclusively represented bargaining unit, as a consequence of a reorganization and transfer of the Activity from the Military Traffic Management Command, Western Area (MTMCWA), to the Casualty and Memorial Affairs Directorate, U.S. Army Adjutant General Center (TAGCEN), and that there is no agreement bar to the petition.

The Assistant Secretary, citing Defense Supply Agency, Defense Property Disposal Office, Aberdeen Proving Ground, Aberdeen, Md., FLRC No. 74A-22, found that as a consequence of the reorganization and transfer of the Activity from MTMCWA to TAGCEN, the latter became a "successor" employer. In this regard, the Assistant Secretary noted, among other things, that the exclusively recognized unit was transferred substantially intact and its appropriateness remained unimpaired in the gaining employer. The Assistant Secretary also found insufficient evidence that the successor agency promised to, or did, in fact, assume the existing negotiated agreement. In this latter regard, he noted that TAGCEN's conduct subsequent to the transfer of the Activity was pursuant to its duty as a successor to continue to accord recognition to the incumbent exclusive representative.

The Assistant Secretary decided, pursuant to the Rules and Regulations of the Federal Labor Relations Council, to refer the following major policy issue to the Council for its consideration:

> Whether the Assistant Secretary can find that in a successorship situation the agreement bar which existed pursuant to the predecessor's negotiated agreement with the exclusive representative may continue in effect after the reorganization so as to afford the successor employer and the exclusive representative a period of stability free from rival claims or other questions concerning majority status?

The Assistant Secretary stated that but for a possible conflict in policy, he would, for the purpose of maintaining labor relations stability following a reorganization where a successor employer emerges, allow the agreement bar which existed pursuant to the predecessor's negotiated agreement with the exclusive representative to continue in effect after the successor employer assumes control so as to afford the successor employer and exclusive representative a stable period free from the raising of questions concerning representation. The Assistant Secretary further stated that he would also allow the agreement bar to continue for the same period as would have been present had the gaining employer adopted the predecessor's agreement. Under such an approach, questions concerning representation could be raised only during the "open period" in the term of the predecessor's agreement.

ORDER REFERRING MAJOR POLICY ISSUE TO THE FEDERAL LABOR RELATIONS COUNCIL

Upon a petition duly filed under Section 6 of Executive Order 11491, as amended, a hearing was held before Hearing Officer Eric F. Norman. The Hearing Officer's rulings made at the hearing are free from prejudicial error and are hereby affirmed.

Upon the entire record in this case, including a brief filed by the Intervenor, American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1157, AFL-CIO, the Assistant Secretary finds:

The Petitioner, Walter D. Smith, an employee of the Activity, U.S. Army Mortuary, Oakland Army Base, Oakland, California, seeks the decertification of the Intervenor as the exclusive representative of employees of the Activity.

The record reveals that the Activity herein formerly was a component of the Military Traffic Management Command, Western Area, hereinafter called MTMCWA. At that time, the Intervenor was the exclusive representative of the certified unit composed of mortuary employees. 1/ In 1975, while the mortuary was still a component of MTMCWA, the latter and the Intervenor entered into a two-year negotiated agreement covering the mortuary unit and other units at the Oakland Army Base. 2/

Pursuant to a study conducted by the U.S. Army Adjutant General Center, hereinafter called TAGCEN, the Department of the Army transferred the ten employees of the Oakland Mortuary from MTMCWA to TAGCEN; however, the duty station of the employees remained at the Oakland Army Base. 3/

The Petitioner and the Activity assert that the transfer of the mortuary unit from MTMCWA to TAGCEN terminated the multi-unit collective bargaining agreement between MTMCWA and the Intervenor insofar as it applied to the mortuary unit. Hence, they argue that there was no agreement bar to the filing of a petition after February 15, 1976, the date on which the unit was transferred to TAGCEN. The Intervenor on the other hand, asserts that as TAGCEN is a successor employer there exists an agreement bar to the filing of a petition because the Executive Order requires the gaining command to adhere, insofar as practicable, to existing personnel policies and practices and matters affecting working conditions, maintain recognition, and to adhere to the terms of a negotiated

1/ The unit description reads: "Includes all General Schedule and Wage Grade employees engaged in receiving, reprocessing, and reshipment of remains returned from overseas, with the Memorial Division, WAMTMTS, OAB. Excluded are any management officials, supervisors, guards, and employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity."

2/ This agreement expired on April 20, 1977.

3/ After the transfer, the Intervenor filed a petition seeking to amend its certification by changing the name of the Activity to reflect the change in operational control. The petition was approved by the Regional Administrator, and an amendment of certification was issued on June 8, 1976. The unit description, as amended, reads:

> "Included: All General Schedule and Wage Grade employees of the mortuary function located at Oakland Army Base under the operational control of the Casualty and Memorial Affairs Directorate, the Adjutant General Center, Department of the Army, and, > Excluded: All management officials, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, guards, and supervisors as defined in the Order."

agreement, including dues withholding, to the maximum extent possible. The Intervenor argues that until the "successor" TAGCEN has fulfilled its bargaining obligation, the prior agreement should be honored in toto, until either its expiration in April 1977, or until a new agreement is negotiated.

At the hearing, all parties stipulated that the present unit is appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition because the included employees share a clear and identifiable community of interest and the unit promotes effective dealings and efficiency of operations. The parties further stipulated that, subsequent to the reorganization, the mortuary employees continue to work together, share common duties, report through the same supervisory chain of command, and are subject to uniform personnel policies and practices. Further, it was stipulated that TAGCEN continued to withhold union dues in accordance with the MTMCWA agreement. The record reveals that the area of initial consideration for merit promotions at the Oakland Army Base and the applicability of Base, Department of the Army and Department of Defense regulations also remained unchanged subsequent to the reorganization.

It appears from the record that, in addition to the change in the command structure, the following matters were altered by the transfer to TAGCEN: Command personnel regulations; supervision above the first level; payroll office and pay dates; job classification appeals; personnel responsible for making disciplinary decisions above first level; competitive area for reduction-in-force; channels for equal employment opportunity grievances; and the fact that the Civilian Personnel Office no longer applied the MTMCWA agreement to mortuary employees.

In connection with the facts present in this case, I note that the Federal Labor Relations Council in its decision in Defense Supply Agency, Defense Property Disposal Office, Aberdeen Proving Ground, Aberdeen, Maryland, FLRC No. 74A-22, determined that an agency or employing entity is a "successor" when: (1) the recognized unit is transferred substantially intact to the gaining employer; (2) the appropriateness of the unit remains unimpaired in the gaining employer; and (3) a question concerning representation is not timely raised as to the representative status of the incumbent labor organization.

I also note that the Council further held that while the gaining employer, as a "successor," assumes the same duty as the losing employer to grant recognition, this does not mean that the "successor" is required to adopt and be bound by any agreement which may have been entered into between the losing employer and the incumbent union. The Council reasoned that a contrary rule would impose upon the gaining employer an agreement entered into with a different employing entity having different objectives and different organizational and regulatory policies, disrupting the operating capabilities of the gaining employer and the accomplishment of its assigned mission. The Council stated, however, that the gaining employer nevertheless is enjoined under the Order to adhere, insofar as practicable, to the terms of the prior agreement, including dues withholding, and to adhere to existing personnel policies and matters affecting working conditions until the "successor" has fulfilled its bargaining obligation under the Order with the incumbent union.

Based on the record herein, I find that the Casualty and Memorial Affairs Directorate of the Adjutant General Center is a "successor" activity in that the recognized unit herein was transferred substantially intact to its jurisdiction and the appropriateness of the unit remained unimpaired in the gaining employer. 4/ I find also that TAGCEN's conduct subsequent to the transfer of the mortuary unit was in accordance with its duty as a "successor" activity to continue to accord recognition to the incumbent union and that there is insufficient evidence to show that as a "successor" activity it promised to assume, or did, in fact, assume the MTMCWA negotiated agreement.

In its Defense Supply Agency decision, cited above, the Council stated that where a successorship is established there is no requirement that a new secret ballot election be conducted since the election requirement in Section 10(a) was previously satisfied at the time the previous recognition was accorded. However, the Council went on to state that if, after a reorganization, a question concerning representation is duly raised by the employees or a rival labor organization, then, as provided in the Order, a new secret ballot election would be required. 5/ The Council also indicated that the gaining employer must also be able to initiate a representation election in order to resolve its doubts as to the representative status of the incumbent. The decision, however, does not set forth any specific time frame during which representational questions can be raised.

The Council's policy set forth in its Defense Supply Agency decision, which is binding on the Assistant Secretary, of allowing questions concerning representation to be raised by employees, rival labor organizations or the gaining employer immediately subsequent to the establishment of a successorship would appear to be inconsistent with another consideration noted by the Council i.e., the maintenance of stable labor relations during the transition period by requiring the "successor" employer to bargain with the incumbent union. Thus, it could be argued that allowing employees and rival labor organizations to raise representational questions during the transition period would have the effect of frustrating the efforts of the gaining employer and the incumbent union to reach an agreement by barring further negotiations until the representation question is resolved. However, as noted above, I am bound by the Council's policy set forth in the Defense Supply Agency decision.

4/ In reaching the above disposition, it was noted particularly that TAGCEN is a separate employing entity since both it and the Military Traffic Management Command are separate commands, with separate missions, functions, regulations and administration. Further, there was no evidence in the record to suggest that either Command, before or after the transfer, shared any common control or direction over their respective employees.

5/ See footnote 17 of the Council's decision in Defense Supply Agency, cited above.

But for a possible conflict in policy, I would, for the purpose of maintaining labor relations stability following a reorganization where a successor employer emerges, allow the agreement bar which existed pursuant to the precedessor's negotiated agreement with the exclusive representative to continue in effect after the successor employer assumes control so as to afford the successor employer and exclusive representative a stable period free from the raising of questions concerning representation. I would allow the agreement bar to continue for the same period as would have been present had the gaining employer adopted the predecessor's agreement. Under such an approach, questions concerning representation could be raised only during the "open period" in the term of the predecessor's agreement. 6/

Therefore, it is my view that this case raises the following major policy issue: Whether the Assistant Secretary can find that in a successorship situation the agreement bar which existed pursuant to the predecessor's negotiated agreement with the exclusive representative may continue in effect after the reorganization so as to afford the successor employer and the exclusive representative a period of stability free from rival claims or other questions concerning majority status?

In my judgment, the purposes of the Order will best be served by not permitting, within the period of the previous negotiated agreement, a questioning of the majority status of the incumbent union. All bar periods represent an accommodation in balancing the interest of employee freedom to choose representatives and the interest of stability in labor relations. The application of the agreement bar period to successorship situations will restore the predictability of periods when representation petitions may be filed. It will reduce administrative confusion in reorganizations; it will enable the gaining employer and incumbent representative to engage in long range planning free from unnecessary disruption; and it will promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. Under these circumstances, and pursuant to Section 2411.4 of the Rules and Regulations of the Federal Labor Relations Council, the above stated major policy issue is hereby referred to the Federal Labor Relations Council for its consideration.

6/ Under such a rule, since the predecessor's agreement was for a term of two years and became effective on April 29, 1975, the petition herein would be considered untimely. I have been advised administratively that the Petitioner herein filed a second petition, which is currently pending, during the open period of the predecessor's negotiated agreement.

SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY,
INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE,
SOUTHWEST REGION,
DALLAS, TEXAS
A/SLMR No. 858

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by the National Treasury Employees Union and National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter 91 (Complainant) alleging that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by unilaterally discontinuing the practice of flexible starting and quitting times at certain of its appellate branch offices. The Respondent, citing Plum Island Animal Disease Laboratory, Department of Agriculture, Greenport, N.Y., FLRC No. 71A-11 and Department of the Navy, Naval Plant Representative Office, Baltimore, Maryland, A/SLMR No. 486, among others, maintained that it was not obligated to bargain over a change in the starting and quitting times pursuant to Section 11(b) of the Order. It contended further that, assuming the issue to be a mandatory subject of bargaining, the Complainant waived its right to bargain when it entered into the parties' Multi-Regional Agreement in which Article 20 (Hours of Work) obligates the Respondent "to notify the [Complainant], as far in advance as possible" of any proposed change in the regular scheduled workweek which consists of five consecutive eight hour days, Monday through Friday. On the other hand, the Complainant, citing Office of Administrator, Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service, U.S. Department of Agriculture, FLRC No. 73A-36, among others, took the position that the issue involved is negotiable under Section 11(a) of the Order and that Article 20 did not waive its right to negotiate a change in starting and quitting times.

The Administrative Law Judge found that the Respondent had violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by unilaterally abolishing the optional starting and quitting times in certain of its regional appellate offices. In this regard, he noted the distinction between the Federal Labor Relations Council's decisions in Plum Island, above, and U.S. Department of Agriculture, above. Applying these decisions to the instant case he found insufficient evidence to establish that the starting and quitting times of the appellate regional offices are integrally related to and consequently determinative of the Respondent's staffing patterns. Thus, he found that the Respondent was obligated to negotiate with regard to any change in the flexible starting and quitting times. He also found insufficient evidence to establish that the Complainant had waived its right to negotiate changes in flexitime and, further, that Article 20 was only concerned with the maximum hours of work not the starting and quitting times. The Administrative Law Judge recommended, among other things, that the Respondent refrain from unilaterally changing flexitime without first notifying and negotiating with the Complainant.

In agreement with the Administrative Law Judge, the Assistant Secretary found that the Respondent's conduct herein violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order. Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary adopted the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendations, and ordered that the Respondent cease and desist from the conduct found violative of the Order and that it take certain affirmative actions, which included the return to the status quo ante.

DECISION AND ORDER

On January 21, 1977, Administrative Law Judge Burton S. Sternburg issued his Recommended Decision and Order in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had engaged in certain unfair labor practices and recommending that it cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative actions as set forth in the attached Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order. Thereafter, the Respondent and the Complainant filed exceptions and supporting briefs with respect to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order, and the Complainant filed an answering brief to Respondent's exceptions.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order and the entire record in this case, including the Respondent's and the Complainant's exceptions and supporting briefs and the Complainant's answering brief, I hereby adopt the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendations to the extent consistent herein. 1/

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 6(b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, and Section 203.26(b) of the Regulations, the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations hereby orders that the Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Southwest Region, Dallas, Texas, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Changing the work hours schedule of its employees without notifying the National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter 91, the exclusive representative of its employees, and affording such representative the opportunity to meet and confer, to the extent consonant with law and regulations, on the decision to effectuate such a change.

(b) In any like or related manner, interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights assured by Executive Order 11491, as amended.

2. Take the following affirmative actions in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of Executive Order 11491, as amended:

(a) Rescind the memoranda of April 14 and September 2, 1975, pertaining to changes in working hours and restore the work hours schedule in effect prior to April 14, 1975, in the appellate branch offices.

(b) Notify the National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter 91, of any intended change in the work hours schedule of unit employees and, upon request, meet and confer in good faith, to the extent consonant with law and regulations, on the decision to effectuate such a change.

(c) Post at its facilities in the Southwest Region of the Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix" on forms to be furnished by the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Regional Commissioner and shall be posted and maintained by him for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. The Regional Commissioner shall take reasonable steps to insure that such notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

1/ In its exceptions, the Complainant contended that, as part of the remedial order herein, the Respondent should be required to return to the status quo ante. I agree with the Complainant's contention. Thus, in my view, where, as here, there has been a unilateral change in terms and conditions of employment in violation of Section 19(a)(1) and (6) involving a subject matter within the purview of Section 11(a) of the Order, generally it will effectuate the purposes and policies of the Order to require that the Respondent reestablish the terms and conditions of employment in existence prior to the unilateral change and maintain such terms and conditions during the period in which the parties are engaged in bargaining with respect to the proposed change.

(d) Pursuant to Section 203.27 of the Regulations, notify the Assistant Secretary in writing within 30 days from the date of this order as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

Statement of the Case

Pursuant to a complaint filed on November 7, 1975, under Executive Order 11491, as amended, by the National Treasury Employees Union and NTEU Chapter 91, (hereinafter called the Union or Complainant), against the Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Southwest Region, (hereinafter called the Respondent or Activity), a Notice of Hearing on Complaint was issued by the Assistant Regional Director for the Kansas City, Missouri, Region on September 10, 1976.

The complaint alleges that the Respondent violated Sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Executive Order by virtue of its actions in unilaterally discontinuing "the practice of flexible working hours."

A hearing was held in the captioned matter on October 29, 1976, in New Orleans, Louisiana. All parties were afforded full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and to introduce evidence bearing on the issues involved herein. Subsequently, both parties filed post hearing briefs which have been duly considered. The Complainant also filed a motion to strike certain portions of Respondent's brief on the ground that they contained inaccurate matter. 1/

Upon the entire record, including my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following findings of fact, conclusions and recommendations.

Findings of Fact

The Union is the exclusive representative of a number of employees employed in the appellate branch offices of the Activity's Southwest Regional Office and a party to the Multi-Regional Agreement (MRA) negotiated in 1974 covering such employees.

The Southwest Regional Office's appellate branch offices are located in the cities of Dallas, Houston, New Orleans, Denver and Oklahoma City. Other than Oklahoma City, each of the unit employees in the appellate branch offices enjoyed several optional sets of flexible starting and quitting times. An employee could switch from one set of starting and quitting times to another set whenever daylight savings time started or ended. 2/

1/ Complainant's motion to strike is hereby denied as being without merit, since it erroneously presumes that triers of fact accept all citations of law and fact in briefs without further independent research.

2/ The employees were given their option of two or three starting times within a thirty minute period, i.e. 8 a.m., 8:15 a.m. or 8:30 a.m. Their respective quitting times would of course vary with their starting times.

Sometime during early April of 1975 the Respondent decided to abolish flexitime in the appellate branch offices. The decision to abolish flexitime was announced directly to the employees at meetings in the respective appellate branch offices. No advance notice was given to the Union of the aforementioned decision on flexitime. In fact the Union learned of Respondent's decision only through the medium of complaints from individual employees concerning same.

On April 4, 1975, Mr. Pilie, Acting President of NTEU Chapter 91, submitted a letter to Mr. Coppinger, Commissioner of the Southwest Region, wherein the Union requested negotiations on both the decision to abolish flexitime and its implementation. On April 7, the Chief of the New Orleans appellate branch office communicated directly with the employees in his office and requested their preference for one permanent starting time. On the basis of their respective responses, the starting time of 8:00 a.m. for all employees was eventually selected and announced. On April 10, 1975, Mr. Coppinger responded to Mr. Pilie's letter and requested a list of his proposals concerning the matter.

On April 14, 1975, Respondent, without any notification or discussion with the Union, unilaterally changed the starting hours at the Houston office. Thereafter, following the filing of an unfair labor practice charge by the Union predicated on the change in the Houston starting time, the parties entered into a settlement which called for, among other things, a withdrawal of the ULP charge.

On June 2, 1975, Mr. Pilie sent the Respondent his proposals on flexitime and also enclosed a Civil Service booklet thereon. Mr. Pilie made it clear in his June 2, 1975 letter that the Union would like to meet with the Respondent for purposes of discussing its proposals.

On August 1, 1975, without any prior discussions with the Union, Mr. Williams, Assistant Regional Commissioner, Appellate, wrote a letter to Mr. Pilie wherein he informed Mr. Pilie that effective September 2, 1975, the starting and quitting times would be unilaterally changed at the respective appellate branch offices in the Southwest Region. Also on August 1, 1975, Mr. Ellis, Chief, Southwest Regional Personnel Branch, wrote a letter to Mr. Pilie which was in response to Mr. Pilie's June 2, 1975 proposals on flexitime. In this letter Mr. Ellis informed the Union that > After carefully reviewing and considering your proposal, it is management's position that the Union has, through Article 20, Section 3, waived the right to negotiate changes to a regularly scheduled work week during the life of the Agreement. It is our position that hours of work was thoroughly explored and discussed during bargaining and the language of Article 20, Section 1, is the result.

> Questions of negotiability aside, however, we have studied your proposal carefully and believe it would be inadvisable to adopt such a system at this time. The core time you have proposed does not assure sufficient staff to provide the service we need for our clients in the latter part of the day.

On September 2, 1975, Respondent, without further discussion with the Union, changed the starting and quitting times as announced in its August 1, 1975 letter.

Article 20 of the Multi-Regional Agreement between the Union and the Respondent which is cited in Respondent's letter supra, and which is applicable to the employees involved herein, reads as follows:

HOURS OF WORK

Section 1.
The normal scheduled work week will consist of five (5) consecutive eight (8) hour days. Monday through Friday.

Section 2.
The Employer may establish special tours of duty not to exceed eight (8) hours a day or forty (40) hours a week to enable employees to take educational courses at their expense.

Section 3.
Prior to implementing a general change in any regularly scheduled work week, the Employer agrees to notify the Union, as far in advance as possible.

According to the record testimony, the above quoted provision of the Multi-Regional Agreement is tailored after the Second Multi-District Agreement between Respondent and the Union which covers the Respondent's employees working in various District Offices who are also represented by the Union. Both the first and second Multi-District Agreements contained similar Articles dealing with "Hours of Work." The only difference in the Articles for the years 1973 and 1974 appears in Section 3. Thus, in the 1973 Multi-District Agreement the Employer agrees to "consult" with the Union as far in advance as possible prior to implementing a change in any regularly scheduled work week. In the 1974 Multi-District Agreement the Employer agrees to "notify" rather than "consult." It is the "notify" which is included in the Multi-Regional Agreement involved in the instant proceedings. According to the record, "consult" was changed to "notify" in order avoid reaching a specific definition of the meaning of "consult" which at the time was being considered by the Federal Labor Relations Council in the context of a decision of the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations. Although the record sets forth the reasons for the change from "consult" to "notify," the record is almost barren of any evidence bearing on the meaning of Article 20, Hours of Work. In fact the only evidence concerning Article 20 appears in the deposition of Russell Bowden. According to Mr. Bowden, at the time the parties reached Article 20 Hours of Work in the negotiations leading up to the second Multi-District Agreement most of the contract had already been agreed upon. The Union proposed a section on variable time for working housewives. This was later abandoned when the negotiators realized that they had almost covered the complete contract and were at the end of negotiations. The parties thereupon, without any further discussion, agreed to incorporate the language from their earlier agreement and change "consult" in Section 3 of Article 20 to "notify." Subsequently, Article 20 of the 1974 Multi-District Agreement was incorporated into the Multi-Regional Agreement of 1974, again, without any meaningful discussion. Other than the foregoing there is no evidence in the record bearing on the meaning of Article 20, Hours of Work, as it applies to starting and quitting times.

With respect to the reasons for the unilateral change in flexitime, management witnesses testified that it was the intent of the Respondent to make the Appellate Offices' hours of work coincide with those in the District Office. Other than the foregoing, no probative evidence was introduced which would support Respondent's contention that the failure to change the flexitime schedules of the employees in the appellate offices would have a distinct or significant effect on the staffing requirements or operations of the Agency.

Discussion and Conclusions

Respondent takes the position that inasmuch as starting and quitting times are integrally related to "the numbers, types, and grades of positions or employees assigned to an organizational unit, work project or tour of duty," as set forth in Section 11(b) of the Order, it is under no obligation to bargain with the Union concerning its decision to change same. In support of its position in this regard, Respondent relies on the Federal Labor Relations Council's decision in Plum Island Animal Disease Laboratory, Department of Agriculture, FLRC No. 74A-11 (July 9, 1971). Respondent further argues that even assuming an obligation to bargain, Complainant waived any rights it may have had in relation thereto by virtue of Article 20 of the Multi-Regional Agreement which obligates the Respondent to only give notice of any proposed change in the regularly scheduled work week.

The Complainant, on the other hand, relying specifically on the Council decision in American Federation of Government Employees, National Joint Council of Food Inspection Locals and Office of the Administrator, Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service, U.S. Department of Agriculture, FLRC No. 73A-36 (Supplemental Decision (1975) Report No. 73), takes the position that starting and quitting times are negotiable subject matter under Section 11(a) of the Order; the Union did not waive its right to negotiate by signing the contract containing Article 20, Hours of Work; and that in any event, any possible waiver was nullified by a settlement in a prior unfair labor practice proceeding.

In Plum Island, supra, the Council found that a reduction in shifts from three to two andthe consequent change in the amount of employees on the remaining two shifts and tours of duty was integrally related to the staffing patterns of the agency and hence non-negotiable. Under Section 11(b) of the Order.

In the U.S. Department of Agriculture case, supra, the Council concluded that Union proposals concerning the basic workweek and the starting times for the agency's food inspectors "is clearly not excluded from the agency's obligation to negotiate under the 'staffing pattern' provisions of Section 11(b)." Citing an earlier decision in Federal Employees Metal Trades Council of Charleston and U.S. Naval Supply Center, Charleston, South Carolina, FLRC No. 71A-52 (November 24, 1972, Report No. 31), wherein an agency was also found obligated to bargain with a union concerning a union proposal on the basic workweek and hours of work of unit employees, the Council stated:

> In summary, therefore, as decided by the Council in Plum Island, Charleston, FLRC No. 71A-52, and related cases, a proposal relating to the basic workweek and hours of duty of employees is not excepted from an agency's bargaining obligation under Section 11(b) unless, based on the special circumstances of a particular case (as in Plum Island), the proposal is integrally related to and consequently determinative of the staffing patterns of the agency, i.e. the numbers, types, and grades of positions or employees assigned to an organizational unit, work project or tour of duty of the agency.

Applying the above principles to the U.S. Department of Agriculture, FLRC No. 73A-76, the Council went on to find that the proposal did not fall within the Section 11(b) exclusion

> For unlike in Plum Island, the Union's proposal here is not shown to be integrally related to and determinative of the types of employees assigned to the proposed tours of duty of the agency: All employees on each tour in the present case would continue to be food inspectors; whereas in Plum Island the Union proposal extended to changes in the types of the employees to be assigned to the new fixed > shifts and the rotating shifts, which the agency intended to result in improved staffing. Also unlike in Plum Island, the subject proposal would not be integrally related to and determinative of the numbers of employees assigned to the proposed tours. The proposed changes here relate only to the days of the basic work week and the range of starting times of that work week, which would impact on overtime, but not on the numbers of employees assigned to tours; whereas in Plum Island the Union's proposal would have required bargaining on the elimination of the rotating third shift in one laboratory, and the reassignment of employees to two new shifts and to the rotating shifts, which of necessity involved the numbers of employees assigned to particular tours of duty.

Based upon the foregoing analysis of the Council, I find that the evidence is insufficient to establish that the starting and quitting times of the employees in the appellate offices are integrally related to and consequently determinative of the staffing patterns of the Respondent, i.e. the numbers, types, and grades of positions or employees assigned to an organizational unit, work project or tour of duty of the Respondent agency. In these circumstances, Respondent's actions do not fall within the exception set forth in Section 11(b) of the Order. Accordingly, I find that the Respondent is under an obligation to bargain and negotiate any changes in the flexible starting and quitting times. I further find that the Respondent has failed in such obligation. 3/

Lastly, contrary to the contention of the Respondent, I find that the Union has not waived its right to negotiate changes in "flexitime" by virtue of Article 20 of the Multi-Regional Agreement to which the Union is a signatory. A literal reading of Article 20 indicates that it is only concerned with the "Hours of Work" and not the starting and quitting times. Thus, Article 20 sets forth the maximum hours. In view of the foregoing and particularly in the absence of any probative evidence in the record concerning the negotiations leading up to Article 20 which would support the broader interpretation urged by the Respondent, insufficient basis exists for a finding that the Union has waived its right to negotiate about any changes in flexitime. 4/

Based upon the foregoing considerations, I find that the Respondent has violated Sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by virtue of its actions in unilaterally abolishing the optional starting and quitting times in its appellate offices without negotiating with the Union.

Recommendation

Having found that Respondent has engaged in conduct prohibited by Sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, I recommend that the Assistant Secretary adopt the order hereinafter set forth which is designed to effectuate the policies of Order.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 6(b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, and Section 203.26(b) of the Regulations, the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations hereby orders that the Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Southwest Region, Dallas, Texas, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Instituting a change in work hours of employees represented exlcusively by the National Treasury Employees Union, NTEU, Chapter 91, without notifying the National Treasury Employees Union, NTEU, Chapter 91, and affording such representative the opportunity to meet and confer on the decision to effectuate such a change.

(b) In any like or related manner, interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights assured by Executive Order 11491, as amended.

2. Take the following affirmative actions in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of Executive Order 11491, as amended:

(a) Notify the National Treasury Employees Union, NTEU, Chapter 91, of any intended change in work hours of unit employees and, upon request, meet and confer in good faith on such intended change.

(b) Post at its facilities in the Southwest Region of the Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Southwest Region, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix" on forms to be furnished by the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Commissioner and shall be posted and maintained by him for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. The Commissioner shall take reasonable steps to insure that such notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to Section 203.27 of the Regulations, notify the Assistant Secretary in writing within 30 days from the date of this order as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY,
INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE,
BROOKHAVEN SERVICE CENTER
A/SLMR No. 859

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by the National Treasury Employees Union (NTEU) and its Chapter No. 099 alleging that the Respondent had: (1) unilaterally altered the negotiated grievance procedure after the negotiated agreement had expired by eliminating the arbitration provision of such negotiated agreement; (2) refused to process grievances filed thereafter pursuant to the agency grievance procedure; and (3) attempted to bargain directly with unit employees through a memorandum of the Respondent's Commissioner to unit employees dated May 29, 1975, concerning the expiration of the negotiated agreement, all in violation of Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order. The Respondent took the position that the "institutional benefits" of the negotiated agreement, which were those agreement provisions concerning benefits accruing to the NTEU as an organization, as opposed to those agreement provisions concerning the terms and conditions accruing to the unit employees, did not continue after the expiration of a negotiated agreement. Therefore, the Respondent contended that its elimination of the arbitration provision, which in its view was one of those "institutional benefits," was not an improper unilateral change of terms and conditions of employment and that the Commissioner's memorandum to unit employees was intended only to communicate to the unit employees that their terms and conditions of employment would not change upon the negotiated agreement's expiration. With respect to the aspect of the unfair labor practice complaint alleging a failure to process grievances pursuant to the agency grievance procedure, the Respondent contended that the negotiated grievance procedure was still available to unit employees. The Respondent also contended, with respect to the aspect of the unfair labor practice complaint alleging that the Commissioner's memorandum constituted direct bargaining with unit employees, that such allegation should be dismissed because the NTEU had raised the same issue in another unfair labor practice complaint proceeding and because no pre-complaint charge had been filed with respect to this allegation as required by the Assistant Secretary's Regulations.

The Assistant Secretary adopted the Administrative Law Judge's findings that the aspect of the complaint, alleging that the Commissioner's memorandum to unit employees dated May 29, 1975, constituted direct bargaining with unit employees, be dismissed. In this regard the Administrative Law Judge concluded, and the Assistant Secretary agreed, that the issue raised was identical to an issue previously raised in another unfair labor practice complaint before the Assistant Secretary. He noted that it is contrary to the basic legal concepts of res judicata and collateral estoppel to allow simultaneous litigation of the same issue arising out of the same set of facts in two different unfair labor practice proceedings before the same forum.

The Assistant Secretary also adopted the Administrative Law Judge's finding that the aspect of the complaint alleging that the Respondent had failed to process grievances filed pursuant to the agency grievance procedure in violation of Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order be dismissed. Thus, the Administrative Law Judge concluded, and the Assistant Secretary agreed, that it has consistently been held that, absent anti-union animus, allegations of violations of unilaterally established agency grievance procedures, even if proven, do not constitute violations of the Order.

The Assistant Secretary also agreed with the Administrative Law Judge's ultimate conclusion that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order with respect to the aspect of the unfair labor practice complaint alleging that the arbitration provision of the negotiated grievance procedure had been unilaterally eliminated after expiration of the parties' negotiated agreement. In this regard, the Assistant Secretary noted that it had been found previously in Internal Revenue Service, Ogden Service Center, and Internal Revenue Service, et. al., A/SLMR No. 806, that only those rights and privileges which are based solely on the existence of a written agreement, in effect, terminate with the expiration of a negotiated agreement. In the Assistant Secretary's view, arbitration was not one of those rights or privileges uniquely tied to a written agreement which terminates upon the expiration of a Federal sector negotiated agreement. Rather, he found that generally arbitration, once agreed upon by the parties as the final step for the settling of disputes arising under a negotiated agreement, continued thereafter as a term and condition of employment unless it was expressly agreed by the parties that it terminated with the expiration of the agreement.

Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary ordered that the Respondent take certain affirmative action with respect to the violation of Section 19(a)(1) and (6) found, and that the complaint, insofar as it alleges additional violations of the Order, be dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER

On November 17, 1976, Administrative Law Judge Garvin Lee Oliver issued his Recommended Decision and Order in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had engaged in certain unfair labor practices and recommending that it cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative actions as set forth in the attached Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order. The Administrative Law Judge found other alleged conduct of the Respondent not to be violative of the Order. Thereafter, the Respondent and the Complainant filed exceptions and supporting briefs with respect to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order and the entire record in the subject case, including the exceptions and supporting briefs filed by the parties, I hereby adopt the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendations, except as modified below. 1/

In his Recommended Decision and Order, the Administrative Law Judge found that the Respondent unilaterally altered terms and conditions of employment by making changes in the negotiated grievance procedure, including abolishing the arbitration provision in the parties' negotiated agreement, in violation of Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order. In this regard, the Administrative Law Judge applied the Assistant Secretary's decision in U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Philadelphia District, A/SLMR No. 673, which held that, when an impasse in negotiations has been reached and one of the parties to such negotiations exercises its option under Section 17 of the Order to request the services of the Federal Service Impasses Panel, then "...it will effectuate the purposes of the Order to require that the parties must, in the absence of an overriding exigency, maintain the status quo and permit the processes of the Panel to run its course before a unilateral change in terms and conditions of employment can be effectuated." Applying this decision to the instant case, the Administrative Law Judge found that the Respondent's failure to maintain the status quo, i.e., the complete negotiated grievance procedure, including arbitration as the final step, after an impasse in negotiations had been reached, constituted a unilateral change in terms and conditions of employment in violation of Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order. In reaching his conclusion, the Administrative Law Judge noted that since Federal employees are prohibited from striking, arbitration may not, as in the private sector, be viewed as a quid pro quo for waiving the right to strike. Consequently, the Administrative Law Judge was of the view that arbitration should be viewed as part of the negotiated grievance procedure and as an established condition of employment which continued after the expiration of a negotiated agreement.

In agreement with the Administrative Law Judge's conclusion, I find that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by

1/ In its exceptions to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order, the Respondent argued, among other things, that the allegation in the complaint that there had been a unilateral change in the negotiated grievance procedure should be dismissed under the provisions of Section 203.2 of the Assistant Secretary's Regulations, as there had been no pre-complaint charge filed with respect to this allegation. However, as the Respondent raised this issue for the first time in its exceptions to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order, and as the merits of the unilateral change allegation were fully litigated at the hearing, I find that dismissal of the allegation on procedural grounds is unwarranted. See Veterans Administration Hospital, Charleston, South Carolina, A/SLMR No. 87.

unilaterally excluding arbitration from the negotiated grievance procedure following the expiration of the parties' negotiated agreement. Thus, it has been found previously in Internal Revenue Service, Ogden Service Center, and Internal Revenue Service, et. al., A/SLMR No. 806, that, "...only those rights and privileges which are based solely on the existence of a written agreement - e.g., checkoff privileges - in effect, terminated with the expiration of a negotiated agreement." In my view, arbitration is not one of those rights or privileges uniquely tied to a written agreement which terminates upon the expiration of a Federal sector negotiated agreement. Rather, I find that arbitration, once agreed upon by the parties as the final step for the settling of disputes arising under a negotiated agreement, continues thereafter as a term and condition of employment, unless the parties have expressly agreed that it terminates with the expiration of such negotiated agreement. 2/ Noted in this regard was the Study Committee's Report and Recommendation on Labor-Management Relations in the Federal Service, August 1969, (Section G), in which the Study Committee found "that arbitration of grievances has worked well and has benefited both employees and agencies." 3/ Under these circumstances, I adopt the Administrative Law Judge's conclusion that the Respondent's conduct in unilaterally altering the parties' negotiated grievance-arbitration procedure was in violation of Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order.

2/ This is not to say that an activity may not unilaterally change a term or condition of employment if such change does not exceed the scope of its proposals made in prior negotiations, and if such change is made after the activity has bargained to impasse in good faith, and where the matter involved has not been submitted to the Federal Service Impasses Panel pursuant to Section 17 of the Order. See U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Philadelphia District, cited above.

3/ Moreover, it was noted particularly that the Supreme Court recently held in Nolde Brothers, Inc. v. Local No. 358, Bakery and Confectionary Workers Union, AFL-CIO, 94 L.R.R.M. 2753 (March 7, 1977), which involved a request by a union to arbitrate a dispute over severance pay which arose after the expiration of the parties' negotiated agreement, that, "where the dispute is over a provision of the expired agreement, the presumptions favoring arbitrability must be negated expressly or by clear implication." In this regard, the Supreme Court stated that, "[t]he parties must be deemed to have been conscious of this policy [i.e., the presumptions favoring arbitrability established by the Courts] when they agree to resolve their contractual differences through arbitration." Consequently, the Court concluded that, "...the parties' failure to exclude from arbitrability contract disputes arising after termination,...affords a basis for concluding that they intended to arbitrate all grievances arising out of the contractual relationship."

Pursuant to Section 6(b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, and Section 203.26(b) of the Regulations, the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations hereby orders that the Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Brookhaven Service Center, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Changing the negotiated grievance-arbitration procedure, or any other term or condition of employment which is not based solely on the existence of a written agreement, following the expiration of the negotiated agreement without notifying and, upon request, meeting and conferring with the National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter No. 099, the exclusive representative of its unit employees.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of rights assured by Executive Order 11491, as amended.

2. Take the following affirmative actions in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of Executive Order 11491, as amended. 5/

(a) Post at the facilities of the Internal Revenue Service, Brookhaven Service Center, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix" on forms to be furnished by the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Director of the Brookhaven Service Center and shall be posted and maintained by him for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. The Director of the Brookhaven Service Center shall take reasonable steps to insure that such notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

4/ In its exceptions to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Order in the subject case, the Complainant contended that the Respondent should be ordered to entertain the grievances which it refused to process through the agency grievance procedure. As no evidence was presented at the hearing that the Complainant ever attempted to process the subject grievances through the negotiated grievance procedure, and noting my adoption of the Administrative Law Judge's finding that the Respondent did not violate Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by refusing to process the grievances through the agency grievance procedure, I find that the Complainant's contention should be rejected.

5/ The record reflects that the parties subsequently signed a new negotiated agreement on July 18, 1975, which became effective October 18, 1975. In my view, this action by the parties rendered moot the need for any affirmative action other than that indicated.

(b) Pursuant to Section 203.27 of the Regulations, notify the Assistant Secretary, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this order as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

Statement of the Case

Pursuant to a complaint filed on October 16, 1975, and an amended complaint filed on February 3, 1976, under Executive Order 11491, as amended, by the National Treasury Employees Union (NTEU) and Chapter No. 099, NTEU (hereinafter called the Complainant or Union) against the Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service (IRS), Brookhaven Service Center (hereinafter called the Respondent or Agency), a Notice of Hearing on Complaint was issued by the Regional Administrator for the New York Region.

The Complaint alleged, in substance, that the Respondent violated Sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Executive Order by unilaterally declaring a procedure to be used to process employee grievances after a collective bargaining agreement had expired and the union had declared an impasse in negotiations and by refusing and failing to process grievances filed thereafter pursuant to the agency grievance procedure.

The amended complaint reiterated the previous allegations and alleged in addition thereto that a communication by Respondent's Commissioner regarding the changed grievance procedure constituted bargaining directly with unit employees in violation of Sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Executive Order.

A hearing was held in this matter before the undersigned in Holtsville, New York. Both parties were represented by counsel and afforded full opportunity to be heard, adduce evidence, and to examine and cross-examine witnesses. Thereafter, the parties submitted briefs.

Upon the basis of the entire record, including my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, the exhibits and other relevant evidence adduced at the hearing, and the briefs, I make the following findings of fact, conclusions, and recommendations.

The Complainant and the Respondent were parties to a collective bargaining agreement covering the employees at the Brookhaven Service Center and at various other service centers throughout the country. This agreement, which was first negotiated on April 13, 1973 (Joint Ex. 9) was due to expire on April 12, 1975. Accordingly, on February 18, 1975, the NTEU and the IRS commenced negotiations for a new multi-center agreement. During the course of negotiations, the parties twice extended the expiration date of the agreement (Tr. 23). On April 24, 1975 the parties executed a formal memorandum of agreement providing that the agreement would remain in effect until negotiations were completed, or the Union invoked the impasse procedures provided for in the Executive Order, and that the agreement would terminate at midnight of the fifth calendar day after receipt by either party of notice of termination. (Joint Ex. 7).

On May 27, 1975, Union President Vincent L. Connery notified the IRS that NTEU declared an impasse, thereby terminating the Memorandum of Agreement, and would file its appeal with the Federal Service Impasses Panel on June 2, 1975. (Joint Ex. 6).

By letter dated May 28, 1975, the Director, Personnel Division, IRS, advised the Union that IRS acknowledged receipt of the notice "indicating that impasse invocation would take place June 2, 1975." The letter informed the union that "your unilateral decision and right to terminate the agreement and thus give up the institutional benefits contained therein will of course be honored. There are other benefits in the agreement which accrue to individual employees. We wish to advise you that it is our intent to continue these benefits to employees intact. (Detailed list attached)." The Respondent attached a detailed list of the provisions in the agreement which it intended to continue. (Respondent's Ex. 1; Tr 201). This list indicated that, effective June 2, 1975, Article 32 of the multi-center agreement, pertaining to the grievance procedure, would remain in effect except for "second sentence of Section 3A and all of Section 8." (Respondent's Ex. 1; Tr. 199; Complainant's Ex. 4). The second sentence of Section 3A, which it was indicated would not remain in effect, provided that, "In any case, the Union may initiate a grievance when it believes that rights assured it under the terms of this agreement have been denied." Section 8, which was also indicated as not remaining in effect after June 2, 1975, provided for the appeal of an adverse grievance decision rendered at the step five (division chief) level to arbitration as provided in Article 33, so long as proper notice was given by the Union. (Joint Ex. 9).

Thereafter, Commissioner Donald C. Alexander sent a memorandum to all Center employees, dated May 29, 1975, which made several observations, including advising the employees that "Service management will continue to observe your right to file and process grievances in accordance with Article 32, Section 7 of the agreement." However, the detailed list of articles and sections of the multi-center agreement which were to remain in effect as of June 2, 1975 was identical to that noted above and indicated that the second sentence of Section 3A and all of Section 8 of Article 32 would not remain in effect. (Complainant's Ex. 4).

The multi-center agreement expired on June 2, 1975. The Union appealed to the Federal Services Impasses Panel. Two of the impasse items referred to the Federal Services Impasses Panel were the "scope of the grievance/arbitration procedure" and "reinstatement of the expired agreement while the Panel considered the impasse." (Tr.200; Respondent's Ex. 4).

On June 2, 1975 the Union President wrote the Director, Personnel Division, IRS, deploring the Agency's unilateral establishment of certain "employee rights", and requested a meeting "to negotiate an agreement applicable to employees for the period necessary to complete the Impasse procedure." (Complainant's Ex. 7). Thereafter, the parties met on June 4, 1975, at which meeting the Union reiterated its request to negotiate any changes in working conditions during impasse. Respondent informed the Union that it would not negotiate over working conditions during impasse and the meeting ended. (Tr. 58-61; 203-205).

After June 2, 1975 the Agency took the position that all grievances which were covered under the articles of the former multi-center agreement must be filed under the grievance provisions of the agreement which were designated to remain in force; that these particular provisions were the ones conferring rights or benefits to individual unit employees in the areas of personnel policies, practices, and matters affecting working conditions; and that such grievances would not be entertained under the agency grievance procedure (Joint Ex. 8), except for the grievance of a disciplinary action in which the employee could opt for either the multi-center agreement grievance procedure or the agency grievance procedure. The Union took the position that the grievance procedure unilaterally arrived at by the Agency was not binding; that the entire multi-center agreement had expired; and that all grievances to be filed subsequent to the expiration of the multi-center agreement must be filed and processed under the agency grievance procedure. (Complainant's Ex. 10; Complainant's Ex. 11; Tr. 69-70, 71-76, 114, 181-182, 203, 241).

During the period June 5, 1975 to June 18, 1975, fourteen grievances were filed by employees under the agency grievance procedure pursuant to the recommendation of the Union. These grievances generally involved work distribution and the criteria used in establishing furlough and recall evaluations. (Joint Ex. 11A-11L; Tr. 114; 169; 195). The grievances were subject to the negotiated grievance procedure.

Although answers were given to two of the grievances, the agency refused to process the grievances pursuant to the agency grievance procedure and returned the grievances to the Union, explaining that the grievances should be filed and processed under the terms of the multi-center agreement which were still in effect pursuant to the Commissioner's letter of May 29, 1975. (Tr. 125, 241, 184, 247; Complainant's Ex. 13; Tr. 180; Respondent's Ex. 2,3).

In accordance with the requirements of 29 C.F.R., Section 203.2, the Complainant filed pre-complaint charges on June 19, July 8, July 16 and July 24, 1975 against the Respondent, alleging unfair labor practices under Sections 19(a)(1) and (6). The Complainant charged variously that the Respondent failed to process grievances pursuant to the agency procedure, "indicated that NTEU must file a grievance pursuant to a unilaterally established grievance procedure," and failed to meet with a NTEU representative concerning certain grievances. (Joint Exhibits 1-4).

The parties subsequently held discussions in an attempt to informally resolve the matter. The matters raised and discussed were limited to the matters raised in the informal charge letters. (Tr. 237-238).

On July 18, 1975 the parties signed a new multi-center agreement, effective October 18, 1975, and agreed to reinstate the previous multi-center agreement pending the effective date of the new agreement. (Joint Ex. 10).

On September 2, 1975 the Respondent sent the Complainant a final decision on the charges, which denied any violations of the Executive Order and pointed out the Respondent's view of the issues raised by the charges, as follows:

> The central question raised by your unfair labor practice charges is whether the negotiated grievance procedure contained in the Multi-Center Agreement, dated April 13, 1973, continued to be available to bargaining unit employees after the June 2, 1975 termination of that Agreement. A second question, related to the first but independent of it, is whether a refusal to accept grievances under the agency grievance procedure would be an unfair labor practice under such circumstances. (Joint Ex. 5).

On October 16, 1975 the original complaint in the instant case was filed. After setting forth facts allegedly constituting the unfair labor practice, the Complainant stated:

> The unilateral declaration of a procedure to be used to process a grievance constitutes a violation of Section 19(a)(1) and 19(a)(6); the failure of the Internal Revenue Service to process grievances pursuant to the agency grievance procedure, the only valid procedure in effect after the expiration of the MCA, constitutes a violation of Section 19(a)(1) > and 19(a)(6); the failure of the Internal Revenue Service to process grievances pursuant to the agency grievance procedure constitutes an attempt by the IRS to demean NTEU in the eyes of employees in violation of Section 19(a)(1); and insistence by the Internal Revenue Service that the grievances must be processed pursuant to a unilaterally established procedure was an attempt to render NTEU impotent in the eyes of employees constituting a violation of Section 19(a)(1).

In another Complaint Against Agency, dated November 3, 1975, docketed as a separate proceeding with Docket No. 22-6506(CA), the NTEU and NTEU Chapter 099, among others, charged the IRS and Brookhaven Service Center among others, with violations of Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Executive Order by virtue of the following actions: unilaterally altering and amending existing personnel policies by reinstating selected provisions of a collective bargaining agreement which was to expire by its own terms; dealing directly with employees in the bargaining unit by the issuance of a May 29, 1975 directive to employees the language of which violates the neutrality required by the Order and attempts to subvert the Union as the exclusive representative by appealing to employees to look to the agency rather then the Union for rights; by refusing on June 4, 1974 to negotiate concerning the changes in personnel policies announced on May 28, 1975; and by conducting surveillance activities of the Union at its meetings.

The Regional Administrator for the Philadelphia, Pennsylvania Region issued a Notice of Hearing on Complaint, and a hearing was held in Docket No. 22-6506(CA) on May 4, 1976, in Washington, D.C. before Associate Chief Administrative Law Judge Francis E. Dowd. Judge Dowd's recommended decision and order was issued September 3, 1976.

On February 3, 1976, the Complainant filed an amended complaint in the instant case. As noted above the amended complaint was identical in all respects to the original complaint with the exception of the additional charge or allegation that:

> The communication by Commissioner Alexander regarding the changed grievance procedure constituted bargaining directly with unit employees in violation of Section 19(a)(1) and 19(a)(6) of the Order.

This amended charge was in all essential respects identical to a charge contained in Docket No. 22-6506(CA). However, the amended complaint did not reflect that any other procedure had been invoked involving the the subject matter of the complaint. (Asst. Sec. Ex. 1D).

Discussion, Conclusions, and Recommendations

A. Procedural Issues

29 C.F.R. Section 203.2(a) sets forth the action which a party desiring to file an unfair labor practice complaint must take prior to filing a formal complaint. Under Section 203.2(a)(1) a written charge alleging an unfair labor practice must be filed with the party being charged. And, pursuant to Section 203.2(a)(3), the charge must:

> contain a clear statement of the facts constituting the unfair labor practice, including the time and place of occurrence of the alleged unfair labor practice.

If the parties are unable to settle the charge the charging party may file a complaint, "limited to the matters raised in the charge" (Section 203.2(b)(1)).

The four charge letters in this case are limited to asserted violations of Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order arising out of the Respondent's "unilaterally established grievance procedure" and refusal "to process grievances filed pursuant to the agency grievance procedure." (Joint Exhibits 1-4). These charge letters were insufficient to put the Agency on notice that it was being charged with direct bargaining with employees in violation of Section 19(a)(1) and/or 19(a)(6) arising out of the issuance of Commissioner Alexander's May 29, 1975 memorandum, as set forth in the amended complaint. Similarly, these charges did not raise or put the Agency on notice of other alleged violations raised by Complainant at the hearing, concerning the Agency's alleged refusal to negotiate on June 4, 1975 concerning interim personnel procedures to be used while there was no contract (Tr. 47-52), and alleged unilateral changes made by Henry B. Seufert on June 9, 1975 concerning union meeting space, administrative time, specific times for grievance meetings, and Union access to Brookhaven premises and facilities. (Complainant's Ex. 10; Tr. 149-162). Therefore, it is concluded and recommended that Complainant's belated attempts to prove alleged facts and raise issues which go beyond the scope of the charges be dismissed, and that the evidence offered in support of such issues be considered merely as background information in connection with relevant events. To hold otherwise would tend to render meaningless the prescribed process of informal resolution of alleged unfair labor practices. Cf. Headquarters, U.S. Army Material Command, U.S. Department of the Army, Assistant Secretary Case No. 22-5900(CA), FLRC No. 75A-114 (March 22, 1976); United States Air Force, 380th Combat Support Group, Plattsburgh Air Force Base, N.Y., A/SLMR No. 557, FLRC No. 75-A-106 (January 13, 1976), Report No. 95; Directorate of Maintenance, Production Branch, Warner Robbins Air Material Area, Robins Air Force Base, A/SLMR No. 374.

It is also concluded that the additional charge set out in Complainant's February 13, 1976 amended complaint, alleging that Commissioner Alexander's May 29, 1975 memorandum "constituted bargaining directly with unit employees in violation of Section 19(a)(1) and 19(a)(6) of the Order," should also be dismissed on the ground that it is identical to one of the issues explicitly raised and litigated in Case No. 22-6506(CA) involving these same parties.

The Complainant may not simultaneously litigate the same issue, arising out of the same set of facts, in two different unfair labor practice proceedings before the same forum. Such a practice encourages unnecessary and vexatious litigation, which would not effectuate the purposes of the Executive Order. The Complainant made a binding election to litigate the subject issue in Case No. 22-6506(CA), and the issue will be authoritatively resolved therein. 1/ To allow the Complainant to again raise and litigate the issue would be to endorse splitting of a cause of action. Further, it is contrary to basic legal concepts of res judicata and collateral estoppel. 2/

B. The Alleged Unilateral Change

The Assistant Secretary held in U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Philadelphia District, A/SLMR No. 673, that a

1/ The Assistant Secretary's regulations and Section 19(d) of the Order are designed to screen out matters which have already been raised in other proceedings. 29 CFR § 203.3(a)(4).

2/ The Assistant Secretary applied the principle of collateral estoppel in the Aberdeen Proving Ground Command case, A/SLMR No. 286 (1973).

Respondent violated Sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by unilaterally instituting a change in terms and conditions of employment, after impasse had been reached, without providing the Complainant reasonable notice of its intended action so as to provide the Complainant with an opportunity to invoke the services of the Federal Services Impasse Panel. The Assistant Secretary also stated in that case:

> [S]hould one of the parties involved in an impasse exercise the option available under Section 17 of the Order and request the services of the Panel, I believe that it will effectuate the purposes of the Order to require that the parties must, in the absence of an overriding exigency, maintain the status quo and permit the processes of the Panel to run its course before a unilateral change in terms and conditions of employment can be effectuated.

In this case, upon being advised that the Complainant would file its appeal with the Federal Services Impasses Panel on June 2, 1975, the Respondent announced a new procedure for processing grievances to be effective the same day that the appeal was filed. Prior to the change, the negotiated procedure in the expired multi-center agreement was still operative. This was a five step procedure culminating with binding arbitration. In the May 28, 1975 letter the Respondent unilaterally altered the negotiated procedure by making changes in the grievance procedure, including abolishing the arbitration provision. Two of the items referred to the Federal Services Impasses Panel were "the scope of the grievance/arbitration procedure" and "reinstatement of the expired agreement while the panel considered the impasse." Since the Complainant invoked the services of the Panel, the Respondent was obligated, in the absence of an overriding exigency, to maintain the status quo and permit the processes of the Panel to run its course before a unilateral change in terms or conditions of employment could be effectuated. In light of the Assistant Secretary's reasoning in Army Corps of Engineers, Respondent's failure to do so was violative of Sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Executive Order.

Respondent argues that its decision to discontinue the arbitration clause is consistent with private sector law. Respondent relies upon the decision of the NLRB in Hilton-Davis Chemical Company, 185 NLRB No. 58, 75 LRRM 1036 (1970), and the decision of the Second Circuit Court of Appeals in Proctor and Gamble Independent Union v. Proctor and Gamble Mfg. Co., 312 F.2d 181 (2nd Cir. 1962). In the Hilton-Davis case the Board recognized that in the private sector the right to strike is a quid pro quo for the right to arbitrate. Each party has agreed to "voluntarily and mutually ... surrender the use of their respective economic weapons in favor of third party determination of unresolved issues." 75 LRRM at 1038. Thus, when the contract expires the parties return to their pre-contract status and each requires its arsenal of economic weapons, freeing the unions to strike in order to bring about resolution of disputes.

The private sector rationale is clearly not applicable to the federal labor relations program. Since federal employees lack the right to strike the core ingredient of the private sector theory does not exist in the federal sector. When a federal sector agreement expires employees have virtually no economic power to utilize in their effort to renegotiate an improved agreement. Thus, the situation in the federal sector is inapposite to the private sector.

The difference between the federal and private sector is highlighted by the Assistant Secretary's decision in Army Corps of Engineers, supra. He specifically noted that "it will effectuate the purposes of the Order to require that the parties must, in the absence of an overriding exigency, maintain the status quo" while the Panel machinery is in motion. Thus, these differences make it vitally important that the status quo, including arbitration, be maintained. This limitation on management flexibility is part of a quid pro quo, in recognition of the no-strike requirement on unions.

C. The Alleged Refusal To Process Grievances Pursuant To The Agency Grievance Procedure

The Complainant contends that the Respondent also violated Sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Executive Order by failing to process grievances pursuant to the agency grievance procedure after the expiration of the multi-center agreement.

The Assistant Secretary has consistently found that, absent a showing of anti-union animus, allegations of violations of unilaterally established agency grievance procedures, even if proven, do not constitute violations of Section 19(a) of the Order. In this regard, the Assistant Secretary, in National Labor Relations Board, Region 17, and National Labor Relations Board, A/SLMR No. 670 (1976), stated:

> [W]hile interference with the filing or processing of grievances under a negotiated agreement has been found to be violative of the Order, interference with grievances being processed under an agency grievance procedure, absent evidence of anti-union motivation is not deemed violative of the Order, as an agency grievance procedure is not established as a result of any rights accorded to individual employees or labor organizations by the Order. (at p.2, footnotes omitted).

The Complainant has not borne its burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the Respondent's refusal to process the subject grievances pursuant to the agency grievance procedure was inspired or motivated by any anti-union animus. To the contrary, the probative evidence dictates the conclusion that the Respondent's position was undertaken in good faith and in reliance on what it believed to be a valid legal position. Accordingly, there is no basis for finding violations of Section 19(a)(1) and/or 19(a)(6) of the Executive Order on the basis of a failure to process the grievances in question pursuant to the agency grievance procedure, and it is recommended that the complaint in this respect be dismissed.

Recommendations

Having found that Respondent has engaged in certain conduct which is violative of Sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order, I recommend the Assistant Secretary adopt the following order designed to effectuate the purposes of Executive Order 11491, as amended.

Recommended Order

Pursuant to Section 6(b) of the Executive Order 11491, as amended, and Section 203.26(b) of the Regulations, the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations hereby orders that the Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Brookhaven Service Center, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) unilaterally changing the procedure for processing employee grievances, or any other term or condition of employment which is the subject of collective bargaining negotiations, in the absence of an overriding exigency, when a collective bargaining agreement has expired, an impasse in negotiations has been reached, and the National Treasury Employees Union and Chapter No. 099, NTEU, or any other exclusive representative, has invoked the services of the Federal Service Impasses Panel, until such time as the processes of the Panel has run its course.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights assured by Executive Order 11491, as amended.

2. Take the following affirmative actions in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of Executive Order 11491, as amended:

(a) maintain the status quo, in the absence of an overriding exigency, with regard to the procedure for processing employee grievances, or any other term or condition of employment which is the subject of collective bargaining negotiations, when a collective bargaining agreement has expired, an impasse in negotiations has been reached, and the National Treasury Employees Union and Chapter No. 099, NTEU, or any other exclusive representative, has invoked the services of the Federal Service Impasses Panel, until such time as the processes of the Panel has run its course.

(b) post at the facilities of the Internal Revenue Service, Brookhaven Service Center, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix" on forms to be furnished by the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Commissioner and shall be posted and maintained by him for sixty (60) consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. The Commissioner shall take reasonable steps to insure that such notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) pursuant to Section 203.26 of the Regulations, notify the Assistant Secretary, in writing, within 20 days from the date of this Order as to what steps have been taken to comply herein.

PURSUANT TO

A DECISION AND ORDER OF THE

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF LABOR FOR LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS

and in order to effectuate the policies of

EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, as amended

LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS IN THE FEDERAL SERVICE

We hereby notify our employees that:

WE WILL NOT, in the absence of an overriding exigency, unilaterally change the procedure for processing employee grievances, or any other term or condition of employment which is the subject of collective bargaining negotiations, when a collective bargaining agreement has expired, an impasse in negotiations has been reached, and the National Treasury Employees Union and Chapter No. 099, NTEU, or any other exclusive representative, has invoked the services of the Federal Service Impasses Panel, until such time as the processes of the Panel has run its course.

June 29, 1977

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR
ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS
SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION,
DISTRICT OFFICE,
MUNCIE, INDIANA
A/SLMR No. 860

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by Local 1799, National Federation of Federal Employees (Complainant) alleging essentially that the Respondent had violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by rescinding the policy of granting employees 15 minutes excused leave on payday for the purpose of cashing or banking salary checks, without affording the Complainant, the exclusive representative, the opportunity to consult, confer, or negotiate as required by the Order.

The Administrative Law Judge concluded that the Respondent's conduct was not violative of the Order. In this regard, he found, contrary to the Respondent's contention, that the Complainant had not waived its right to negotiate on the leave policy by virtue of its contract proposals in 1972. However, he concluded that even though the meeting requested by the Respondent for February 27, 1976, to discuss the termination of the leave policy was on short notice and without specificity as to the subject matter, the Complainant's refusal to attend the meeting raised grave doubts as to whether the Respondent had violated its bargaining obligation on this subject when it rescinded the 15 minutes excused absence policy on February 27, 1976, effective March 1, 1976. He further found that even if a violation had occurred at this point, the Respondent's efforts thereafter to get the Complainant to consider alternative procedures which would allow them to accomplish their common objective in a lawful fashion completely belied any claim that the Respondent refused to meet and confer in good faith as required by the Order. In this regard, he noted that the Respondent had reinstated the leave policy and concluded that, in view of its subsequent conduct which cured or dispelled the violation, the Federal Labor Relations Council's rationale in Vandenberg Air Force Base, 4392nd Aerospace Support Group, Vandenberg Air Force Base, California, FLRC No. 74A-77, concerning a technical and de minimis violation of the Order was applicable in the instant case. Thus, he concluded that as it was, in fact, the Complainant which adopted an adamant attitude, sought not to engage in meaningful negotiations over this important matter, and sought only as its primary objective the vindication of its rights under the Order, the willingness of the Respondent to meet on the problem was sufficient to cure any violation which had occurred. Therefore, he found that the Respondent had not violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order, and recommended dismissal of the complaint in its entirety.

The Assistant Secretary adopted the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendations, and ordered that the complaint be dismissed.

RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

Statement of the Case

Pursuant to a complaint filed June 15, 1976, by Local 1799, National Federation of Federal Employees, (hereinafter called Complainant Union) against Social Security Administration, District Office, Muncie, Indiana (hereinafter called Respondent Activity), the Regional Administrator of Labor-Management Services for the Chicago Region issued a Notice of Hearing on Complaint on September 15, 1976. The complaint alleged that the Respondent Activity violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of Executive Order 11491, as amended. The gravamen of the allegations was that the Respondent Activity unilaterally changed a policy of granting employees 15 minutes excused leave on payday for the purpose of cashing or banking salary checks. It is asserted that management changed this practice without affording the Complainant Union, as the exclusive representative, the opportunity to consult, confer, or negotiate as required by the Executive Order.

A hearing was held on November 16, 1976, in Indianapolis, Indiana. All parties were represented by counsel and afforded full opportunity to be heard and to introduce relevant evidence and testimony on the issues involved. Briefs were submitted by counsel and have been duly considered.

On the entire record in this matter, including my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following:

The Complainant Union is the exclusive representative of "all non supervisory permanent GS employees" of the District Office of the Social Security Administration in Muncie, Indiana. There has been a negotiated agreement in effect between the parties since September 22, 1972. The current agreement expired on September 22, 1976, and the parties were engaged in negotiations for a new agreement at the time of the hearing.

On August 24, 1971, prior to the negotiations and execution of the 1972 agreement, Russell Collins, manager of the District Office, issued a policy memorandum granting employees "an additional 15 minutes at their lunch breaks on salary pay-days for the purpose of banking or cashing their checks." The memorandum contained the following language:

> 2. This privilege is effective with the pay-day of August 31, 1971, and succeeding salary pay-days until further notice. 1/

The decision to grant the additional 15 minutes was entirely a management decision made for the convienence of the employees, and it was not discussed with the representatives of the Union prior to issuance.

During negotiations preceeding the execution of the 1972 agreement, the union representatives sought to incorporate the excused leave policy as a specific provision in the agreement.

They initially wanted to extend it, however, to 30 minutes. Management resisted this proposal on the ground that it needed the flexibility of having the practice as an office policy rather than in the negotiated agreement. After reducing their demands from 30 minutes to the already authorized 15 minutes, the union representatives dropped this proposal during the negotiations, and it was never incorporated into the final agreement.

The 15 minute excused leave practice was followed until February 1976. Sometime prior to February, the Area Director, Collins' superior, visited the District Office. He told Collins the practice was not in accordance with rulings of the Comptroller General and it violated the regulations set forth the in the Federal Personnel Manual. He made it clear that Collins was placing himself in jeoprady by allowing the practice to continue and advised him to rescind it.

It had been the custom for management and union officials to meet on the last Friday of the month to discuss matters concerning labor relations. This practice was very informal, and the parties would not meet if there were no pressing issues to discuss. On occasion they would have a formal agenda and other times they merely brought up topics which were of concern at that moment. 2/

2/ The practice followed by the management and union representatives was not in strict compliance with the provisions contained in the negotiated agreement. Article 6 of that agreement dealt with matters appropriate for consultation. Section 6.2 provided as follows:

> MEETINGS: either party desiring or having a requirement to consult with the other, shall give timely notice to the other party. Such notice shall include a statement of the subject matter to be discussed. The parties agree to meet regularly, normally on the last Friday of each month from 2:30 p.m. to 4:30 p.m.

On February 27, 1976, at approximately 2:30 p.m. Collins sent word through the former union president to the vice president, Ferg, that he wanted to meet with him at 3:00 p.m. in his office to discuss an emergency matter and a matter of mutual concern. 3/ Collins and several management officials waited for the union representatives for approximately 30 minutes. When they failed to show, Collins called Ferg, who stated that the union officials would not meet with management. He stated they were not given a written agenda and did not have enough advance notice. 4/

The next day, which was a Saturday, a small group of employees were working overtime and Collins was in the office supervising them. He decided he could not delay the decision to rescind the excused leave policy and had a memorandum typed discontinuing the practice effective March 1, 1976. This memorandum was circulated among the small number of employees working that day and posted for the benefit of the full staff when they returned on Monday.

The Complainant Union filed an unfair labor practice charge with the Respondent Activity almost immediately after becoming aware of this action. On March 10, management officials and union representatives met to discuss the matter. The union representatives insisted that the policy be reinstated and that management (Collins) make an apology to the entire staff. Management proposed several alternatives. One was the possibility of extending the official work day by 15 minutes to allow for the additional time during the lunch hour. Another involved having the employees take 3/ The "emergency matter" had to do with the presence of an unauthorized person in the building sometime previously. The matter of "mutual concern" involved the 15 minute excused leave practice.

4/ Collins' undisputed testimony indicates that this was the first time union officials had ever refused to meet with management on any matter since recognition was accorded in 1971. He also testified that on occasions there was little or no advance notice given, and on other occasions the party requesting the meeting gave notice well in advance.

compensatory time for the extra 15 minutes. A third, which was mentioned as a possibility but of doubtful feasibility, was to charge the additional 15 minutes to leave time. This presented a problem as the Respondent Activity did not allow annual leave in 15 minute increments. During the discussion the parties failed to reach any agreement, as the union officials insisted that the former practice be resumed.

The parties met again on April 8 to discuss the problem. The Complainant Union continued to adhere to its original demand. Finally, Collins agreed to reinstate the 15 minutes as a demonstration of "good faith". He also agreed to meet again with the union representatives to explore alternative procedures for allowing the extra 15 minutes on pay-days. He sent a letter to the vice president of the Union that same day stating the policy was "back in effect as of this date." He suggested that the parties meet at 10:00 a.m., April 16, 1976, to "consult and resolve our differences over the 15 minutes extra time allowed on salary pay-days". (Respondent's Exhibit No. 2). The Union's vice president responded initially to the letter by declining to meet on the suggested date. After a conference with Collins, he retracted this refusal and agreed to the meeting.

At the meeting on April 16, management stated that something had to be done because the granting of the excused leave was not lawful, and the Area Director was exerting pressure on the District Manager to rescind it, or face possible disciplinary action. While the union officials expressed a concern over the District Manager's dilemma, they insisted that the 15 minute excused leave practice be continued. Management again offered possible alternatives to the union representatives to no avail, as they insisted on continuation of the past policy because "all of the employees wanted the 15 minutes." The union representatives asked Collins if he were prepared to negotiate this demand and he responded that it was not negotiable. He concluded the meeting by telling the union representatives that management had their input and there had been consultation. He stated that he would render a written decision within 10 days.

On April 26, 1976, Collins sent a letter to the union president stating that his "decision is to stop the privilege and practice, effective May 1st, 1976." He stated that the decision "was based on all the facts, opinions and statements made concerning the additional 15 minutes of excused time on pay-days." He also indicated that since his superiors were aware of the practice, it made him "vulnerable and subject to possible disciplinary action by those of higher authority." (Respondent's Exhibit No. 3).

Concluding Findings

The first issue to be addressed here is whether the change in the excused leave policy on February 27, 1976, was a unilateral act on the part of management in violation of its duty to consult and confer (negotiate) under the Executive Order. The Respondent Activity asserts that the Complainant Union "waived" its right to negotiate on the excused leave policy because it had advanced a proposal regarding this subject matter during negotiations in 1972, and subsequently abandoned it before the negotiations were concluded.

In my judgment, this defense lacks merit as it has been established by case law that a waiver of a right assured by the Executive Order must be clear and unmistakable. U.S. Army Finance and Accounting Center, Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indianapolis, Indiana, A/SLMR No. 651; Naval Ordinance Station, Louisville, Kentucky, A/SLMR No. 400; Kennedy Space Center, Florida, A/SLMR No. 223. The mere fact that the Union dropped this bargaining demand during the 1972 negotiations does not imply a waiver of its right to subsequently negotiate a change in this working condition, unless there is clear and unmistakable evidence that such was the intent of the parties. There is no such evidence in this record. Therefore, I find that the "waiver defense" must be rejected.

However, the circumstances of this case are such that there is serious question as to whether the Respondent Activity violated its obligations under the Executive Order. The facts show that management sought to have a meeting with the union officials on February 27, but was unsuccessful because the union representatives declined to attend. It is true that management was not specific about the items it wished to discuss when it requested the meeting. It is also true that the short notice did not comport with the requirements of the negotiated agreement. Examination of the practice followed by both management and union representatives, however, indicates that it was not unusual to call a meeting in this fashion. Further, the parties did not always adhere to the provisions set forth in the negotiated agreement regarding their labor-management meetings. On the basis of the refusal of the union representatives to meet with management to discuss the issue of rescinding the excused leave policy, grave doubts are raised as to whether management violated its bargaining obligation when the memorandum rescinding the policy was issued the following day.

But even if a violation occurred at this point, the subsequent meetings between the union officials and management on this issue completely belie any claim that the Activity refused to consult and confer in good faith as required by the Executive Order. The parties met on three occasions and management made every effort to get the Union to consider alternative procedures which would allow them to accomplish their common objective in a lawful fashion. To this end, management rescinded its action of February 28 as a jesture of good faith, and sought to "clear the air" so that the parties could continue negotiations on the subject matter. 5/

While the period between the unlawful conduct, if it were in fact unlawful, and the subsequent conduct which cured or dispelled the violation was not as brief as that which took place in the Vandenberg Air Force Base case 6/, the Council's rationale in that decision has clear application here. In that case the Council was considering a technical violation which it found to be de minimis because it was immediately cured by subsequent conduct on the part of the offending party. The Council stated that the purposes of the Order are not served when:

5/ Although management described this process as "consultation" it is clear that the parties here were engaged in negotiations over the change in the excused leave policy. Therefore, the "consult and confer" requirements of the Executive Order were being fulfilled completely by the parties even though they described their conduct as constituting something less.

6/ Vandenberg Air Force Base, 4392nd Aerospace Support Group, Vandenberg Air Force Base, California, FLRC No. 74A-77, Report No. 79 (August 25, 1975).

> ...the parties use the sanctions provided therein as the first, and not the last, resort for the settlement of their disputes. Cooperative labor relations are not established or maintained when a labor organization or the management of an agency establishes as its first priority, not the negotiations of a collective bargaining agreement, but the vendication of its position in an unfair labor practice proceeding. (Emphasis supplied).

The facts in the instant case lend themselves completely to the rationale set forth in the Vandenberg decision. The Respondent Activity did everything in its power to create a setting wherein the parties would use the negotiating process to resolve the dispute over the 15 minute extended leave policy. It was the labor organization which adopted an adamant attitude and sought not to engage in meaningful negotiations over this important matter. Rather, its primary objective was vindication of its rights under the Order. According, I find that the subsequent willingness of management to meet with the Union and discuss the problem was sufficient to cure any violation which may have occurred, and that management did in fact consult and confer, within the meaning and contemplation of the Executive Order.

In view of the foregoing, I find and conclude that the Respondent Activity did not violate Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Executive Order and that the complainant herein must be dismissed in its entirety.

RECOMMENDED ORDER

On the basis of the foregoing findings of fact and conclusions of law, I find that Social Security Administration, District Office, Muncie, Indiana did not engage in conduct which violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of Executive Order 11491, as amended. Accordingly is hereby recommended that the complaint in this case be dismissed in its entirety.

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3534 (Complainant) alleging, in effect, that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (2) of the Order by changing Violeta Crespo's evaluation from a rating of "Outstanding" to a rating of "Satisfactory" because of her union membership, position, and activities.

The evidence disclosed that the Respondent's Administrative Law Judge In Charge (ALJIC), who reviewed and signed the evaluations of the Respondent's employees before submitting them to the Central Office in New York, concurred in and forwarded approximately 20 evaluations for the period involved, among which were four "Outstanding" ratings. One of the "Outstanding" ratings was that of Violeta Crespo who had been active in the Complainant's organizing campaign and was a union steward. Thereafter, as a result of questioning by the Activity's Central Office, all four "Outstanding" ratings were changed to "Satisfactory", with Violeta Crespo's being changed as a result of the ALJIC's changing one of the specific items of her evaluation. The Administrative Law Judge found that the Complainant had failed to sustain its burden of proof in support of the allegation that Violeta Crespo, or any other union member, was discriminated against because they had engaged in activity protected by the Order, and he recommended that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety.

Noting particularly the absence of exceptions, the Assistant Secretary adopted the findings, conclusions and recommendations of the Administrative Law Judge and ordered that the complaint be dismissed.

RECOMMENDED DECISION

Preliminary Statement

This proceeding arises under the provisions of Executive Order 11491, as amended (hereinafter referred to as the Order). Pursuant to the Regulations of the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations a Notice of Hearing on Complaint issued on October 13, 1976 with reference to alleged violations of Sections 19(a)(1) and (2) of the Order. The complaint, filed by American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3535 (hereinafter referred to as the Union or Complainant), essentially alleged that Violet Crespo and other members of the Union were discriminated against by Department of Health, Education and Welfare, Social Security Administration, Bureau of Hearings and Appeals, San Juan, Puerto Rico (hereinafter referred to as the Activity or Respondent), because of membership in and activity's on behalf of the Union. The alleged discrimination concerns the Activity's downgrading various employee performance appraisals.

At the hearing held on November 4 and 5, 1976 1/ in San Juan, Puerto Rico, the parties were represented by counsel and afforded full opportunity to adduce evidence, call, examine and cross-examine witnesses and argue orally. A brief was received from Respondent and carefully considered.

Upon the entire record in this matter and from my evaluation of the evidence and observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following:

Findings and Conclusions

On July 12, 1974 the Union was certified as the exclusive representative of various professional and nonprofessional employees of the Activity. At that time Violet Crespo was very active on behalf of the Union in its drive to organize the employees and since October 1975 has served as the Union's elected shop steward.

In April 1976 Ms. Crespo along with approximately twenty other employees received from the Activity an annual performance appraisal for the period April 1, 1975 to March 31, 1976. Four unit employees, including Ms. Crespo, were rated "outstanding" by their immediate supervisors. The Activity's Administrative Law Judge In Charge, Solomon Goldman, reviewed and concurred in the ratings and on or about April 15, 1976, forwarded all the ratings to the Activity's Central Office in New York City. Approximately two weeks later a Program Operation Officer at the Central Office telephoned Judge Goldman and asked if Judge Goldman felt he could "justify" the four outstanding ratings "throughout the Agency". Judge Goldman concluded he could not an proceeded to reduce to "satisfactory" the ratings of two employees whom he had rated himself. Judge Goldman approached another Administrative Law Judge who rated an employee as "outstanding" and as a result, the Judge lowered the rating of his subordinate to "satisfactory".

With regard to Violet Crespo, Judge Goldman met with her rater, Judge Ana Rodriguez, and attempted to persuade her to lower Ms. Crespo's "outstanding" rating to satisfactory by rating her other than outstanding in the category of "getting along with others". Judge Goldman mentioned a number of incidents that he felt supported a lower rating but Judge Rodriguez was unimpressed and refused to revise her appraisal of Ms. Crespo. Sometime thereafter, Judge Goldman talked to Ms. Crespo about lowering her rating in the "getting along with others" category indicating he had received a call from New York Central Officer on the matter. Judge Goldman informed Ms. Crespo that he was relying on a past office matter involving what Judge Goldman considered Ms. Crespo antagonizing another employee to support his conclusion that the rating should be lowered. Ms. Crespo disagreed with Judge Goldman's assessment of the situation and was quite sensitive that she was being given a lower rating in this particular category. She suggested that any one of the other six categories be lower but Judge Goldman refused.

By letter dated May 24, 1976 Judge Goldman notified the Activity's Central Office of his decision to adjust Ms. Crespo's evaluation, reciting three incidents which he felt supported his action. On June 20 Ms. Crespo was notified that her performance appraisal had been lowered.

Ms. Crespo insisted that she be given Judge Goldman's justification for the change and was eager to receive the document since she was soon to be hospitalized. Accordingly, after she again requested the information on June 23, Judge Goldman at 6:00 p.m. on that same day during a contract negotiation session, handed Ms. Crespo a copy of the May 24 letter which he previously sent to Central Office, supra. On July 26, 1976 Ms. Crespo, on behalf of the Union, filed the unfair labor practice charge which gave rise to these proceedings.

In my view Complainant has failed to carry its burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that Ms. Crespo or any other Union member was discriminated against because of membership in or activities on behalf of the Union. It is clear that Ms. Crespo had engaged in activity protected by the Order and Respondent knew of such conduct. She was active in the Union's successful effort to organize the Activity; she engaged in efforts on behalf of employees involving Central Office and local representatives of the Activity regarding the allocating new typewriters to employees; she participated in contract negotiations with the Activity on behalf of the Union. However, there is no evidence that the Activity harbored hostility towards the Union in general or Ms. Crespo in particular. The explanation given by the Activity as to how Ms. Crespo's evaluation was lowered is sufficiently plausible so that a finding of improper motivation cannot be inferred. Indeed, even if the Activity's actions in this regard were considered arbitrary, under the circumstances herein such would not in itself constitute a violation of the Order. In addition, there was no showing that the Activity's lowering of Ms. Crespo's evaluation constituted disparate treatment of Ms. Crespo.

Further, I find and conclude that no violation of the Order occurred when on June 23 at a negotiation session Judge Goldman gave Ms. Crespo the information which Judge Goldman relied on in reaching his decision. Ms. Crespo requested that the information promptly since she was shortly scheduled to be hospitalized. 2/ Moreover, there is no evidence that anything was said or done which might have given some indication that the Activity had an improper purpose in presenting the information to Ms. Crespo at that time.

2/ I note that it was also during negotiations that Ms. Crespo was notified she was receiving a promotion to a job she had applied for sometime after April 29, 1976.

Accordingly, in all the circumstances herein, I find and conclude that Complainant has failed to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the Activity violated the Order as alleged. 3/

Recommendation

I recommend the complaint herein be dismissed in its entirety.

SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY, INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE, DETROIT DATA CENTER, DETROIT, MICHIGAN
A/SLMR No. 862

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by the National Treasury Employees Union (NTEU) alleging that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) of the Order by interrogating Ms. Caroline Golden, a steward and executive vice president of Chapter 78, NTEU, during the course of a promotional interview when she was asked whether her union business took her away from her work.

Based on credited testimony, the Administrative Law Judge found that the Respondent's conduct was violative of Section 19(a)(1) of the Order, as under the particular circumstances, the inquiry was coercive in nature. In this regard, he noted that the subject of her union activities was first raised by Ms. Golden during the initial phase of the promotional interview as an example of her interest in working with people, then dropped and was not raised again until the chairman of the interview panel asked her whether her union business took her away from her work. He concluded that, in this context, the inquiry was coercive in nature as it logically led Ms. Golden to conclude that her union representational duties would tend to undermine her prospects for promotion. Therefore, he concluded that the inquiry operated to interfere with her right to be a union member, the right to participate in the management of a labor organization, and the right to act as a labor organization representative and was thus violative of Section 19(a)(1) of the Order.

The Assistant Secretary adopted the findings, conclusions and recommendations of the Administrative Law Judge and ordered that the Respondent cease and desist from the conduct found violative of the Order and that it take certain affirmative actions.

DECISION AND ORDER

On April 13, 1977, Administrative Law Judge Louis Scalzo issued his Report and Recommendation in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had engaged in certain unfair labor practices and recommending that it cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative actions as set forth in the attached Administrative Law Judge's Report and Recommendation. Thereafter, the Respondent filed exceptions to the Administrative Law Judge's Report and Recommendation and the Complainant filed an answering brief to the Respondent's exceptions.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Report and Recommendation and the entire record in this case, including the exceptions filed by the Respondent and the answering brief to the Respondent's exceptions filed by the Complainant, I hereby adopt the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendations.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 6(b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, and Section 203.26(b) of the Regulations, the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations hereby orders that the United States Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Detroit Data Center, Detroit, Michigan, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Interrogating its employees as to the relationship between their work performance and their activities on behalf of, or their affiliation with, Chapter 78, National Treasury Employees Union, or any other labor organization.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of rights assured by Executive Order 11491, as amended.

2. Take the following affirmative actions in order to effectuate the purposes and provisions of Executive Order 11491, as amended:

(a) Post at its facility at the United States Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Detroit Data Center, Detroit, Michigan, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix" on forms to be furnished by the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Director, Detroit Data Center and shall be posted and maintained by him for 60 consecutive days thereafter in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. The Director shall take reasonable steps to insure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(b) Pursuant to Section 203.27 of the Regulations, notify the Assistant Secretary, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this order as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION

Statement of the Case

This proceeding was initiated upon the filing of an unfair labor practice complaint on August 12, 1976, by the National Treasury Employees Union (hereinafter referred to as the Complainant) against the Detroit Data Center, Internal Revenue Service, United States Department of the Treasury (hereinafter referred to as the Respondent). The complaint alleged that the Respondent violated Sections 19(a)(1) and (2) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, (hereinafter referred to as the Order), as a result of the interrogation of Ms. Caroline Golden, a steward and executive vice president of Chapter 78, National Treasury Employees Union, and an employee of the Respondent. It was alleged that on February 4, 1976, during the course of a promotional interview for a computer programmer trainee position, she was asked whether her Union business took her away from her work.

On December 3, 1976, R.C. DeMarco, Regional Administrator, Labor-Management Services Administration, Chicago Region, approved the Complainant's withdrawal of the Section 19(a)(2) allegation and issued a Notice of Hearing based on the alleged violation of Section 19(a)(1) of the Order. Pursuant thereto, a hearing was held in Detroit, Michigan on March 1, 1977. Both parties were represented by counsel at the hearing, and were afforded full opportunity to call and examine witnesses, adduce evidence, and file briefs.

The Respondent denies that the interrogation occurred, and argues that the Complainant has not met its burden of proof. Respondent also asserts that the question, even if asked, would not constitute a violation of Section 19(a)(1). Upon the entire record and my observation of witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following findings, conclusions and recommendations to the Assistant Secretary.

During a period beginning in the latter part of January 1976, and lasting about a month, approximately two hundred applicants were interviewed at the Detroit Data Center for the purpose of filling eighteen to twenty computer programmer trainee positions. These interviews, about fifteen to thirty minutes in length, were conducted by a series of three panels, each of which was staffed by three supervisors.

Ms. Golden's interview was one of eight or nine conducted by such a panel on February 4, 1976. She was not selected for the position. The panel which interviewed her included Grover Pinkerton, Edward Buggell and Alan Schreier. Ms. Golden testified that Grover Pinkerton posed the question indicative of a possible conflict between work assignments and Union activity during the latter portion of the interview.

The testimony of the three panel members was inconclusive with respect to the question of whether or not the inquiry was posed, as each could not recall the specific questions asked Ms. Golden, and each acknowledged that the objectionable question could have been asked. Since the panel interviewed about seventy applicants, it was not possible for the panel members to recall with particularity, details relating to each interview. However, Ms. Golden appeared to be a credible witness in all respects and I find no reason to doubt her testimony.

It clearly appeared that the subject of Union activity was introduced in the first instance by Ms. Golden when the panel inquired generally about her interests, and her ability to relate to people. 1/ In response she volunteered that she was a union steward, and that she liked dealing with people and their problems. Both Mr. Buggell and Mr. Schreier corroborated Ms. Golden in this regard, as they recalled the subject may have been broached by Ms. Golden in response to a general inquiry entirely unrelated to Ms. Golden's union activity.

As noted all three panel members had no recollection of the question objected to herein, and judging their demeanor and response to interrogation, I have no reason to doubt their testimony. It must be concluded that they attached no significance to the inquiry from the standpoint of evaluating Ms. Golden's suitability for the computer programmer trainee position.

1/ During a post-hearing deposition of Mr. Alan Schreier, counsel for the Complainant objected to the admission of evidence of general questions posed by the panel during the panel interviews. Since the questions referred to were identified as those addressed to Ms. Golden as well as other applicants there would be no basis for the exclusion of such evidence.

Neither Mr. Pinkerton, nor Mr. Buggell were aware of Ms. Golden's union activity prior to the interview. Mr. Schreier acknowledged that he was aware of her union affiliation prior to the interview, however, no special significance can be attached to Mr. Schreier's knowledge. There was no discussion of her Union affiliation by the panel during the interview or in the rating process conducted by the panel. None of the panel members were involved in the selections made to fill the positions and the record reflects no evidence that members of the panel discussed Ms. Golden with the official charged with the responsibility of determining the successful applicants following a two-step rating process.

Each applicant was rated on the basis of a composite score obtained from performance evaluations, awards, experience, training received, and the oral interview. Ms. Golden's final rating is not reflected in the record, nor were those received by others interviewed.

The results of panel interviews were turned over to the personnel department for further rating of factors reflected in personnel folders. Although it appeared that Mr. Pinkerton along with two others participated in this second step of the rating process, there is no evidence that he actually rated Ms. Golden's personnel file folder after the interview. 2/ There was no evidence of any discussion of Ms. Golden's Union status during the final rating assigned to factors reflected in personnel folders, and Mr. Pinkerton denied that the topic was ever raised.

2/ Mr. Pinkerton acknowledged that he may have rated Ms. Golden's personnel file, but that he could not recall. Ms. Golden's testimony established that information concerning her Union position was reflected in her file folder and that she had such information included therein. Mr. Pinkerton denied seeing her personnel file prior to the interview. There is no reason to doubt his credibility in this regard.

Further support for the finding that Ms. Golden's Union status played no role in the rating process is reflected by the fact that she was assigned above average ratings of "4" by all panel members in categories of interest relating to communication skills and interpersonal skills. 3/ The evidence discloses that Ms. Golden's discussion of Union activity arose in connection with these elements of the interview. (Joint Exhibits 1-3). Moreover, the panel's evaluation of Ms. Golden characterized her as being very sensitive to others and very interested in creating a harmonious work environment. (Assistant Secretary Exhibit 5). These evaluative factors coupled with what appeared to be a clear showing that no significance could have been attributed to the question by the panel, and the fact that Ms. Golden first broached the subject on her own behalf as a topic of discussion, leads to the inescapable conclusion that the interrogation did not prejudice career opportunities presented to her during or after the promotional interview. That is, there has been no showing that the inquiry deprived her of a fair opportunity to compete for promotion. 4/

It is clear from the record developed that, although innocuous from the standpoint of the rating process utilized to determine successful applicants, the inquiry did give her the impression that management may have felt she was spending too much of her time on Union business, and that her Union activities would tend to interfere with her prospects for promotion. She was upset by the question and felt she would not be selected because of her Union affiliation.

3/ The rating scale assigned the following values: 5-excellent, 4-above average, 3-average, 2-below average, 1-poor.

4/ It should be noted that the Complainant does not claim that Ms. Golden was discriminated against in regard to promotion because of the question posed by Mr. Pinkerton. The withdrawal of the Section 19(a)(2) allegation operated to remove this issue from the case.

of the Complainant Union immediately after the February 4, 1976 interview. This in turn led to the filing of a formal charge on April 7, 1976. In this regard the record reflected that responsibility for the preparation of unfair labor practice charges rested with the national office of the National Treasury Employees Union.

Discussion and Conclusions

The language of Section 19(a)(1) of the Order is designed to prevent employers from interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of rights guaranteed to them. Section 1(a) of the Order provides:

> Section 1. Policy. (a) Each employee of the executive branch of the Federal Government has the right, freely and without fear of penalty or reprisal, to form, join, and assist a labor organization or to refrain from any such activity, and each employee shall be protected in the exercise of this right. Except as otherwise expressly provided in this Order, the right to assist a labor organization extends to participation in the management of the organization and acting for the organization in the capacity of an organization representative, including presentation of its views to officials of the executive branch, the Congress, or other appropriate authority. The head of each agency shall take the action required to assure that employees in the agency are apprised of their rights under this section, and that no interference, restraint, coercion, or discrimination is practiced within his agency to encourage or discourage membership in a labor organization.

It is clear that the right to engage in union activities, would be seriously jeopardized if employees are interrogated about the relationship between union activity and work performance. The doctrine has become well entrenched in the private sector, that, absent some legitimate purpose, an employer must not interrogate his employees regarding their union activities.

In such instances, interrogation constitutes interference with the rights of employees to feel free in joining and assisting labor organizations. The Assistant Secretary has, in Vandenberg Air Force Base, 4329 Aerospace Support Group, A/SLMR No. 383, concluded that likewise in the federal sector a supervisor's interrogation of employees with respect to their union activities may be violative of Section 19(a)(1) of the Order. See also Office of Economic Opportunity, Region V, Chicago, Illinois, A/SLMR No. 477; Internal Revenue Service, Wilmington, Delaware District, A/SLMR No. 516; Federal Energy Administration, Region IV, Atlanta, Georgia, A/SLMR No. 541; Department of the Army, United States Army Transportation Center and Fort Eustis, Virginia, A/SLMR No. 681 (dictum); and Department of the Navy, Mare Island Naval Shipyard, A/SLMR No. 775.

In this case the subject was first raised by the employee involved during the initial phase of the promotional interview. The topic was then dropped entirely, and not raised again until Mr. Pinkerton inquired whether Ms. Golden's Union business took her away from her work. In this context the coercive nature of the inquiry becomes apparent. It was logical for Ms. Golden to conclude that the pursuit of Union representational work would tend to undermine her prospects for promotion. This leads to the conclusion that the inquiry operated to interfere with her right to be a union member, the right to participate in the management of a labor organization, and the right to act as a labor organization representative. I therefore find and conclude that the inquiry constituted interference, restraint or coercion under Section 19(a)(1) of the Order.

Counsel for the Complainant argues that the Respondent should be ordered to rerun the promotional interview because the taint of the Section 19(a)(1) violation was so severe as to make this remedy necessary. Department of the Navy, Mare Island Naval Shipyard, A/SLMR No. 775 is cited as authority for this remedy. In the cited case the complainant alleged that the respondent activity had violated Sections 19(a)(1) and (2) of the Order by interrogating an employee about his activities as a union steward during a job promotion interview and by failing to promote him because of his union activities. However, in A/SLMR No. 775 the pattern of questioning concerning union activity during the promotional interview was extensive, and became the dominant theme of the interview. Although no evidence of discrimination within the meaning of Section 19(a)(2) was found, the Administrative Law Judge held that the conduct violated the selection process as a means of merit promotion. Because of this factor he recommended that candidates for the promotion be interviewed again in an atmosphere free of any reference to union membership or activities. It is clear from the facts adduced in this case that the interview was not so tainted. There is no indication of prejudice here, and I find no basis for recommending such a remedy.

Recommendation

Having found that the Respondent has engaged in certain conduct which is violative of Section 19(a)(1) of the Order, I recommend that the Assistant Secretary adopt the following order designed to effectuate the purpose of Executive Order 11491.

Recommended Order

Pursuant to Section 6(b) of Executive Order 11491 and Section 203.25(a) of the Regulations, the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor Management Relations hereby orders that the United States Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Detroit Data Center, Detroit, Michigan, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Interrogating its employees as to the relationship between their union activities and their work performance.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of rights assured by Executive Order 11491, as amended.

2. Take the following affirmative actions in order to effectuate the purposes and provisions of Executive Order 11491, as amended:

(a) Post at its facility at the United States Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Detroit Data Center, Detroit, Michigan, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix" on forms to be furnished by the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by an appropriate management official and shall be posted and maintained by him for sixty consecutive days thereafter in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Said official shall take reasonable steps to insure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(b) Pursuant to Section 203.26 of the Regulations, notify the Assistant Secretary, in writing, within twenty days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

DIVISION OF MILITARY AND NAVAL AFFAIRS, STATE OF NEW YORK, NEW YORK AIR NATIONAL GUARD
A/SLMR No. 863

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by the H. E. Brooks Memorial Chapter, Association of Civilian Technicians (ACT) alleging essentially that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by refusing to bargain in good faith concerning a plan for implementing a reduction-in-force (RIF) at the Suffolk County Air National Guard Base, Westhampton Beach, Long Island, New York.

The civilian technician employees at the Suffolk Base were represented by the ACT as a part of the state-wide unit for which it held exclusive recognition. The New York State Council of the ACT and the Respondent entered into a negotiated agreement on September 15, 1975, and it was approved by the National Guard Bureau (NGB) on October 3, 1975. The negotiated agreement, which noted that it was subject to currently applicable statutes and regulations issued by the NGB, contained a provision on RIFs which stated that "factors (not to be construed as all inclusive) to be considered in developing reduction-in-force plans are: (a) Technician service; (b) qualifications, to include experience and skill; (c) performance ratings; and (d) filling vacancies prior to reduction-in-force." After being informed by the Respondent in January 1976, of the necessity for RIFs, agreements between the ACT and the Respondent concerning RIF procedures at bases at Niagara Falls and Syracuse, New York, were concluded. At Suffolk, the parties were able to agree with respect to all the elements of the RIF procedure except for the ACT's proposals which would have had the effect of making seniority the primary criterion for ranking employees and which, among other things, would have negated the NGB's regulatory requirement that military evaluations be given equal weight with civilian evaluations in ranking employees. The Respondent took the position that the implementation of the RIF pursuant to the NGB's regulatory requirements concerning RIFs was not inconsistent with the language of the negotiated agreement.

The Administrative Law Judge concluded that the NGB's regulatory requirements concerning RIFs were not inconsistent with the specific provisions of the parties' negotiated agreement and that, as the negotiated agreement provided that it was subject to regulations of the NGB applicable at the time it was entered into and the NGB's regulations concerning RIFs were in effect at the time of the signing of the agreement and had not been waived by the terms of the negotiated agreement, the Respondent did not violate Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by refusing to negotiate concerning the application of the NGB's regulations concerning RIFs under the circumstances herein. The Administrative Law Judge distinguished this case from the decision in Colorado Air National Guard, Buckley Air National Guard Base, Aurora, Colorado, A/SLMR No. 758, as in that case the Activity attempted to impose unilaterally the NGB's regulations concerning RIFs despite the fact that the parties' negotiated agreement therein contained specific RIF procedures which were different from the NGB's regulations and the NGB had approved such an agreement, in effect waiving the Activity's right to rely on the agency regulations.

The Assistant Secretary adopted the findings, conclusions and recommendation of the Administrative Law Judge and he ordered that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety.

RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

Statement of the Case

This case arises under the provisions of Executive Order 11491, as amended (hereinafter called the Order). On May 18, 1976 H.E. Brooks Memorial Chapter, Association of Civilian Technician, herein called H.E. Brooks Chapter of A.C.T., filed a complaint alleging that Division of Military and Naval Affairs, State of New York (hereinafter called the Respondent and the Activity) violated Sections 19(a)(1) and (6) by failing to negotiate and bargain in good faith concerning a plan for implementing a reduction in force with respect to the Suffolk County Air National Guard Base located in Westhampton Beach, Long Island.

Pursuant to a Notice of Hearing on Complaint issued on December 1, 1976 by Department of Labor New York Regional Administrator a hearing in the subject matter was held before the undersigned in Westhampton, New York. Both parties were represented at the hearing and were afforded full opportunity to be heard; to call, examine and cross-examine witnesses; and to introduce evidence bearing on the issues involved herein. Both parties were advised of their rights to argue orally and both filed briefs which have been duly considered.

Upon the entire record in this case, from my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, and from all of the testimony and evidence adduced at the hearing, I make the following findings, conclusions and recommendations:

Findings of Fact

1. The New York State Counsel of the Association of Civilian Technicians (hereinafter called the Union and ACT) has at all times material been the collective bargaining representative for a Unit composed of all New York Army and Air National Guard Technicians.

2. A collective bargaining agreement between the Chief of Staff of the Activity and ACT (hereinafter called the Agreement) was entered into on September 15, 1975. The Agreement was approved by the National Guard Bureau (hereinafter called NGB) on October 3, 1975.

3. The Preamble to the agreement states that it is "subject to currently applicable statutes and regulations issued by the National Guard Bureau...." Article 13 of the Agreement is entitled "Reduction-in-Force" and Section 5 of this Article provides:

"Factors (not to be construed as all inclusive) to be considered in developing reduction-in-force plans are:

a. Technician service.

b. Qualifications, to include experience and skill.

c. Performance ratings.

d. Filling vacancies prior to reduction-in-force."

4. The National Guard Bureau (NGB) administers the National Guard of the United States by virtue of delegated authority from the Department of Defense and by Statute and Department of Defense Regulation. The NGB issued Technical Personnel Phamphlet 910 (TPP 910) on March 1, 1973, which sets forth a "program designed to assist the State in the proper and orderly transition of technicians in the event of a reduction-in-force (RIF)...." TPP 910 (Chapter 5-11) provides for the establishment of a retention register in RIF situations and the criteria to be used in placement on the register. A format for such a retention register is also included in TPP 910.

5. The Activity was advised of a possible RIF in October 1975 and tried to avoid such an occurrence. Apparently in January 1976 the Activity recognized that a RIF could not be avoided and by letter dated January 29, 1976 notified the State Chairman of ACT of the impending RIF and its implementation at three affected military bases. The letter stated, in part,:

"3. The agreement between DMNA and ACT, Inc. requires consultation in RIF procedures. Such consultation would normally be with the State Chairman. However, in view of the geographic locations of the bases involved and the complexities of each case, it is suggested that such consultation be with an Act representative at each base rather than with the State Chairman. If you concur, the representatives designated by you would have full authority for the employee organization and such action would be considered as meeting the requirements of the agreement."

6. ACT named basically different representatives for the three meetings concerning the proposed RIF at the three different installations. Meetings were held between the ACT representatives and the Activity concerning first the Niagara Falls Installation and then the Syracuse Installation. Agreements were reach with respect to the implementation of the RIF at each of these installations and in each case TPP 910 was to be applied.

7. The representatives of ACT and the Activity met on February 25, 1976 to discuss the RIF at the Suffolk installation. The Union and Activity representatives submitted a number of proposals and then bargained for the entire day. The parties reached tentative agreement and basically all of the Union's proposals were adopted except one. The one that was not agreed upon was the Union's Proposal Number 6 which provided:

"6. Establish a retention register by tenure group, compiled as follows;

A. Technician Service (seniority).... Length of time employee has been employed by the NYANG for excepted employees and adjusted and accredited service for competitive employees.

B. Qualifications, to include experience and skill. (Score 1 to 5 years added).

C. Performance rating .... An employee's current official performance rating on the date of issuance of a general RIF notice. (Score 5 yrs Outstanding
3 yrs Excellent
1 yr Satisfactory."

The Activity representatives refused to accept Union proposal No. 6 because they contended they had to apply TPP 910 in setting up the retention register. The Union in urging proposal No. 6 contended that they wanted seniority to be the main criteria in setting up a retention register. The Union apparently tied this to Article 13 Section 5 of the contract. The Activity took the position that it had to apply the criteria set forth in TPP 910 and pointed out that that all four criteria set out in Article 13 Section 5 were included in the Supervisor's report required by TPP 910 in setting up the retention register. The parties then signed a document which was entitled "Proposed Reduction-in-Force Plan" which set forth those terms agreed upon and specifically set forth ACT Proposal Number 6 which had not been agreed upon. The Activity agreed it would seek further guidance and consultation from its headquarters in Albany and would "get back" to the Union representatives. 1/

8. By mailgrams of February 28, 1976 the Union and its Suffolk representative contended that the Activity, by refusing to agree to Proposal Number 6, was violating Artilce 13 Section 5 of the contract. ACT demanded that the Activity rectify this situation.

9. On or about March 1, 1976 in the morning, an Activity representative telephoned Union representative Waters to see if the Union had changed its position with respect to Proposal Number 6. Apparently the Union advised the Activity that it had not changed its position.

10. On or about March 1, 1976 the Activity issued its general RIF notice letters with respect to the Suffolk installation.

11. On March 4, 1976 the Activity sent a letter to the Union advising it that the RIF would be instituted at the Suffolk base and that the agreed "Proposed Reduction-in-Force Plan" that had been signed on February 25 would be implemented along with the requirements of TPP 910.

12. On March 6 Union representative Waters sent the Activity a mailgram requesting that they go back to the negotiating table "for unresolved items based on the way we proposed it."

13. By letter dated March 12, 1976 the Activity replied to the Union's February 28, 1976 mailgram in which it advised the Union that the use of TPP 910 is mandatory and that within this framework Section 5 Article 13 is being observed in the RIF at the Suffolk installation.

14. The Union sent a letter dated March 16, 1976 to the NGB requesting that, with respect to the Suffolk Installation RIF, an exception be granted from the retention register provisions of TPP 910. By letter dated April 30, 1976 the NGB advised the Union that it would not grant an

1/ Although there is some confusion as to what was precisely said it is clear that the Activity representatives were going to seek guidance on the entire RIF agreement and Union's Proposal Number 6 and was going to communicate with the Union further once such guidance had been secured.

exception to the TPP 910 retention register provisions in order to permit it to bargain about them on a local level.

15. On March 23, 1976 the Activity issued the specific RIF notices to those specific employees affected by the RIF at the Suffolk Installation.

16. By letter of May 29, 1975 the NGB turned down a request by the Activity, made at the urging of ACT, that they be granted an exception to certain aspects of the TPP 910 requirements pertaining to the retention register. The Union had received a copy of this communication.

Conclusions of Law

The Union contends first that because the Activity first learned of the possible RIF in October of 1975 it did not timely notify the Union. However, this contention must be rejected. The record establishes that although the Activity first learned of the possibility of a RIF in October 1975, it then tried to take action to see if such a RIF could be avoided. When in January 1976 the Activity learned that a RIF was inevitable it promptly notified ACT by letter dated January 29, 1976 and set in motion procedures to bargain about the procedures for implementing the RIF and its impact. Such notification was sufficiently prompt to give the Union sufficient time to meet and confer with the Activity and therefore satisfied the Activity's obligation.

The Union contends that the Activity violated Sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order during the February 25 meeting and thereafter by refusing to negotiate concerning ACT's Proposal Number 6 because the Activity contended it had to apply TPP 910's provisions with respect to the retention register. In effect the Activity was stating that the applicational TPP 910 was non-negoitable as was Union Proposal Number 6, which was inconsistent with TPP 910. 2/

The Agreement of September 15, 1975 provided that it was, inter alia, "subject to currently applicable....

2/ There is no dispute that TPP 910 and proposal No. 6 are inconsistent.

regulations" issued by the NGB. At that time TPP 910 had already been issued by NGB. NGB then approved the Agreement, with no notation that it any way was inconsistent with TPP 910. It is concluded that Article 13 Section 5, which sets forth criteria which are not all inclusive nor given specific weights for use in developing a reduction-in-force plan, is not necessarily inconsistent with TPP 910. The criteria set forth in the Agreement, as well as others, could be taken into account in the various provisions for setting up the retention register in conformity with TPP 910. The Union contends that its Proposal Number 6 which was presented at the February 25 meeting was merely a restatement of Article 13 Section 5 of the Agreement. This contention is rejected. Proposal Number 6 sets forth all the criteria that will be used in setting a retention register with very specific weights and procedures for evaluating employees. Proposal Number 6 is quite different from Article 13 Section 5 which deals with some general criteria, which are not weighted nor all inclusive. Proposal Number 6 is inconsistent with TPP 910. For example although within the TPP 910 procedures for setting up a retention register some weight could be given to seniority, it could not be given the overwhelming weight given it in Proposal Number 6.

During the February 25 meeting the Activity advised ACT that for these very reasons it could not accept Proposal Number 6 and had to follow NGB rules and apply TPP 910. Thus the Activity was, in effect, deciding that the application of the TPP 910 retention register procedures were non-negotiable.

In the circumstances of this case it is concluded that I cannot find that the Activity violated Sections 19(a)(1) and (6) baded on its refusal to negotiate concerning the application of TPP 910 in RIF situations.

It is clear that NGB is in effect the "agency headquarters" for the State National Guards and it is the organization that in this very case approved the Agreement in October 1975. This Agreement stated that it was subject to the regulations of NGB and, in fact, ACT had sought unsuccessfully in a different RIF situation in May 1975, before the Agreement had been entered into, to have NGB waive the TPP 910 requirements. Thus it is concluded that NGB is "agency headquarters" within the meaning Sections

11 and 15 of the Order. 3/

The subject case is distinguishable from the Colorado Air National Guard Case, supra, because in that case the Colorado Air National Guard had entered into a collective bargaining agreement with ACT which specifically provided for the application of certain RIF procedures and regulations that were clearly different from TPP 910. Thus it was held that when, during a RIF, the Colorado Air National Guard unilaterlaly applied the TPP 910 procedures rather than the collective bargaining agreement procedures, the Colorado Air National Guard violated Sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order. 4/ It should be noted that the Assistant Secretary in the Colorado Air National Guard Case, supra, specifically discussed TPP 910 as an "agency" policy or regulation.

In the instant case the Agreement between the parties specifically recognized that it was subject to regulations issued by the NGB and TPP 910 had, at that time already been issued. Since TPP 910 and Article 13 of the Agreement were not necessarily inconsistent, it is concluded that by approving the Agreement NGB was not waiving the application of TPP 910 in RIF situations. Thus the instant case raises a different problem than the Colorado Air National Guard Case, supra. In that case the issue raised is whether Sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order was violated by the unilateral imposition of TPP 910, an agency regulation, when the parties had agreed, as part of their collective bargaining ag eement, upon waiving TPP 910 and upon new and different RIF procedures.

In the subject case the issue presented is whether the Activity violated Sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order when there had not been a waiver of the application of the of the agency regulation, TPP 910, and the Activity refused to negotiate about the application of the TPP 910 RIF

3/ In this regard "agency headquarters," "agency policies and regulations" are distinguished from "appropriate authorities" within the meaning of Section 12(a) of the Order. See Colorado Air National Guard, Buckley Air National Guard Base, A/LSMR No. 756 (hereinafter referred to as the Colorado Air National and Guard Case).

4/ In these circumstances it was concluded that when NGB approved the collective bargaining agreement it waived, "its policy or regulation" set forth in TPP 910 and that it was not an outside "appropriate authority" to justify changing an existing contract.

procedures in anticipation of an imminent RIF.

Section 11(a) of the Order provides that the parties must meet and confer with respect to personnel policies and practices and matters affecting working conditions so far as they may be appropriate under "published agency policies and regulations for which a compelling need exists.... and which are issued at the agency headquarter level."

When an Activity refuses to negotiate on a certain subject because the Activity deems it non-negotiable because of an existing regulation there are procedures set forth in Section 11(c) of the Order for seeking a determination whether the matter is negotiable which the labor organization must pursue. However, Section 11 (d) of the Order provides that when there is an unfair labor practice case based on "an alleged unilateral change" the negotiability issue can be decided as part of the unfair labor practice procedure.

It is concluded however that Section 11(d) of the Order is not applicable to the instant case and therefore I conclude that I am without authority, under the Order, to make a finding with respect to the question of whether the Activity had to bargain about the application of the TPP 910 procedures. It is concluded that there was no "alleged unilateral change" in the instant case; rather TPP 910 had been in existence since 1973, had been applied by the parties in the past, 5/ and was impliedly recognized by the parties in the preamble to the Agreement. Thus this is not a situation where the Activity is unilaterally applying a new regulation, but rather one in which it is refusing to negotiate about changing an existing regulation. This is not the situation contemplated by Section 11(d) of the Order. Rather Section 11(d) of the Order gives the parties a method for challenging a unilateral change without having to go through two procedures. In the instant case ACT had ample time and opportunity before the subject RIF to seek to bargain about the application of TPP 910 and, if the Activity refused to bargain, to utilize the procedures provided in Section 11(c) of the Order. This would have been the more orderly way of handling this matter rather than waiting for a RIF to be imminent and then to seek to bargain about the application of an existing agency regulation and to have negotiability questions determined in an unfair practice proceeding. 6/

Thus I conclude that I must dismiss the allegation that the Activity violated Sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order based on its refusal to negotiate concerning the application of TPP 910 because I am without jurisdiction to make a determination whether the application of TPP 910 was negotiable and where there was any "compelling need" within the meaning of Section 11(a) of the Order to privilege the removal of this subject matter from collective bargaining. 7/

Finally the Activity had advised ACT, at the close of the February 25 meeting, that it would check and get back to the Union concerning whether it could waive the TPP 910 requirements. The Activity did notify the Union in its letters of March 4, 1976 and March 12, 1976 that it was bound to use the TPP 910 procedures. 8/ Thus it is concluded that the Activity did advise the Union of its final position.

6/ If this were permitted parties might never utilize the more orderly procedures for testing negotiability where an agency's regulations are involved.

7/ If it were concluded that Section 11(d) of the Order empowered me to rule on the negotiability issue in the instant unfair labor practice case, I would conclude that the Activity violated Sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by refusing to negotiate concerning the RIF procedure. The Activity did not establish at the hearing that such a refusal was privileged because of any "compelling need" for uniform application of TPP 910 nationwide within the requirements of Section 11(a) of the Order. The Activity put in no evidence to establish such "compelling need." In these circumstances I would necessarily have to conclude that there was no justification for the Activity's refusal to negotiate concerning the Union's Proposal Number 6.

8/ The fact that this notification was sent after the general RIF notification was sent to employees, although perhaps unfortunate, does not constitute a violation of the Order since ACT still had ample time to request any further negotiation before the specific RIF notifications were sent.

The Union by its mailgram dated March 6, 1976 renewed its request to negotiate but did so "on the way we proposed," presumably still insisting on its proposal number 6. The Activity had already made it quite clear that it could not negotiate concerning proposal number 6. Thus it is concluded the Activity's failure to meet and further discuss the Union proposal did not violate the Order. Finally after the March 12 letter from the Activity in which it was made quite clear that TPP 910 would be applied the Union requested no further meeting to discuss any other aspects of the RIF.

In light of all of the foregoing it is concluded that he record in the subect case does not establish that the Respondent engaged in any conduct which constituted a violation of Sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order.

Recommendation

On the basis of the foregoing Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law, I hereby recommend to the Assistant Secretary that the subject complaint be dismissed in its entirety.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR
ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS
SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES, LOCAL 3486, AFL-CIO
A/SLMR No. 864

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by the 177th Fighter Interceptor Group, Air National Guard, New Jersey Department of Defense (Complainant) alleging that the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 3486, AFL-CIO, (Respondent) violated Section 19(b)(4) of the Order by actively encouraging and condoning a work stoppage and by failing to take affirmative steps to prevent or stop the prohibited activity.

The Administrative Law Judge found that bad weather conditions forced the rescheduling of a segment of an Operational Readiness Inspection (ORI) from Sunday afternoon to the following Monday, which was normally a day off for unit employees. In reaction to that change, the President of the Respondent advised the Vice-President and a steward that they should present unit employees with several options. He stated that they could take emergency annual leave, emergency sick leave, or they could simply stay off from work without reporting in. He also stated that they should "do the government a favor and come to work," but whatever they did, the Union would support them. The steward was advised to hold a meeting with unit employees and relay to them the options outlined by the Respondent's President. At the meeting, the steward related the options and informed unit employees that whatever option they selected, the Union would back them up. The next day, Monday, the Union Vice-President, the steward, and another employee did not report to work or call in. When they returned on Tuesday, they informed their supervisor that they had not reported in or called in because they did not recognize the change in the workweek.

The Administrative Law Judge concluded, that the Respondent's conduct violated Section 19(b)(4) of the Order in that it condoned and encouraged employees to withhold their services and failed to fulfill its affirmative duty to prevent such conduct.

Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order and the entire record in the matter, including the Respondent's exceptions, the Assistant Secretary adopted the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendations, and issued an appropriate remedial order.

DECISION AND ORDER

On March 31, 1977, Administrative Law Judge Gordon J. Myatt issued his Recommended Decision and Order in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had engaged in certain unfair labor practices and recommending that it cease and desist therefrom, and take certain affirmative actions as set forth in the attached Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order. Thereafter, the Respondent filed exceptions to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order and the entire record in the subject case, including the Respondent's exceptions, I hereby adopt the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendations.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 6(b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, and Section 203.26(b) of the Regulations promulgated thereunder, the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations hereby orders that the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 3486, AFL-CIO, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Encouraging or engaging in a work stoppage against the 177th Fighter Interceptor Group, Air National Guard, New Jersey Department of Defense, or any other agency of the Government of the United States, or assisting or participating in such activity.

(b) Condoning any such activity by the failure to take affirmative action to prevent or stop it.

2. Take the following affirmative actions in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Executive Order:

(a) Post at its local business office, at its normal meeting places, and at all other places where notices to members and to employees of the 177th Fighter Interceptor Group, Air National Guard, New Jersey Department of Defense are customarily posted, including space on bulletin boards made available to the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 3486, AFL-CIO, by agreement or otherwise by the 177th Interceptor Group, Air National Guard, New Jersey Department of Defense, copies of the attached notice, marked "Appendix", on forms to be furnished by the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations. Upon receipt of such forms they shall be signed by the President of the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 3486, AFL-CIO, and shall be posted for a period of 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to its members and to employees of the 177th Fighter Interceptor Group, Air National Guard, New Jersey Department of Defense are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 3486, AFL-CIO, to ensure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(b) Mail a copy of said notice to each of its members at his last known home address.

(c) Furnish sufficient copies of said notice within 14 days of the date of this decision to the 177th Fighter Interceptor Group, Air National Guard, New Jersey Department of Defense for posting in conspicuous places where it customarily posts information to its employees. The 177th Fighter Interceptor Group, Air National Guard, New Jersey Department of Defense shall maintain such notices for a period of 60 consecutive days from the date of posting.

(d) Pursuant to Section 203.27 of the Regulations notify the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations in writing within 30 days from the date of this order as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

Statement of the Case

Pursuant to a complaint filed July 1, 1976, and an amended complaint filed July 8, 1976, by 177th Fighter Interceptor Group, Air National Guard, New Jersey Department of Defense (hereinafter called Complainant) the Regional Administrator for Labor-Management Services for the New York Region issued a Notice of Hearing on complaint on August 26, 1976, The complaint alleged that American Federation of Government Employees, Local 3486, AFL-CIO, (hereinafter called Respondent Union) violated Section 19(b)(4) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, in that the labor organization called or engaged in a work stoppage, or condoned such activity by failing to take affirmative action to prevent or stop the prohibited activity. The alleged unlawful conduct is asserted to have occurred on April 12, 1976, at the National Avaiation Facility Experimental Center (NAFEC) in Pomona, New Jersey, where the Complainant operated a base as a part of the Aerospace Defense Command.

A hearing was held in this matter on October 27, 1976, in Pomona, New Jersey. 1/ All parties were represented by counsel and afforded full opportunity to be heard and to introduce relevant evidence and testimony on the issues involved. As a party-in-interest, the Regional Administrator for Labor-Management Services was represented by the Office of the Regional Solicitor of Labor. Briefs were submitted by counsel and have been duly considered in arriving at the decision in this case. 2/

1/ Although the rules require an expedited procedure for alleged violations of Section 19(b)(4) because of the gravity of the asserted unlawful conduct, this procedure does not apply in the instant case as the alleged unlawful conduct had ceased. (Title 29, C.F.R. §203.7).

2/ The time for filing briefs was set for November 30, 1976, and was extended until December 15, 1976, because of the failure of the official reporter to provide copies of the transcript to the parties. The time was further extended until January 31, 1977, for the same reason.

Findings of Fact

A. Background Facts

The Complainant Activity is a military unit in the Air National Guard, whose mission is to train and equip personnel to identify, intercept, and destroy (if ordered) aircraft or missiles coming into the United States. As such, the Complainant Activity is an operational unit of the Aerospace Defense Command (ADCOM). The unit is staffed by both military personnel and civilian employees; the latter are classified as Air Technicians and are represented by the Respondent Union.

Although the Air Technicians have Wage Grade or General Schedule (GS) status as civilians, they also must be members of the Air National Guard and hold military rank. They are required to perform military duties one weekend (Saturday and Sunday) per month, or at least 15 active duty days in the course of a year. When the civilian employees are in military status it is described as Unit Trading Assembly (UTA). The work they perform, however, is normally the same work they perform as civilian employees.

The normal workweek at the Complainant Activity is Tuesday through Saturday from 8:30 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. This does not apply when the employees are in UTA status; they then work as civilians from Monday through Friday and perform their military obligation on the weekend.

B. The Alleged Unlawful Conduct

The unit worked Monday through Friday the week of April 5, 1976, as it was scheduled for UTA status the following weekend. On April 6, 1976, Colonel Hannon, the Base Commander, received a notification there would be an Operational Readiness Inspection (ORI) the latter part of that week. This was an inspection conducted by the Inspector General's Office of ADCOM to test all capabilities of the unit to perform its mission satisfactorily. This type of inspection was a "no notice" inspection, which meant that the unit received notification 72 hours in advance of the arrival of the inspection team. The procedures required the inspected unit to be put through various stages of alert, called DEFCOF, 3/ and to perform certain exercises to test its readiness and performance.

The advance unit of the inspection team arrived at the installation on Thursday, April 8. The main contingent landed the following day, and the unit was put through a number of exercises in different DEFCOF stages. On Sunday, April 11, the unit was required to engage in a "flush" exercise that had a status of DEFCOF-1 to determine the survivability of the unit's aircraft in wartime conditions. This particular exercise involved all of the aircraft of the Complainant Activity, including support aircraft. Due to a restriction imposed by NAFEC authorities who operated the installation where the unit was based, no flying is permitted on Sunday mornings. This was to avoid disturbing church services conducted in the nearby communities. When informed of the restriction, the head of the inspection team scheduled the "flush" exercise for early Sunday afternoon.

At the time the aircraft were being readied for launch, the weather conditions changed and crosswinds exceeding 20 knots per hour were sweeping across the runway. The inspection team commander received information that the weather front would prevail for the balance of the day and pass through the area that evening. He then rescheduled the "flush" exercise for the following day, which normally would have been a non-work day for the unit.

When the decision was made to reschedule the exercise, the Base Commander attempted to contact Donald Auer, vice president of the Union and a technician attached to the Aerospace Ground Equipment Shop. 4/ He was unable to reach Auer who was performing duties on the flight line.

3/ DEFCOF consists of several gradations of alertness governing the stages of readiness and the types of response the unit must undertake. For example, DEFCOF-3 through 5 is a warning that some event might occur, but the unit is not required to act. DEFCOF-2 requires the unit to secure and guard its base. DEFCOF-1 places the unit on a war footing and in combat status.

4/ Auer was a powered support systems mechanic and held the military rank of sergeant.

He then attempted to contact Sergeant Pascale, secretary of the Union, but he was also out on the flight line. The Base Commander finally contacted a union steward from the Avionics Shop and notifed him of the change in the workweek and the reason for it. He instructed this individual to inform the other union officials. Because of the inspection, the employees had started an early shift that morning and were scheduled to leave early in the afternoon. Fearing they would leave before being notified of rescheduled workweek, Hannon had the change announced on the public address system. He also notified his supervisors and instructed them to relay the message verbally to the employees.

Sergeant Rutherford, a section chief in the AGE shop went to the flight line in a vehicle to find the union officials to personally notify them of the change. He spoke with Auer who was sitting in a parked vehicle along side a vehicle in which Louis Cascione, steward for the AGE shop, and another employee, Schinestuhl, were sitting. He informed all of them of the change in the work schedule.

When Auer and Cascione returned to the AGE shop, they each contacted Richard Apothaker, the president of the union, at his home. 5/ In his conversations with Auer and Cascione, Apothaker advised that the employees had several options available to them. He stated they could take emergency annual leave, emergency sick leave or they could simply stay off from work without reporting in. He also stated that the employees should "do the government a favor and come to work", but whatever decision they made, the Union would support them.

Auer and Cascione discussed the matter among themselves and decided that Cascione, as shop steward, should hold a meeting with the employees in the shop after work and relay to them the positions outlined by Apothaker. After the work-day the AEG technicians met with Cascione in the shop and sought to get from him the union's official position on the change in the workweek. Cascione repeated the options outlined by Apothaker and told the employees "that they should do the government a favor" but whatever they did, the Union would back them up. 6/

5/ Apothaker was formerly a civilian technician attached to the unit. He was no longer employed in this capacity and was not on the base.

6/ Auer was not present at the shop meeting. He left the base early, but suggested to Cascione that he conduct the meeting in response to questions from the shop employees.

The following day when the "flush" exercise was held, Auer, Cascione and Schinestuhl did not report to work nor did they call in. In addition to these three employees, two other air technicians, Conti and Lauria, were also absent from work. The latter two employees, however, had been given permission by Rutherford to go on annual leave when it was rumored the unit might have to work on Monday. On Tuesday, April 13, when Auer, Cascione and Schinestuhl returned to work, they informed Rutherford that they had not called in because they did not recognize the change in the workweek. Each indicated that if they had called in requesting some type of emergency leave, it would had been tacit recognition that there had been an official change in the workweek schedule. As a result of the failure to report to work on April 12, the three men were marked absent without leave (AWOL).

Concluding Findings

The Respondent Union argues that the Complainant Activity and the Regional Administrator have failed to establish that a work stoppage occurred or that the Respondent Union condoned such unlawful activity, if it did in fact happen. In my judgement, the record does not support the Respondent Union's argument, and I find that a violation of Section 19(b)(4) has indeed been committed.

There is no need to dwell here on the right, or the absence of the right, of management to reschedule the work-week in order to complete the exercises required by the ORI. The regulations of the Air National Guard delegate to the Base Commander the authority to change the basic workweek if the unit's mission requirements make such a change necessary. The circumstances here clearly establish that the ORI was not completed, and a rescheduling of the coming workweek was an absolute necessity. But even if this authority had not been delegated, a change in the workweek would have been mandated because of the intervention of the adverse weather conditions on Sunday. If the officials of the Respondent Union felt that the rescheduling violated the terms of any labor agreement in force or provisions of the Executive Order, they should have followed the procedures available to them under the Executive Order rather than resorting to self-help.

The above is premised on my finding that the Respondent Union did condone a withholding of services by members of the unit and failed to take any affirmative steps to prevent this conduct; which is the basic issue here. When Auer and Cascione contacted the union president by telephone it was evident that the union officials were attempting to adopt a "neutral position", while at the same time shifting the burden of the basic decision to the employees, i.e., whether to report or not report to work the following day. In outlining the various options they thought were available to the employees, the union officials condoned, and indeed encouraged, unlawful employee conduct by informing the employees that whatever action they decided to take, the Union would support them. The mere fact that the union officials stated that the employees "should do the government a favor and come to work" does not vitiate what I find to be unlawful encouragement to engage in a work stoppage.

The language of Section 19(b)(4) is clear and unambiguous. It provides that a labor organization shall not:

> (4) call or engage in a strike, work stoppage, or slow down; picket an agency in a labor-management dispute; or condone in such activity by failing to take affirmative action to prevent or stop it.

The Report and Recommendations of the Study Committee, on this point, which were adopted in toto when the Executive Order was issued in 1969 and have not been changed by subsequent amendments, contain the following language which sets forth the purpose of this provision of the Order:

> "The section should make clear that a recognized labor organization may not condone a strike or prohibit picketing by any member or group or of members within its organization which it represents under the order. Officials of the organization have a duty, in view of the procedures provided for peaceful and orderly resolutions of disputes and differences between employees and management, to exercise all organizational authority available to them to prevent or stop any such action by the organization or any of its locals, affiliates, or members."

While the report deals with picketing and strikes, the language of that section in the Executive Order clearly includes work stoppages as part of the class of proscribed activity.

Accordingly, I find that the Respondent Union was under an affirmative duty to advise its members that they should report to work the following day, even if the Respondent Union intended subsequently to contest the rescheduling under the procedures provided by the Executive Order. By failing to do so, and by providing the employees with the option of remaining away from work with union sanction and support, I find that the Respondent Union condoned a withholding of services and failed to meet the obligations imposed by Section 19(b)(4). Because of the limited duration of the work stoppage or withholding of services, and because of the minuscule number of employees involved, I do not believe that it would serve the interest of justice to invoke further sanctions under Section 2(e)(2) of the Executive Order against the Respondent Union. 7/

Having found that the Respondent Union engaged in activity which violated Section 19(b)(4), I shall recommend that the Assistant Secretary adopt the following Recommended Order designed to effectuate the policies of the Executive Order 11491, as amended.

RECOMMENDED ORDER

Pursuant to Section 6(b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended and Section 203.26(b) of the Regulations promulgated thereunder, the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations hereby Orders that American Federation of Government Employees, Local 3486, AFL-CIO, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

   (a) encouraging or engaging in a work stoppage against 177th Fighter Interceptor Group, Air National Guard, New Jersey Department of Defense, or any other agency of the Government of the United States, in a labor-management dispute, or assisting or participating in such activity.

   (b) condoning such activity by the failure to take affirmative action to prevent or stop it.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and provisions of the Executive Order:

7/ Cf. Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization, Inc., A/SLMR No. 10.

(a) Post at its local business office and in normal places where meetings with members occur copies of the attached notice, marked "Appendix", signed by the president of American Federation of Government Employees, Local 3486, AFL-CIO. Said copies of the notices shall be posted for a period of 60 consecutive days in conspicious places, including all places where notices to members are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent Union to ensure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by other materials.

(b) Mail a copy of said notice to each of its members at his last known home address.

(c) Furnish sufficient copies of notice to 177th Fighter Interceptor Group, Air National Guard, New Jersey Department of Defense for posting by it, if willing, at places where it customarily posts information for members of the Fighter Group Unit.

(d) Pursuant to Section 203.27 of the Regulations notify the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations in writing within twenty (20) days from the date of this Order as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

MARINE CORPS EXCHANGE 8-2,

A/SLMR No. 865

This case arose as a result of an unfair labor practice complaint filed by the National Association of Government Employees, Local R 12-185 (NAGE) alleging, in substance, that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (2) of the Order by its actions against an employee, including interference with her right to join a labor organization and termination of her employment because of her union membership.

The Administrative Law Judge concluded that the termination of the employee's employment was not in violation of Section 19(a)(2) of the Order as it was not related to her union activities. However, the Administrative Law Judge found that the manager of snack bars 2 and 3, whom he found to be a supervisor, violated Section 19(a)(1) by stating to the employee involved not only her own hostile views of unionism but also by alleging that the Food Service Manager would not like the employee joining the union and would find a way to get rid of the employee if she did go ahead and join the union.

Noting particularly the absence of exceptions, the Assistant Secretary adopted the findings, conclusions and recommendation of the Administrative Law Judge and he ordered that the Respondent cease and desist from the conduct found violative and that it take certain affirmative actions.

DECISION AND ORDER

On April 18, 1977, Administrative Law Judge Milton Kramer issued his Recommended Decision and Order in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had engaged in certain unfair labor practices and recommending that it cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative actions as set forth in the attached Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order. No exceptions were filed to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

Statement of the Case

This case arises under Executive Order 11491 as amended, alleging violations of Sections 19(a)(1) and (2) of the Executive Order. The violations were alleged to consist of discriminating against and terminating the employment of Olga Hayes because of her union membership and with her right, freely and without fear of reprisal, to join a labor organization.

Facts

The Complainant is the certified exclusive representative of a unit of about 400 of the Respondent's employees. It was certified July 31, 1975 after an election earlier that month. The Respondent conducts 17 operations including three snack bars one of which is on the golf course and another at the air tower. Leo M. McCrary is the Food Service Manager with over 100 employees under him. The snack bars employ about four employees each some of them part-time. Helen M. Warren is the manager of the snack bars at the golf course and air tower. As such she works at both snack bars furnishing food service and directing the other employees at those snack bars. She keeps their time cards and prepares bi-weekly work schedules for the other employees. The work schedules she prepares are generally approved by McCrary or his Assistant Manager of Food Service, Lilly C. Little. Warren is a salaried employee who works such hours as she finds necessary. She works five, six, and recently sometimes seven days per week as the situation permits. She does not have authority to hire, suspend, discharge, promote, reward, or discipline the employees she directs.

Snack bar 2, the one on the golf course, generally has about four or five employees, some full-time and some part-time, in addition to Warren. In December 1973 Olga Hayes was employed by the Respondent to work part-time at that snack bar as a "busboy". Later that category of employee was eliminated and all employees at the snack bars were classified as food service workers. They were hourly employees and each performed all aspects of the operation.

When first employed Hayes worked six days per week for about 38 hours. The golf course was open six days per week and was closed on Mondays. The employees at the snack bars worked five, six, or seven days as the needs called for.

In June 1974 Hayes was absent from work for three weeks because of sickness. On her return she said she could not work six days and asked to be put on a full-time five-day week, and her request was granted.

In September or October 1975 Hayes became a member of the Complainant. She executed a dues-deduction authorization effective with her wages for the pay period ending October 11, 1975. Warren is an outspoken person given to strong language and, at times, speaking in a loud voice. Hayes was fimilar with these characteristics of Warren. When Warren learned of Hayes having executed a dues-deduction authorization she attempted to persuade Hayes not to join the union in a loud voice and her customary strong language. The evidence is in sharp conflict on this point. Hayes testified that Warren made such attempt, and Warren denied it. English is not Hayes' native tongue and she has difficulty communicating in that language. In addition she was not entirely credible on all points. But on this point I credit her testimony for two reasons: first, because the particular conversation was corroborated by her husband, who was present and has no difficulty with the English language and second, because a former employee testified that during the union election campaign Warren engaged in anti-union conduct. Warren also said that McCrary would not like Hayes' joining the union. 1/

In October of 1975 it was decided to have the golf course open seven days per week and Major Van Hoose, the Exchange Officer, directed McCrary to make arrangements for the snack bar to be open seven days. McCrary asked Warren to arrange such a schedule. When Warren reported back that she could do it with two additional employees on a five-day week for all, McCrary instructed her to work out a seven day schedule utilizing only the present employees. Warren did so by scheduling all employees in that snack bar to work six days per week. Hayes refused to work on that schedule and she and Warren went to see McCrary. Hayes asked for a union representative to be present but none was available. It was a Saturday and the parties agreed to meet again on Monday with a union steward present.

The following Monday Hayes and Warren went to Mr. McCrary's office to meet with him and the union steward but the steward had already been there, had seen the schedule, had told McCrary he thought the schedule appropriate, and that he would so advise Hayes. Hayes then went to see Van Hoose, the Exchange Officer. He told Hayes he would try to work out something, but he never did.

1/ I do not credit the testimony that Warren urged the employees she managed not to join the union because of its inferior insurance program. On this point I find Warren urged only that if they joined the union they continue to carry the Exchange insurance. The Exchange insurance had comprehensive hospital and medical coverage with the Exchange sharing the cost of the voluntary insurance, while the insurance furnished by the union was paid for entirely by the union but insured against only accidental death or dismemberment.

Hayes became ill in November and went on sick leave. When her sick leave was used up she was asked when she would return. She was unable to do so and said she would return when her doctor permitted it. On December 17, 1975 Van Hoose addressed a memorandum to Hayes. Because she had used all her sick leave and was unable to give a date for her return, her employment was terminated for disability effective December 30, 1975 in accordance with Marine Corps regulations. The memorandum stated that at such time as she should be released by her doctor the Exchange would consider her re-employment consistent with her physical capacity and the staffing requirements of the Exchange. In January she reported she was ready to return. Several part-time jobs were offered to her but she rejected them.

McCrary does not have the authority to terminate any employee's employment; only Van Hoose has that authority. There was no probative evidence that McCrary harbors an anti-union animus, and no evidence at all that Van Hoose bears such an animus.

Discussion and Conclusion

The termination of Hayes' employment was not in violation of Section 19(a)(2) of the Executive Order because it was not discriminatory or related to her union activities. So far as the record shows Hayes' union "activities" consisted solely of becoming a member. The termination was made by Van Hoose and the record does not indicate that he even knew she was a member or that he had any union animus. He said he was terminating her employment for disability in accordance with Marine regulations because she was disabled, had used up her sick leave, and was unable to give a date for her return to work. There is no evidence or even contention that the regulations did not so provide. He said also that when she should be released by her doctor for work the Exchange would be glad to consider her re-employment consistent with her physical ability and staffing requirements. She was in fact offered several jobs but rejected them because they were part-time. There was no evidence full-time jobs were available. The record cannot support a conclusion that Hayes' employment was terminated because of her union membership or was otherwise discriminatory.

That leaves the alleged violation of Section 19(a)(1) in Warren trying to persuade Hayes not to become a member of the Complainant in late September or early October 1975.

Warren was a supervisor, although a minor one. That conclusion is not prevented by the fact that in July 1975, for the purposes of the election that resulted in the Complainant's certification, the parties agreed that Warren was a member of the unit as a "food service worker" 2/ and therefore not a supervisor. The evidence shows that she met one of the criteria of being a supervisor specified in Section 2(c) of the Executive Order in that she had the authority responsibly to direct the other employees in the snack bar. The criteria of determining supervisory status are specified in Section 2(a) in the disjunctive, and the fact that Warren did not meet any of the other criteria of supervisory status is irrelevant; an individual who possesses the authority to perform a single function described in Section 2(c) is a supervisor. United States Naval Weapons Center, China Lake, California and Local No. F-32, I.A.F.F., FLRC No. 72A-11(1973).

The foregoing conclusion is not free from doubt. Warren, instead of being classified as a supervisor, could almost as equally persuasively be considered non-supervisory "lead man". But the fact that she was not only at least a "lead man" but also prepared the bi-weekly work schedules which were almost always routinely approved decidedly tips the scales.

While a simple attempt by a supervisor to persuade an employee he supervises not to become a member of the certified union might not of itself constitute interference with the employee's right to join a labor organization in violation of Section 19(a)(1), 3/ here we have more. In addition to stating her own hostile views of unionism, Warren said that McCrary, the Food Service Manager, would not like Hayes' joining the union. This crossed the line of Warren's possibly permissible expression of her own views, and implied a possible reprisal by higher authority and had a tendency to constitute interference with Hayes' right, assured by Section 1(a) of the Executive Order, freely and without fear of penalty or reprisal, to join a labor organization or to refrain from such activity. The fact that Hayes was not in fact intimidated is irrelevant.

The Remedy

An agency or activity or facility, whichever is the area of the recognized unit, is of course responsible for the improper conduct of its supervisors. Normally, when an employer commits an unfair labor practice, it is ordered to cease and desist from such activity and to post notices that it will not do so again.

But here the violation was only marginally a violation, and was committed by one only marginally a supervisor of about eight employees some of whom were part-time, and was committed against only one such person who is no longer, for unrelated reasons, an employee. To require the Respondent to announce throughout its numerous facilities to its 400 civilian employees in the unit represented by Complainant that it has sinned and will sin no more would be overkill. A remedy more suitably tailored to the facts of this case would require the posting to be done only in snack bars 2 and 3, the only places where Warren had any authority at all. 4/ Accordingly, I will recommend that the Assistant Secretary issue the Order attached hereto as Appendix A.

RECOMMENDATION

Insofar as the complaint alleges a violation of Section 19(a)(2) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, it should be dismissed. With respect to its alleged violation of Section 19(a)(1), I recommend that the Assistant Secretary issue the Order attached hereto as Appendix A.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS
SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

PENNSYLVANIA AIR NATIONAL GUARD
A/SLMR No. 866

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by the Association of Civilian Technicians (Complainant) alleging that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order. In this regard, the Complainant alleged that by the issuance on February 15, 1976, of Base Regulation 35-1, entitled "Dress and Personal Appearance of ANG Personnel," and a directive entitled "Technician Work Day," the Respondent unilaterally changed working terms and conditions in derogation of its obligation under Section 11(a) of the Order to meet and confer in good faith with the Complainant. The Respondent contended that the directives in question were merely a reaffirmation of existing policies. The Complainant disputed the Respondent's contentions, but argued in the alternative that, even if the directives constituted a reaffirmation of existing policy, such action, concerning subjects which were at that time subjects of bargaining negotiations and/or subjects before the Federal Service Impasses Panel, constituted violations of Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order.

In his Recommended Decision and Order, the Administrative Law Judge found that Base Regulation 35-1 provided, among other things, for a change in the manner of wearing the utility uniform from the previous Base policy, and that such provision is a subject for bargaining pursuant to the provisions of Section 11(a) of the Order. Under these circumstances, the Administrative Law Judge found that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order when it issued Base Regulation 35-1 without first notifying the Complainant, and bargaining in good faith concerning this provision. However, with regard to the other matters contained in Base Regulation 35-1, and the directive entitled "Technician Work Day," the Administrative Law Judge found that they constituted a restatement of already existing policies, and that such restatement did not evidence a refusal to bargain on such subjects.

The Assistant Secretary adopted the findings, conclusions and recommendations of the Administrative Law Judge and ordered that the Respondent cease and desist from the conduct found violative and that it take certain affirmative actions. The Assistant Secretary also ordered that the complaint, insofar as it alleged additional violations of Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order found not to be violative, be dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER

On February 7, 1977, Administrative Law Judge William B. Devaney issued his Recommended Decision and Order in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had engaged in certain unfair labor practices and recommending that it cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action as set forth in the attached Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order. Thereafter, the Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief with respect to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order and the entire record in the subject case, including the exceptions and supporting brief filed by the Respondent, I hereby adopt the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendations.

Thus, in agreement with the Administrative Law Judge, I find that the Respondent's issuance of Base Regulation 35-1 on February 15, 1976, which, among other things, changed the manner of wearing the utility uniform by unit employees, a subject matter for bargaining under the provisions of Section 11(a) of the Order, constituted a unilateral change in working conditions in violation of Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order. 1/

Pursuant to Section 6(b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, and Section 203.26(b) of the Regulations, the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations hereby orders that the Pennsylvania Air National Guard should:

1/ Cf. AFGE, National Immigration and Naturalization Services Council, FLRC No. 76A-26.

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Instituting a change in policy with respect to the manner of wearing the utility uniform by employees of the Pennsylvania Air National Guard without notifying the Association of Civilian Technicians, the exclusive representative of its employees, and affording such representative the opportunity to meet and confer on the decision to effectuate such a change.

(b) In any like or related manner, interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights assured by Executive Order 11491, as amended.

2. Take the following affirmative actions in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of Executive Order 11491, as amended:

(a) Notify the Association of Civilian Technicians of any intended change in policy with respect to the manner of wearing the utility uniform by unit employees of the Pennsylvania Air National Guard and, upon request, meet and confer in good faith on such intended change.

(b) Post at the facility of the Pennsylvania Air National Guard at the Greater Pittsburgh Airport, Caraopolis, Pennsylvania, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix" on forms to be furnished by the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Commanding Officer and shall be posted and maintained by him for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. The Commanding Officer shall take reasonable steps to insure that such notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to Section 203.27 of the Regulations, notify the Assistant Secretary in writing within 30 days from the date of this order as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the complaint, insofar as it alleges additional violations of Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS IN THE FEDERAL SERVICE

We hereby notify our employees that:

WE WILL NOT institute a change in policy with respect to the manner of wearing the utility uniform by employees of the Pennsylvania Air National Guard without notifying the Association of Civilian Technicians, the exclusive representative of our employees, and affording the Association of Civilian Technicians the opportunity to meet and confer on the decision to effectuate such a change.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce our employees in the exercise of their rights assured by Executive Order 11491, as amended.

WE WILL notify the Association of Civilian Technicians of any intended change in policy with respect to the manner of wearing the utility uniform by unit employees of the Pennsylvania Air National Guard and, upon request, meet and confer in good faith on such intended change.

RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

Statement of the Case

This case arises under Executive Order 11491, as amended (hereinafter also referred to as the "order"). It was initiated by a charge filed on, or about, March 2, 1976, and a complaint filed on April 22, 1976. The complaint alleged a violation of Sections 19(a)(1), (2), (5) and (6) of the Order; however, by letter dated September 7, 1976, Complainant requested withdrawal of the allegations concerning Sections 19(a)(2) and (5) of the Order; the Regional Administrator by letter dated September 9, 1976, granted the request to withdraw the Section 19(a)(2) and (5) allegations; and on September 20, 1976, a Notice of Hearing issued on the 19(a)(1) and (6) allegations; and, pursuant thereto, a hearing was duly held before the undersigned in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania on November 9, 1976.

The two principal areas of dispute are: First, whether there was a policy change with respect to the manner of wearing the utility uniform (fatigues); and, Second, whether, in any event, even the reaffirmation of existing policy concerning the manner of wearing the utility uniform and non-allowance of official time for changing from and to civilian attire is an unfair labor practice when the same subject matters were before the Federal Service Impasses Panel and/or were in negotiation. 1/

1/ Pennsylvania State Council, Association of Civilian Technicians, Inc. (State Council), represents wage grade and general schedule employees in a statewide bargaining unit incorporating both Army and Air components of the Pennsylvania National Guard (Guard). Negotiations for an initial agreement began on February 1, 1974, between the Guard and the State Council; substantial progress was made by the parties in negotiations, but an impasse was reached and the State Council filed a request with the Federal Service Impasses Panel which resulted in a Panel Report and Recommendation for Settlement, dated November 6, 1975 (Case No. 75 FSIP 7); and, pursuant to notice of hearing, oral agrument on January 26, 1976; and on February 27, 1976, a Decision and Order that, inter alia,

> "The parties shall include in their agreement a provision to the effect that the Union [State Council] may at any time within 180 days from the effective date of the agreement notify the Employer [Guard] of its desire to engage in negotiations on the subjects of ... (2) military uniforms; [which included the State Council's demand for official time for changing from and to civilian attire] and that the parties will commence negotiation within a reasonable period of time after receipt of such notice. ..." (Comp. Exh. 5).

The genesis of the present case was a draft Base Regulation dated January 12, 1976, entitled "Dress and Personal Appearance of ANG Personnel" and a draft memorandum, also dated January 12, 1976, entitled "Technician Work Day" both of which were transmitted to the Chief Steward, Pittsburgh Chapter, Association of Civilian Technicians (ACT) by memorandum dated January 16, 1976, for comment and/or concurrence (Comp. Exh. 1). Chief Steward Krepitch responded by memorandum dated January 22, 1976, in which he stated, in essence, that:

1. We cannot concur with the issuance of such directives.

2. All matters of policy and directives must be established through the State Council of ACT and with the Adjutant General of Pennsylvania.

3. As the matters involved are before the Impass Panel, issuance of a directive would be improper.

4. ACT is strongly opposed to no allowable time during work hours for changing into civilian attire.

Base Regulation 35-1, entitled "Dress and Personal Appearance of ANG Personnel", issued February 15, 1976 (Comp. Exh. 1) and the memorandum re "Technician Work Day" issued February 15, 1976 (Comp. Exh. 3).

All parties were represented by counsel, were afforded full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witnesses 2/ and to introduce evidence bearing on the issues involved and briefs were timely filed by the parties which have been carefully considered. Upon the basis of the entire record, including my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor,

2/ The Acting Regional Administrator, Mr. Joseph T. Senge, pursuant to Section 206.7 of the Regulations, approved Complainant's request of October 18, 1976, for the appearance of only seven witnesses. He stated,

> "I am denying your request for the appearance of Thomas J. Owsinki, inasmuch as he is the current state chairman of the union, and thus would be in a representative capacity at the hearing". (Continued)

I make the following findings of fact and conclusions and recommendation:

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

This case does not involve negotiations of the Guard and ACT and, of course, does not involve negotiability in any respect. The Guard's position concerning negotiability, or more correctly the non-negotiability, of certain demands of the State Council is fully understood. Whether the Guard's position is correct or incorrect must be reserved for determination at an appropriate time and in an appropriate proceeding and cannot, and will not, be considered in this proceeding.

FINDINGS OF FACT

1. On January 16, 1976, Mr. George Oleck, Air National Guard Aero Space Ground Equipment Mechanic at Greater Pittsburgh Airport, who as then State Chairman of ACT, in the

> "You may, of course, renew your requests for these witnesses before the Administrative Law Judge."

State Chairman Owsinski appeared voluntarily; however, Complainant renewed its request as to Mr. Owsinski. Complainant, in an effort to avoid the Acting Regional Administrator's statement concerning Mr. Owsinski's "representative capacity" had Mr. Owsinski sit in the audience until called as a witness.

The Assistant Secretary, in Bellingham Flight Service Station, Federal Aviation Administration, N. W. Region Department of Transportation, Bellingham, Washington, A/SLMR No. 597 (1975), has stated:

> "... in my view, the purposes of the Order would be better served if the parties adhere to the implicit mandate of Section 206.7 of Regulations that prior approval of a 'Request for Appearance of Witnesses' be obtained before any employee is granted such official time and expenses as are described in Section 206.7(g) of the Assistant Secretary's Regulations." (Emphasis in original).

Under the circumstances, as Mr. Owsinski appeared at the hearing voluntarily and testified voluntarily, it would be inappropriate to entertain Complainant's request and, accordingly Complainant's motion is denied.

absence of Michael Krepitch, then President and Chief Steward of the local Chapter of ACT, was called to the Office of Brigadier General Phillipy, Air Commander of the Air Technician Detachment at Greater Pittsburgh Airport, and was given the draft Base Regulations re "Dress and Personal Appearance of ANG Personnel" and the draft memorandum re "Technician Work Day" each of which was dated January 12, 1976, and which was attached to a letter dated January 16, 1976, addressed to T Sgt. Michael Krepitch, Chief Steward, Pgh Chapter ACT (Comp. Exh. 1). Mr. Oleck delivered the material to Mr. Krepitch the following day when Mr. Krepitch came to work.

2. General Phillipy stated in his letter to Sgt. Krepitch, in part, as follows:

> "1. Attached for your comments and/or concurrence are drafts of the following proposed directives.
> "a. Letter, Hg. Base Det/BCC, 12 Jan 76, Subject: Technician Workday
> "b. Base Regulation 35-1 Dress and Personal Appearance
> "2. Your comments will be given full consideration, however it is essential that you understand that no new policies are being established. These are being issued to supplement and clarify procedures that are presently in being in various directives of higher headquarters and compliance is mandatory for all personnel.
> "3. I am earnesly [sic] requesting the full support of you as the Chief Steward in these matters as well as all members of the Unit. An unsatisfactory condition presently exists in work habits and dress and personal appearance. The recent 9th Air Force I.G. report expands on the latter subject indicating the unsatisfactory status ...
> "4. Your reply would be appreciated by not later than 23 January 1976. Non receipt of any reply will indicate complete concurrence and directives will be issued as written." (Comp. Exh. 1).

3. Draft Base Regulation 35-1 stated that "This regulation implements the provisions of AFR 35-10 and is published to insure uniformity in the wearing of the military uniform by all Air National Guard personnel including technicians while performing duty in their technician status." The draft regulations further provided:

> "1. Policy: The dress and personal appearance of ANG personnel assigned to units of this base will comply with AFR 35-10 as implemented and/or reiterated by this directive.
> "2. Technician Personnel: Technicians in the excepted service ... will wear the military uniform appropriate to their military grade (Chapter 2, TPP 904). Such personnel will comply with AFR 35-10 while wearing the uniform in their technician status (Chapter 7, AFR 35-10).
> "3. Uniform Combinations:
> "a. Male Service Uniform: ... (1. through 4 and "Note" re headgear)
> "b. Wear of uniforms by Female Personnel: Because of the relatively small number of assigned female personnel, it is not deemed necessary to discuss the various uniform combinations which they may wear. They should consult Chapter 4, AFR 35-10 for full particulars.
> "c. Utility Uniform: The Utility uniform (fatigues) may be worn at all times by those personnel whose assigned duties require such wear. This includes roll calls except when another specific uniform is designated. When wearing the utility uniform, the shirt will always be worn tucked inside the trousers. (Emphasis on Exhibit.] When the weather so dictates the shirt may be removed and the T-shirt worn as an outer garment in work areas. Except when safety would be compromised, the utility cap will be worn whenever an individual is outdoors.

"4. Dress and Appearance. Each Air National Guardsman, whether in a military or technician status must maintain a high standard of dress and personal appearance. The standard, which is explained fully in AFR 35-10, is comprised of four elements - neatness, cleanliness, safety, and military image.

* * * *

"5. Uniform violations. Experience over past years has indicated a tendency for various violations of uniform regulations. This must be guarded against and corrected where required. In this category are such instances as:

a. Improper and mixed combinations.
b. Ill-fitting uniforms.
c. Sleeves rolled up on fatigue blouses.
d. Colored T-shirts.
e. Long sleeve underwear showing with short sleeve shirts or utility blouses.
f. Uniforms not buttoned.
g. Name tags, name tapes, insignia and/or chevrons not worn.
h. Hats not worn outdoors.
i. Wearing inner garment liners as outer garments.

. . ." (Comp. Exh. 1)

5. Draft memorandum re "Technician Work Day", recited that the tendency of air technician personnel to arrive late has been increasing and, if allowed to go unchecked, could increase even more in the cold winter days ahead and stated, in part,

"1. ... Except for the most extenuating circumstances it is each individual's responsibility to be in his section, in proper uniform, at the time his duty schedule begins. If he is on a 0730 to 1600 schedule this means 0730 not 0731 or later. Similarly if his schedule ends at 1600 he will be in his work area at 1600 and not in his privately owned vehicle or at an exit door. As previously pointed out personnel may be excused at a reasonable time to wash up. However there can be no allowable time during working hours for changing from civilian attire into and out of military uniform. Supervisors at all levels will be held responsible for enforcement of these normal and proper working procedures."

"2. It is recognized there are occasional extenuating circumstances ... that may cause late arrivals. Therefore, except for these occasional extenuating periods, an individual who is more than 10 minutes late in arriving for duty will be charged 1 hour leave. However if an individual is frequently or habitually late for work, he will be charged 1 hours leave for periods of less than 10 minutes.

"3. This is not a new policy but is merely a restatement of standard operating procedures. In consonance with this para 3-6n, ANGM 177-204 is quoted for your information and guidance.

'Tardiness. The technician's supervisor may excuse tardiness or unavoidable absences from duty periods of less than 1 hour if the technician has adequate reasons. When absences or tardiness are chronic or not excused, such absences will be charged to annual leave or leave without pay in multiples of 1 hour."

. . ." (Comp. Exh. 1).

6. Mr. Oleck testified that on January 16, 1976, he informed General Phillipy that there were numerous changes made by the two draft documents, one of the biggest being "changing uniforms after quitting time." He further stated that as long as he had been a technician at Pittsburgh, over 35 years, "we always had time to clean up, change uniforms, and leave at quitting time"; although it does not appear that Mr. Oleck personally changed uniforms on duty time. Indeed, Mr. Oleck testified that the Regulations, when issued on February 15, 1976, directly affected him by requiring that he wear his fatigue shirt tucked inside the trousers. Mr. Oleck stated that he also had a discussion with General Phillipy on January 2, 1976, about people leaving the work area before quitting time and that he had told General Phillipy at that time,

> "I agreed this was a problem and it was a management problem and I definitely felt that they had a legitimate complaint but it was a supervisory responsibility to control those people." (Tr. 19).

Mr. Oleck admitted that there were prior regulations but asserted that they had not been strictly enforced. In essence, he summed up his position as "we are slowly being more and more oriented towards complete military and not a civilian status which we are"; that "the whole uniform issue, as for as other things, is at an impass with our negotiators."; and that he recommended to General Phillipy that "we leave everthing as is ... until we work it out at the negotiating table."

7. Chief steward Kreptich responded in writing on behalf of ACT, by letter dated January 22, 1976 (Comp. Exh. 4) and, in substance, stated:

> 1. We maintain that these are changes in work conditions and cannot concur with the issuance of such directives.
> 2. The subject matter covered by the directives is an issue in negotiation before the Impass Panel.
> 3. We see no reference in TPP 904 or 907 to AFR 35-10 and therefore object to any reference to AFR 35-10.
> 4. We are strongly opposed to no allowable time during work hours to change into civilian attire and "we would like to see an appropriate amount of time for employees to change into their clean clothes."
> All stewards have been briefed as to the seriousness of late arrivals and early departures. "They also have been instructed, > in no uncertain terms, that they are responsible to adjust the situation, since supervisory control is lacking." (Comp. Exh. 4).

Sgt. Krepitch testified that he reported to work in uniform and left work in his uniform; but that it had always been optional to wear the shirt tail in or out. Sgt. Krepitch further testified that prior to February 15, 1976, when there was anything out of line about the uniform (e.g., missing button or not buttoned) we were told to correct the situation and it was dropped; but that after the Base Regulation became effective on February 15, 1976, there was an immediate letter of disciplinary action submitted on an individual.

7. General Phillipy testified that he neither met with the Chief Steward nor responded to his letter of January 22, 1976, because "I didn't think it required a response." Sgt. Krepitch stated that although he expected some kind of response, he did not ask for a meeting; and that, indeed, he had passed the proposed directives up to the State Council and "It was completely out of my hands. ... It's at the Federal Impasses Panel. I have no right to sit down and discuss these matters."

8. Messrs. McMullen and McCance testified that for 15 and 10 years respectively prior to February 15, 1976, they had been permitted to change attire on duty time as part of their clean up but that after February 15, while allowed time for clean up, they were no longer permitted to change clothes. Messrs. Oleck, Kreptich, Combs, and Hoyle testified that after February 15, 1976, their prior practices were altered in various ways, principally as related to having to wear their shirt tails tucked in, having to wear a cap when out doors, etc., about which Messrs. McMullen and McCance also complained, but they did not assert any change as to themselves with respect to changing uniforms. Actually the restrictions vis-a-vis the wearing of the uniform complained of by the technicians encompassed most, if not all, of the examples of uniform violations set forth in Paragraph 5 of Base Regulation 35-1. Mr. Combs also testified that in previous winters he had been given permission to wear civilian-type gloves and insulated shoes and had been denied such permission after February 15, 1976. Mr. Hoyle testified that the had been formally reprimanded for a uniform violation (sleeves rolled up) after February 15, 1976, and that he was told that if he did not follow all the provisions of Base Regulations 35-1 he would not be re-enlisted.

9. Following receipt of Chief Steward Krepitch's reply dated January 22, 1976, in which ACT asserted that both proposed directives constituted a change in work conditions, General Phillipy on January 31, 1976, requested the advice of the Technician Personnel Officer, Colonel Hugh S. Niles, as to whether either proposed directive constituted any "change in working conditions" (Res. Exh. 11) and Colonel Niles replied by indorsement dated February 3, 1976. As to proposed Base Regulation 35-1, Colonel Niles noted that AFM 35-10 was now AFR 35-10 and concluded that the proposed implementing instruction would not constitute a change in working conditions "providing it does not go beyond the guidelines of the regulation." (Res. Exh. 11). As to the proposed "Technician Work Day" directive, Colonel Niles stated that the State Council had submitted a proposal for official (duty) time at the beginning and close of work day for the purpose of changing into and out of uniform; that the National Guard Bureau had advised that a similar proposal from another state had been determined non-negotiable; that National Guard Bureau regulations mandate the wearing of the military uniform by Technicians during duty hours and, consequently, there can be no allowable time during working hours for changing from civilian attire; and that a copy of this Determination had been furnished to the Union negotiators. Accordingly, Colonel Niles concluded that "... your proposed base policy is consistent with NGB regulations. Any change of working conditions which your Technician Workday letter makes, would be to bring your base policy into compliance with National Guard Bureau Regulations." (Res. Exh. 11).

Accordingly, the directives as submitted on January 16, 1976, were issued on February 15, 1976, without change, except as to date and Base Regulation 35-1 deleted the reference in Par. 2 to ("Chapter 2, TPP 904)" and the word "should" in Par. 3b. line 3 was changed to "will".

10. Except for the sentence, "However there can be no allowable time during working hours for changing from civilian attire into and out of military uniform" in the "Technician Work Day" directive, it is perfectly clear that the remainder represented no change of policy or practice whatever. Indeed, Paragraph 2 of the January 12, 1976, draft and directive of February 15, 1976, appeared, verbatim, as Paragraph 6C. of the like directive of General Phillipy dated February 3, 1971 (Res. Exh. 10) which the record shows was the consistent base policy. The 1971 directive stated in part:

> "6. In the interest of standardization and clarification for all personnel, the base policy for observing scheduled working hours is reiterated as follows:
> "a. Since we are being paid for eight hours of work it is expected that we as individuals are available for duty as scheduled by the supervisors for the entire eight hour period less those times designated as authorized break periods.
> "b. Each section will be operational for the entire period as scheduled. If the section is scheduled for the 0730-1600 work period, all its personnel will be available for duty throughout the period less those periods of properly authorized absences by the supervisors. To be more specific, at 1559 the section will still be fully operational and all personnel available in the section at that time." (Res. Exh. 10). (Emphasis supplied.)

The "Technician Work Day" directive stated that, "As previously pointed out personnel may be excused at a reasonable time to wash up" which, although not stated in the 1971 directive, was consistent with the qualification "less those periods of properly authorized absences by the supervisors" of the 1971 directive. General Phillipy and Colonels Rosenberg and Glas each testified that there had never been any authorization permitting the changing of attire on duty time. Reasonable time for wash-up was allowable by supervisors both before and after February 15, 1976, and from all the testimony and evidence I find that the consistent policy of the base had been to permit supervisors to authorize technicians reasonable time for wash-up on duty time and that there was never any policy permitting the changing of attire on duty time. The record shows without contradiction that duty time for wash-up was wholly limited to technicians involved in dirty work.

Technicians, such as Messrs. McMullen and McCance, when allowed time to wash-up, obviously used a portion of the time allowed to change clothes prior to February 15, 1976, notwithstanding that no time had been allowed for changing clothes; and after February 15, 1976, were not allowed to change clothes on duty time whether or not they could do so in the time allowed for wash-up. Use of time allowed for wash-up to change clothes was never authorized, such practice was an abuse of the authorization granted, and the refusal to permit the changing of clothing during time allowed for wash-up was not a change of policy.

11. Since at least 1964, Regulations have required that technicians wear the appropriate uniform in the performance of their normal technician duties (ANGR 40-01, AGOPA Sup 1, September 21, 1964, Res. Exh. 2). See, also, Technician Information Letter 5-69, December 4, 1969 (Res. Exh. 3); Technician Personnel Pamphlet 904, May 25, 1972, Section 2-4 (Res. Exh. 4) TPP 904 Supplement 1, April 1, 1973 (Res. Exh. 5). Reference was made in ANGR 40-01, AGOPA Supp 1 and in Technician Information Letter 5-69 to AFM 35-10 and the latter also referred to AR 670-5. TPP 904 and Supplement 1 thereto referred to NGR 690-2/ANGR 40-01. Wing Regulation 35-2, December 13, 1972, signed by General Phillipy, (Res. Exh. 1) also specifically provided that, "AIR NATIONAL GUARD TECHNICIANS in the excepted service will wear the military uniform appropriate to their federally recognized grade when performing technicain duties.", referred to AFM 35-10, and further stated, in part, that:

> "4. DRESS AND APPEARANCE. Each member of the Air National Guard must be well groomed and insure that his personal appearance reflects credit upon himself and the Air National Guard at all times. Each will meet the following requirements:
> "a. APPEARANCE OF UNIFORMS. When the uniform is worn, it will be clean, neat, correct in design and specifications and in good condition. Uniforms will be kept buttoned and shoes must be shined and in good repair.
> "b. PERSONAL APPEARANCE ... MEN, see paragraph 1-12 and Attachment 2, AFM 35-10.

> "c. PERSONAL APPEARANCE .. WOMEN, see paragraph 1-13, AFM 35-10.
> "5. UNIFORM DISCIPLINE
> "a. ... The standards of uniform and personal appearance contained in AFM 35-10 will be strictly observed.
> . . ." (Res. Exh. 1).

Neither party offered AFM 35-10 (now AFR 35-10). The various Regulations, etc., set forth above leave no doubt that Base Regulation 35-1 was, for the most part, a restatement of existing policy. The one point of difference was the requirement in Base Regulation 35-1 that the shirt of the utility uniform be worn tucked inside the trousers. The testimony shows without contradiction that prior to formulation of Base Regulation 35-1 Technicians had been free to wear the fatigue shirt loose, i.e., not tucked inside the trousers; and Complainant asserted, which assertion was not denied or challenged by Respondent, that Air Force Regulations make the manner of wearing of the utility shirt (loose or tucked in the trousers) optional with each Base Commander. Accordingly, I find that Base Regulation 35-1 did change the long established Base policy with respect to the manner of wearing the utility uniform. Despite testimony that Base Regulation 35-1 changed prior policy with respect to the wearing of the utility cap, Base Regulation 35-1 expressly conditioned this requirement on "Except when safety would be compromised" and I find no basis whatever to believe that any change in policy was represented by the requirement that the utility cap be worn outdoors, except when safety would be compromised, as such requirement was no more than a restatement of the long established requirement that the appropriate military uniform be worn when performing technician duties.

12. Colonel Rosenberg, Chief of Support Services and management advisor on labor management relations, testified that there had been a number of adverse actions pertaining to uniforms and related matters prior to issuance of the February 15, 1976, directives and that there had been none since issuance of the February 15, 1976, directives. In 1972, a technician had been terminated because of uniform (hair cut) violation and in 1971, two technicians had been given leave without pay for uniform (hair cut) violations.

The February 15, 1976, directives made no change in the enforcement of existing Base Policy with respect to uniform violations or violations of the Work Day.

13. There are references in Base Regulation 35-1 to grooming standards and Complainant objected to the failure to spell out, rather than by reference to AF Regulations, standards for wear of uniforms by females; but, as these matters were not litigated, no further consideration to them will be given.

CONCLUSIONS

1. Change in Manner of Wearing Utility Uniform. Prior to the issuance of Base Regulation 35-1, the Base policy at Pittsburgh had been to permit the shirt of the utility uniform to be worn loose. The draft Regulation plainly announced that, "when wearing the utility uniform, the shirt will always be worn tucked inside the trousers" and the phrase, as shown, was underscored for emphasis. Respondent asserted that Base Regulation 35-1 constituted no change in existing policy but, if it did, declined to say whether it asserted that such change was pursuant to the reserved rights of management. No provision of Section 11(b) or 12(a) of the Order removed the change in Base policy with respect to the manner of wearing the utility uniform from the obligation to negotiate pursuant to Section 11(a) of the Order. Respondent gave notice of the proposed Regulation to the State Chairman of the State Council and Chief Steward Krepitch testified that he passed the draft Regulation up to the State Council 3/ and the Chief Negotiator for the State Council, Mr. Owsinski, testified that he advised Messrs. Oleck and Krepitch to draft and forward immediately a letter to General Phillipy indicating that this matter was negotiable at the state level and not at the local level. Sgt. Krepitch did so by his letter dated January 22, 1976, in which he stated, in part, as follows:

> "... any directive ... by any base commander, at this time is approximately four years too late. As > established by the State Council of ACT and with the Adjutant General of Pennsylvania, all matters of policy and directives are proposed, negotiated and promulgated at that level. Furthermore, as being one of the issues that has sent the proposed contract back to the Impass Panel, Department of Labor, twice, we feel at this time, that no one short of the Federal Labor Department has the power and/or authority to pass judgment on this issue." (Comp. Exh. 4).

3/ Mr. Krepitch stated to the "State Council Chairman", but this was then Mr. Oleck. It is apparent that he referred to Mr. Thomas J. Owsinski, then Chief Negotiator for the State Council; later, also, State Chairman.

While "military uniforms", i.e., the unions' demand that no bargaining unit technicians be required to wear the military uniform while performing civilian technician duties, unquestionably had been a demand in contract negotiations at the State level, it is equally certain that the proposed change in Base policy at Pittsburgh had not been an issue either in negotiation or before the Federal Service Impasses Panel. 4/ Despite notice of the proposed Base Regulation, Complainant never requested bargaining on the proposed Base Regulation. Indeed, while asserting that "these are changes in work conditions", Complainant did not specify any portion of proposed Base Regulation 35-1 which constituted a change in existing Base policy; nevertheless, I have found that Base Regulation 35-1 did constitute a change in Base policy with respect to the manner of wearing the utility shirt "tucked inside the trousers". As this represented a change in Base policy and such proposed requirement was a negotiable item within the meaning of Section 11(a) of the Order, Respondent was obligated to notify Complainant prior to making its final determination or decision to make this change in policy and, upon request, to meet and confer in good faith with Complainant. Southeast Exchange Region of the Army and Air Force Exchange Service, Rosewood Warehouse, Columbia, South Carolina, A/SLMR No. 656 (1976). In his letter of January 16, 1976, to Chief Steward Krepitch, General Phillipy stated, in part:

> "1. Attached for your comments ... are drafts of ... proposed directives ...
> "2. Your comments will be given full consideration ..."

"4. Your reply would be appreciated by not later than 23 January 1976. Non receipt of any reply will indicate complete concurrence and directives will be issued as written." (Comp. Exh. 1).

Chief Steward Krepitch did reply by letter dated January 22, 1976; General Phillipy made no reply and gave Complainant no notice of his final decision to change the manner of wearing the utility uniform, but issued Base Regulation 35-1 on February 15, 1976. Sgt. Oleck, then State Chairman of ACT, testified that he first received Base Regulation 35-1, as issued, on February 25, 1976, from his supervisor, although technicians had been informed in a supervisors' meeting a few days earlier that new policies were coming out. Because Respondent had solicited the comments of Complainant; had stated that such comments, if any, would be given full consideration; and had further stated, by clear implication, that "directives will be issued as written" only in the absence of reply, Respondent was obligated to notify Complainant prior to making its final decision and, upon request, to meet and confer in good faith with Complainant. Respondent's issuance of Base Regulation 35-1 on February 15, 1976, deprived Complainant of any opportunity to request negotiations after Respondent's final decision to change the manner of wearing the utility uniform and prior to such change in policy being placed in effect. Delivery of a copy of Base Regulation 35-1 after it had been issued and made effective was notification of a fait accompli and did not provide Complainant with any opportunity to engage in meaningful negotiations prior to a change in Base policy with respect to the wearing of wearing the utility uniform. Accordingly, Respondent's unilateral conduct in this regard was in derogation of its obligation to meet and confer in good faith and such conduct thereby violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order. Southeast Exchange Region of the Army and Air Force Exchange Service, Rosewood Warehouse, Columbia, South Carolina, supra.

Complainant had notice on January 16, 1976, of the proposed change in Base policy with regard to the manner of wearing the utility uniform, had ample opportunity to request that Respondent meet and confer prior to the change in policy being made effective on February 15, 1976, but despite such and Order in Case No. 75 FSIP 7 states that the Panel was advised on December 1, 1975, that despite further settlement efforts, the dispute remained unresolved and pursuant to notice oral argument was held on January 26, 1976.

notice Complainant did not at any time after January 16, 1976, seek to meet and confer with respect thereto. Certainly, the record does not indicate any unwillingness on the part of Respondent to meet and confer had Complainant indicated a desire to do so. To the contrary, the record shows an affirmative policy on the part of General Phillipy to meet and confer, as he did on January 16, 1976, when he delivered the proposed draft documents to Mr. Oleck. Notwithstanding the violation of Section 19(a)(1) and (6) above, I am constrained to conclude, pursuant to the decisions of the Assistant Secretary in Southeast Exchange Region of the Army and Air Force Exchange Service, Rosewood Warehouse, Columbia, South Carolina, supra,; Internal Revenue Service, Philadelphia Service Center, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, A/SLMR No. 771 (1976), even though these decisions involved impact bargaining, that Respondent's implementation of Base Regulation 35-1 on February 15, 1976, did not violate Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order. In the circumstances of this case, such result may be particularly apt inasmuch as, absent notice prior to its final decision, as mandated by Southeast Exchange Region of the Army and Air Force Exchange Service, Rosewood Warehouse, Columbia, South Carolina, supra, implementation of Base Regulation 35-1 would not have violated Section 19(a)(1) or (6) because of Complainant's failure to request to negotiate with regard thereto after ample notice of the proposed change in policy. U.S. Department of Air Force, Norton Air Force Base, A/SLMR No. 261 (1973); U.S. Department of Transportation, Federal Highway Administration, Office of Federal Highway Projects, Vancouver, Washington, A/SLMR No. 612 (1976); Alabama National Guard, A/SLMR No. 660 (1976).

2. Technician Work Day. This proposed directive, given to Complainant in draft on January 16, 1976, with proposed Base Regulation 35-1, was a restatement and reaffirmation of existing Base policy and practice. Prior policy had authorized the granting of reasonable time, where appropriate, to wash-up. No authorization had ever been given to change clothing on duty time and the refusal, in this proposed directive, to allow time during working hours for changing from civilian attire into and out of military uniform was not a change of existing policy. Nor can abuse of the authorization granted, namely to wash-up, by isolated individuals constitute an exception to a long established policy which would require Respondent to meet and confer inasmuch as the proposed directive was merely a restatement of existing Base policy. Accordingly, as the "Technician Work Day" directive was a reaffirmation of an existing policy and practice, Respondent was under no duty to bargain with respect thereto prior to its implementation. Department of the Navy, Mare Island Naval Shipyard, Vallejo, California, A/SLMR No. 736 (1976).

3. Reaffirmation of Base Policy During Negotiations. The two actions complained of concerned the Air National Guard at Pittsburgh. In issuing Base Regulation 35-1 and the "Technician Work Day" directive, General Phillipy did not act for, nor purport to act for, the Adjutant General or for the Pennsylvania National Guard. Except in the manner of wearing the utility shirt, each was a restatement and reaffirmation of existing Base policy and practice. Complainant asserts that the issuance of such documents,5/ which concern issues involved in Statewide negotiations, is a violation of 19(a)(6) of the Order. It was conceded by Sgt. Krepitch that Base Regulation 35-1 and the "Technician Work Day" directive applied only to the Pittsburgh operation. Under the circumstances, issuance of a proposed policy by a Base commander is not, in and of itself, a violation of the Order. It is conceivable that such action could constitute a refusal to bargain at the State level if such action demonstrated an intent to refuse to bargain at the State level; but there was nothing contained in General Phillipy's letter of January 16, 1976, in his proposed drafts, or in the testimony which inferred that he was acting other than in his capacity as Base Commander, nor was there any basis on which, or from which, it can possibly be inferred that issuance of Base Regulation 35-1 or the "Technician Work Day" directive at Pittsburgh demonstrated an intent by the Adjutant General to refuse to bargain.

As to the change in policy respecting the manner of wearing the utility uniform, Complainant had a right to bargain, upon request, which it did not exercise. In all other respects, the proposals in question were merely a reaffirmation of existing Base policy and practice as to which Respondent was under no duty to bargain. Existing policy and practice are not affected by the pendency of negotiations, notwithstanding that demands to change such policy and practice are involved in those negotiations. Unless and until changed, existing policy and practice remain fully effective.

Colonel Niles, at General Phillipy's request, stated as to proposed Base Regulation 35-1, that it would not constitute a change in working conditions, "provided it does not go beyond the guidelines of the regulation"; and as to the Technician Work Day" directive, that it was "consistent with NGB regulations" and that "Any change of working conditions which your Technician Workday letter makes, would be to bring your base policy into compliance with National Guard Bureau Regulations." Nothing contained in his indorsement could possibly support an inference that the Adjutant General would refuse to bargain in good faith pursuant to the Decision and Order of the Federal Service Impasses Panel subsequently issued on February 27, 1976. As Complainant recognized, Colonel Niles' position had been consistent, namely, that the matter of uniforms, etc., was controlled by regulations of higher authority and had previously been determined to be "non-negotiable". The Federal Service Impasses Panel recognized this position but pointed out that the Council renders decisions on the negotiability of specific proposals and that nothing forecloses the Pennsylvania National Guard from questioning the negotiability of any specific proposal submitted in the course of negotiations.

5/ Again, it must be emphasized that the issue, and only issue, before me (Ass't. Sec. Exh. 1) is the action by General Phillipy on, or about February 15, 1976. Issuance of the March 22, 1976, Supplement to National Guard Bureau Technician Personnel Manual (Respondent's Exhibit 7 for identification) was not an issue in this proceeding and the proffered Exhibit was rejected.

Accordingly, neither the proposal nor the implementation of the Base Regulation and directive was precluded by the pendency of contract negotiations.

RECOMMENDATION

Having found that Respondent has engaged in certain conduct prohibited by Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, I recommend that the Assistant Secretary adopt the following order designed to effectuate the purposes of Executive Order 11491. In all other respects, I recommend the allegations of the Complaint be dismissed.

RECOMMENDED ORDER

Pursuant to Section 6(b) of Executive Order 11491 and Section 203.25(a) of the Regulations, the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations hereby orders that Pennsylvania Air National Guard shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Instituting a change in policy with respect to the manner of wearing the utility uniform of civilian technicians represented by the Association of Civilian Technicians and employed by the Pennsylvania Air National Guard, without notifying the Association of Civilian Technicians and affording such representative the opportunity to meet and confer on the decision to effectuate such a change.

(b) In any like or related manner, interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights assured by Executive Order 11491, as amended.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of Executive Order 11491, as amended:

(a) Notify Association of Civilian Technicians of any intended change in policy with respect to the manner of wearing the utility uniform by unit employees of the Pennsylvania Air National Guard and, upon request, meet and confer in good faith on such intended change.

(b) Post at the facility of the Pennsylvania Air National Guard at the Greater Pittsburgh Airport, Caraopolis Pennsylvania, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix" on forms to be furnished by the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Commanding Officer and shall be posted and maintained by him for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicious places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. The Commanding Officer shall take reasonable steps to insure that such notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to Section 203.27 of the Regulations, notify the Assistant Secretary in writing within 30 days from the date of this order as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

TIDEWATER VIRGINIA FEDERAL EMPLOYEES METAL TRADES COUNCIL, AFL-CIO
A/SLMR No. 867

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by the Department of the Navy, Norfolk Naval Shipyard alleging that the Respondent, Tidewater Virginia Federal Employees Metal Trades Council, AFL-CIO, violated Section 19(b)(4) of the Order by picketing the Norfolk Naval Shipyard on November 8 and November 9, 1976. The Respondent admitted that it had engaged in the picketing as alleged, but contended that the picketing was informational in nature and, as such, was not proscribed by Section 19(b)(4) of the Order. It also contended that the evidence as to the crucial and sensitive nature of the Norfolk Naval Shipyard was speculative and did not support a ban on all peaceful informational picketing.

In his Recommended Decision and Order, the Administrative Law Judge found that the picketing engaged in by the Respondent was informational and peaceful and did not interfere with the operation of the Norfolk Naval Shipyard. He also found that the record contained insufficient evidence to support a finding that the picketing reasonably threatened to interfere with the operation of the Norfolk Naval Shipyard. Thus, he concluded that the record failed to establish that the Respondent's picketing of the Norfolk Naval Shipyard violated Section 19(b)(4) of the Order.

Under the particular circumstances of the instant case, the Assistant Secretary concurred in the findings of the Administrative Law Judge with respect to the nature and effect of the picketing on the Complainant's operation. With regard to the Administrative Law Judge's finding that the picketing was informational, the Assistant Secretary stated that, in his view, permissible informational picketing in Federal sector labor-management disputes is that which is directed at the general public, including organized labor groups, and which does not interfere or reasonably threaten to interfere with the operation of the affected Government agency. He also found that the evidence failed to establish that the Complainant's functions were so crucial and sensitive to justify an absolute ban against all labor-management dispute picketing at the Norfolk Naval Shipyard. Thus, in accordance with the guidelines set forth by the Federal Labor Relations Council in FLRC No. 76P-4, the Assistant Secretary concluded that the Respondent's picketing fell within the permissible limits under Section 19(b)(4) of the Order. Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary ordered that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety.

DECISION AND ORDER

On January 12, 1977, Administrative Law Judge Samuel A. Chaitovitz issued his Recommended Decision and Order in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had not engaged in the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint and recommending that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety. Thereafter, the Complainant and the Petitioner 1/ filed exceptions and supporting briefs with respect to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order, and the Respondent filed an answering brief in response to said exceptions and supporting briefs.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order and the entire record in the subject case, including the exceptions and supporting briefs filed by the Complainant and the Petitioner and the answering brief filed by the Respondent, I hereby adopt the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions, and recommendation, except as modified herein.

The instant complaint, filed by the Department of the Navy, Norfolk Naval Shipyard (Complainant) alleged that the Tidewater Virginia Federal Employees Metal Trades Council, AFL-CIO (Respondent) violated Section 19(b)(4) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, by improperly sponsoring and directing picketing of the Complainant at access gates to the Norfolk Naval Shipyard.

The facts of the instant case, which are not in dispute, are set forth in detail in the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order, and I shall repeat them only to the extent necessary.

1/ Regional Administrator for Labor-Management Services, Labor-Management Services Administration, United States Department of Labor.

The record reveals that the Respondent peacefully picketed the Complainant 2/ on November 8, 1976, from approximately 3:30 p.m. to approximately 4:30 p.m. at eight access gates, and on November 9, 1976, from approximately 6:45 a.m. to approximately 7:35 a.m. at four access gates 3/ for the purpose of informing its members of the problems it was having with negotiations for a new collective bargaining agreement. The record also reveals that the picketing at each gate varied at times from 2 to 18 pickets, and that the picket signs related to the existing labor-management dispute. 4/ The record evidence establishes that the picketing was peaceful and caused no interference with the operation of the Complainant or deliveries.

The Administrative Law Judge found that the record clearly established that the picketing conducted by the Respondent was "informational" and did not interfere with the operation of the Shipyard. Further, he found that the record contained insufficient evidence to support a finding that the picketing reasonably threatened to interfere with the operation of the Shipyard. Thus, applying the standards and criteria as set forth by the Federal Labor Relations Council (Council) in its Statement On Major Policy Issue, FLRC No. 76P-4, he concluded that the Respondent's picketing was not violative of Section 19(b)(4) of the Order.

At the hearing, the Respondent admitted that its officers and agents had engaged in said picketing, and that it was responsible for such picketing. In this regard, the Complainant contends in its exceptions that such picketing was not the constitutionally permissible type of picketing known as "informational" picketing as that term is customarily defined in relevant decisions of the courts and the National Labor Relations Board. In addition, the Complainant and the Petitioner, in their exceptions, contend that the Administrative Law Judge failed to consider, in his Recommended Decision and Order, the issue of whether an absolute ban on all labor-management dispute picketing at the Norfolk Naval Shipyard is warranted based on the crucial and sensitive nature of the Complainant's operation and mission.

2/ The evidence establishes that the mission of the Complainant is to provide logistic support for assigned ships and service craft; to perform authorized work in connection with construction, conversion, overhaul, repair, alteration, drydocking, and outfitting of ships and craft, as assigned; to perform manufacturing, research, development, and test work, as assigned; and to provide services and material to other activities and units, as directed.

3/ The evidence establishes that Gate 15 (Green Street), which was picketed both days, is designated as a "pass gate" where nonemployees and commercial traffic obtain passes to enter the Shipyard. The Complainant's employees also use Gate 15 and the seven other gates involved herein to enter and exit the Shipyard.

4/ The 12 legends which were displayed on the picket signs are set forth in the attached Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order.

With respect to the Administrative Law Judge's finding that the picketing in question was "informational," in my view, permissible informational picketing in Federal sector labor-management disputes is that which is directed at the general public, including members of organized labor groups, and which does not interfere or reasonably threaten to interfere with the operation of the affected Government agency. Under the particular circumstances of the instant case and in accordance with the guidelines set forth in the Council's Statement On Major Policy Issue, FLRC No. 76P-4, I find that the Respondent's informational picketing falls within the Council's definition of "permissible picketing" under Section 19(b)(4) of the Order. Thus, the evidence establishes that the number of pickets was not excessive; the picketing was for the purpose of informing the Respondent's members of its labor-management dispute with the Complainant; the conduct of the pickets was peaceful; and the picketing was limited to relatively short periods on each day it occurred and did not interfere with the operation of the Complainant or deliveries. Nor do I find in the record sufficient evidence to support a finding that the picketing reasonably threatened to interfere with the operation of the Complainant or deliveries. Further, I find that the evidence fails to establish that the Complainant's functions are so crucial and sensitive that picketing would per se be so injurious and disruptive as to justify an absolute ban against all labor-management dispute picketing at the Norfolk Naval Shipyard.

Accordingly, I shall order that the complaint herein be dismissed in its entirety.

RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

Statement of the Case

This matter comes before me upon a Notice of Hearing on Complaint issued on November 17, 1976 by the Regional Administrator for the Labor-Management Services Administration. The complaint filed by the Department of the Navy, Norfolk Naval Shipyard, hereinafter called the Activity, on November 10, 1976 alleges that the Tidewater Virginia Federal Employees Metal Trades Council, AFL-CIO, (hereinafter called the Respondent or the Union) illegally picketed the Activity's shipyard in Norfolk Virginia in violation of Section 19(b)(4) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, hereinafter called the Order.

A hearing was held before the undersigned in Norfolk Virginia. All parties were represented by counsel and were given full opportunity to present, examine and cross-examine witnesses and to present evidence and arguments in support of their respective positions. All parties had an opportunity to argue orally and submit briefs. The briefs have been duly considered.

Upon the basis of the entire record herein, including my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following findings of fact, conclusion of law and recommendation.

Findings of Fact

1. The Activity is the largest of eight shipyards operated by the Naval Sea System Command and has as its principal mission the overhauling, repairing, altering and outfitting nuclear and non-nuclear vessels of the Navy's Atlantic fleet, including aircraft carriers, missle cruisers, destroyers and submarines. In performing its duties the Activity employees about 10,000 civilian workers in various trades, skills and crafts and also utilizes private sector contractors and employees borrowed from other naval shipyards. Goods and materials are delivered to the Activity by both its own equipment and by private trucking firms. 1/

1/ Many of the private sector contractors and trucking firms are unionized.

2. The vast majority of the Activity's civilian employees have been organized for collective bargaining purposes into a number of separate units represented by about six different labor organizations.

3. The Respondent is a labor organization recognized by the Norfolk Naval Shipyard, Portsmouth, Virginia, as the exclusive collective bargaining representative for the wage grade employees in a production unit and for the planners, estimators, progressmen and schedulers (PEPS) unit.

4. In August of 1975 the Activity and Union started negotiations for a new collective bargaining agreement among the wage grade production unit. 2/

5. Negotiations over the production unit collective bargaining agreement continued for about 15 months. 3/

6. The Union sponsored participation in and was responsible for picketing at or near the Norfolk Naval Shipyard, Portsmouth, Virginia, on November 8, 1976, and on November 9, 1976.

7. The picketing occurred in the context of a labor-management dispute, concerning the negotiation of the collective bargaining agreement.

8. From approximately 3:30 p.m. until approximately 4:30 p.m. on November 8, 1976, pickets appeared outside the Norfolk Naval Shipyard, Portsmouth, Virginia, at some eight gates.

9. From approximately 6:45 a.m. until approximately 7:35 a.m. on November 9, 1976, pickets appeared outside the Norfolk Naval Shipyard, Portsmouth, Virginia, at some four gates.

10. The picket signs related to the labor-management dispute and was for the purpose of informing the public and union members of the problems that the Union contended it was having with the negotiations for a new contract.

2/ As part of the bargaining ground rules the parties agreed that the only release of official information regarding the progress of negotiations would be through Respondent's Newsletter.

3/ Apparently there were about 97 negotiation meetings prior to November 8, 1976.

11. The picketing at each of the gates was composed variously of about 4 to 15 pickets.

12. The picket signs bore the following legends:

"Shipyard Unfair, Metal Trades"

"We want a contract, not a bunch of Bull S...!! MTC, AFL-CIO"

"17 Local Unions Want a Contract, Metal Trades"

"NNSY Not Bargaining in Good Faith, MTC, AFL-CIO"

"97 Meetings, Still No Contract, Metal Trades Council, AFL-CIO"

"12 Months, No Contract, Metal Trades Council, AFL-CIO"

"Ten Thousand Dollars and Still No!!! Contract, MTC, AFL-CIO"

"We Want a Contract, P.E.P.S. Unit, Metal Trades"

"M.T.C. Wants A Contract"

"We Want A Contract, Not Cheap Talk!!!, MTC, AFL-CIO"

"We Want Fair Negotiations, MTC"

"Shipyard Need's New Chief Spokesperson"

13. The picketing was peaceful at all times and caused no interference with or disruption of the operations and work going on at the Norfolk Naval Shipyard. In addition, the picketing blocked none of the entrance/exit gates and caused no disruption of ingress and egress of federal workers, private commercial contract workers or truck drivers or their vehicles.

14. All picketing was conducted off of Government property and by pickets who engaged in the picketing on their own time.

15. The private sector contractors routinely come and go every day at this Shipyard.

16. The private sector trucking firms and their employees have trucks and workers coming and going every day into and out of the Norfolk Naval Shipyard.

Conclusions of Law

Section 19(b)(4) of the Order was rather fully discussed and analyzed in the respective decisions issued in Internal Revenue Service v. National Treasury Employees Union, Case No. 22-5976(CO), July 7, 1975; A/SLMR No. 536, July 29, 1975; FLRC No. 75A-96, March 3, 1976.

Despite questions raised as to how broadly Section 19(b)(4) of the Order should be interpreted and as to its Constitutionality, the Assistant Secretary and the Federal Labor Relations Council were quite clear and explicit that the prohibitions contained in Section 19(b)(4) of the Order are absolute and prohibit all picketing by a labor organization in a labor-management dispute.

On September 22, 1976 Judge Gearhard Gesell of the United States District Court for the District of Columbia issued a decision in the IRS case, supra wherein he vacated the Order of the Assistant Secretary and on precise facts of that case was too broad and violative of the First Amendments. Judge Gesell declined to declare Section 19(b)(4) of the Order unconstitutional pointing out, inter alia, that even some peaceful informational picketing could be appropriately totally banned where the governmental function involved was so sensitive that any picketing would be so injurious and disruptive as to justify such an absolute ban. National Treasury Employees Union v. Paul J. Fasser, Jr., et al, Civil Action No. 76-408 (D.D.C. 1976). Judge Gesell went further and suggested that the Federal Labor Relations Council develop facts as to the precise Government interest to be protected and as to the possible differentiation between different types of picketing.

The Federal Labor Relations Council (hereinafter called the Council) in accordance with the suggestion of Judge Gesell, issued a Statement On Major Policy Issue, FLRC No. 76P-4, (January 5, 1977) wherein it set forth its position with respect to the interpretation and application of Section 19(b)(4) of the Order. The Council decided not to use rule making but to "accomplish the delineation of picketing which is permissible or nonpermissible under Section 19(b)(4) on a case-by-case basis, utilizing the adjudicatory procedures established in sections 4(c)(1) and 6 of the Order." The Council concluded that "If picketing of an agency by a labor organization in a labor-management dispute does not actually interfer or reasonably threaten to interfer with the operation of the affected Government agency that picketing will be found permissible under Section 19(b)(4) of the Order." The Council stated further that its standards in reviewing decisions of the Assistant Secretary, as to whether Section 19(b)(4) had been violated in specific cases, is "whether, under the particular circumstances of the case, the picketing interfered with or reasonably threatened to interfer with the operation of the Government agency involved, in violation of Section 19(b)(4) of the Order."

The record in the instant case clearly establishes that the picketing in question was informational and peaceful and did not in any way interfer with the operations of the Norfolk Naval Shipyard. The record contains insufficient evidence to support a finding that the picketing "reasonably threatened to interfer with the operation" of the Norfolk Naval Shipyard.

Thus, applying the standards and criteria as set forth by the Council, in its recent Statement On Major Policy Issue, FLRC No. 76P-4, I am constrained to conclude that the record in the subject case fails to establish that the Union's picketing of the Norfolk Naval Shipyard on November 8 and 9, 1976 violated Section 19(b)(4) of the Order.

Recommended Order

It is recommended that the Assistant Secretary dismiss the subject Complaint.

PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

NAVAL AIR REWORK FACILITY,
MARINE CORPS AIR STATION,
CHERRY POINT, NORTH CAROLINA

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by Local Lodge 2297, International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, AFL-CIO, (IAM) alleging that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (2) of the Order by the action of its supervisor who allegedly made derogatory remarks about unions in general and the IAM in particular, and told an employee that his promotional opportunities were limited by his union membership. The IAM further alleged that such activities were the basis for the employee being denied a promotion.

The Administrative Law Judge concluded that the allegedly coercive statements the employee attributed to the supervisor were not, in fact, made. He further found that the IAM had not established that the selection of another employee for the promotion sought by the employee involved was tainted by considerations of the employee's union sympathies and activities. The Administrative Law Judge therefore recommended that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety.

Noting particularly the absence of exceptions, the Assistant Secretary adopted the findings, conclusions and recommendations of the Administrative Law Judge. Accordingly, he ordered that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety.

DECISION AND ORDER

On April 7, 1977, Administrative Law Judge John H. Fenton issued his Recommended Decision and Order in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had not engaged in the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint and recommending that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety. No exceptions were filed to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order and the entire record in this case, and noting particularly that no exceptions were filed, I hereby adopt the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendations.

ORDER

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the complaint in Case No. 40-6975(CA) be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

Statement of the Case

This case arises under Executive Order 11491. The complaint as amended on May 12, 1976, alleged that the Activity violated Sections 19(a)(1) of the Order by disparaging Local Lodge 2297, by informing employee John A. McFayden that his prospects for a promotion were adversely affected by his union membership and activities and by promising him a promotion if he refrained from such activities. It further alleged that the Activity denied Mr. McFayden a promotion to Metals Inspector WG-10 because of such activities.

A hearing was held at New Bern, North Carolina on July 14, 1976. All parties were afforded the opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, to introduce evidence and to file briefs. Upon the basis of the entire record, including my observation of the witnesses, I make the following findings of fact, conclusions and recommendations.

Complainant's entire case rests on the testimony of Mr. McFayden, who was at material times a WG-8 Metals Inspector B. He attributed a number of coercive and anti-union remarks to his immediate supervisor, Mr. Fred Price, as follows:

McFayden asserted that in January of 1975, during a hot argument over whether the Union deserved credit for a cost-of-living increase, Price in the presence of four other employees, said that the Union was "not worth a damn." Price denied making any such statement. Another metals inspector, Jack O'Rourke, testified that he, in fact, made that statement, intending to contrast the IAM unfavorably to the AFGE. Both he and metals inspector James Daugherty testified credibly that they never heard Price make remarks disparaging of the Union. I find that the statement was made by O'Rourke.

McFayden said that on October 14, 1975, Price gave him two copies of the Reader's Digest and told him to read an article in each one about unions, saying that he would learn that union leaders were often Communists or Mafia members. McFayden claimed that Price's proselytizing effort consumed about one hour. One article was admitted into evidence, and hardly supports McFayden's view. It is critical of AFL-CIO president George Meany's alleged failure to successfully combat the Soviet Union's effort to capture free trade unions, but in no sense does it portray him as sympathetic to such a design. Price denied discussing the matter. I am persuaded that any discussion which may have taken place did not rise to the level of being coercive or disclose an active Union-animus on Price's part. His recollection of the article about George Meany's reaction to the Soviet design on free trade unions was rather accurate. The very lack of harmony between the article in evidence, and the discussion which allegedly attended the reading of it, suggests to me that McFayden's testimony is not fully to be believed. Curiously, McFayden, in an apparent effort to explain his lack of specificity, testified that he "just did not pay much attention to (Price)...when he started talking like that".

In order to put the next two incident of alleged Section 19(a)(1) violations in perspective, it is necessary to discuss at this point other matters relevant to the 19(a)(2) allegation. Thus, McFayden asserted that, on October 10, 1975 Price told him that he was on the selection board which would choose between Thomas Mann and McFayden, the two applicants for the WG-10 position of Metals Inspector A, and that McFayden need not worry, he had the position. He further asserts that on November 7, when Mann was selected, he asked Price why he had lied to him, and that Price explained that he intended to choose him, but changed his mind after an incident on October 17, when he used the Union contract, after threatening to go to the Union, to vindicate his right to give blood at the Activity. Price allegedly said that nobody was going to make him do what he did not want to to do, especially by going to the Union. Later in the same day Price allegedly told him that, if he would change his attitude and forget the Union, Price would see that he got his rating in six months. Finally, even later that day, McFayden and his steward discussed with Price his application for a transfer into the shop from which Thomas Mann was promoted. Again, Price allegedly told him that such a transfer would preclude promotion to WG-10, because the vacancy was at WG-8. This, said McFayden, did not make sense because Mann had just been promoted from that position.

Price, of course, had a very different recollection of these events. He denied ever assuring McFayden that he would receive the promotion. He denied telling him that the blood donor program incident had changed his mind. He acknowledged that such an incident did occur on a Friday of a four-day week at the beginning of hunting season when much leave had been granted and McFayden had asked for annual leave on Tuesday and Wednesday, had it approved for Tuesday only and then called in sick on Wednesday. 1/ On Friday, according to Price, he was acting Branch Manager, and the acting supervisor who was substituting for him came to him for help because McFayden had requested four hours of (administrative) leave for a blood donation, and he was needed because the shop's work was falling behind. Price said he told the supervisor to suggest that McFayden work and give blood in his neighborhood or at some other time, but approved the leave when McFayden presented a copy of the collective bargaining agreement as proof of his right to participate in the blood donor program. (This right existed apart from the contract, in Agency regulations). Price denied that he was irritated by this persistence on McFayden's part in exercising his contract rights, but admits he felt "bad" about having employees who were not more interested in the job than that.

I conclude, in all the circumstances, that the very seriously coercive statements McFayden attributes to Price were not in fact made. In terms of personal demeanor I found no basis for crediting one over the other. I am persuaded, however, from the case viewed in its entirety, that McFayden's account is, at a minimum, very largely overstated. I have noted already that his rendition of the conversation attending the Reader's Digest bears little relationship to the content of the article. Because of the lack of corroboration for his version of the January 1975 statement, and the credible testimony of O'Rourke, I found that Price did not make the statement attributed to him. Had Price told him on November 7 that he would have chosen him for the promotion had he not "gone over his head" to the Union about the blood incident, and later that day promised him a promotion if he would forget the Union, it strikes me as strange, indeed, that nothing was said about it at the meeting with Price later that day. McFayden was clearly angered by the promotion of Mann. I believe he thought he would get it, and thought Price had indicated he would. He then brought his steward to the meeting to discuss his request for a transfer. Price claims that he tried to dissuade him, pointing out that the other shop offered less promotional opportunity. McFayden's testimony indicates that he had the courage to call Price a liar, and to demand a transfer, but not to confront Price with these strongly anti-union statements in the presence of his Union steward. I find it difficult to believe that he would not have made an issue of such alleged anti-union sentiment in any discussion of his desire for a transfer. In reaching this conclusion, I also considered the fact that McFayden was very sure of the accuracy of his recollection, even when demonstrably in error. Thus, he executed a statement on November 10, 1975, describing his conversations with Price on October 10 and 14. He was sure of the accuracy of those dates, which he had entered into a diary, even though official leave records show that he and Price could not have had such conversations on those dates. 2/ In short, I find McFayden was an unreliable witness, and I do not credit his statement that Price said he would have been selected for promotion had he not "gone over his head", nor do I credit his statement that Price assured him on an earlier occasion that he would be promoted.

Having found no evidence in support of the Section 19(a)(1) violations alleged, and no evidence of Union animus, it follows that Complainant has not established that the selection of Mann for promotion was tainted by considerations of McFayden's Union sympathies and activities. McFayden and Mann were the two highly qualified names on the register, with scores of 90 and 88 respectively. All members of the selection panel (which included Price) testified that they unanimously decided that Mann was the better qualified candidate, and that their decision was not influenced by Union considerations. The other two panelists further testified that Price made no effort to influence them. Mann had more experience, and, in McFayden's judgment, was "just as good a man". On scuh a record I must conclude that Complainant clearly has not carried the burden of establishing, by a preponderance of evidence, that he was not selected from promotion for discriminatory reasons.

Conclusions of Law and Recommendation

Having found no persuasive evidence that the alleged Section 19(a)(1) violations occurred, or that the nonselection of McFayden was influenced by the fact of his Union membership, attitude, or activities, I hereby recommend to the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety.

U.S. COMMISSION ON CIVIL RIGHTS,

This case involved a petition for clarification of unit (CU) filed by the Activity seeking to exclude the positions of Federal Women's Program Coordinator (FWPC) and Spanish Speaking Program Coordinator (SSPC) from the exclusively recognized unit. In this regard, the Activity contended that the employees in said positions were management officials within the meaning of the Order. Contrary to the Activity, the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2478 (AFSCME) contended that both positions should remain in the unit.

The Assistant Secretary found that the FWPC and the SSPC were not management officials within the meaning of the Order, as the evidence did not establish that employees in such positions had authority to make or to influence effectively Activity policies with respect to personnel, procedures, or programs. In this regard, the record revealed that they served as resource persons, rendering resource information and recommendations with respect to the policy in question. Moreover, it was noted that the duties of said positions were not the official duties of the incumbents, and their involvement was restricted to 20 percent of their work time. Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary clarified the exclusively recognized unit by including in the unit the positions of Federal Women's Program Coordinator and Spanish Speaking Program Coordinator.

DECISION AND ORDER CLARIFYING UNIT

Upon a petition duly filed under Section 6 of Executive Order 11491, as amended, a hearing was held before Hearing Officer Daniel F. Sutton. The Hearing Officer's rulings made at the hearing are free from prejudicial error and are hereby affirmed.

Upon the entire record in this case, including, a brief filed by the Activity-Petitioner, the Assistant Secretary finds:

By its petition herein, the Activity-Petitioner, also called the Activity, seeks to exclude the positions of Federal Women's Program Coordinator (FWPC) and Spanish Speaking Program Coordinator (SSPC) from the exclusively recognized unit. In this regard, the Activity contends that the employees in said positions are management officials within the meaning of the Order. The American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2478, herein called AFSCME, contends, on the other hand, that there is no basis for excluding employees in said positions from its exclusively recognized unit. 1/

1/ The Activity, in the instant petition and at the hearing in this matter, alleged that allowing the FWPC and the SSPC positions to remain in the bargaining unit could result in a "conflict of interest" as defined in Section 1(b) of the Order. In this regard, it speculated that it could be negotiating with the AFSCME on issues raised by a Coordinator who might also be a representative of AFSCME, and that a violation of Section 19 could result. It has been held previously that unfair labor practice issues such as this may not be resolved appropriately in the context of a representation proceeding. Cf. Veterans Administration Center, Togus, Maine, A/SLMR No. 317, at footnote 1.

The record reveals that the AFSCME was certified as exclusive representative for a nationwide unit consisting of all professional and nonprofessional employees of the Activity on February 26, 1973. 2/ The Activity is headed by several Commissioners and is organized into a headquarters and eight regions. The headquarters unit is headed by a Staff Director under whom is the Deputy Staff Director. Reporting to the Deputy Staff Director is the Director of Equal Employment Opportunity (EEO), who is responsible for implementing equal employment opportunity programs within the Activity. Under the Director of EEO is an EEO Committee comprised of the FWPC, the SSPC, the headquarters EEO Counselors, and the Mid-Atlantic Regional Office EEO Counselor. The FWPC and the SSPC are part-time positions and are appointed by the Deputy Staff Director for a two year term. Persons appointed to these positions spend approximately 20 percent of their time performing this work and the remaining time in their official jobs at the headquarters.

The record reveals that the FWPC and the SSPC advise the Director of EEO on matters affecting the employment and advancement of women and employees of Spanish speaking background. Recommendations for changes in the Activity's policies affecting these groups are normally processed through the Director of EEO. In the past, recommendations have included such items as upward mobility and paraprofessional training, orientation programs, utilizing bilingual and bicultural abilities, and determining titles for occupational and statistical categories. The evidence also indicates that decision making authority over recommended policy changes is restricted to the Staff Director and the Commissioners.

With respect to the recommendations submitted by the FWPC and the SSPC, the record reveals that the Director of EEO decides whether to forward them to the Deputy Staff Director and may attach his recommendations. The record also reveals that the FWPC and the SSPC are not normally present at the decision making policy discussions held concerning their recommendations.

Based on the foregoing circumstances, I find that the FWPC and the SSPC are not management officials within the meaning of the Order. Thus, in my view, the evidence establishes that such employees do not have authority to make or to influence effectively Activity policies with respect to personnel, procedures, or programs. Rather, I find that they serve as resource persons rendering resource information and recommendations with respect to the policy in question. 3/ Moreover, it was noted that the duties of said positions are not the official duties of the appointed employees, and their involvement is restricted to 20 percent of their work time. Accordingly, I find that the positions of Federal Women's Program Coordinator and Spanish Speaking Program Coordinator should be included in the unit.

2/ The certified unit is described as: "All General Schedule and Wage Grade professional and nonprofessional employees of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights nationwide excluding supervisors, management officials, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, temporary appointments not to exceed 90 days, confidential employees and guards as defined in Executive Order 11491."

ORDER

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the unit sought to be clarified herein, for which the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2478 was certified on February 26, 1973, be, and hereby is, clarified by including in said unit the positions of Federal Women's Program Coordinator and Spanish Speaking Program Coordinator.

SUMMARY OF DECISION AND DIRECTION OF ELECTION
OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE,
OFFICE OF THE REGIONAL COMMISSIONER, SOUTHEAST REGION

This case arose as a result of a representation petition filed by the National Treasury Employees Union (NTEU) seeking an election in a unit of all professional and nonprofessional employees of the Internal Revenue Service, Office of the Regional Commissioner, Southeast Region (Activity). The NTEU previously petitioned for the same unit which was found appropriate in Internal Revenue Service, Office of the Regional Commissioner, Southeast Region, A/SLMR No. 565. In that case a question was raised as to the adequacy of the NTEU's showing of interest based on the eligibility findings contained in the decision. The petition was subsequently dismissed based upon the results of a reevaluation of the showing of interest. The parties agreed that the unit found appropriate in the previous case and petitioned for in the instant matter continues to be appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition. A Notice of Hearing was issued in the instant matter in order to adduce evidence on the eligibility of employees in certain job classifications. Specifically, the Activity contends, and the NTEU concurs, that the employees in certain job classifications should be excluded from the unit because such employees are management officials and/or confidential employees. In addition, the Activity contends that employees in the classification of Budget Analyst, GS-560-12, are supervisors and that the employee classified as Appointment Clerk, GS-203-5, is engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity,and that they, therefore, should be excluded from the bargaining unit.

The Assistant Secretary noted that with the exception of the Appointment Clerk, GS-203-5, the eligibility of all the employees in the subject classifications was fully litigated and determined in the earlier case to be included within the unit found appropriate. In the Assistant Secretary's view, it would not effectuate the purposes and policies of the Order to permit the same parties to relitigate the same issues including the same classifications raised in a prior hearing, in the absence of evidence of some change in circumstances. Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary found, based on the determination in the earlier case, that employees in the disputed classifications should be included in the unit found appropriate. However, with regard to employees classified as Budget Analyst, GS-560-12, the record disclosed that since the hearing in the previous case additional duties had been assigned to such employees. Based upon the record, the Assistant Secretary found insufficient evidence to establish that employees in this classification are supervisors within the meaning of the Order. Accordingly, he found that employees in this job classification should be included in the unit.

Finally, based on the parties' stipulation, the Assistant Secretary found that the employee classified as Appointment Clerk, GS-203-5, to be engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity and, therefore, should be excluded from the unit found appropriate.

Based on the foregoing, the Assistant Secretary found the unit sought to be appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition, and ordered that an election be conducted.

DECISION AND DIRECTION OF ELECTION

Upon a petition duly filed under Section 6 of Executive Order 11491, as amended, a hearing was held before Hearing Officer Annette Allen. The Hearing Officer's rulings made at the hearing are free from prejudicial error and are hereby affirmed.

Upon the entire record in this case, including the Activity's brief, the Assistant Secretary finds:

1. The labor organization involved claims to represent certain employees of the Activity.

2. The Petitioner, National Treasury Employees Union, herein called NTEU, seeks an election in a unit of all professional and nonprofessional employees of the Internal Revenue Service, Office of the Regional Commissioner, Southeast Region, excluding management officials, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, guards, and supervisors as defined in Executive Order 11491, as amended. 1/

1/ The NTEU previously petitioned for the same unit which was found appropriate in Internal Revenue Service, Office of the Regional Commissioner, Southeast Region, A/SLMR No. 565. In that case a question was raised as to the adequacy of the NTEU's showing of interest based on the eligibility findings contained in the decision. Therefore, the Assistant Secretary directed the Area Administrator to reevaluate the showing of interest prior to proceeding further in the matter. The petition was subsequently dismissed based upon the results of the reevaluation. The parties agree that the unit found appropriate in that case, and petitioned for in the instant matter, continues to be appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition, and, pursuant to the parties' request, I hereby take administrative notice of the record in the earlier case.

A Notice of Hearing was issued in the instant matter in order to adduce evidence on the eligibility of employees in certain job classifications. Specifically, the Activity contends, and the NTEU concurs, that the employees in the following job classifications are management officials and/or confidential employees, and on these bases should be excluded from the bargaining unit: Fiscal Analyst, GS-501-7, 9; Budget Analyst, GS-650-9, 11, 12; Management Analyst, GS-343-11, 12; Senior Management Analyst, GS-343-12; Regional Analyst Audit, GS-512-12, 13; Senior Regional Analyst Audit, GS-512-14; Industrial Engineer, GS-896-12, 13. In addition, the Activity contends that employees in the classification of Budget Analyst, GS-560-12, are supervisors, and the employee classified as Appointment Clerk, GS-203-5, is engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, and that they, therefore, should be excluded from the bargaining unit. 2/

Fiscal Analyst, GS-501-7, 9; Budget Analyst, GS-650-9, 11, 12; Management Analyst, GS-343-11, 12; Senior Management Analyst, GS-343-12; Regional Analyst Audit, GS-512-12, 13; Senior Regional Analyst Audit, GS-512-14; Industrial Engineer, GS-896-12, 13.

In the prior case, the eligibility of the employees in the above classifications was fully litigated and they were determined by the Assistant Secretary to be included within the unit found appropriate. The record reveals that since the earlier hearing there has been no change in the duties or responsibilities of the employees in the subject classifications. In my view, it would not effectuate the purposes and policies of the Order to permit the same parties to relitigate the same issues involving the same classifications raised in a prior hearing, in the absence of evidence of some change in circumstances. Accordingly, in the absence of such evidence, I find, based on the Assistant Secretary's determination in Internal Revenue Service, Office of the Regional Commissioner, Southeast Region, cited above, that the employees in the above classifications should be included in the unit found appropriate.

The eligibility of employees in the subject classification was litigated and determined in the earlier case. However, the record reveals that since the hearing in the previous case additional duties have been assigned to such employees. In this regard, the record reveals that employees in this classification have been designated "team leaders" of a team which consists of a lower graded Budget Analyst, a Budget Technician and/or a Budget Clerk. Employees in the subject classification report directly to the Budget Officer, and, among their additional duties, they are responsible for coordinating and routinely assigning work to the members of their team, and making recommended evaluations of their team members to assist the Budget Officer in making performance evaluations.

I find that the evidence does not establish that employees in the classification of Budget Analyst, GS-560-12, are supervisors within the meaning of Section 2(c) of the Executive Order. In this regard, it was noted that the evidence does not establish that the employees in the subject job classification have the authority to hire, discharge, promote, approve leave, adjust grievances, or effectively recommend such actions. Further the record does not reveal that they utilize independent judgment or exercise authority in other than a routine manner with respect to other employees. Accordingly, I find that employees in the job classification of Budget Analyst, GS-560-12, should be included in the unit found appropriate.

Appointment Clerk, GS-203-5

The parties stipulated that the incumbent in the subject classification spends a majority of time engaged in the preparation and processing of personnel actions, such as promotions, reassignments, pay increases, transfers, adverse action, etc., and is primarily engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity.

Based on the foregoing stipulation, and in the absence of evidence to the contrary, I find that the employee classified as Appointment Clerk, GS-203-5, is engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity and, accordingly, should be excluded from the unit.

Based upon the record developed in the earlier case, and noting the agreement of the parties herein, I find the following described unit of employees to be appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under the provisions of the Order:

> All professional and nonprofessional employees of the Internal Revenue Service, Office of the Regional Commissioner, Southeast Region, excluding management officials, confidential employees, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, guards, and supervisors as defined in the Order.

It is noted that the unit found appropriate includes professional employees. The Assistant Secretary is prohibited by Section 10(b)(4) of the Order from including professional employees in a unit with employees who are not professional, unless a majority of the professional employees votes for inclusion in such a unit. Accordingly, the desires of the professional employees as to inclusion in a unit with nonprofessional employees must be ascertained. I shall, therefore, direct separate elections in the following voting groups:

2/ At the hearing, the parties stipulated that employees in all of the classifications at issue herein, with the exception of the employee classified as Appointment Clerk, GS-203-5, are professional employees within the meaning of the Order. There was no contrary evidence to indicate that the parties' stipulation was improper.

Voting Group (a): All professional employees of the Internal Revenue Service, Office of the Regional Commissioner, Southeast Region, excluding nonprofessional employees, management officials, confidential employees, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, guards, and supervisors as defined in the Order.

Voting Group (b): All nonprofessional employees of the Internal Revenue Service, Office of the Regional Commissioner, Southeast Region, excluding professional employees, management officials, confidential employees, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, guards, and supervisors as defined in the Order.

The employees in the nonprofessional voting group (b) will be polled whether or not they desire to be represented by the National Treasury Employees Union.

The employees in the professional voting group (a) will be asked two questions on their ballots: (1) whether or not they wish to be included with the nonprofessional employees for the purpose of exclusive recognition, and (2) whether or not they wish to be represented for the purpose of exclusive recognition by the National Treasury Employees Union. In the event that a majority of the valid votes of voting group (a) are cast in favor of inclusion in the same unit as nonprofessional employees, the ballots of voting group (a) shall be combined with those of voting group (b).

Unless a majority of the valid votes of voting group (a) are cast for inclusion in the same unit as nonprofessional employees, they will be taken to have indicated their desire to constitute a separate unit, and an appropriate certification will be issued indicating whether or not the National Treasury Employees Union was selected by the professional employee unit.

The unit determination in the subject case is based, in part, then upon the results of the election among the professional employees. However, I will now make the following findings in regard to the appropriate unit:

1. If a majority of the professional employees votes for inclusion in the same unit as the nonprofessional employees, I find that the following employees will constitute a unit appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition within the meaning of Section 10 of the Order:

All professional and nonprofessional employees of the Internal Revenue Service, Office of the Regional Commissioner, Southeast Region, excluding management officials, confidential employees, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, guards, and supervisors as defined in the Order.

2. If a majority of the professional employees does not vote for inclusion in the same unit as the nonprofessional employees, I find that the following two groups of employees will constitute separate units appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition within the meaning of Section 10 of the Order:

(a) All nonprofessional employees of the Internal Revenue Service, Office of the Regional Commissioner, Southeast Region, excluding professional employees, management officials, confidential employees, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, guards, and supervisors as defined in the Order.

(b) All professional employees of the Internal Revenue Service, Office of the Regional Commissioner, Southeast Region, excluding nonprofessional employees, management officials, confidential employees, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, guards, and supervisors as defined in the Order.

DIRECTION OF ELECTION

An election by secret ballot shall be conducted among the employees in the unit found appropriate, as early as possible, but not later than 60 days from the date below. The appropriate Area Administrator shall supervise the election, subject to the Assistant Secretary's Regulations. Eligible to vote are those in the unit who were employed during the payroll period immediately preceding the date below, including employees who did not work during that period because they were out ill, or on vacation or on furlough, including those in the military service who appear in person at the polls. Ineligible to vote are employees who quit or who were discharged for cause since the designated payroll period and who have not been rehired or reinstated before the election date. Those eligible shall vote whether or not they desire to be represented for the purpose of exclusive recognition by the National Treasury Employees Union.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS
SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

PENNSYLVANIA ARMY AND AIR NATIONAL GUARD
A/SLMR No. 871

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by the Association of Civilian Technicians (ACT) alleging that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1),(2),(5), and (6) of the Order by refusing to allow an employee to have a representative of the ACT present at a meeting between the employee and his first and second level supervisors.

The Administrative Law Judge concluded that the Respondent had not violated Section 19(a)(1),(2),(5) and (6) of the Order. In this regard, the Administrative Law Judge found that the April 23, 1976, meeting between the employee and his first and second level supervisors did not constitute a "formal discussion" within the meaning of Section 10(e) of the Order as the meeting was, in effect, a "counselling session" between supervisors and a subordinate and had no wider ramification than being a limited discussion with an individual employee concerning particular incidents as to him. In reaching this conclusion, the Administrative Law Judge rejected the argument of the ACT that the Respondent's regulations, which distinguish between informal and formal disciplinary actions, should be dispositive of the issue of the Section 10(e) character of the meeting. Further, the Administrative Law Judge found that the negotiated agreement executed by the parties on March 24, 1976, which provided for, among other things, union representation of employees at disciplinary meetings, was not effective until the May 7, 1976, approval of the Respondent, and was not in effect during the critical times herein.

The Assistant Secretary, citing the Federal Labor Relations Council's Statement On Major Policy Issue, FLRC No. 75P-2, Report No. 116, adopted the findings, conclusions and recommendations of the Administrative Law Judge, and ordered that the complaint be dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER

On March 18, 1977, Administrative Law Judge Salvatore J. Arrigo issued his Recommended Decision in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had not engaged in the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint and recommending that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety. Thereafter, the Complainant filed exceptions and a supporting brief with respect to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and the entire record in the subject case, including the exceptions and supporting brief filed by the Complainant, I hereby adopt the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendations. 1/

Preliminary Statement

This proceeding arises under the provisions of Executive Order 11491, as amended (hereafter referred to as the Order). Pursuant to the Regulations of the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor Management Relations (hereafter referred to as the Assistant Secretary), a Notice of Hearing on Complaint issued on November 12, 1976 with reference to alleged violations of Sections 19(a)(1)(2)(5) and (6) of the Order. The complaint, filed by Association of Civilian Technicians (hereafter referred to as the Union or Complainant) alleged that Pennsylvania Army and Air National Guard (hereafter referred to as the Activity or Respondent) violated the Order by refusing to allow Richard Tworek to have a Union representative present at a meeting between Tworek and his first and second level supervisors.

At the hearing held on January 5, 1977 the parties were represented by counsel and afforded full opportunity to adduce evidence, call, examine and cross-examine witnesses and argue orally. Briefs were recieved from both parties and have been carefully considered.

Upon the entire record in this matter and from my evaluation of the evidence and observation of the witnesses and their demeanor I make the following:

Findings of Fact

At all times since 1974 the Union's Pennsylvania State Council has been the exclusive collective bargaining representative for all Army and Air National Guard Technicians within the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. Sometime after the Union obtained representative status the parties entered negotiations for an agreement and by January 1975 reached agreement on basically all contract matters except the subjects of reduction in force and wearing of military uniforms. These two issues were referred to the Federal Service Impasses Panel which, in November 1975, recommended that the agreement be put into effect less the two disputed items. It was further recommended that bargaining on the remaining questions could resume 180 days days after the basic agreement had been signed. The Activity refused to accept the Panel's recommendations and thereafter, formal hearings were held before the Panel. Pursuant thereto, the Panel, on February 24, 1976, directed that the parties sign the agreement less the two disputed items and accordingly the agreement was signed by the parties on March 24, 1976. Section 20.1 of the agreement provides that it "...shall become effective and remain in effect for two (2) years from the date approved by the National Guard Bureau." The agreement was approved by the National Guard Bureau on May 7, 1976.

On April 23, 1976, Richard Tworek, who was at that time an employee of the Activity, 1/ was informed by his immediate supervisor Joseph Hood, that both were wanted in the office of Frank Catrain. Catrain was Hood's supervisor and Tworek's next level

1/ On September 11, 1976, Tworek was terminated from employment by virtue of his loss of military membership, a prerequisite to to retaining employment as a Civilian Technician.

Supervisor. After Tworek and Hood entered Catrain's office Catrain presented Tworek with the following letter:

"Subject: Informal Disciplinary Action

"To: SSgt Richard Tworek

"1. During normal scheduled working hours at approximately 1215 hours, 21 April 1976 within the confines of Hanger #1, Building #302, you were observed as being in violation of Base Regulations 35-1, "Dress and Personal Appearance of ANG Personnel", and AFR 35-10, Dress and Personal Appearance of A.F. Personnel. This situation was very embarrassing to me as your supervisor. You were approached by none other than the Air Commander, Brig General Phillipy in regard to your personal appearance.

"2. Repeated past briefings, letters and warnings as to the requirements of AFR 35-10, TPP 907 page 13, and Base Regulation 35-1, you were observed with your shirttail out of your trousers [sic].

"3. This is an informal disciplinary action but will not be placed in your personel file. It will be maintained by me for future reference."

Catrain asked Tworek to read the letter and endorse it. Tworek asked to have a Union representative present and Catrain refused. 2/ Catrain again asked that it be signed and Tworek again requested and was refused Union representation. Catrain gave the letter to Hood and asked him to sign and date the letter, which he did. After Tworek continued to refuse to sign the letter

2/ While some supervisors at that time followed the practice of permitting a Union representatives to be present when a written reprimand or admonishment was given to an employee, Catrain, among others, did not permit such representation.

Catrain told Tworek it was an informal action and would be put into the "file". 3/ Catrain then brought out of his desk a letter of reprimand dealing with a prior complaint of alleged abuse of sick leave on Tworek's part and asked him to sign it. 4/ Tworek refused to sign without having Union representation and counselling. Catrain again refused to allow Union representation and neither letter was signed by Tworek.

Thereafter, the unfair labor practice charges giving rise to these proceedings was filed concerning Catrain's refusal to permit Tworek representation at the April 23 meeting.

Discussion and Conclusions

Complainant contends that Catrain's meeting with Tworek was a formal meeting within the meaning of Section 10(e) of the Order and accordingly, the Activity violated the Order when Catrain refused to permit Tworek Union representation. 5/ Complainant argues that the formality of the meeting is shown by reference to the Activity's own regulations which appear to equate informal disciplinary actions with oral admonishments and formal disciplinary 3/ No explanation was given as to what specific "file" the letter would be deposited. However, the letter did not go to Tworek's official personnel file.

4/ Tworek had originally been given a letter of reprimand as to excessive absenteeism which was subsequently revised to abuse of sick leave.

5/ Section 10(e) provides, in relevant part: "The labor organization shall be given the opportunity to be represented at formal discussions between management and employees or employee representatives concerning grieviances, personnel policies and practices, or other matters affecting general working conditions of employees in the unit.

actions with written admonishments 6/ and by the manner in which the letter was subsequently used. 7/ Complainant further contends that on April 23, 1976 when the Catrain - Tworek incident occurred the parties were bound by the terms of the collective bargaining agreement executed on March 24 which, according to the Union, gave Tworek the right to representation upon demand. 8/

The Assistant Secretary has held, in similar circumstances, that "counselling sessions" between supervisors and subordinates which relate only to an individual employee's alleged shortcomings are not formal discussions under Section 10(e) of the Order.

6/ T P Pam 904 of the Activity's regulations provides, in relevant part:

"a. Informal Disciplinary Actions. Oral admonitions and warnings are the first step in constructive discipline. As a general rule, such actions are taken by the supervisor on his own initiative in situations of a minor nature involving violations of a rule, standard of conduct, safety practice, or authoritative instructions. The technician should be advised of the specific infraction or breach of conduct and exactly when it occurred (date of incident), and he should be permitted to explain his conduct or act of commission or ommision.

"b. Formal Disciplinary Actions. Formal disciplinary actions consist of written admonitions or reprimands, suspensions and removals. Written notices will be as outlined in paragraph 7-42 this pamphlet. A copy of these notices will be sent to the Technician Personnel Office, since such actions may not be accomplished without action on the part of the Technician Personnel Office. A disciplinary measure should not involve a reduction in rank or compensation."

8/ Section 12.1 of the agreement provides, inter alia:

"If at any time a Technician is being questioned by a supervisor or management official and/or he believes that his rights

According to the Secretary, such meetings have "...no wider ramifications than being limited discussions at a particular time with an individual employee...concerning particular incidents as to him."9/ In my view the meeting between Catrain and Tworek on April 23 was tantamount to a "counselling session" and did not involve general working conditions. Accordingly, I conclude the meeting did not constitute a "formal discussion" within the meaning of Section 10(e) of the Order and, in these circumstances, Tworek did not have a protected right under the Order to assistance or representation by the exclusive representative.10/

With regard to Complainant's reliance on the Activity's regulations which distinguish between informal and formal disciplinary actions, I do not find the regulations to be dispositive of the case herein. What is at issue before me is whether the April 23 meeting constituded a "formal discussion" within the meaning of Section 10(e) of the Order and not within the meaning of the Activity's regulations. Having found no formal discussion occurred on April 23 as alleged, I need not decide whether a formal discussion as envisioned in the regulations took place. In any event, an Agency's failure to abide by its own regulations does not, without more, constitute a violation of the Order. 11/

As to the subsequent use of the letter, I am unpersuaded that the introduction of the letter into Federal Court litigation establishes the April 23 meeting to be a "formal discussion."

(cont'd) are being threatened, he has a right to request that his Association representative be present. Should he elect to have an Association representative present, no further questioning or action will take place until the Technician's representative is present."

11/ Cf. Office of Economic Opportunity, Region V, Chicago, Illinois, A/SLMR No. 344.

Either a "formal discussion" occurred on April 23 or it did not. I have found the latter. In my view the submission of testimony, letters, records or various other evidence at a formal proceeding such as a court suit cannot relate back and elevate otherwise non-formal actions to formal acts or conduct within the meaning of the Order.

Finally, I reject Complainant's contention that the parties were bound on April 23, 1976 by the terms of the collective bargaining agreement executed on March 24, 1976 but not approved until May 7. As stated previously, the agreement provides that it "...shall become effective and remain in effect for two (2) years from the date approved by the National Guard Bureau." [Emphasis added.] Thus, the express language used by the parties made the terms of the agreement applicable for a two year period commencing with Bureau approval. I must assume the parties meant what they contractually said. Accordingly, I conclude that on April 23, 1976 the terms of the agreement were not in effect and the Activity was not obligated to accede to Tworek's request for representation at his meeting with Catrain and Hood. 12/

Recommendation

In all the circumstances herein I recommend the complaint be dismissed in its entirety.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR
ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS
SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

VETERANS ADMINISTRATION
HOSPITAL, MONTROSE, N.Y.
A/SLMR No. 872

This case arose as the result of a petition filed by the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2440, AFL-CIO (AFGE) seeking an election in a unit of all hospital police officers of the Activity. The AFGE contended that by virtue of the Assistant Secretary's decision in Veterans Administration Hospital, Montrose, New York, A/SLMR No. 484, in which a unit of non-guard employees was "severed" from a mixed unit of guard and non-guard employees, the hospital police officers (officers) are currently unrepresented. The Intervenor, National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1119 (NFFE) contended that, as a result of its victory in the election directed by the Assistant Secretary in A/SLMR No. 484, the officers continued to be part of the mixed unit, and that the AFGE's petition which seeks to sever the officers from the mixed unit should be dismissed based on the criteria established in United States Naval Construction Battalion Center, A/SLMR No. 8. The Activity contended that the officers do not share a community of interest separate and distinct from other General Schedule employees in the Activity, and that such a unit would not promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. It also contended that the officers have been, and continue to be, effectively represented by the NFFE.

Under all the circumstances, the Assistant Secretary concluded that subsequent to the election conducted pursuant to the Decision and Direction of Election in A/SLMR No. 484, the officers continued to be represented by the NFFE as part of the existing mixed unit of employees. In this regard, the Assistant Secretary noted that the officers were excluded from the unit found appropriate in that case only by reason of the then prohibition in the Order precluding the establishment of mixed units containing guard and non-guard employees. He further noted that such prohibition did not affect existing mixed units and that, standing alone, the filing of a petition, or the determination by the Assistant Secretary that a segment of an existing unit is appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under the Order, do not constitute events which would terminate an existing mixed unit. Under these circumstances, in view of the majority vote of employees in favor of the NFFE, which, in the Assistant Secretary's judgment, constituted an indication of the desire of the employees to remain in the existing mixed unit, he found that the existing mixed unit continued in existence as constituted.

Having found that the officers continued to be part of the existing mixed unit, the Assistant Secretary found that the AFGE's petition was, in effect, an attempt to sever a portion of an existing unit. In these circumstances, he found that the petitioned for unit was not appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition as there was no evidence that NFFE had failed or improperly refused to represent any employee in the existing bargaining unit and there has been a harmonious and effective bargaining relationship between the Activity and NFFE since 1965. Accordingly, in the absence of evidence of unusual circumstances, the Assistant Secretary dismissed the petition.

DECISION AND ORDER

Upon a petition duly filed under Section 6 of Executive Order 11491, as amended, a hearing was held before Hearing Officer Raymond A. Wren. The Hearing Officer's rulings made at the hearing are free from prejudicial error and are hereby affirmed.

Upon the entire record in this case, the Assistant Secretary finds:

1. The labor organizations involved claim to represent certain employees of the Activity.

2. The Petitioner, American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2440, AFL-CIO, herein called the AFGE, seeks an election in a unit of all hospital police officers of the Activity, excluding all other General Schedule and Wage Grade employees, management officials, supervisors, and employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity. 1/ In support of its petition, the AFGE argues that, by virtue of the Assistant Secretary's decision in Veterans Administration Hospital, Montrose, New York, A/SLMR No. 484, in which a unit of non-guard employees was "severed" from a mixed unit of guard and non-guard employees, the claimed hospital police officers (officers) are, at present, unrepresented. As an alternative argument, the AFGE contends that, even if the officers are considered to be part of a mixed unit, they constitute a separate, appropriate unit which can be severed from the mixed unit.

1/ The claimed unit appears as amended at the hearing.

The Intervenor, National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1119, herein called the NFFE, contends that the officers were severed from the mixed unit in A/SLMR No. 484, solely for the purpose of conducting an election, and the results of the election, which demonstrated rejection of the AFGE and support for the NFFE, should be viewed as having indicated the employees' desire to remain in the existing mixed unit represented by the NFFE. The NFFE further contends that as the officers are still part of the existing unit, the AFGE's petition should be dismissed based on the criteria set forth in United States Naval Contruction Battalion Center, A/SLMR No. 8.

The Activity takes the position that the claimed employees do not share a community of interest separate and distinct from the other General Schedule employees of the Activity and that such unit would not promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. The Activity also asserts that the record herein establishes that the officers have been, and currently are, effectively represented by the NFFE. 2/

The record reveals that the Activity is a general medical and surgical hospital and a domiciliary. The officers, the employees sought herein, are attached to the Police Section of the Engineering Service of the Activity. The Police Section consists of a Supervisory Police Officer Chief, and approximately 12 police officers. The officers are responsible for the protection of property and personnel of the Activity, including investigations concerning thefts and other crimes, damage, and injuries, as well as controlling auto traffic on the Activity's grounds. The officers are General Schedule employees and are subject to the same personnel practices and policies and working conditions as all General Schedule employees of the Activity. They also are included in the same areas of consideration for merit promotions and reductions-in-force as other General Schedule employees of the Activity.

On September 29, 1965, the NFFE was granted exclusive recognition for a unit of all professional and nonprofessional employees of the Activity, including police officers. On September 12, 1972, the NFFE and the Activity executed a negotiated agreement, effective for a period of two years and automatically renewable for additional two year terms. 3/ Pursuant to a petition filed by the AFGE on February 4, 1975, the Assistant Secretary issued a Decision and Direction of Election in Veterans Administration Hospital, Montrose, New York, A/SLMR No. 484, in which he directed an election in a unit of all professional and nonprofessional General Schedule employees, excluding guards. 4/ The election, which was held on April 1 and 3, 1975, was won by the NFFE. On April 7, 1975, the NFFE was certified as the exclusive representative of the employees in the unit. For the reasons discussed below, the NFFE contends, and I agree, that the Area Administrator, in issuing the Certification of Representative, inadvertently excluded guards. Thereafter, on May 15, 1975, the AFGE filed a petition in Case No. 30-6183(RO) seeking a unit consisting of hospital police officers and structural firefighters who perform guard duties at the Activity. On October 3, 1975, the Regional Administrator dismissed the petition as untimely, citing the fact that the negotiated agreement covering the above employees was in effect and that the open period would not be in effect until June of 1976. On December 23, 1975, the Assistant Secretary denied the AFGE's request for review of the Regional Administrator's decision.

The record indicates that the NFFE has represented the officers over the years, including particularly protecting their interests when there was a reorganization of the Activity and the status of these employees was uncertain. Moreover, the NFFE has represented the officers in numerous grievances and there are several officers who are on authorized dues deductions.

Under all the foregoing circumstances, I find that, subsequent to the election held pursuant to the Direction of Election In A/SLMR No. 484, the officers continued to be included in a unit represented by the NFFE by virtue of its victory in that election. Thus, as noted above, the only reason for the exclusion in the Direction of Election of the officers from the unit found appropriate in A/SLMR No. 484 was the then existing prohibition contained in the Order against the establishment of any unit which included both guard and non-guard employees. 5/ However, the "legislative history" of the Order, as set forth in the Study Committee's Report and Recommendations (1969), clearly established that such prohibition did not affect existing units. In applying these principles under slightly different circumstances, it was earlier held that the prohibition regarding mixed units of guard and non-guard employees related only to the establishment of new units, and that until some event occurred which could be said to have terminated an existing mixed unit, such mixed unit was free to continue in existence as constituted. 6/ It was further held that neither the filing of a petition, nor a determination by the Assistant Secretary that a segment of an existing unit is an appropriate unit for the purpose of exclusive recognition, standing alone, constituted events which would terminate an existing unit. Although the petition filed by the AFGE, which resulted in the

2/ The Activity also argues that its position herein is supported by the Regional Administrator's decision of October 3, 1975, in Case No. 30-6183(RO), in which he dismissed an AFGE petition seeking the same unit as the instant petition as untimely, based upon the termination date of the NFFE's negotiated agreement.

3/ During all times relevant herein the agreement was in effect, having been automatically renewed since the original agreement was signed. There is no contention that the petition herein is untimely.

4/ The Officers were excluded from the unit found appropriate by reason of the then existing prohibition contained in the Order.

5/ See Section 10(b)(3) of the Order as it existed prior to February 6, 1975. Executive Order 11838, signed by the President on Feburary 6, 1975, amending Executive Order 11491, as amended, revoked Section 10(b)(3). In this regard, see also the Report and Recommendations of the Federal Labor Relations Council, (1975) Section I(3).

6/ See United States Department of the Army, Rocky Mountain Arsenal, Denver, Colorado, A/SLMR No. 325, and General Services Administration, Region 9, San Francisco, California, A/SLMR No. 333, where the petitions involved sought units of guards to be severed from existing mixed units.

Decision and Direction of Election in A/SLMR No. 484, sought to sever a unit of non-guards from the existing mixed unit, in my view, the principles set forth in the earlier cases noted above are applicable. Thus, in my opinion, the vote of the majority of the employees in favor of the NFFE, the incumbent labor organization which had been representing the mixed unit, constituted, in effect, an indication of the desire of the employees to remain in the existing mixed unit. Under these circumstances, I find that the existing mixed unit continued in existence as constituted subsequent to the election.

Having found that the officers continued to be represented by the NFFE as part of the mixed unit, I find that the AFGE's petition is, in effect, an attempt to sever a portion of the existing exclusively recognized unit. It has been held previously that the purposes and policies of the Order will best be effectuated by finding inappropriate a separate unit severed out of an existing unit where the evidence shows that an established, effective and fair collective bargaining relationship is in existence, absent unusual circumstances. 7/ As noted above, there is no evidence that the NFFE has failed or improperly refused to represent any employee, including the officers, in the existing bargaining unit. Further, the record reveals that a harmonious and effective bargaining relationship has been maintained since 1965 between the Activity and the NFFE. Accordingly, in the absence of any unusual circumstances which would warrant severance of certain employees from the existing exclusively recognized unit, I find that the unit sought by the AFGE herein is inappropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition and, accordingly, I shall dismiss the petition. 8/

SUMMARY OF SUPPLEMENTAL DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

NAVAL AIR REWORK FACILITY, PENSACOLA, FLORIDA, and SECRETARY OF THE NAVY, WASHINGTON, D. C.
A/SLMR No. 873

On January 26, 1976, the Assistant Secretary issued his Decision and Order in A/SLMR No. 608, in which he found that the Respondent Secretary of the Navy, Department of the Navy, Washington, D. C. (Agency) had violated Section 19(a)(1) of the Order by directing the Respondent Naval Air Rework Facility, Pensacola, Florida (Activity) to terminate environmental differential pay paid pursuant to certain arbitration awards processed under the Activity's negotiated agreement with the Complainant. He found also that the Activity violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by unilaterally terminating such payments. Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary ordered, among other things, that the Activity and Agency cease and desist from the conduct found violative of the Order, and that the Activity reimburse each of the affected employees all monies deducted or withheld from them by reason of the termination of the environmental differential pay.

On May 4, 1977, the Federal Labor Relations Council (Council) issued its Decision on Appeal in FLRC No. 76A-37, sustaining in part and setting aside in part the Assistant Secretary's Decision in A/SLMR No. 608, and remanding the case to the Assistant Secretary for appropriate action consistent with its Decision. In remanding the case to the Assistant Secretary, the Council, among other things, enunciated certain principles which it believed properly controlled in the subject case. Thus, in the Council's view, when the Assistant Secretary finds acts or practices which constitute unfair labor practices by "agency management," as defined in Section 2(f) of the Order, the Order provides no basis for drawing artificial distinction between organizational levels of such agency management so as to relieve them of the responsibility for their acts, which would otherwise be violative of the Order. The Council found that no distinction exists between alleged violations of 19(a)(6), on the one hand, and alleged violations of the remainder of 19(a) on the other hand, when the acts and conduct are attributed to agency management at a higher organizational level within the agency than the level of exclusive recognition. Further, the Council concluded that although the acts and conduct of agency management at a higher level of an agency's organization may provide the basis for finding a violation of any part of Section 19(a) of the Order by agency management, such conduct may not, standing alone, provide the basis for finding a separate violation of the Order by "agency management" at a lower organizational level of the agency where the unit of exclusive recognition exists. Accordingly, the Council concluded that where, as in the instant case, agency management at the departmental level directed the termination of environmental differential pay by the Activity, and the pay was terminated as a result of such direction, the conduct of the Agency could be considered violative of Section 19(a)(6) of the Order, but a separate finding of violation would not lie against the Activity based solely on its ministerial actions in implementing the higher agency direction, as the Activity had no choice but to so comply.

The Assistant Secretary, consistent with the guidelines established by the Council in its Decision, modified the order in A/SLMR No. 608 to require the Agency to cease and desist from the conduct found violative of the Order and to take certain affirmative actions, and he dismissed those portions of the complaint alleging violations of Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by the Activity.

SUPPLEMENTAL DECISION AND ORDER

On April 17, 1975, Administrative Law Judge Rhea M. Burrow issued his Report and Recommendations in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondents had engaged in certain unfair labor practices. In essence, the complaint in the instant case alleged that the Respondent Naval Air Rework Facility, Pensacola, Florida (Activity) and the Respondent Secretary of the Navy, Department of the Navy, Washington, D.C. (Agency) had violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) and Section 19(a)(1) of the Executive Order, respectively, based on the Agency's directing the Activity to terminate environmental differential pay for two classes of the latter's employees, which differential pay had been awarded in two separate arbitration cases processed under the negotiated agreement between the Complainant and the Activity, and on the latter's termination of such pay.

On January 26, 1976, in A/SLMR No. 608, the Assistant Secretary found that the Agency had violated Section 19(a)(1) of the Order by directing the Activity to terminate differential pay paid pursuant to the arbitration awards. He found also that the Activity violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by unilaterally terminating such payments. Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary ordered, among other things, that the Activity and Agency cease and desist from the conduct found violative of the Order, and that the Activity reimburse each of the affected employees all monies deducted or withheld from them by reason of the termination of the arbitration awards.

On July 16, 1976, the Federal Labor Relations Council (Council) accepted the Agency's petition for review (FLRC No. 76A-37) and granted its request for a stay of the Assistant Secretary's Decision and Order. On October 7, 1976, the Comptroller General, pursuant to a request of the Agency, ruled that the environmental differential pay awards involved herein were legal and might be reinstated, and "[e]mployees who lost the environmental differential after the awards were terminated...are entitled to backpay...as ordered by the Assistant Secretary of Labor." [56 Comptroller General 8 (1976)]. Thereafter, on October 14, 1976, the Complainant filed a motion with the Council seeking to dissolve the stay of the Assistant Secretary's remedial order insofar as it related to that part of the order which provided for the payment of monies to the employees involved. In view of the Comptroller General's decision, and without objection by the Agency, on October 27, 1976, the Council granted the Complainant's request, but continued the stay with respect to the remainder of the Assistant Secretary's Decision and Order. On November 22, 1976, the Agency notified the Assistant Secretary that it was directing the Commanding Officer of the Activity to reinstate retroactively the arbitration awards.

On May 4, 1977, the Council issued its Decision on Appeal in FLRC No. 76A-37, sustaining in part and setting aside in part the Assistant Secretary's Decision in A/SLMR No. 608, and remanding the case to the Assistant Secretary for appropriate action consistent with its Decision.

In its Decision, the Council enunciated certain principles which it deemed were applicable to the subject case. Among other things, the Council stated that when the Assistant Secretary finds acts or practices which constitute unfair labor practices by "agency management," as defined in Section 2(f) of the Order, the Order provides no basis for drawing artificial distinctions between organizational levels of such agency management so as to relieve them of the responsibility for their acts which would otherwise be violative of the Order. The Council found that no distinction exists between alleged violations of 19(a)(6), on the one hand, and alleged violations of the remainder of 19(a) on the other hand, when the acts and conduct are attributed to agency management at a higher organizational level within the agency than the level of exclusive recognition. That is, when acts and conduct constitute a refusal to confer, consult, or negotiate as required by the Order, such acts and conduct may properly be found violative of Section 19(a)(6) regardless of the organizational level of the agency management which committed the violative conduct. Further, the Council concluded that although the acts and conduct of agency management at a higher level of an agency's organization may provide the basis for finding a violation of any part of Section 19(a) of the Order by agency management, such conduct may not, standing alone, provide the basis for finding a separate violation of the Order by "agency management" at a lower organizational level of the agency where the unit of exclusive recognition exists.

In the instant case, the Council concluded that where agency management at the departmental level directed the termination of environmental differential pay by the Activity, and the pay was terminated as a result of such direction, the conduct of the Agency could be considered violative of Section 19(a)(6) of the Order, but a separate finding of violation would not lie against the Activity based solely on its ministerial actions in implementing the higher agency directions, as the Activity had no choice but to so comply.

Based upon the Decision on Appeal of the Council in FLRC No. 76A-37, remanding the case to the Assistant Secretary for appropriate action, and the findings contained therein, the order issued in A/SLMR No. 608 is modified consonant therewith.

REMEDY

Having found that the Respondent Agency had engaged in certain conduct prohibited in Section 19(a) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, I shall order that the Respondent Agency cease and desist therefrom and take certain specific affirmative actions, as set forth below, designed to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Order.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 6(b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, and Section 203.26(b) of the Regulations, the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations hereby orders that the Office of Civilian Manpower Management, Department of the Navy, Washington, D. C. shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Changing terms and conditions of employment at the Naval Air Rework Facility, Pensacola, Florida, by directing the Naval Air Rework Facility, Pensacola, Florida, to discontinue payment of environmental differential pay made pursuant to the arbitration awards of October 4, 1972, and October 25, 1972, rendered under the negotiated agreement between the Naval Air Rework Facility, Pensacola, Florida, and the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1960.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees represented by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1960, in the exercise of their rights assured by the Executive Order 11491, as amended.

2. Take the following affirmative actions in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of Executive Order 11491, as amended: 1/

(a) Post at its Washington, D. C. facility, and at the Naval Air Rework Facility, Pensacola, Florida, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix" on forms to be furnished by the Assistant Secretary for Labor-Management Relations. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Director, Office of Civilian Manpower Management, Department of the Navy, Washington, D. C., and shall be posted and maintained by him for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees of the Office of Civilian Manpower Management, Washington, D. C. and the Naval Air Rework Facility, Pensacola, Florida, are customarily posted. The Director, Office of Civilian Manpower Management shall take reasonable steps to insure that such notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(b) Pursuant to Section 203.27 of the Regulations, notify the Assistant Secretary, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this order as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that those portions of the complaint in Case No. 42-2529(CA) alleging violations of Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by the Naval Air Rework Facility, Pensacola, Florida, be, and they hereby are, dismissed.

Dated, Washington, D. C.
August 4, 1977

Francis X. Burkhardt, Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations

1/ As noted above, pursuant to the Comptroller General's ruling and the vacating of the Council's stay with respect to the Assistant Secretary's order in A/SLMR No. 608 in this regard, the payment of the environmental differential pay in question has been reinstated retroactively. Accordingly, I find it unnecessary to issue such an order in the instant proceeding.

NOTICE TO ALL EMPLOYEES

PURSUANT TO

A SUPPLEMENTAL DECISION AND ORDER OF THE

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF LABOR FOR LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS

and in order to effectuate the policies of

EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS IN THE FEDERAL SERVICE

We hereby notify the employees of the Naval Air Rework Facility, Pensacola, Florida, that:

WE WILL NOT change terms and conditions of employment at the Naval Air Rework Facility, Pensacola, Florida, by directing the Naval Air Rework Facility, Pensacola, Florida, to discontinue payment of environmental differential pay made pursuant to the arbitration awards of October 4, 1972, and October 25, 1972, rendered under the negotiated agreement between the Naval Air Rework Facility, Pensacola, Florida, and the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1960.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce employees represented by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1960, in the exercise of their rights assured by Executive Order 11491, as amended.

WE HAVE CAUSED TO BE MADE WHOLE all employees of the Naval Air Rework Facility, Pensacola, Florida, who were improperly denied environmental differential pay awarded pursuant to the arbitration awards of October 4, 1972, and October 25, 1972, rendered under the negotiated agreement between the Naval Air Rework Facility, Pensacola, Florida, and the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1960.

DECISION ON APPEAL FROM
ASSISTANT SECRETARY DECISION

Background of Case

This case arose when the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1960 (the union), filed an unfair labor practice complaint against the Department of the Navy (the Department) and the Naval Air Rework Facility, Pensacola, Florida (the activity). The complaint alleged that the Department and the activity had violated section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order[1/] when the Department directed the activity to terminate environmental differential pay for certain employees at the activity and the activity complied with that direction and terminated such pay. (The environmental differential pay had been awarded the employees in arbitration proceedings processed under the negotiated agreement between the union and the activity.) The Assistant Secretary found that the activity violated section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by its termination of the environmental differential pay and that the Department violated section 19(a)(1) by ordering the activity to do so. The Department appealed the Assistant Secretary's decision to the Council.

1/ Section 19(a) of the Order provides in pertinent part:

Sec. 19. Unfair labor practices. (a) Agency management shall not—

(1) interfere with, restrain, or coerce an employee in the exercise of the rights assured by this Order;

. . . . . .

(6) refuse to consult, confer, or negotiate with a labor organization as required by this Order.

The pertinent factual background of this case, as found by the Assistant Secretary, is as follows: The activity and the union had been parties to two negotiated agreements containing certain provisions authorizing additional pay for employees engaged in hazardous or "dirty" work at the activity's facility. Pursuant to the parties' agreement, two arbitrators issued awards directing the activity to pay environmental differential pay to two categories of its employees. The activity did not file exceptions to these awards with the Council but, after accepting both awards by letter, began paying the differentials to the affected employees —which payment continued for over a year. During an ensuing review of the Department's adherence to, and proper administration of, applicable pay laws, the Department's Office of Civilian Manpower Management (OCMM) questioned the propriety of these differential payments made by the activity pursuant to the two arbitration awards. Because it believed that the payments were improper under applicable laws and the Federal Personnel Manual (FPM), OCMM wrote to the Civil Service Commission (CSC) expressing its concern; noting (without specifying) that there were arbitration awards with respect to these matters; and setting forth its views as to why the employees should not be considered eligible for differential pay. In response to the Department's letter, the CSC advised OCMM that the latter's interpretation of the FPM with respect to the propriety of such differential pay was in accord with the intent and the requirements as delineated in the FPM Supplement concerning the payment of environmental differentials.2/

Thereafter, the OCMM Director notified the activity that OCMM could no longer condone the payment of these differentials for employees of the activity and directed the discontinuance of the differential payments as soon as possible. Although the activity's Commanding Officer disagreed with this conclusion, he was informed that he had no leeway in this matter. Subsequently, he provided the union with a copy of OCMM's correspondence, requested that the union study and evaluate the impact of the action on unit employees, and invited it to meet and confer on the matter prior to the activity's taking any action. Approximately 2 weeks later, having received no response from the union, the Commanding Officer of the activity wrote to the union's local president, citing the union's failure to forward

2/ With respect to the CSC advice to OCMM, in reaching his decision in the instant case the Assistant Secretary concluded that the Department's letter constituted merely a request for clarifying information regarding the CSC's interpretation of the FPM provisions concerning environmental differentials. He further concluded that the CSC response did not, and was not intended to, reflect a CSC policy interpretation that any particular arbitration award, based on the pertinent facts developed during a specific arbitration proceeding, was invalid under the pertinent provisions of the FPM. In this regard, the Assistant Secretary quoted from a subsequent letter from CSC to the union setting out the FPM procedures on environmental differentials and concluding, "we have made no determinations regarding a specific case nor do we contemplate doing so." [Emphasis in Assistant Secretary's decision.]

the matter to its National Office, and informing the union of the activity's intent to comply with OCMM's instructions by terminating the environmental differentials in question about 2 1/2 weeks later. The union did not respond to this letter and made no request or demand to meet and confer concerning this action. Thereafter the payment of environmental differentials, pursuant to the two arbitration awards, was terminated. The union then filed the complaint alleging that the Department and the activity violated section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order. The case was heard before an Administrative Law Judge (ALJ) who issued a Report and Recommendations finding that the activity and Department had engaged in certain unfair labor practice conduct. The Department filed exceptions to these findings.3/

The Assistant Secretary found, in pertinent part, that the Department violated section 19(a)(1) of the Order by directing the activity to terminate the environmental differential pay. He found further that the activity violated section 19(a)(1) and (6) by unilaterally terminating such payments.4/ As a remedy, the Assistant Secretary ordered that the activity and Department cease and desist from the unfair labor practice conduct, that the activity reimburse to each of the affected employees all monies deducted or withheld from them by reason of the termination of the environmental differential pay, and that the usual notice be posted at the activity.

The Department appealed the Assistant Secretary's decision to the Council, alleging that the decision presented major policy issues. The Council accepted the Department's petition for review, concluding that the decision of the Assistant Secretary raises certain major policy issues, namely:

> (1) whether the acts and conduct of agency management at a higher level of an agency's organization may provide the basis for finding

3/ In a footnote in its brief before the Assistant Secretary, the Department noted that it was considering, and had taken the preliminary steps to effectuate, an appeal to the Comptroller General with respect to the pay questions raised by the arbitration awards involved in the proceedings.

4/ The union's section 19(a)(6) complaint against the Department was dismissed by the Assistant Regional Director, and such dismissal was sustained by the Assistant Secretary, who found that:

> [T]he obligation to meet and confer under Section 11(a) of the Order applies only in the context of the exclusive bargaining relationship between the exclusive representative and the activity or agency which has accorded exclusive recognition. In this regard, . . . the [a]ctivity herein and not the [Department] accorded recognition to the exclusive representative and is a party to the negotiated agreement that was in effect at all times material herein.

a violation of section 19(a) of the Order by such agency management at that level of the agency and/or by other agency management at a lower organizational level of the agency where a unit of exclusive recognition exists; and

(2) whether it is consistent with the purposes of the Order for the Assistant Secretary, after finding that an unfair labor practice was committed, to fashion a remedial order which includes as part of a remedy a requirement for the payment of monies to employees, when the legality of such payment is in reasonable doubt.

The Council also granted the Department's request for a stay, having determined that the request met the criteria set forth in section 2411.47 (e)(2) of its rules (5 CFR 2411.47(e)(2)). The union filed a brief with the Council as provided in section 2411.16 of the Council's rules (5 CFR 2411.16). The Department did not file a brief.

Subsequent to Council acceptance, the Comptroller General ruled, in effect, that the environmental differential pay involved herein was legal and may be reinstated and, further, that employees who lost the environmental differential after such pay was terminated, were entitled to backpay for the period of termination (56 Comp. Gen. 8 (1976)). The union then requested that the Council vacate the stay insofar as it relates to that part of the Assistant Secretary's remedial order which provides for the payment of monies to the employees involved. The Council thereafter granted the union's request. With respect to the remainder of the Assistant Secretary's decision and order, the subject stay continued in effect.

1. The first major policy issue is:

Whether the acts and conduct of agency management at a higher level of an agency's organization may provide the basis for finding a violation of section 19(a) of the Order by such agency management at the level of the agency and/or by other agency management at a lower organizational level of the agency where a unit of exclusive recognition exists.

As noted above, the Assistant Secretary found that the Department violated section 19(a)(1) of the Order by directing the activity to terminate the environmental differential pay, and that the activity violated section 19 (a)(1) and (6) of the Order by unilaterally terminating such payments. As noted previously, the Assistant Secretary sustained the dismissal of the 19(a)(6) complaint against the Department because, in his view, the obligation to meet and confer under section 11(a) of the Order applies only in the context of the exclusive bargaining relationship between the exclusive representative and the activity or agency which has accorded exclusive recognition (see note 4). Further, the Assistant Secretary found that the activity had violated section 19(a)(6) by terminating the payments, notwithstanding the fact that the activity did so under direction by higher level management within the Department and did so only after the activity's Commanding Officer expressed disagreement with this higher level direction. In our view, these findings and conclusions by the Assistant Secretary are inconsistent with the purposes of the Order.

Section 19(a) of the Order provides a list of specified unfair labor practices in which "agency management" may not engage, including 19(a)(6) which prohibits "agency management" from refusing to consult, confer, or negotiate with a labor organization as required by the Order. The phrase "agency management" is specifically defined in section 2(f) of the Order:

"Agency management" means the agency head and all management officials, supervisors, and other representatives of management having authority to act for the agency on any matters relating to the implementation of the agency labor-management relations program established under this Order[.]

Accordingly, it is clear that the acts and conduct of any individual found to be agency management, as defined in section 2(f), may provide the basis for a section 19(a) violation. Of course, pursuant to section 6(a)(4) of the Order, it is the responsibility of the Assistant Secretary to decide whether specific acts and conduct constitute an unfair labor practice. Where he finds that an act or conduct constitutes an unfair labor practice and that the individuals who committed the act are agency management, there is no basis in the Order to draw artificial distinctions between organizational levels of such agency management so as to relieve them of the responsibility for their acts which would otherwise be violative of the Order.

We turn now to the question of whether a difference exists between alleged violations of 19(a)(6), on the one hand, and alleged violations of the remainder of 19(a) on the other, when the acts and conduct are attributed to agency management at a higher organizational level within the agency than the level of exclusive recognition. We see no distinction. That is, when acts and conduct constitute a refusal to confer, consult, or negotiate as required by the Order, such acts and conduct may properly be found violative of section 19(a)(6) regardless of the organizational level of the member of agency management who committed the violative conduct.

While it is true, as the Assistant Secretary noted, that the obligation to meet and confer under section 11(a) applies only in the context of the exclusive bargaining relationship between the exclusive representative and the activity or agency which has accorded exclusive recognition, contrary to the Assistant Secretary's conclusion, this does not mean that the acts and conduct of agency management from a higher level may not provide the basis of a 19(a)(6) finding when such acts and conduct constitute a violation of that section. The extent of the obligation to negotiate coincides with the unit of exclusive recognition. However, agency management above the level of exclusive recognition may engage in acts and conduct which are violative of that obligation where, for example, such management, as here, initiated the unlawful conduct involved. In other words, when the obligation to negotiate is breached by the acts and conduct of agency management, such a breach may properly provide the basis for a 19(a)(6) finding regardless of the location of that agency management in the agency chain of command.5/

Hence, in the facts of the instant case where agency management at the departmental level directed the termination of the environmental differential pay and such pay was terminated as a result of such direction, such acts and conduct could be found to be a violation of section 19(a)(6) of the Order. Further, where, as found by the Assistant Secretary in the facts of this case, agency management at the activity level complied with such direction from agency management at a higher level because the activity had no choice but to do so, a separate finding of a violation would not lie against the activity as such, solely on the basis of its ministerial actions in implementing the direction from higher agency authority.

Accordingly, with reference to the first major policy issue, we conclude that the acts and conduct of agency management at a higher level of an agency's organization may provide the basis for finding a violation of any part of section 19(a) of the Order by "agency management," but may not, standing alone, provide the basis for finding a separate violation by "agency management" at a lower organizational level of the agency where a unit of exclusive recognition exists.

Applying the foregoing principles to the facts and circumstances of this case, we conclude that "agency management" violated sections 19(a)(6) and 19(a)(1) of the Order. This conclusion is predicated solely upon the actions of the Department in initiating the conduct which the Assistant Secretary found violative of these sections of the Order, rather than upon the ministerial conduct of the activity in the circumstances of this case.

2. The second major policy issue is:

> Whether it is consistent with the purposes of the Order for the Assistant Secretary, after finding that an unfair labor practice was committed, to fashion a remedial order which includes as part of a remedy a requirement for the payment of monies to employees, when the legality of such payment is in reasonable doubt.

The Assistant Secretary's authority to prescribe remedial orders is set forth in section 6(b) of the Order:

5/ See United States Department of Agriculture and Agricultural Research Service, A/SLMR No. 519, FLRC No. 75A-65 (Dec. 24, 1975), Report No. 94.

> Sec. 6. Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations.
> . . . . . .
> (b) In any matters arising under paragraph (a) of this section, the Assistant Secretary may require an agency or a labor organization to cease and desist from violations of this Order and require it to take such affirmative action as he considers appropriate to effectuate the policies of this Order.

As the Council has previously stated, section 6(b) confers considerable discretion on the Assistant Secretary to fashion such remedial action as he considers appropriate to effectuate the policies of the Order.6/ However, such discretion is not without limitation. For example, as the Council stated in Department of the Army, Aberdeen Proving Ground, A/SLMR No. 412, FLRC No. 74A-46 (Mar. 20, 1975), Report No. 67, at 7 of its decision:

> [T]he Assistant Secretary, in fashioning a remedial order in unfair labor practice cases, may not require a party to engage in an illegal action. In this connection, the Assistant Secretary's remedial order must "effectuate the purposes of the Order." Obviously, it would be inconsistent with such purposes to require a party to violate applicable law, appropriate regulation or the Order. [Footnote omitted.]

When a remedy involves the possible payment of monies by an agency, the Assistant Secretary, consistent with his responsibilities under the Order, must be reasonably assured that such payment is proper pursuant to law and decisions of the Comptroller General. In most situations, established precedent will provide the Assistant Secretary with reasonable assurance as to the propriety of a monetary remedy and the Assistant Secretary can issue such a remedy without prior authorization.7/ Where the Assistant Secretary lacks reasonable assurance as to the propriety of a monetary payment remedy, he should, as the Council does,8/ obtain an advance

6/ See U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Philadelphia District, A/SLMR No. 673, FLRC No. 76A-94 (Feb. 25, 1977), Report No. 122, and cases cited therein.

7/ In this regard, such decision and remedy are subject to appeal to the Council, consistent with its requirements for review as set forth in section 2411.12 of the Council's rules of procedure. Headquarters, United States Army Aviation Systems Command, A/SLMR No. 168, 1 FLRC 472 [FLRC No. 72A-30 (July 25, 1973), Report No. 42].

8/ See, e.g., Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization and Federal Aviation Administration, Eastern Region (Wolf, Arbitrator), FLRC No. 76A-10 (Jan. 18, 1977), Report No. 121; Department of Transportation, Federal Aviation Administration, Montgomery RAPCON/Tower, Montgomery, decision from the Comptroller General as to the legality of such a payment.[9] In this way, the Assistant Secretary can eliminate the possibility of ordering a party to violate law or decision of the Comptroller General.

In this latter regard, if the legality of a monetary payment has already been referred to the Comptroller General, the Assistant Secretary must await the Comptroller General's ruling as to the legality of such payment before requiring a party to make the payment. He may do this either by awaiting the ruling of the Comptroller General before fashioning a remedial order directing such payment, or by making such requirement in a remedial order contingent upon the Comptroller General's subsequent ruling.[10] Of course, should the Comptroller General rule that the payment of monies at issue is not proper, the Assistant Secretary may not require such payment.[11]

9/ The Assistant Secretary has previously sought advance decisions from the Comptroller General with respect to such payment questions. For example, the Assistant Secretary requested a decision from the Comptroller General as to whether he has the authority to employ make-whole remedies under the Back Pay Act (5 U.S.C. § 5596 (1970)) or any other relevant statute when he finds violations of the Order involving the discriminatory failure to promote, to hire and/or to pay overtime. In response, the Comptroller General ruled that the Assistant Secretary does have such authority. 54 Comp. Gen. 760 (1975), at 762.

10/ In affirming the authority of the Assistant Secretary to employ make-whole remedies, the Comptroller General has stated:

> We also point out that although the A/SLMR may order an agency head to take remedial action with respect to an employee, including the payment of backpay, allowances and differentials and other substantial employment benefits, his order does not preclude the agency head or the authorized certifying officer of the agency from exercising their statutory rights under provisions of 31 U.S.C. 74 and 31 U.S.C. 82d in requesting an advance decision from this Office as to the propriety of such payments. Accordingly, an agency may properly delay the implementation of an order issued by the A/SLMR involving the expenditure of funds until it has obtained an advance decision from this Office. [54 Comp. Gen. 760 (1975), at 764.]

11/ In such situations, the Assistant Secretary may, pursuant to his section 6(b) authority, fashion alternative remedies—consistent with applicable law, appropriate regulation and the Order—as he deems appropriate.

In our view, the foregoing approach is consistent with the purposes of the Order, properly acknowledges the respective jurisdictions of the General Accounting Office and the Assistant Secretary in such circumstances, and avoids the enforcement difficulties which would otherwise arise if the Assistant Secretary's remedial order requiring the payment of monies were to become effective prior to the Comptroller General's resolution of the reasonable doubt concerning the legality of such payments.

In the instant case, while the Department had requested a decision from the Comptroller General as to the legality of the payment of monies prior to the Assistant Secretary's issuance of his decision and order, it is unclear from the record whether the Department apprised the Assistant Secretary that it had, in fact, requested a ruling from the Comptroller General.[12] In any event, subsequent to the issuance of the Assistant Secretary's decision, the Comptroller General ruled that the payment of monies directed by the Assistant Secretary's remedial order was legal. Accordingly, as there no longer exists a dispute concerning the legality of the payment of monies in this case, the Assistant Secretary's remedial order in this regard is hereby sustained.[13] However, in all future cases wherein the Assistant Secretary, after finding that an unfair labor practice was committed, fashions a remedial order which includes as part of a remedy a requirement for the payment of monies to employees, he must do so in a manner consistent with the purposes of the Order as set forth above.

Conclusion

In summary, with regard to the major policy issues presented herein, we conclude that:

12/ As previously indicated, supra note 3, in a footnote in its brief before the Assistant Secretary, the Department stated only that it "is considering, and has taken the preliminary steps required by the Department of Defense to effectuate, an appeal to the Comptroller General" with respect to the pay question.

13/ The Comptroller General's ruling, following the Assistant Secretary's issuance of his remedial order herein, that both arbitration awards are legal and may be reinstated, and that employees who lost the environmental differential after the awards were terminated are entitled to backpay as ordered by the Assistant Secretary, does not resolve the major policy issue as to the nature of the Assistant Secretary's responsibilities in fashioning remedial orders which are consistent with the purposes of the Order in circumstances such as those in the instant case. Accordingly, the foregoing ruling by the Comptroller General does not render this major policy issue moot, and the union's motion to dismiss the issue on that basis (dated Feb. 9, 1977) is therefore denied.

(1) The acts and conduct of agency management at a higher level of an agency's organization may provide the basis for finding a violation of any part of section 19(a) of the Order by "agency management," but may not, standing alone, provide the basis for finding a separate violation by "agency management" at a lower organizational level of the agency where a unit of exclusive recognition exists.

Applying the foregoing principles to the facts and circumstances of this case, we conclude that "agency management" violated sections 19(a)(6) and 19(a)(1) of the Order. This conclusion is predicated solely upon the actions of the Department in initiating the conduct which the Assistant Secretary found violative of these sections of the Order, rather than upon the ministerial conduct of the activity in the circumstances of this case.

(2) It is inconsistent with the purposes of the Order for the Assistant Secretary, after finding that an unfair labor practice was committed, to fashion a remedial order which includes as part of a remedy a requirement for the payment of monies to employees, when the legality of such payment is in reasonable doubt. Rather, such a remedial order either must await or be made contingent upon the Comptroller General's ruling as to the legality of the payment. In the instant case, as the Comptroller General has upheld the legality of the payments directed by the Assistant Secretary, the remedial order in this regard is therefore sustained.

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2411.18(b) of the Council's rules of procedure, we sustain in part and set aside in part the Assistant Secretary's decision and order and remand the case to him for appropriate action consistent with our decision herein.

By the Council.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR
ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS
SUMMARY OF DECISION ON ARBITRABILITY OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE,
GREENSBORO, NORTH CAROLINA
A/SLMR No. 874

This case involved an Application for Decision on Grievability or Arbitrability filed by the National Treasury Employees Union (NTEU). The NTEU contended that its request for advisory arbitration pursuant to Article 34 of the Multi-District Agreement between the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) and the NTEU was timely submitted. The IRS took the position that the Multi-District Agreement, which stated that, "The Union has twenty-one (21) days to invoke advisory arbitration on behalf of an employee," required that such a request be received in the office of the appropriate District Director of the IRS within 21 days from the date the employee was given notice of the decision to take an adverse action, while the NTEU claimed that the agreement language only required that the request for advisory arbitration be postmarked within 21 days of the effective date of the adverse action.

The Administrative Law Judge, after noting that the agreement was not specific as to when the 21-day period should begin to run, found that the most reasonable interpretation of the agreement language suggested that the date of decision (and notification), rather than the effective date of the proposed action, was controlling. Thus, he found that the relevant contractual language spoke in terms of a decision without mentioning the effective date of the action. Moreover, he found that there is no language in the agreement which supported the NTEU's contention, nor was there any evidence to support a policy or practice of giving the NTEU 21 days from the effective date of the adverse action to invoke advisory arbitration. He noted also that, while the parties agreed that the advisory arbitration of adverse actions was an alternative to the Civil Service Commission's adverse action appeals procedures, there was insufficient evidence to establish that the parties agreed that the contractual procedure would follow the Commission's procedure of having the appeal period run from the effective date of an adverse action. The Administrative Law Judge therefore concluded that the NTEU's request for advisory arbitration in the instant matter had been untimely submitted to the Activity.

The Assistant Secretary adopted the findings, conclusions and recommendation of the Administrative Law Judge.

DECISION ON ARBITRABILITY

On April 29, 1977, Administrative Law Judge Salvatore J. Arrigo issued his Recommended Decision in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Applicant's request to the Activity for advisory arbitration pursuant to the parties' negotiated agreement had been untimely submitted. Thereafter, the Applicant filed exceptions and a supporting brief with respect to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and the Activity filed an answering brief to the Applicant's exceptions.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and the entire record in the subject case, including the Applicant's exceptions and supporting brief, and the Activity's answering brief, I hereby adopt the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendation. 1/

1/ Although the Administrative Law Judge inadvertently failed to make a recommendation with respect to the disposition of the Application in the instant proceeding, it is clear in view of his findings and conclusions that he recommends that the matter be found not subject to the advisory arbitration procedures of the negotiated agreement as the Applicant's request for advisory arbitration was untimely filed.

FINDING

IT IS HEREBY FOUND that the Applicant's request to the Activity for advisory arbitration pursuant to the parties' negotiated advisory arbitration procedure was not timely submitted, and, therefore, the matter is not subject to advisory arbitration.

RECOMMENDED DECISION

Preliminary Statement

This matter arises from an Application for Decision on Grievability or Arbitrability under Section 13 of Executive Order 11491, as amended (hereinafter referred to as the Order).

The application was filed by National Treasury Employees Union (hereinafter referred to as the Union or the Applicant) challenging a determination by Internal Revenue Service, Greensboro, North Carolina (hereinafter referred to as the Activity) that a request by the Union to invoke arbitration was untimely under the terms of the parties existing collective bargaining agreement.

Pursuant to a Notice of Hearing issued by the Labor-Management Services Administration on November 30, 1976, a hearing on the application was held in Greensboro, North Carolina on February 2, 1977. At the hearing the parties were represented and afforded full opportunity to adduce evidence, call, examine and cross-examine witnesses and argue orally. Thereafter, briefs were filed by both parties.

Upon the entire record in this matter and from my evaluation of the evidence and observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following:

Findings and Conclusions

On February 19, 1975 Robert E. LeBaube, the Activity's District Director, notified employee Hattie Angel by letter that she was to be removed from employment effective close of business February 28, 1975. Pursuant to appropriate Civil Service regulations the letter, inter alia, informed Mrs. Angel that an appeal of this adverse action could be made to the Civil Service Commission at any time but not later than fifteen days from the effective date of her removal. By letter dated March 18, 1975, which was post-marked March 20 and received by the Activity on March 24, the Union notified the Activity that it was invoking advisory arbitration of the matter as provided by the parties agreement. In a letter dated March 26, 1975 District Director LeBaube rejected as untimely the request for arbitration. 1/ LeBaube based the rejection on Article 33, Section 4 of the parties

1/ Subsequent to LeBaube's issuing his decision on March 26, 1977, the Union brought the matter to the attention of Robert Hastings, the Activity's Chief of Union Relations Branch, Washington, D.C., and sought to have LeBaube's decision reversed. Hastings informed the Union that he would "see what he could do" in the matter. However, LeBaube's decision was never changed. In these circumstances I find that Hastings' comments had no effect upon LeBaube's March 26 decision on behalf of the Activity.

multi-district collective bargaining agreement (herein sometimes referred to as MDA-II). Article 33, Section 4 of MDA-II which was in effect at all times relevant hereto provides, in pertinent part:

> "A. An official who sustains the proposed charges against an employee in an adverse action will set forth his findings with respect to each charge and specification against the employee in his notice of decision.
> "B. 1. An employee against whom charges are sustained may appeal the decision on any basis allowed by applicable laws and regulations.
> 2. The Union has twenty-one (21) days to invoke advisory arbitration on behalf of an employee.
> "C. An employee dissatisfied with the decision may, with the concurrence of the Union, appeal pursuant to Article 34, except that the following matters will not be subject to arbitration...." 2/

Thus, the Activity takes the position that the terms of the agreement require that a request for advisory arbitration must be received by the Activity within twenty-one days from the time the employee was given notice of the decision to take an adverse action. The Applicant contends that the request for advisory arbitration was timely filed since the request was postmarked within 21 days from the effective date of the adverse action. 3/ According to the Applicant, the provision for advisory arbitration was meant to be a substitute for an appeal to the Civil Service Commission which could be filed within fifteen days from the effective date of the adverse action.

2/ Article 34 of the agreement provides for advisory arbitration of adverse actions.

3/ The parties also disagree as to whether the date of receipt or postmark controls when computing the number of days under this provison. However, I find it unnecesary to reach this issue.

MDA-II, signed in May 1974, sets forth in separate articles, two distinct procedures to deal with disciplinary and adverse actions. Disciplinary actions - oral admonishments confirmed in writing, a written reprimand, or a suspension of 30 days or less - are treated in Article 32 of the agreement. Under that article an Activity's final decision to impose a disciplinary action may generally be challenged by recourse to the parties negotiated four step grievance procedure. The Activity's adverse decision at step four is then generally appealable to binding arbitration if the Union, within twenty-one days of the decision, notifies the Activity of its desire to appeal. 4/

Adverse action appeal procedures are contained in Article 34 of the agreement, the relevant portion of which is contained in Section 4, as set forth above. 5/ While Section 4.B.2. of that Article indicates the Union has twenty-one days to invoke advisory arbitration, it does not specify whether the time begins to run from the date of the Agency's decision or the effective date of the action. Indeed, parties agree that during the negotiations which culminated in MDA-II, signed May 1974, there were no discussions pertaining to the language in question. Rather, the bargaining history for that section of the agreement had its origin in the negotiations for MDA-I which became effective in June 1972. 6/

MDA-I placed both disciplinary and adverse actions under the same article. Thus, with regard to adverse action situations, Section 4 of Article 31 provides as follows:

> "A. An official who sustains the proposed charges against an employee in an adverse action will set forth

4/ Under this grievance procedure all unfavorable decisions rendered at step four may be appealed to arbitration if the appeal is made within twenty-one days of the Activity's decision.

5/ Adverse actions are defined in the agreement and include reductions in grade or pay, removals and suspension for more than thirty days.

6/ The parties also agree that the relevant portions of MDA-II contain no change in meaning from that found in MDA-I and merely reflects an attempt to present the subject matter in a more cogent manner.

his findings with respect to each charge and specification against the employee in his notice of decision.

"B An employee against whom charges are sustained may appeal the decision on any basis allowed by applicable laws and regulations.

"C. An employee dissatisfied with the decision may with the concurrence of the Union, appeal pursuant to Article 32, except that the following matters will not be suject to arbitration...." 7/

Section 6 of Article 31 sets forth the procedure to challenge an unfavorable Activity decision in a disciplinary action situation and provides:

"A. An employee dissatisfied with the Employer's decision on a disciplinary matter as defined in Section 1 of this Article may file a grievance pursuant to Article 33 of this Agreement.

"B. Adverse decision rendered in Step 4 of the grievance procedure may be appealed to arbitration as provided in Article 34 under the following conditions;

1. The Union notifies the Office of the District Director by certified mail with twenty-one (21) days of the decision of its desire to appeal...."

While no specific time in which to appeal an adverse action is mentioned in MDA-I, the parties acknowledge that the twenty-one days set out in Article 31 Section 6 above was applicable to such situations. However, nowhere does the agreement expressly state whether the twenty-one days will begin to run from the date of decision or effective date of the action.

7/ Article 32 of MDA-I contains the advisory arbitration procedures for adverse actions.

During the negotiations for MDA-I the parties realized that the advisory arbitration of adverse actions would be a substitute for an appeal to the Civil Service Commission. Since the appeal right to the Commission vests in the individual through statute and may not be bargained away by the Union, only the Union was given the right to invoke advisory arbitration. In return, the Union gave the Activity its assurance that it would represent the individual employee in either an appeal to the Commission or in advisory arbitration, but not both. Since the Union's national headquarters in Washington would in each case determine whether advisory arbitration would be invoked, the Union desired and was given six days for mailing purposes beyond the fifteen days for appeal provided in the Federal Personnel Manual for adverse action appeals. Accordingly, the parties agreed that, when an employee received the Activity's final decision to impose an adverse action, the employee received two copies of the decision, the second containing the notation "You may at your option give this copy to the Union." Further, the Activity wished to have a consistant twenty-one day appeal period in the agreement for ease of administration. Thus, under the agreement there would be a twenty-one days to request arbitration in disciplinary action situations, grievance matters and adverse actions. However, no specific mention was made as to whether the times being considered in adverse actions were to be from date of adverse decision or effective date of action.

Although the agreements do not specifically state whether the twenty-one days will begin to run from the date of the decision or the effective date of the adverse action, I find that the most reasonable interpretation of the contract language suggests that the date of decision (and notification) is controlling. The relevant contract language contains no mention of the effective date of the action. However, Article 33, Section 4 of MDA-II, above, consistantly refers to the "decision" as being the critical act against which the employee may appeal. While only the Union may invoke binding arbitration of the Activity's Step 4 grievance decisions which are unfavorable to employees, that appeal must be made within twenty-one days of the Activity's Step 4 decision. Thus, the agreement consistantly reflects that twenty-one days from the Activity's decision which is unfavorable to the employee is the time within which action must be taken. Moreover, there is no language in the agreement which supports the Union's contention nor is there any evidence to support a policy or practice of giving the Union twenty-one days from the effective date of the adverse action to invoke advisory arbitration.

Further, while a "substitute" for the Civil Service Commission's adverse action appeals procedure was provided by the agreement, the evidence is insufficient to establish that the parties agreed that the advisory arbitration procedure would exactly duplicate the time allowed to pursue an appeal under the Commission's procedures (plus six days). Rather, although fifteen days was a point of reference in establishing the time allowed the Union to invoke advisory arbitration, the language ultimately decided on by the parties indicates that, consistant with other appeals procedures in the agreement, twenty-one days from the Activity's decision to impose an adverse action was the controlling period.

Accordingly, in all the circumstances herein I find and conclude that under the terms of the parties agreement, the Union's request to arbitrate the adverse action was untimely.

SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER CLARIFYING UNIT
OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AGENCY
A/SLMR No. 875

This case involved a petition for clarification of unit (CU) filed by the Activity seeking clarification of the status of one employee, an Environmental Protection Specialist, GS-14, who serves as a Program Manager in the Technical Assistance Branch of the Activity's Office of Solid Waste Management Programs. The Activity took the position that the incumbent was a supervisor and, therefore, should be excluded from the existing unit. The exclusive representative, the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3331, contended that the incumbent was not a supervisor within the meaning of Section 2(c) of the Order.

The Assistant Secretary found that the employee in the disputed classification was not a supervisor within the meaning of the Order. In this connection, the record revealed that work assignments made by the Program Manager to the upward mobility employee assigned to his program were transmitted from higher authority through the Program Manager, were routine in nature and did not require the use of independent judgement. Moreover, while the Activity contended that the Program Manager had the authority to approve leave and travel requests, make recommendations for awards and resolve minor employee complaints, there was no evidence that the Program Manager had ever exercised this authority. Nor was there evidence that he had exercised independent judgment on the one occasion he was instructed to complete a performance evaluation, or that his recommendation with regard to hiring was effective. Under these circumstances, the Assistant Secretary found that the incumbent was not a supervisor within the meaning of the Order and clarified the existing exclusively recognized unit consistent with his findings.

DECISION AND ORDER CLARIFYING UNIT

Upon a petition duly filed under Section 6 of Executive Order 11491, as amended, a hearing was held before Hearing Officer C. Duffy Raap. The Hearing Officer's rulings made at the hearing are free from prejudicial error and are hereby affirmed.

Upon the entire record in this case, including the brief filed by the labor organization, the Assistant Secretary finds: 1/

The Activity-Petitioner, the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), seeks to clarify the status of an Environmental Protection Specialist, GS-028-14, who is employed in the Technical Assistance Branch of the Office of Solid Waste Management Programs. The EPA contends that the Environmental Protection Specialist is a supervisor within the meaning of Section 2(c) of the Order. The American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3331, which is the exclusive representative of certain EPA Headquarters employees, contends that the employee in question is not a supervisor and is, therefore, eligible for inclusion within its exclusively recognized unit.

The Office of Solid Waste Management Programs, a component of the EPA, consists of several divisions including the Resource Recovery Division which is responsible for implementing a national program to recover energy and materials from solid waste streams and to reduce the generation of solid wastes. Within this Division is the Technical Assistance Branch which provides technical assistance, consultation, advice, studies, analyses and information to public and private organizations, and to agencies and individuals, regarding the implementation of resource recovery systems. The Technical Assistance Branch is headed by a Branch Chief who supervises the local government assistance program as well as the state and federal government assistance program, each of which is headed by a Program Manager. The position in question, the Environmental Protection Specialist, GS-028-14, is the Program Manager for the state and federal government assistance program.

The Program Manager advises state and federal governments about their resource recovery programs, fulfills the responsibilities of the Office of Solid Waste Management Programs relative to the implementation of the Resource Recovery Facilities Guideline in accordance with Executive Order 11752, and provides guidance to EPA regional offices on resource recovery issues. Working with the Program Manager is an Environmental Protection Specialist, GS-301-5, who is in an upward mobility training program. 2/ This latter employee has several ongoing projects in other branches of the Activity and, in this connection, may consult with the other branch chiefs. However, the majority of her work is centered in the state and federal government assistance program. Work assignments to this employee are channeled from the Branch Chief through the Program Manager who generally reviews the work before submitting it to the Branch Chief.

The record reveals that on one occasion the Program Manager was given a certificate of eligibles by the Branch Chief and was instructed to interview those applicants he felt were qualified for a vacant position in the state and federal government assistance program. Although the Program Manager recommended one applicant, the Branch Chief subsequently interviewed that applicant and another, neither of whom was hired. The record reveals also that the one time, during the Branch Chief's absence, that the Program Manager was instructed by the Deputy Division Director to complete a quarterly performance evaluation for the upward mobility employee in accordance with her training program requirements, he merely copied from the quarterly evaluation which had been filled out previously by the Branch Chief. Further, although the Activity contends that the Program Manager has the authority to approve leave and travel requests, make recommendations for awards and resolve minor employee complaints, the record contains no evidence that he has ever exercised such authority.

Based on the foregoing, I find that the Program Manager in the Technical Assistance Branch who is classified as an Environmental Protection Specialist, GS-028-14, is not a supervisor within the meaning of the 1/ A request by the Activity-Petitioner for an extension of time in which to file a post-hearing brief was untimely filed.

2/ A GS-9 Environmental Protection Specialist position in the state and federal government assistance program has been unoccupied since shortly after the Program Manager assumed his position in August 1976.

Order. Thus, the evidence establishes with respect to assigning work that such work assignments as are made by the Program Manager to the employee in the upward mobility program are transmitted by the Branch Chief through the Program Manager, and that the assignment of work is routine in nature and does not require the exercise of independent judgement. Moreover, the Program Manager does not regularly evaluate employees and did not exercise independent judgement on the one occasion he completed a performance evaluation. Further, the record reveals he does not have the authority to hire, promote, transfer, suspend, lay off or recall or discipline employees. Nor is there evidence that his recommendations with respect to such matters as hiring are effective or that he approves leave or travel requests, makes recommendations for awards or resolves grievances or minor employee complaints. Under all of these circumstances, I find that the Environmental Protection Specialist, GS-028-14, is not a supervisor within the meaning of Section 2(c) of the Order, and that the employee in this classification should be included in the existing exclusively recognized unit.

ORDER

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the unit sought to be clarified herein, for which the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3331, was certified as exclusive representative on October 27, 1972, be, and it hereby is, clarified by including in said unit the position of Environmental Protection Specialist, GS-028-14, the Program Manager for the state and federal government assistance program.

BUREAU OF FIELD OPERATIONS,

This case involved a petition for consolidation of units filed by the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1395, AFL-CIO (AFGE) seeking to consolidate two units for which it is the current exclusive representative -- the employees of the Bureau of Field Operations, Social Security Administration, Region V-A, assigned to the Champaign, Illinois, Social Security District Office and the employees of the Bureau of Field Operations, Social Security Administration, Region V-A, assigned to all District Offices, Branch Offices, Teleservice Centers and the Reconciliation and Analysis Unit, Cook County, Illinois. The Activity contends that the consolidated unit requested by the AFGE would not be appropriate because the employees in the existing two units do not share a community of interest and, because of the geographical separation of the employees, the consolidated unit would not promote efficiency of operations and effective labor-management relations dealings.

The Assistant Secretary noted that in view of the clear policy guidelines in the consolidation of units area formulated by the Federal Labor Relations Council (Council), there has been established, in effect, a presumption favoring the appropriateness of proposed consolidated units. In the context of these policy considerations, the Assistant Secretary found that the petitioned for unit is appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under the Order. He noted that all employees in the unit sought share a common mission, common overall supervision, uniform job classifications, essentially common working conditions and uniform personnel and labor relations practices. Under these circumstances, the Assistant Secretary found that the employees in the proposed consolidated unit shared a clear and identifiable community of interest. Furthermore, he found that as all employees of the Region were serviced by the same personnel office, and that the Regional Representative has been delegated the ultimate authority for labor relations matters, the proposed consolidated unit would promote effective dealings. Moreover, noting that the Regional Representative coordinates the operation of the components within the proposed consolidated unit, as well as labor relations, grievance and personnel matters, the Assistant Secretary found that the proposed consolidated unit would promote the efficiency of the agency's operations. Finally, the Assistant Secretary found that the petitioned for consolidated unit, which provided for bargaining in a single, rather than in the existing two bargaining units, would promote a more comprehensive bargaining unit structure and reduce fragmentation.

Upon a petition duly filed under Section 6 of Executive Order 11491, as amended, a hearing was held before Hearing Officer James J. Zouvas. The Hearing Officer's rulings made at the hearing are free from prejudicial error and are hereby affirmed.

The Petitioner, American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1395, AFL-CIO, herein called AFGE, seeks to consolidate two units for which it is the current exclusive representative 2/ into a consolidated unit consisting of all employees in the Champaign, Illinois, Social Security District Office, and all District Office and Branch Office employees, Teleservice Center Employees, and Reconciliation and Analysis Unit employees of the Bureau of Field Operations, Social Security Administration Region V-A, whose office or parent office is located in Cook County, Illinois, excluding all management officials, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, confidential employees and supervisors as defined in Executive Order 11491, as amended. The Activity contends that the consolidated unit requested by the AFGE would not be appropriate because the employees in the existing two units do not share a community of interest and, because of the geographical separation of the employees, the consolidated unit would not promote efficiency of agency operations and effective dealings.

The record discloses that Region V-A of the Bureau of Field Operations is under the direction of a Regional Representative. 3/ Within its Chicago, Illinois, Regional Office there are three branches: Analysis and Appraisal, Management, and Operations. Each branch is headed by a Staff Officer, who reports to the Regional Representative. Region V-A is further divided into Area Offices in Minnesota, Wisconsin, Indiana, and three in Illinois, each headed by an Area Director, who reports directly to the Regional Representative. The Area Offices are further divided into District Offices, Branch Offices, and Teleservice Centers. The managers of these offices report to their respective Area Director. However, the record reveals that District Office Managers have some degree of autonomy in operating their offices consistent with the guidelines established by the Activity's National Office. Although the District Managers have been delegated the authority to bargain with labor organizations and handle grievances, they are responsible directly to the Regional Representative, who has the ultimate authority in these matters. The AFGE, on the other hand, provides a steward or an individual with similar authority in each district office throughout the Region who represents the AFGE in contract negotiations and grievances, and who meets on a monthly basis with his respective District Manager to discuss problems. The stewards are under the supervision of the AFGE's Vice President, who may be called in to handle any problem areas.

The Cook County unit consists of 9 District Offices and 2 Teleservice Centers in Chicago within Area Four, and 4 District Offices in Cook County within Area Five. The Champaign unit is a single District Office within Area Six.

The mission of the Activity is to accept and process applications for benefits under the Retirement and Survivors Insurance Program, the Disability Program, the Health Insurance Program and the Supplemental Security Income Program.

The record reveals that all district offices, branch offices and teleservice centers contain employees with similar job classifications, performing similar work, and that all employees throughout the Region enjoy common overall supervision, uniform personnel policies and practices and essentially similar working conditions, which may vary from area to area depending upon the case load and the clients serviced.

In a recent decision, I found that in view of the clear policy guidelines in the consolidation of units area formulated by the Federal Labor Relations Council, there has been established, in effect, a presumption favoring the appropriateness of proposed consolidated units. 4/

1/ The name of the Activity appears as amended at the hearing.

2/ The AFGE was recognized on December 30, 1969, as the exclusive bargaining representative in a unit of all District Office and Branch Office employees, Teleservice Center employees and Reconciliation and Analysis Unit employees of the Bureau of Field Operations, Social Security Administration, Region V-A, whose office or parent office is located in Cook County, Illinois, and was certified as the exclusive representative in a unit of all nonsupervisory employees in the Champaign, Illinois Social Security District Office on September 9, 1971.

3/ The Regional Representative is also known as the Assistant Regional Commissioner for Field Operations.

4/ Education Division, Department of Health, Education and Welfare, Washington, D.C., A/SLMR No. 822.

Given these circumstances, I find that the proposed consolidated unit is appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under Executive Order 11491, as amended. Thus, as noted above, all the employees in the proposed consolidated unit share a common mission, common overall supervision, uniform job classifications, essentially common working conditions and uniform personnel and labor relations practices. Based on these considerations, I find that the employees in the proposed consolidated unit share a clear and identifiable community of interest. Further, as all employees of the Region are serviced by the same personnel office, and the Regional Representative has been delegated the ultimate authority for labor relations matters, I find that the proposed consolidated unit will promote effective dealings. Moreover, noting that the Regional Representative coordinates the operations of the components within the proposed consolidated unit, as well as labor relations, grievance and personnel matters, I find that the proposed consolidated unit will promote the efficiency of the agency's operations. Finally, I find that the proposed consolidated unit, which provides for bargaining in a single unit, rather than in the existing two bargaining units, will promote more comprehensive bargaining and reduce fragmentation.

Accordingly, I find that the following employees constitute a unit appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under Executive Order 11491, as amended:

> All employees of the Bureau of Field Operations, Social Security Administration, Region V-A, assigned to the Champaign, Illinois, Social Security District Office, and all employees assigned to District Offices, Branch Offices, Teleservice Centers, and the Reconciliation and Analysis Unit, Cook County, Illinois, excluding all management officials, professional employees, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, confidential employees and supervisors as defined in Executive Order 11491, as amended. 5/

Under the Order, absent the expression of the affected employees' desire for an election, an agency may accord exclusive recognition to a labor organization without an election where the appropriate unit, as above, has been established through the consolidation of existing exclusively recognized units represented by that organization and the parties have bilaterally agreed to consolidation without an election. In the instant case, neither party requested an election to determine whether or not the employees desire to be represented in the proposed consolidated unit by the AFGE. Therefore, I shall order that the appropriate Area Administrator request that the Activity post copies of a Notice to Employees, in places where notices are normally posted affecting employees in the proposed consolidated unit, which states that if, within ten days from the date of posting of such notice, 30 percent or more of the employees in the proposed consolidated unit have notified the Area Administrator in writing that they desire the Assistant Secretary to hold an election on the issue of the proposed consolidation, such an election will be supervised by the Area Administrator.

5/ At the hearing, the parties stipulated that there are no professional employees in the currently existing bargaining units sought to be consolidated herein.

If 30 percent or more of the employees in the proposed consolidated unit do not seek an election, a certification will be issued by the Area Administrator to the AFGE for the consolidated unit which I find to be appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition.

DIRECTION OF ELECTION

The Activity shall post, as soon as possible, copies of a Notice to Employees, which shall be furnished by the appropriate Area Administrator, in places where notices are normally posted affecting the employees in the consolidated unit found appropriate. Such notice shall conform in all respects to the requirements of Section 202.2(h)(4) of the Assistant Secretary's Regulations. If, within ten days from the date of posting of such notice, 30 percent or more of the employees in the consolidated unit found appropriate above have notified the Area Administrator in writing that they desire to hold an election on the issue of the proposed consolidation, an election by secret ballot shall be conducted among the employees in the unit found appropriate, as early as possible, but not later than 60 days from the date the posting period for the Notice to Employees is completed. The appropriate Area Administrator shall supervise the election, subject to the Assistant Secretary's Regulations. Eligible to vote are those in the unit who were employed during the payroll period immediately preceding the date below, including employees who did not work during the period because they were out ill, or on vacation or on furlough, including those in the military service who appear in person at the polls. Ineligible to vote are employees who have quit or were discharged for cause since the designated payroll period and who have not been rehired or reinstated before the election date. Those eligible shall vote whether they desire to be represented for the purpose of exclusive recognition in the proposed consolidated unit by the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1395, AFL-CIO, or remain in their existing recognized units represented by the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1395, AFL-CIO.

SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER CLARIFYING UNIT
OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY,
MILITARY TRAFFIC MANAGEMENT COMMAND,
MILITARY OCEAN TERMINAL, SUNNY POINT
A/SLMR No. 877

This case involved a petition for clarification of unit (CU) filed by the Activity-Petitioner (Activity) seeking to clarify whether or not after a 1968 reorganization at the Activity, employees in the Activity's Communications Division, who were administratively transferred intact to the U.S. Army Communications Command (USACC, Sunny Point), are still included within the exclusively recognized unit represented by the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1708, AFL-CIO (AFGE). In this regard, the Activity contended, and all of the parties concurred, that some 15 USACC, Sunny Point, employees are included in the AFGE's exclusively recognized unit and that the USACC, Sunny Point, the gaining employer entity, is a successor employer and joint employer of said unit which the parties asserted is appropriate under Section 10(b) of the Order.

The Assistant Secretary concluded that as the 1968 reorganization involved the administrative transfer to the gaining employer, the USACC, Sunny Point, of only a portion of the employees in the existing exclusively recognized unit, no "successorship" relationship had been established by the reorganization. Rather, the Assistant Secretary found that the USACC, Sunny Point, employees remained within the AFGE's existing exclusively recognized unit subsequent to the administrative transfer to the Communications Division of the Activity to the USACC, Sunny Point. In this regard, it was noted that, subsequent to the reorganization, the employees of the USACC, Sunny Point, continued to share a community of interest with other employees located at the Activity in that they continued to perform the same job functions in the same location with no substantial change in their working conditions, immediate supervision and job contacts or personnel policies.

The Assistant Secretary found further that the retention of the USACC, Sunny Point, employees in the AFGE's exclusively recognized unit would promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. With regard to effective dealings, he found that the Activity's Civilian Personnel Office (CPO) also services the USACC, Sunny Point, employees and is responsible for the labor relations program of all civilian employees it services, including the negotiation of agreements with all recognized labor organizations physically located at the Activity and that, subsequent to the reorganization, there continued to be stable labor-management relations between the Activity and the AFGE, with the AFGE being treated as the exclusive representative of the USACC, Sunny Point, employees. With respect to efficiency of agency operations, the Assistant Secretary noted that the continued inclusion of the USACC, Sunny Point, employees in the AFGE's exclusively recognized unit would prevent fragmentation of the existing unit, all of whose employees are serviced by the same CPO.

Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary ordered that the unit represented exclusively by the AFGE be clarified consistent with his findings.

DECISION AND ORDER CLARIFYING UNIT

Upon a petition duly filed under Section 6 of Executive Order 11491, as amended, a hearing was held before Hearing Officer Renee B. Rux. The Hearing Officer's rulings made at the hearing are free from prejudicial error and are hereby affirmed.

Upon the entire record in this case, the Assistant Secretary finds:

The Activity-Petitioner, which is located at Southport, North Carolina, and which hereinafter is called the Activity, filed a petition for clarification of unit (CU) seeking to clarify whether or not after a 1968 reorganization at the Activity, employees in the Activity's Communications Division, who were administratively transferred intact to the U.S. Army Communications Command, hereinafter called the USACC, Sunny Point, are still included within the exclusively recognized unit represented by the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1708, AFL-CIO, hereinafter called AFGE. 2/ In this regard, the Activity contends that some 15 USACC, Sunny Point (Communications Division) employees are included in the exclusively recognized unit represented by the AFGE and that the USACC, Sunny Point, the gaining employer entity, is a successor employer and joint employer of said unit, which unit, it is asserted, is appropriate under Section 10(b) of the Order. All of the parties concur in the position of the Activity and desire to amend the recognition of said unit to reflect a multi-employer unit consisting of employees of the Activity and the USACC, Sunny Point.

The mission of the Activity is to plan, coordinate and accomplish the transhipment of ammunition and other dangerous cargoes to and from overseas areas. 3/ Prior to the 1968 reorganization, communications services were provided for the Activity through an internal subordinate organization under the Activity's Director of Services. This subordinate organization, the Communications Division, provided communications, electronics and photographic services for the Activity. The Communications Division was composed of some 9 Wage Grade and General Schedule employees in the positions of telephone operators, communications specialists and a photographer. On October 9, 1968, pursuant to a reorganization, the employees assigned to the Activity's Communications Division were transferred intact to the USACC, Sunny Point, a new organization, which used the same grounds and facilities as were used before the reorganization. The effect of the reorganization was that the Communications Division became a tenant organization located at the Activity.

The record reveals that while most conditions of employment remained the same for the USACC, Sunny Point, employees subsequent to the reorganization, certain changes were effected. Thus, personnel actions concerning pay and promotions were transferred to the USACC, Fort Ritchie, Maryland; criteria and guidelines for rating and ranking employees were developed and processed by the USACC, Fort Huachuca, Arizona; agency grievances were handled through the USACC channels instead of those of the Activity; and a separate reduction in force area was established for the USACC, Sunny Point,

2/ The AFGE was granted exclusive recognition in 1962. The Activity and the AFGE agree that the 1964 negotiated agreement description of the (Continued)

2/ unit which was "all employees in the recognized terminal-wide unit, except those positions specifically excluded by the ineligible list," accurately reflects the exclusively recognized unit. The AFGE's current negotiated agreement with the Activity describes the unit as "all employees of Military Ocean Terminal, Sunny Point, excluding management officials, supervisors, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity and guards".

3/ The Activity employs 89 Wage Grade and 144 General Scheule employees, (42 of whom are guards and are represented by the International Brotherhood of Police Officers). The USACC, Sunny Point, employs 2 Wage Grade and 17 General Schedule employees.

employees. However, the record also reveals that after the reorganization the communications employees continued to perform the same job functions in the same location with no substantial change in their working conditions, immediate supervision and job contacts or personnel policies. Further, the USACC, Sunny Point, as a tenant organization, is serviced by the Activity's Civilian Personnel Office (CPO) 4/ which is responsible for labor relations for all of the civilians located at the Activity. Thus, the record reflects that the CPO's responsibilities"... would include all dealings with whatever Unions are recognized, negotiation of contracts, responsibility for negotiating, consulting and conferring with the proper people on any personnel matter that affects working conditions of employees." 5/ In this regard, it was noted that the CPO is responsible for employee recruiting for the USACC, Sunny Point, vacancies, classifying the USACC, Sunny Point, positions up to General Schedule 12 and counselling the USACC, Sunny Point, employees on such matters as sick leave and adverse actions. It was noted also that the USACC, Sunny Point, employees are covered under the same merit promotion plan as the employees of the Activity and are considered for job vacancies at the Activity, that the USACC, Sunny Point, employees have the same leave and adverse action policies as Activity employees; and that the USACC, Sunny Point, employees have taken positions at the Activity and vice versa.

The record reflects that the Activity has continued to recognize the AFGE as representing the USACC, Sunny Point, employees. In this regard, the Activity's CPO has permitted a USACC, Sunny Point, employee to be represented by the AFGE regarding a downgrade procedure, and dues withholdings for the AFGE members of the USACC, Sunny Point, have continued up to the present time. In addition, an AFGE steward has been appointed for the USACC, Sunny Point, employees and has been recognized by the Activity.

Under the circumstances herein, and noting particularly that the evidence establishes that the 1968 reorganization involved the administrative transfer to the gaining employer, the USACC, Sunny Point, of only a portion of the employees in the existing exclusively recognized unit, I find that no "successorship" relationship has been established by the reorganization. 6/ Rather, I find that, based on the circumstances herein, the USACC, Sunny Point, employees have remained within the AFGE's existing exclusively recognized unit after the administrative transfer of the Communications Division of the Activity to the USACC, Sunny Point. Thus, the evidence establishes that after the reorganization the communications employees continued to perform the same job functions in the same location with no substantial change in their working conditions, immediate supervision and job contacts or personnel policies as before the reorganization. Nor do I consider the fact that the USACC, Sunny Point, employees are covered by different payroll and agency grievance procedures or experienced minor changes involving personnel policies as a consequence of the reorganization as materially affecting the employees continued community of interest with other employees located at the Activity, in view of the continuity of most of the employment conditions applicable to these employees and their continued close working relationship with the Activity's employees. Under these circumstances, I find that the communications employees continue, subsequent to the reorganization, to share a community of interest with other employees located at the Activity, who are represented by the AFGE.

Moreover, I find that the retention of the communications employees in the AFGE's exclusively recognized unit will promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. With regard to effective dealings, the evidence establishes that the Activity's CPO office also services the USACC, Sunny Point, employees and is responsible for the labor relations program as it applies to all civilian employees it services, including the negotiation of agreements with all recognized labor organizations physically located at the Activity. In this connection, the record reflects that subsequent to the reorganization there continued to be stable labor-management relations between the Activity and the AFGE, with the AFGE being treated as the exclusive representative of the USACC, Sunny Point, employees. With respect to efficiency of agency operations, it is noted that the continued inclusion of the USACC, Sunny Point, employees in the AFGE's exclusively recognized unit will prevent fragmentation of the existing unit, all of whose employees are serviced by the same CPO. Accordingly, I find that the communications employees of the USACC, Sunny Point, have remained within the AFGE's existing exclusively recognized unit subsequent to the 1968 reorganization. 7/

PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

PROFESSIONAL AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS ORGANIZATION, MEBA, AFL-CIO
A/SLMR No. 878

This case involves an unfair labor practice complaint filed by Taso Peter Anthan (Complainant) alleging that the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization, MEBA, AFL-CIO, (Respondent) violated Section 19(b)(1) and (3) of the Order by certain coercive acts taken by agents of the Respondent against the Complainant while he was engaged in his air traffic control duties and was exercising his rights assured by Section 1(a) of the Order. Specifically, the Complainant contended that on June 25, 1975, agents of the Respondent failed to cooperate with him in carrying out his air traffic control duties and took specific action which impeded his work performance. Further, the Complainant contended that on June 29, 1975, he was improperly threatened by the Respondent's Facility Representative.

The Administrative Law Judge concluded that both the Respondent and its Local 352 had violated Section 19(b)(1) and (3) of the Order. In reaching this determination, the Administrative Law Judge found, among other things, that: (1) although Local 352 was not specifically named as a co-Respondent in the complaint, the allegations of the complaint were sufficiently broad so as to encompass Local 352 as a Respondent; (2) the Respondent and its Local 352, by and through the actions of their agents, engaged in a pervasive pattern of conduct designed to restrain and coerce the Complainant, and other unspecified employees, in the exercise of their Section 1(a) right under the Order to refrain from assisting a labor organization in violation of Section 19(b)(1) of the Order; and (3) the pattern of conduct engaged in by the agents of both the Respondent and its Local 352 against the Complainant, and other members of the organization, had the effect of hindering or impeding their work performance, productivity or discharge of their duties owed as employees of the United States in violation of Section 19(b)(3) of the Order.

The Assistant Secretary found, in agreement with the Administrative Law Judge, that the Respondent PATCO violated Section 19(b)(1) and (3) of the Order by the actions of its agents with respect to the Complainant. However, with respect to the Administrative Law Judge's finding that the Respondent's Local 352 also violated Section 19(b)(1) and (3) of the Order, the Assistant Secretary concluded that procedural due process precluded construing a complaint so broadly as to include as party respondents components of national labor organizations not named in the complaint. The Assistant Secretary also disagreed with the Administrative Law Judge's findings of violations of the Order with respect to events not set forth in the complaint. In this regard, he concluded that the complaint was quite specific as to the incidents which form the basis of the complaint.

However, the Assistant Secretary noted that incidents and events not specified in the complaint may be used as background evidence to explain and illuminate the nature and character of the events specified as the actual basis of the complaint. In this regard, the Assistant Secretary found that a pattern of conduct was engaged in by the Respondent's agents which was designed to "persuade" the Complainant to cooperate with the Respondent and which culminated in the incidents specified in the complaint. The Assistant Secretary concluded, in this regard, that the purpose and intent of the specified incidents was made clear when viewed in the context of the surrounding events. Thus, the Assistant Secretary noted that subsequent to the occurrence of the specified incidents agents of the Respondent were involved in incidents, which when considered together, may be reasonably construed as attempts to carry out the threat alleged as one aspect of the unfair labor practice complaint. Therefore, the Assistant Secretary concluded that the Respondent, by the actions of its agents on June 25 and June 29, 1975, coerced, or attempted to coerce, the Complainant, a member of its organization, for the purpose of hindering or impeding his work performance, his productivity, or the discharge of his duties owed as an employee of the United States in violation of Section 19(b)(3) of the Order. Additionally, the Assistant Secretary viewed such conduct, along with the threat made to the Complainant by Respondent's Facility Representative, as having the effect of interfering with, restraining, or coercing the Complainant in the exercise of his Section 1(a) right to refrain from assisting a labor organization in violation of Section 19(b)(1) of the Order.

Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary ordered that the Respondent cease and desist from the conduct found violative of the Order and that it take certain affirmative actions.

DECISION AND ORDER

On September 29, 1976, Administrative Law Judge William B. Devaney issued his Recommended Decision and Order in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had engaged in certain unfair labor practices and recommending that it cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative actions, as set forth in the attached Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order. Thereafter, the Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief with respect to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. 1/ The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order, and the entire record in this case, including the exceptions and supporting brief filed by the Respondent, I hereby adopt the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendations, only to the extent consistent herewith.

The complaint herein alleges, in substance, that the Respondent labor organization violated Section 19(b)(1) and (3) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, by certain coercive acts taken by its agents against the Complainant while the latter was engaged in his air traffic control duties and was exercising his rights assured by Section 1(a) of the Order. Specifically, the Complainant alleges that on June 25, 1975, agents of the Respondent failed to cooperate with him in carrying out his air traffic control duties and took specific action which impeded his work performance. Additionally, the Complainant alleges that on June 29, 1975, he was improperly threatened by the Respondent's Facility Representative.

1/ In its exceptions, the Respondent contended that certain rulings made by the Administrative Law Judge at the hearing were contradictory. Based upon an examination of the record, I find no basis for the Respondent's contention that the rulings in question were either contradictory or prejudicial.

The essential facts of the case, are set forth, in detail, in the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order, and I shall repeat them only to the extent necessary as indicated below.

The Complainant, formerly an air traffic controller at the Kansas City Municipal Airport, transferred to the St. Louis, Missouri, Air Traffic Control Facility on June 10, 1974. As a result of his transfer, he was required to undergo training and certification at each air traffic position at the facility for approximately one year. The record reflects that, at the Complainant's request, employee Dennis Reardon assisted in much of this training. 2/ However, some time in the late Fall of 1974, relations between the Complainant and Reardon, which had been amicable, changed abruptly. The record reflects that the Complainant, who was an active member of the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization, MEBA, AFL-CIO, herein also referred to as PATCO, disagreed with Reardon over certain methods advocated by Reardon to carry out the PATCO's goals. Subsequently, as disclosed by the unrefuted testimony of the Complainant and other witnesses, Reardon and other employees identified among the leadership of Respondent's Local 352, attempted, through various acts, to "persuade" the Complainant to agree with their approach to labor-management relations. Although this "persuasion" included such conduct as merely "shunning" the Complainant, a pattern of refusing to cooperate with him while he was carrying out his air traffic control duties also developed.

Prior to June 25, 1975, this lack of cooperation generally was limited to not responding immediately when he requested assistance in carrying out his air traffic control responsibilities. However, as found by the Administrative Law Judge, on June 25, 1975, Regenhold, a controller at the facility, who was identified as a PATCO crew or team representative, made an apparent deliberate attempt to cause a "systems error" by the Complainant. While the evidence does not establish that Reardon was directly involved in this incident, it does establish that Reardon was in the vicinity at the time it happened. Moreover, when confronted by the Complainant on June 29, 1975, about the incident, which the record discloses was clearly the fault of Regenhold, Reardon told the Complainant that he did not see anything wrong with it, that he had heard that the Complainant was a dangerous controller, and, finally, alluding to the fact that Complainant had used Reardon and other controllers to check out at the facility, Reardon threatened the Complainant to the effect that the Complainant would get his in the end.

Shortly after the incidents of June 25 and June 29, 1975, alleged in the complaint, but prior to the filing of the complaint, several other incidents followed which, when considered together, may be reasonably construed as attempts by the Respondent and its agents to carry out Reardon's threat. On July 7, 1975, Reardon intimated to the Facility Chief that the Complainant had caused a "systems error" and stated that it had been a bad operation. 3/ During the same time period, Reardon and other controllers, identified as among the leadership of Local 352, protested working with the Complainant to the Facility Chief. 4/ Finally, the record reveals that shortly after his July 7, 1975, discussion with Reardon, the Facility Chief was informed by his Regional Office that the Regional Vice President of the PATCO had charged that the Facility Chief was covering up a "systems error" involving the Complainant.

In his Recommended Decision and Order, the Administrative Law Judge concluded that both the Respondent and its Local 352 had violated Section 19(b)(1) and (3) of the Order. In reaching this conclusion, the Administrative Law Judge found, among other things, that: (1) although Local 352 was not specifically named as a co-Respondent in the complaint, the allegations of the complaint were sufficiently broad so as to encompass Local 352 as a Respondent in the instant complaint; (2) the Respondent and its Local 352, by and through the actions of their agents, engaged in a pervasive pattern of conduct designed to restrain and coerce the Complainant, and other unspecified employees, in the exercise of their Section 1(a) right under the Order to refrain from assisting a labor organization, in violation of Section 19(b)(1) of the Order; and (3) the pattern of conduct engaged in by the agents of both the Respondent and its Local 352 against the Complainant, and other members of the organization, had the effect, among other things, of hindering or impeding their work performance, productivity, or discharge of their duties owed as employees of the United States in violation of Section 19(b)(3) of the Order.

Based on the foregoing, and in agreement with the Administrative Law Judge, I find that the Respondent named in the complaint, the PATCO, violated Section 19(b)(1) and (3) of the Executive Order by the above-noted conduct of its agents with respect to the Complainant. However, with regard to the Administrative Law Judge's finding that PATCO Local 352 also violated the Order, in my view, procedural due process precludes construing a complaint so broadly as to include as party respondents components of national labor organizations not named in the complaint. In my view, to allow otherwise would impede the orderly processing of unfair labor practice complaints and deprive constituent local unions of the knowledge of the nature and extent of the allegations confronting them as well as inhibit their right to defend against such allegations. Moreover, it is noted that the PATCO, and not Local 352, is the exclusive representative of the employees in question.

As to the Administrative Law Judge's recommendation that violations should be found with respect to events not set forth in the complaint, I disagree. Thus, the complaint is quite specific as to the incidents which form the basis of the allegations therein. It sets forth the 3/ If, in fact, the Complainant had been responsible for a "systems error" he would have been subject to discipline up to, and including, dismissal.

4/ The record reflects that none of these controllers actually refused to work with the Complainant.

incidents which occurred on June 25 and June 29, 1975, as the basis of the complaint. Under these circumstances, I do not adopt the Administrative Law Judge's findings of violation of the Order based upon incidents or events not set forth in the complaint.

However, although incidents and events not specified in the complaint may not themselves be independently adjudicated under the Order, they may, in my view, serve as background evidence to explain and illuminate the nature and character of the events specified as the actual basis for the complaint. As noted more fully in the attached Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order, the Respondent engaged in a pattern of conduct designed to "persuade" the Complainant to cooperate with the Respondent, culminating in the June 25 incident, which, along with the related June 29 conversation between the Complainant and Reardon, constitute the gravamen of the instant complaint.

The purpose and intent of the June 25 incident, as well as its origin, becomes clear when viewed in the context of the surrounding events. Thus, shortly after the June 25 incident, on June 29, during a conversation initiated by the Complainant concerning the incident, Reardon first attempted to defend Regenhold, who was directly involved in the incident, by saying that he saw nothing wrong in the incident; then he verbally attacked the Complainant by asserting that he had heard that the Complainant was a dangerous controller; and, finally, alluding to the Complainant's failure to support the Respondent after having used Reardon and other controllers to check out at the facility, Reardon threatened the Complainant that he would get his in the end. Shortly thereafter, in a conversation with the Facility Chief concerning the June 25 incident, Reardon implied that the Complainant was involved in a "systems error"; but, when questioned closely by the Facility Chief, Reardon retreated from that implication by asserting that it was a bad operation. Shortly thereafter, a Vice President of the Respondent communicated with the Regional Office of Federal Aviation Administration, asserting that the Complainant was involved in a "systems error" on June 25. Finally, within this same time frame, Reardon, Regenhold, and other controllers identified as cooperating with Reardon, protested working with the Complainant to the Facility Chief.

In my judgment, these incidents, when viewed in their totality, provide substantial and persuasive basis for finding that the Respondent, by and through the actions of its agent, Reardon, engaged in a pattern of conduct, culminating in the June 25 incident and the conversation of its agent with the Complainant on June 29, designed to coerce the Complainant to cooperate with the Respondent or be punished for his refusal to do so. 5/

5/ The record reflects that none of the above-noted incidents occurred after the complaint in this matter was filed.

As indicated above, I find, in agreement with the Administrative Law Judge, that by its actions on June 25 and June 29, 1975, the Respondent violated Section 19(b)(3) of the Order. 6/ The evidence clearly establishes that, at all time material herein, the Complainant was a member of the Respondent, 7/ and that the Respondent coerced, or attempted to coerce, the Complainant for the purpose of hindering or impeding his work performance, productivity, or the discharge of his duties owed as an employee of the United States. 8/ Further, I view the Respondent's conduct on both of the above-noted dates as having the effect of interfering with, restraining, or coercing the Complainant in the exercise of his Section 1(a) right to refrain from assisting a labor organization, in violation of Section 19(b)(1) of the Order.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 6(b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, and Section 203.26(b) of the Regulations, the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations hereby orders that the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization, MEBA, AFL-CIO, shall:

6/ Section 19(b)(3) provides: "A labor organization shall not -- (3) coerce, attempt to coerce, or discipline, fine, or take other economic sanction against a member of the organization as punishment or reprisal for, or for the purpose of hindering or impeding his work performance, his productivity, or the discharge of his duties owed as an officer or employee of the United States."

7/ The unrefuted testimony of the Complainant establishes that he resigned from the Respondent approximately two weeks after the events which constitute the basis of the instant complaint.

8/ Contrary to the contentions of the Respondent in its brief in support of its exceptions, I do not view the proscription of Section 19(b)(3) as being limited strictly to situations involving internal union discipline. Rather, I view this Section of the Order as expressing a specific concern to protect members of a labor organization from any type of coercion by the organization as punishment for, or for the purpose of hindering or impeding their work performance, productivity, or the discharge of their duties. Although this Section of the Order proscribes actions traditionally associated with internal union recourses against members, such as fines or other economic sanctions, it also proscribes coercion or attempts to coerce, and qualifies such proscribed acts with the clause ". . . as punishment or reprisal for, or for the purpose of hindering or impeding his work performance, his productivity, or the discharge of his duties owed as an officer or employee of the United States." In my view, the above-noted language contained in Section 19(b)(3) indicates that the Executive Order was intended to protect union members from any act by a labor organization which in any way interferes with the performance of their duties as employees.

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Coercing, or attempting to coerce, Taso Peter Anthan, or any other member of its organization, for the purpose of hindering or impeding his work performance, his productivity, or the discharge of his duties owed as an employee of the United States.

(b) Interfering with, restraining, or coercing Taso Peter Anthan, an employee of the Department of Transportation, Federal Aviation Administration, Air Traffic Control Tower, St. Louis, Missouri, in the exercise of his rights assured by the Order, by engaging in conduct which has the effect of hindering employee Anthan in the discharge of his air traffic control duties or by threatening Anthan regarding employment related matters.

(c) In any like or related manner, interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their right assured by the Order to refrain from assisting a labor organization.

2. Take the following affirmative actions in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Executive Order.

(a) Post at PATCO Local 352's Office at the Department of Transportation, Federal Aviation Administration, Air Traffic Control Tower, St. Louis, Missouri; at the PATCO's Regional Office which encompasses St. Louis, Missouri; and at the PATCO's National Office copies of the attached Notice marked "Appendix" on forms to be furnished by the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the President of the PATCO and shall be posted and maintained by him for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to members are customarily posted. The President shall take reasonable steps to insure that such notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(b) Submit signed copies of said notice to the Chief of the Air Traffic Control Tower, St. Louis, Missouri, for posting in conspicuous places, where unit employees are located, where they shall be maintained for a period of 60 consecutive days from the date of posting.

(c) Pursuant to Section 203.27 of the Regulations, notify the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this order as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

Statement of the Case

This case arises under Executive Order 11491, as amended (hereinafter also referred to as "Order"). It was initiated by a written charge filed with the labor organization or its agents on, or about, July 7, 1975, and a Complaint against labor organization or its agents filed August 20, 1975, alleging violations of Section 19(b)(1) and (3) of the Order. Notice of Hearing issued March 8, 1976, scheduling a hearing on May 6, 1976, and on May 3, 1976, at the request of the parties, an Order Rescheduling Hearing to July 14, 1976, issued, pursuant to which a hearing was duly held before the undersigned on July 14 and 15, 1976, in St. Louis, Missouri. The Complaint names Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization Affiliated with M.E.B.A. (AFL-CIO)(hereinafter PATCO) and charges PATCO and its representative, Mr. Dennis M. Reardon, local representative of PATCO, with violation of Sections 19(b)(1) and (3) of the Order.

A Motion to dismiss was made at the hearing by counsel for Respondent, was carried with the case and will be decided herein.

All parties were represented by able counsel, were afforded full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witnesses and to introduce evidence bearing on the issues involved and briefs were timely filed by the parties which have been carefully considered. Upon the basis of the entire record, 1/ including my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following findings of fact, conclusions and recommendations:

Respondent called no witnesses and presented no testimony. Accordingly, the following findings represent, in essence, a brief summary of the testimony and evidence presented by Complainant. 2/

1. Complainant, Taso Peter Anthan, was an air traffic controller in the Navy, is a licensed commercial pilot, holds an instrument rating, multi-engine rating, flight instructor rating and an advance ground instructor rating. Complainant started work for FAA in 1966 in Kansas City, initially as a weather briefer and communications specialist with the flight service station at the Kansas City Municipal Airport, and in

1/ The parties have not made any motion or request to correct the transcript; nevertheless, I have noted some obvious errors which I hereby correct on my own motion as set forth in Appendix "A: hereto.

2/ Respondent introduced, in the cross-examination of Mr. Early, one exhibit, Res. Exh. I, a letter dated August 6, 1975, from Mr. Early to Complainant, Taso P. Anthan.

1968 was accepted at the Kansas City Municipal Air Traffic Control Tower where he trained for approximately one year prior to becoming a full performance controller in the approach control radar and tower. Kansas City is now a Level 2 airport (St. Louis is a Level 4 airport - 300,000 operations per year - as are such airports as LaGuardia, O'Hare, Miami, Atlanta, Los Angeles and Denver).

2. Upon transfer from one facility to another, controllers, even those in supervisory jobs, must undergo training and certification at each position in the facility. On June 10, 1974, Complainant transferred to St. Louis and, as he had known Mr. Dennis Reardon in Kansas City, asked to be assigned to Mr. Reardon as his trainee. Mr. Reardon thereafter acted as Complainant's instructor until about January or February, 1975.

3. Complainant initially became a member of PATCO in Kansas City in late 1969 or early in 1970; resigned in March, 1970; rejoined in 1973, about a year before coming to St. Louis; and remained a member of PATCO until he resigned a couple of weeks after the June 25, 1975, incident, infra.

4. Complainant's relations with Messrs. Reardon and Regenhold were close and amicable for some time after June 10, 1974, and Complainant discussed union affairs with both from time to time. Mr. Reardon was President of PATCO Local 352 from July 1, 1974 to June 30, 1975, a member of PATCO's Regional Constitution Committee, a member of PATCO's Regional Negotiating Committee, and PATCO's facility representative at the St. Louis Tower. Mr. Regenhold was identified as a PATCO team, or crew, representative. During the fall of 1974, and continuing thereafter through the spring and summer of 1975, considerable disagreement arose between PATCO and management concerning various matters, including separation of aircraft, combining of positions, avoidance of overtime by using trainees, request for early descent, etc. Complainant testified that in the fall of 1974, Mr. Reardon discussed with him one union technique which was to slow down aircraft by requiring bigger and bigger slots on final approach and Complainant further testified that he had worked opposite controllers who ran slots (separations) from 8 to 17 miles as compared to the required separation of 3 miles or 1,000 feet of altitude. Complainant stated that Mr. Reardon advised him that it would be better if he didn't participate in some of the slowing down techniques because he was still in a training status; however, Complainant did take sick leave on occasions to support PATCO's stance. On one occasion, Assistant Facility Chief Hardy had called Complainant to come in on the midnight (mid-watch) shift and he had agreed to do so; but Mr. Reardon called Complainant and told him that management was trying to avoid overtime by using a trainee, so Complainant called Mr. Hardy back and told him he could not accept the mid-watch assignment.

5. Another procedure urged by Mr. Reardon was that each controller invoke Article 55 3/ of the PATCO-FAA agreement whenever a controller had some professional disagreement with supervisors' instructions. Mr. Irving R. Burnhart testified that in 1975, while he, Burnhart, was still a controller (Mr. Burnhart became an Evaluation Proficiency Development Specialist in September, 1975) in the locker room at shift change, at about 3:30 p.m., Mr. Reardon, speaking to the six or eight controllers asked that all members of the bargaining unit invoke Article 55 at any time they were told to combine positions; that Complainant asked what would be the result if he did not wish to do that and Mr. Reardon replied that "he felt that the Union's position would not be as strong in the event it would become necessary to defend one of the members of the bargaining unit if they did not, in fact, invoke Article 55." Mr. Burnhart further testified that he discussed the invoking of Article 55 with Mr. Reardon later and Mr. Reardon again said he was requesting everyone in the bargaining unit to invoke Article 55.

6. Complainant disagreed with Mr. Reardon on his approach to labor-management relations and the relationship with Mr. Reardon abruptly changed as did the attitude of certain other controllers. Complainant was shunned and Mr. Don Early, Facility Chief, testified that he had observed in the lunchroom in the ready room area that when Complainant was present he was "alone in a crowd"; that on one occasion he had seen Complainant sit down and another controller had got up and moved to another table. From the time that Complainant expressed disagreement with Mr. Reardon on labor-management policies, a marked lack of coordination and cooperation developed on the part of various controllers, identified by Complainant as John Chandler, Secretary-Treasurer of PATCO Local 352; Tom Ferring, Vice President of PATCO Local 352 (now President of Local 352); Jim Stack; Rick Raugh; Rick Regenhold; and Dennis Reardon, then President of PATCO Local 352. Messrs. Stack and Raugh were not officers of Local 352 but were members of PATCO. Two or more witnesses testified that they believed Mr. Regenhold was the team, or crew, PATCO representative.

The lack of coordination and cooperation in air traffic control was through delay in responding to Complainant's requests, repeated requests to "say again", denial of Complainant's requests for entry of aircraft into their controlled air space, denial of Complainant's requests for early descent, etc., which affected Complainant's ability to move air traffic and greatly intensified the pressure on Complainant as an air traffic controller. Michael LaBaty, a controller and member of PATCO, testified that on one occasion when he was sitting next to Complainant, Complainant asked for a descent and it was denied and Complainant "just kind of threw up his hands in frustration". Mr. Lyle Bjerkestrand, who became team supervisor of the team on which Complainant worked on February 2, 1975, testified that on one occasion when Mr. Reardon was working departure 2 handoff and Complainant was working arrival, Complainant requested an early descent and Mr. Reardon called over to Mr. Bjerkestrand that he didn't go along with this and if Bjerkestrand didn't take action to stop requests for early descent he, Reardon, was going to make an issue of the point. Mr. Bjerkestrand stated that it was perfectly proper to request early descent because, if air space is available, early descent goes to expedite the flow of traffic. 4/ Mr. Bjerkestrand was critical of Mr. Reardon's complainats about early descent in the TRACON room in the middle of traffic.

3/ Art. 55. "In the event of difference in professional opinion between the employee and the supervisor, the employee shall comply with the instructions of the supervisor and the supervisor shall assume responsibility for his own decisions.

7. The record is clear that delays in response by a controller, in view of the speed of aircraft, may be tantamount to denial and that a delay of even seven to ten seconds may readily amount to a denial.

8. On June 25, 1975, an incident occurred which dramatically illustrated the serious extent of the deterioration of coordination by other controllers with Complainant, the resulting effect on air safety, and an apparent deliberate attempt by controller Regenhold to cause a systems error. Complainant was working Arrival 2 (AR-2); Regenhold was working Departure 2 (DR-2). 5/ There was a thunderstorm to the northwest of the airport, along the final approach course for runway 12-Right inside the final approach fix, which also affected the I.L.S. for 12-Right, and arriving aircraft, including TWA 876, were urgently requesting deviations to avoid having to penetrate

4/ For a short period of time, during the late summer of 1975, the St. Louis Tower had published a facility order which placed certain restrictions on areas where early descents could be requested. This facility order had been recommended by the Facility Air Traffic Technical Advisory Committee (FATTAC). The order was not then in effect (it was issued later) and the facility order was subsequently cancelled after a brief trial period.

5/ Mel Wise was shown by the operational log as working the TCA-2 position at 1757:00Z to 1757:05Z. The operational log further showed that Mr. Wise worked this position from 1649Z to 1758Z. Mr. Reardon relieved Mr. Wise at TCA-2 at 1758Z.

into the thunderstorm and lower altitudes. 6/ Complainant sought permission to enter air space controlled by other controllers and, because he could not effect the coordination, had to penetrate some of his aircraft into thunderstorms. Specifically as to TWA 876, Complainant at 1756:55Z, requested 4,000 five west of Maryland Heights. Mr. Regenhold on DR-2, at 1757Z, responded "Say again", Complainant repeated the request; and, at 1757:05Z, Mr. Regenhold on DR-2 approved (Comp. Exh. 4). Complainant instructed TWA 867 to descend and maintain 4,000 reduce to 180. TWA 876 acknowledged at 1757:00Z. In the meantime, Mr. Regenhold, controlling the departure of Frontier 23, had placed FL 23 at 5,000 feet and had vectored FL 23 into the area needed, and approved by him, for the descent of TWA 867. Complainant saw the position of FL 23 on his radar console and, at 1757:20Z, ordered TWA 876 to maintain 6,000 feet. Mr. Thomas Jones, then team supervisor, testified that he saw Complainant stand up and say something across the room and then Complainant said to Mr. Jones "Tell those guys to keep their airplanes away from me"; that he, Jones, then went over to Departure 2 and TCA-2 and told them that Complainant was using the area in the vicinity of Lake with his arrivals and to keep their airplanes away from there. Mr. Jones received an acknowledgement from Mr. Regenhold. Mr. Jones did not recall whether Mr. Reardon was then working TCA-2.

9. Several days after June 25, 1975, Complainant had a conversation with Mr. Reardon, in an office at the facility, about the June 25 situation. Complainant asked Mr. Reardon what he thought about the operation and Mr. Reardon said he didn't think there was anything wrong with it; stated that he had heard reports that Complainant was a dangerous controller; that Complainant had used people to check out in the facility and said that "... I would get mine in the end."

10. Mr. Bjerkestrand had become team supervisor of the team on which Complainant worked on February 2, 1975, and on February 9, 1975, because Complainant was encountering some difficulty in certifying on arrival radar, extended Complainant's training time and assigned him to Messrs. Rayfield and Kelker for training. Complainant became fully certified in early May of 1975.

6/ The arrival controller is assigned the air space at 6,000, 7,000 and 8,000 feet; departures are restricted to 5,000 feet, to avoid climbing through an arrival track, until the departure controller establishes communications and he can climb them above the approach tracks or around aircraft on approach tracks.

11. On June 30, 1975, Complainant brought to the attention of the Chief, St. Louis Tower, Mr. Don D. Early, the events of June 25, 1975. Mr. Early met with Mr. Reardon on July 7, 1975, at which time Mr. Reardon was accompanied by Mr. Glenn Chance. At that time Mr. Reardon implied that less than standard separations had existed on June 25 (i.e., a systems error) but when asked specifically told Mr. Early he was not stating that there had been less than standard separations of aircraft; that it was just a bad operation.

12. While the matters brought to the attention of Mr. Early by Complainant were being investigated by Mr. Early, Mr. Early received a call from Mr. Charles Bumstead, in the FAA Regional Office, who advised him that Mr. Max Winter, Regional Vice President of PATCO had asserted that there was a systems error on June 25, 1975, involving Complainant and that facility management was covering up that systems error. Upon notification of Mr. Winter's charge, Mr. Early broadened the investigation already underway and directed Ivan F. Hunt, Operations Officer, St. Louis Tower, to investigate the charge that a systems error involving Complainant had occurred on June 25, 1975. Mr. Hunt conducted an investigation. The precise date that Mr. Hunt began the investigation was not fixed beyond the date of his conversation with Mr. Regenhold which he stated was "within a few days either side of 7/9/75". Mr. Hunt stated that he concluded that there was no systems error. The conclusion from his report, which was not introduced as an exhibit, was:

> "Conclusion, minimum horizontal distance between TWA 876 and Frontier [23] ... was in excess of what is required."

When pressed by counsel for Respondent, Mr. Hunt stated it was his opinion,

> "That there was no basis for a recommendation that we had, in fact, had a systems error."

Mr. Hunt testified that, although the facility took no action against Mr. Regenhold, there were alternatives available to him based on the traffic situation at that time that were much preferable to what he had done. Mr. Hunt further testified that the fact that Mr. Regenhold put his aircraft in close proximity to the area that is known as the 12 right descent approach quadrant did add complexity to the system and he didn't believe that airplane needed to be there and that Mr. Regenhold did it deliberately. Indeed, when pressed by counsel for Respondent, as to whether Mr. Regenhold "set this whole thing up in order to put the squeeze or in order to pressure or to in any way affect his job performance; that is, the job performance of Mr. Anthan", Mr. Hunt stated that in his opinion Mr. Regenhold did.

Team supervisor Jones testified that departure 2 and TCA-2 are physically side by side and try to keep track of what each other is doing; that it seemed strange to him at the time (June 25, 1975) that any controller would turn an aircraft going out the St. Paul gate to a west to northwest heading and head the aircraft directly at not only the apprach quadrant but directly at what he had to know was a severe thunderstorm; that he did not pursue the matter further at the time because he had confidence in Mr. Regenhold as a controller; but that he felt Mr. Regenhold had used very poor judgment.

Mr. Enrique Hermsillo, a controller on duty at the time of the June 25, 1975 incident, and who sat next to Mr. Regenhold, testified that Complainant needed air space, needed to deviate from, around weather and he was not given the full cooperation which ones requires under those conditions; that he was aware of conflict between certain controllers as the result, in part, of Article 55 which some people do not care to use, and that Mr. Regenhold was guilty of a lack of cooperation on June 25, 1975.

13. By letter dated August 6, 1975, Mr. Early advised Complainant, in part, as follows:

> "This letter responds to the problem areas you called to my attention on June 30, 1975. As a result of investigatory proceedings, it has been determined that there is no tangible evidence to challenge the propriety of controller to controller cooperation demonstrated on June 25, 1975. The voice recordings and controller statements reviewed in the process of investigation confirm that there were no situations of less than standard separation. ...
> "To my knowledge, the other problem areas that you brought to management's attention are now, in part, the subject of a ULP proceeding. In consonance with this fact, we do not consider it appropriate that management take official action on problem areas that possibly could overlap the subject of a ULP proceeding.

* * * *" (Res. Exh. 1)

Nevertheless, Mr. Early testified that,

"Based on the facts that were presented to me by those who have technical expertise in that area, I would have to question why Mr. Regenhold handled that aircraft in the particular manner he did, whether it was a case of his own judgment or what I cannot say. But it is not the normal thing that would be done in a situation like that."

15. Mr. Early testified that verbal complaints had been made to him by other controllers of the lack of cooperation because they did not go along with certain views of the union. Mr. Michael LaBaty, a controller with FAA since 1969 and at St. Louis since November, 1974, is a member of PATCO and testified that members of the union, including Messrs. Ferring and Reardon, had tried to influence him to go along with their line of thinking; that he had said, in a very friendly manner, "no" because he didn't believe they were doing the right thing; and that as a result some controllers talked about him in a very derogatory manner, laughed at him, and refused to cooperate in air traffic control by denying requests arbitrarily. Mr. LaBaty testified that two controllers who had denied cooperation with him in air traffic control were Dennis Sheern and Jim Stack; and that there had been several others. Mr. LaBaty stated that he had brought the lack of cooperation to the attention of various supervisors; had talked to Mr. Reardon; and in the winter of 1974 when Mr. Winter was in St. Louis, he called Mr. Robert Poli, Executive Vice President of PATCO, to talk to him about these problems. Mr. LaBaty stated that Mr. Poli cut him off with the statement that he, LaBaty, would have to talk to Mr. Reardon and when Mr. LaBaty told Mr. Poli that he had already discussed the matters with Mr. Reardon, Mr. Poli again refused to discuss the matter and said he would have Mr. Reardon speak to him. Mr. LaBaty stated that he had never heard from Mr. Reardon. Mr. LaBaty stated that the lack of coordination by other controllers did affect his job perforance and his ability to move traffic; and that his concern over this problem had resulted in his request for relief from duty on numerous occasions.

Mr. Willie Moore, who has been a controller at St. Louis for more than 5-1/2 years, testified that he was aware of the conflict over the use of Article 55; that he had disagreed with certain members of PATCO and they chose not to speak to him for a certain period.

16. The record also shows that supervsior Thomas Jones experienced severe lack of coordination and cooperation by other controllers during his training and, as a result, he voluntarily withdrew from the training program at the St. Louis Tower and transferred to another facility.

17. After Complainant filed his charge in this matter, he testified that lack of cooperation by some other controllers intensified; that he didn't believe he had worked a single shift during which some controller had not refused cooperation as manifested by not approving requests for early descents or using other people's air space or delay on coordination lines. Messrs. Reardon, Chandler, Ferring, Stack, Regenhold, Bauer and Raugh formally advised management that they would work with Complainant only under protest. Mr. Reardon informed Mr. Jones that he would work with Complainant only under protest but said he was not invoking Article 55. Mr. Chandler's response to Mr. Early was that Complainant did not go along with his other controllers - stabbed his fellow controllers in the back. Mr. Bauer told Mr. Early he protested the undesirability of having Complainant and Mr. Reardon working in the operation quarters at the same time; that it put a strain on the facility. Mr. Raugh simply told Mr. Early he protested having to work in the quarters when Complainant was on duty. In December, 1974, or January, 1975, Mr. LaBaty talked to Mr. Hunt about the difficulty of working with Complainant when Messrs. Ferring and Reardon were on the same shift.

18. Complainant, at the time of the hearing, had been selected for a supervisory position outside the St. Louis facility; Mr. Reardon is now medically disqualified and can no longer control traffic; Mr. Raugh is involved in the second career program (i.e., no longer a controller); and Mr. Regenhold is a controller in a Level 2 VFR tower at Orlando, Florida.

1. Section 19(b)(1) Allegations.

Section 19(b)(1) of the Order is identical to Section 19(a)(1), except, of course, that 19(b)(1) applies to "A labor organization" while 19(a)(1) applies to "Agency management" and provides as follows:

> "(b) A labor organization shall not -
> "(1) interfere with, restrain, or coerce an employee in the exercise of his rights assured by this Order;"

The rights assured by this Order include the rights set forth in Section 1(a), in part, as follows"

> "Section 1. Policy (a) Each employee of the executive branch of the Federal Government has the right, freely and without fear of penalty or reprisal, to form, join, and assist a labor organization or to refrain from any such activity, and each employee shall be protected in the exercise of this right. ..." (Emphasis supplied.)

The record shows a pattern of conduct by individual controllers, including the officers of Local 352 and PATCO facility representatives. The nature of the conduct is discussed hereinafter. A labor organization, like an agency, an activity, or a corporation, acts only through its agents and a principal may be responsible for the acts of his agent within the scope of the agent's authority, even though the principal has not specifically authorized or, indeed, may have specifically forbidden the act in question. United Furniture Workers of America, et al., 81 NLRB 886, 23 LRRM 1424 (1949). PATCO and/or its Local 352 may be liable as a principal; in addition, PATCO, as the exclusive bargaining representative, may be liable for violation of its obligation to serve the interest of all members of a designated bargaining unit without hostility or discrimination, with complete good faith and without arbitrary conduct.

a) Duty of Fair Representation

As specifically noted on repeated occasions, the Order differs in many essential respects from the National Labor Relations Act (hereafter "Act"); nevertheless, in many areas the Order reflects the same basic labor policy. Section 1(a) of the Order, for example, like Section 7 of the Act, insures employees the right to self-organization, to form, join or assist labor organizations, as well as the right to refrain from any such activity; the proscription of 19(b)(1) of the Order is substantially identical in effect to Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act; and the Order, like the Act, provides for exclusive representation in designated bargaining units. It has long been recognized that the grant of exclusive representation to a union imposes quite different obligations on the union than would attach in a simple agency relationship. This was succinctly stated by the Supreme Court, in Vaca v. Sipes, 386 U.S. 171 (1967) as follows:

> "Under this doctrine [of fair representation], the exclusive agent's statutory authority to represent all members of a designated unit includes a statutory obligation to serve the interests of all members without hostility or discrimination toward any, to exercise its discretion with complete good faith and honesty, and to avoid arbitrary conduct. Humprey v. Moore, 375 U.S. at 342, 84 S.Ct. at 367." (386 U.S. at 177).

Although the Supreme Court spoke in terms of an agent's statutory representation authority under the Act, the doctrine applies with equal force to the exclusive agent's authority under the Order.

Until its decision in Miranda Fuel Company, Inc., 140 NLRB 181 (1962), the Board had not viewed a violation by a union of its duty of fair representation as an unfair labor practice in the absence of a showing that the breach of duty encouraged or discouraged union membership. In its Miranda Fuel decision, supra, the Board majority held that it was an unfair labor practice for a bargaining representative to act in an unreasonable, arbitrary, or invidious manner in regard to an employee. Although enforcement was denied by the Second Circuit, NLRB v. Miranda Fuel Co., 326 F.2d 172 (1963), it appears, now, to have won the day. See, Kaj Kling v. NLRB, 503 F.2d 1044 (9th Cir. 1975); Vaca v. Sipes, supra. Indeed, the Second Circuit, in NLRB v. Local 485, Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, 454 F.2d 17 (1972), although it noted that,

> "... we are not forced to reconsider this court's controversial disposition of the Board's broader theory in Miranda Fuel Co., 140 NLRB 181 (1962), enforcement denied, 326 F.2d 172 (2nd Cir. 1963), that any arbitrary or invidious action which violates a union's duty of fair representation is prohibited by section 8(b)(1)(A)." (454 F.2d at 21, n. 6)

the Court held that where a union's action is calculated retaliation against an employee for the exercise of a right clearly protected by the Act, the union is guilty of an unfair labor practice for its breach of its duty of fair representation. The Court stated, in part, as follows:

> "The Board found that Barclay's criticism of the Local's position on the overtime issue was protected activity under section 7, 29 U.S.C. §157, and that the Local's refusal to process his wrongful discharge grievance because of the criticism was an attempt to 'restrain or coerce ... employees in the exercise of rights guaranteed in section [7] ...' 29 U.S.C. §158(b)(1)(A). We agree with the Board's conclusion that this was an unfair labor practice. ..." (454 F.2d at 21).

Whether any arbitrary or invidious action in violation of a union's duty of fair representation is an unfair labor practice in violation of Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act, at least the violation of fair representation constitutes a violation of 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act when the union's action is calculated retaliation against an employee for the exercise of a right clearly protected by the Act. For the purpose of the present case, it is unnecessary to go further. Because the rights and obligations under the Order are the same in this respect as the corresponding rights and obligations under the Act, a violation of a union's duty of fair representation as calculated retaliation against an employee for the exercise of a right clearly protected by the Order is an unfair labor practice in violation of Section 19(b)(1) of the Order. In a sense, the same conduct may be directly remedied under Section 19(b)(1); but recognition of the duty of fair representation adds the significant aspect that the exclusive agent's authority under the Order to represent all members of a designated bargaining unit carries with it the obligation to abstain from hostility or discrimination toward any, and reaches the refusal of a union to act, at least where the violation of the duty of fair representation is an attempt to restrain or corece employees in the exercise of rights guaranteed by the Order, and not merely overt acts of the union. It further is significant in establishing union responsibility, in that a union's liability may flow, not merely, or even primarily, from ratification of conduct of its agents, but directly from the union's own violation of its duty of fair representation.

b) Parties.

The Complaint named "Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization Affiliated with M.E.B.A. (AFL-CIO)." In addition, the Complaint charged PATCO and its representative, Mr. Dennis M. reardon, local representative of PATCO, with violations of Sections 19(b)(1) and (3) of the Order. The Complaint also identified Mr. Reardon as President of Local PATCO. At the commencement of the hearing, counsel for Respondent inquired who were the charged parties and counsel for Complainant responded that the charged parties were: "Mr. Reardon, in his capacity as president of the local PATCO organization against the local PATCO and against the International". 7/

The threshold question is whether a complaint which names only PATCO is sufficient in order to remedy an alleged unfair labor practice committed by an unnamed local union. No case involving the sufficiency of a complaint against a labor organization has been called to my attention nor have I found any authority directly in point; however, the matter has arisen in connection with complaints against agencies and, as the basic principles are the same, the same result should pertain. In essence, the question is whether you can go too high. On the one hand, if a complaint names only a subordinate activity, neither the activity nor the agency is a party. Iowa State Agricultural Stablization and Conservation Office, Department of Agriculture, A/SLMR No. 453 (1974). On the other hand, if the complaint names only the agency but clearly and concisely sets forth the allegation asserted to have constituted the violation at an activity and Respondent, by its response to the complaint demonstrates that it was fully advised of the violation alleged, then the unfair labor practice against the activity may be remedied even though the activity was not named in the complaint. Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Brookhaven Service Center and National Treasury Employees Union and NTEU Chapter 099, Case No. 30-6126(CA)(1976).

There is no question, of course, that the complaint herein is sufficient as to PATCO which is the named labor organization. PATCO is the certified bargaining representative of air traffic controllers employed by the Federal Aviation Administration, Department of Transportation (hereinafter FAA) in a nationwide unit, with certain exceptions not relevant (See, Federal Aviation Administration, Department of Transportation and PATCO, A/SLMR No. 173 (1972)), and has entered into a collective bargaining

7/ At the close of the hearing Complainant's motion to amend the Complaint to conform to the proof was granted and the Complaint, as amended, is directed against PATCO, Local Union 352, and Mr. Dennis M. Reardon, local representative of PATCO.

agreement with FAA which is nationwide in scope (See, 2 Gov. Employee Rel. Report 81: 6501). When viewed in perspective, the Complaint as filed, against PATCO and Dennis M. Reardon, local representative of PATCO, becomes quite logical. PATCO is the certified bargaining representative for the St. Louis Tower, PATCO entered into the collective bargaining agreement, and Mr. Reardon was the designated principal representative of PATCO at the St. Louis Tower. In addition, Mr. Reardon was, inter alia, also President of PATCO Local 352. The Complaint set forth the allegation asserted to have constituted the violation, charged Dennis M. Reardon, local representative of PATCO,as well as PATCO, with violations of Sections 19(b)(1) and (3) of the Order. Respondent demonstrated that it was fully advised of the violation alleged and of the relationship of its Local Union 352 to the violations alleged. Accordingly, by analogy to Department of the Treasury, supra, I conclude that the complaint against PATCO is sufficient to reach, and to permit the remedy of, alleged unfair labor practices by a constituent local union. Accordingly, Respondent's Motion to Dismiss is denied.

c) Interference, Restraint or Coercion

Respondents in their brief do not discuss the 19(b)(1) allegation; rather, their brief is directed wholly toward the 19(b)(3) allegation. Significantly, however, Respondents' brief states,

> "Respondents may well have impeded his work performance by not giving him early descents, for example, as he requested; may well have impeded his productivity by delaying coordination with him; may well have hindered the discharge of his duties owed as a controller by calling him a 'dangerous controller,' by not talking with him, by leaving him 'alone in the crowd.'" (Respondents' Brief pp. 4-5)

Whether Respondents' failure to controvert the 19(b)(1) allegation implies concession of a 19(b)(1) violation or whether Respondents' concessions as set forth above constitute an admission, the record shows, in any event, a pervasive pattern of conduct by a number of named and identified individuals directed against Complainant, and other controllers, which was intended to bring pressure on Complainant, and other controllers, to force them to support certain union objectives. The concerted shunning of Complainant, and other controllers, was, itself, a form of restraint or coercion. Such concerted activity perhaps has reached its zenith in miting, see, Generich v. Swartzentruber, 22 Ohio N.P. N.S. 1, 3, 13, and the fact that Mr. Moore stated that he did not let the same things "phase me too much" does not alter in the slightest the conclusion that such conduct constituted restraint and coercion within the meaning of the Order. The concerted hinderance of the discharge of the duty of controllers by delaying or denying coordination was intended to restrain or coerce Complainant, and other controllers, in the exercise of their right under the Order to refrain from assisting a labor organization. Deliberate action intended to impede work performance is a form of interference, restraint or coercion within the meaning of Section 19(b)(1).

d) Responsibility of Local 352

The record shows that Mr. Reardon advocated, both as President of Local 352 and as principal representative of PATCO, certain positions, including the invocation of Article 55 of the PATCO agreement; opposition to the combining of positions, principally through the invocation of Article 55; greater separation of aircraft; limitation on early descent; etc., and that when Complainant, and other controllers, declined to support these union positions the various individual acts of interference, restraint or coercion immediately followed. Mr. Reardon, President of Local 352 joined in these acts. The Vice President of Local 352 during Mr. Reardon's term as President and Mr. Reardon's successor as President of Local 352, Mr. Ferring, the Secretary-Treasurer of Local 352, Mr. Chandler, and a team, or crew, representative, Mr. Regenhold, all joined in these acts as did various other named controllers. The immediate application of these tactics by the officers of Local 352 and by other members who followed their lead clearly demonstrated concert of action and the record shows that the individuals, namely Messrs. Reardon, Ferring, and Chandler, were acting within the scope of their authority as officers of Local 352, and, accordingly, the acts of interference, restraint or coercion which they committed, directed, or incited became the acts of their principal, Local 352, and Local 352 thereby violated Section 19(b)(1) of the Order.

Messrs. Reardon, Chandler, Ferring, Stack, Regenhold, Bauer and Raugh promptly, after Complainant filed his charge in this proceeding formally protested to FAA working with Complainant for the stated reason that Complainant did not go along with his fellow controllers and had filed a charge under the Order. Such action interferred with Complainant's right to the assured and unimpaired access to the complaint procedure of the Order.

Although these acts occurred after the charge herein was filed and, apparently, after the Complaint herein was filed, because this conduct was part of the continuing acts of interference, restraint and coercion alleged in the Complaint, these matters were fully litigated, and Complainant's motion at the close of the hearing to amend the Complaint to conform to the proof was granted, I deem it proper to consider these continuing violations of Section 19(b)(1) of the Order. Mr. Ferring was then President of Local 352 and acted within the scope of his authority as President of Local 352. The action of the President of Local 352 and the concerted participation therein by Messrs. Reardon, Chandler, Stack, Regenhold, Bauer and Raugh, alone, makes Local 352 responsible for the acts of its agents and Local 352 thereby interferred with, restrained and coerced Complainant in the exercise of his right to the assured and unimpaired access to the complaint procedures of the Order in violation of Section 19(b)(1) of the Order. Cf. National Labor Relations Board, Region 17 and National Labor Relations Board, A/SLMR No. 671 (1976). Interference with Complainant's right to the assured and unimpaired access to the complaint procedures of the Order was, moreover, a part of the continuing pattern of interference, restraint or coercion by the officers of Local 352, and other identified controllers who joined with them in concerted action, to interfer with the rights of Complainant, and other controllers, in violation of Section 19(b)(1) of the Order.

e) Responsibility of PATCO

As noted above, Mr. Reardon occupied a dual position. He was both President of Local 352 and the facility representative of PATCO. Mr. Ferring succeeded Mr. Reardon both as President of Local 352 and as facility representative of PATCO, although the record does not indicate when Mr. Reardon ceased to be facility representative of PATCO and/or the date Mr. Ferring became facility representative of PATCO. 8/

8/ Article 2, Section 3 of the FAA-PATCO Agreement provides, in part, as follows:

> "Section 3. The Union [PATCO] may designate facility representatives at each facility. The Union [PATCO] may designate one representative and one designee for each team, crew, or group as appropriate, in each facility. ... In addition, the Union [PATCO] shall designate in writing the principal representative and one designee. Only the principal representative and/or his designee may deal with the Facility Chief."

Mr. Reardon acted in his capacity as facility representative in advocating the union objectives or positions including invocation of Article 55 of the PATCO Agreement, separations, early descent, combining of positions, etc., and he acted within the scope of his authority as facility representative when he committed, directed, or incited the acts of interference, restraint or coercion, as set forth above in his capacity as president of Local 352. The same was true, of course, of Mr. Ferring when he became facility representative of PATCO. As agents of PATCO acting within the scope of their authority, their acts became the acts of their principal, PATCO, and the same acts which constitute interference, restraint and coercion by virtue of their capacity as agents of Local 352 also constitute interference, restraint and coercion, within the scope of their authority as agents for PATCO, for which their principal, PATCO, is liable.

Mr. Regenhold's action on June 25, 1975, standing alone, might not make PATCO liable for his action; but his action cannot be viewed in vacuo. First, it was part and parcel of the concerted acts of interference, restraint and coercion directed against Complainant. Second, when Complainant discussed the incident with Mr. Reardon, as President of Local 352 and as PATCO facility representative, Mr. Reardon who had been present in the TRACON room on June 25, 1975, stated that he saw nothing wrong with the operation; told Complainant he had heard other controllers state that he (Complainant) was a dangerous controller; and concluded with the threat that Complainant would get his in the end. Third, in a discussion with Facility Chief Early on July 7, Mr. Reardon 9/ intimated that a systems error involving Complainant had occurred on June 25, 1975, although he told Mr. Early, when asked if he

9/ As noted in n. 8, Article 2, Section 3 of the PATCO Agreement provides,

> "Only the principal representative and/or his designee may deal with the Facility Chief."

The record shows that Mr. Early called Mr. Ferring, when Mr. Reardon was not available, and later met with Mr. Reardon. In the absence of any evidence or testimony to the contrary, I draw the inference that Mr. Reardon was PATCO facility representative on July 7, 1975, notwithstanding Mr. Ferring's election as President of Local 352, effective July 1, 1975.

were charging a systems error, that he was not asserting that an improper separation had occurred. Fourth, Mr. Reardon, nevertheless, characterized the June 25 operation as a bad operation. Fifth, Mr. Winter, Regional Vice President of PATCO did charge that he was in possession of information that a systems error involving Complainant had occurred on June 25, and that facility management was attempting to cover it up.

It is apparent that Mr. Winter, on behalf of PATCO, relied upon information furnished by its agents and I have drawn the inference, from all the testimony and evidence, that the source relied upon was Mr. Reardon. The record shows that the incident of June 25 was a deliberate act by Mr. Regenhold designed to greatly complicate Complainant's performance of his duty as a controller, if not, indeed, a deliberate attempt to cause a systems error, was part of the concerted activity by the officers of Local 352 and the facility representatives of PATCO to interfer with, restrain and coerce Complainant in the exercise of his rights under the Order; that PATCO, through Mr. Winter, its Executive Vice President, took action which resulted in a charge that Complainant had been involved in a systems error, which further interferred with, restrained, and coerced Complainant, as such charge was without justification and was in bad faith 10/ as part of the plan and design to interfer with, restrain and coerce Complainant. Accordingly, the acts of interference, restraint or coercion which Messrs. Reardon, Regenhold, Ferring and Winter committed, directed, or incited within the scope of their authority as agents of PATCO became the acts of their principal, PATCO, and PATCO thereby violated Section 19(b)(1) of the Order.

Wholly apart from its responsibility as a principal, PATCO, as the exclusive bargaining representative, had a duty to represent all members of the bargaining unit without hostility or 10/ I do not question Mr. Winter's good faith, nor that he was duped by PATCO's facility representatives; but his action becomes tainted by the bad faith of PATCO's facility representatives. That is, PATCO, although it acted upon information furnished by its facility representatives, is responsible for the acts of its agents and because its agents acted in bad faith, PATCO, by its action, in reliance thereon, became a participant to such bad faith.

discrimination and to avoid abitrary conduct. The record shows that PATCO had knowledge, both through its facility representative and through its Executive Vice President, Mr. Poli, of the acts of impeding work performance of controllers to force or compel controllers to support positions of the Union. The record shows that Mr. Poli cut Mr. LaBaty off and insisted he discuss the matter with Mr. Reardon even after Mr. LaBaty told Mr. Poli that he had already discussed the matter with Mr. Reardon. Although Mr. Poli stated that he would have Mr. Reardon contact Mr. LaBaty further, Mr. Reardon never did so. Because PATCO, through its facility representatives and through Mr. Winter, took action in violation of its duty of fair representation as calculated retaliation against Complainant for the exercise of a right clearly protected by the Order, PATCO thereby violated Section 19(b)(1) of the Order.

2. Section 19(b)(3) Allegation

Section 19(b)(3) provides:

> "A labor organization shall not -
>
> "(3) coerce, attempt to coerce, or discipline, fine, or take other economic sanction against a member of the organization as punishment or reprisal for, or for the purpose of hindering or impeding his work performance, his productivity, or the discharge of his duties owed as an officer or employee of the United States."

The one conclusion on which there is likely to be unanimous agreement is that this provision will never be considered for any award for clarity of draftsmanship. It would appear that there are two related but somewhat different proscriptions which may be paraphrased as follows:

> a) A labor organization shall not - coerce, attempt to coerce, or discipline ... a member of the organization as punishment or reprisal for ... his productivity, or the discharge of his duties ..."
> b) A labor organization shall not - coerce, attempt to coerce, or discipline ... a member of the organization ... for the purpose of hindering or impeding his work performance, his productivity, or the discharge of his duties ...

The first proscription, a) above, goes to coercion, etc., because of productivity or discharge of duty. This would reach, for example, discipline because of production or work quotas (see Judge Dowd's comments in American Federation of Government Employees, Local 987 and Jerry L. Norris, Case No. 40-4790 (CO)(1974) n. 7, aff'd in part and rev'd in part, A/SLMR No. 420 (1974)). In addition, it would appear to reach inter alia, coercion, etc. for the discharge of duties, i.e., for working at all.

The second proscription, b) above, goes to coercion, etc., for the purpose of hindering or impeding work performance, productivity, or the discharge of duties.

This analysis is not intended to be all encompassing. It is recognized that other constructions may be equally valid. While "member of the organization" means to me, member of the labor organization subject to the proscription of 19(b)(3), it is conceivable that "member of the organization" could be given a much broader meaning to denote member of activity or member of the bargaining unit. Nevertheless, as I construe 19(b)(3) it means that union x shall not coerce a member of union x. As so construed Section 19(b)(3) makes it an unfair labor practice for a union to coerce its own members; it does not reach the same conduct directed against a non-member, even it such person were a member of another labor organization. As counsel for Respondents stated, "The 'legislative history' of Section 19(b)(3) reveals little or nothing. The substantive provisions of Section 19(b) were originally promulgated as a part of the Code of Fair Labor Practices, by the Civil Service Commission, under Executive Order 10988 ... Counsel for Respondents has contacted the Civil Service Commission and the Office of the Assistant Secretary and is advised that no explanation exists on the scope of the Code provisions, and nothing exists on the interpretation of Section 19(b)(3) when it was incorporated into the Executive Order." (Respondents' Brief p. 5 footnote).

It is the second proscription, b) above, which more directly applies to this case and, for the purpose of this decision, the first proscription, a) above, will be assumed, but without deciding, to be inapplicable. The second proscription, b) above, although, as Judge Dowd noted, for a violation of this section to be found some nexus between the offensive union conduct and the employee's job performance must be shown, applies to any coercion against a member of the union which has as its purpose the hindering or impeding of his job performance, his productivity, or the discharge of his duties. That is, 19(b)(3) is violated whenever a union coerces a member for the purpose of hindering or impeding his work performance, etc., without regard to the reason for the coercion. In so concluding I have given careful consideration to the Assistant Secretary's statement in American Federation of Government Employees, Local 987, supra, that,

> "In my view, a labor organization may, pursuant to Section 19(c) of the Order, subject its members to discipline, including, in appropriate cases, expulsion, to protect its continued existence, if such discipline is meted out in accordance with procedures under the labor organization's constitution or by-laws which conform to the requirements of the Order." (A/SLMR No. 420 n.5) 11/

The permissible limits of discipline are set forth in Section 19(c) of the Order while Section 19(b)(3) of the Order proscribes coercion, under any guise, for the purpose of hindering or impeding a member's work performance, productivity or discharge of his duties owed as an officer or employee of the United States.

Respondents' contention that Section 19(b)(3) applies only to interference with rights as a member of a labor orbanization is untenable. The record shows, and Respondents' concede, that action was taken against Complainant, and other controllers, which impeded their productivity and hindered their discharge of duty owed as controllers. That Local 352 and PATCO were responsible has been discussed hereinabove with respect to the 19(b)(1) allegations. The further issue with regard to Section 19(b)(3) is whether such acts of coercion were directed against a member of PATCO.

Complainant was a member of PATCO until sometime after June 25, 1975. The record shows only that Complainant submitted his resignation a couple of weeks after June 25, 1975, which would indicate that his resignation was submitted on or about July 9, 1975, and that he revoked his dues payment authorization. Respondents did not refute or challenge this testimony and Respondents did not offer any evidence as to when Complainant's resignation became effective. 12/ From all testimony and circumstances, I draw the inference and, therefore, conclude, that Complainant was a member of PATCO at the time Mr. Winter, PATCO Regional Vice President, made the charge on or about July 7, 1975, that Complainant had been involved in a systems error on June 25, 1975, and for the reasons set forth hereinabove with regard to the Section 19(b)(1) allegations, that Local 352 and PATCO were responsible for the coercion directed against Complainant, a member of PATCO, for the purpose of hindering or impeding his work performance, his productivity, or the discharge of his duties owed as an officer or employee of the United States in violation of Section 19(b)(3) of the Order. Like acts of coercion, or attempted coercion, were directed by agents of Local 352 in the scope of their authority against other members of PATCO for the purpose of hindering or impeding their work performance, their productivity, or the discharge of their duties as controllers which was also in violation of Section 19(b)(3) of the Order. PATCO, by the acts of its designated representatives, was responsible for the conduct of its designated agents and thereby violated Section 19(b)(3) of the Order as to members other than Complainant.

In addition, PATCO, with knowledge of conduct which hindered or impeded the work performance, productivity, or discharge of duties of members of PATCO, in violation of its duty of fair representation, joined in action which hindered or impeded Complainant's work performance, productivity, or the discharge

12/ Article 4, Section 5 of the FAA-PATCO Agreement provides, in part, as follows:

> "... Upon receipt of a revocation form ... the payroll office shall discontinue the withholding of dues from the employee's pay effective the first pay period for which a deduction would otherwise be made beginning after March 1, or September 1, whichever comes sooner. ..." 2 Gov. Employee Rel. Report 81: 6503

This provision appears to provide semi-annual "escape" periods. If so, Complainant may have remained a member of PATCO until on or after September 1, 1975.

of Complainant's duties as a controller by charging Complainant with involvement in a systems error on June 25, 1975, which charge was arbitrary and because of the bad faith of its agents, was made in bad faith by PATCO. Accordingly, for this further reason PATCO also violated Section 19(b)(3) of the Order.

RECOMMENDATION

Having found that Respondent PATCO, its Local No. 352, and Dennis M. Reardon, President of Local 352 and Facility Representative of PATCO, engaged in conduct which was in violation of Sections 19(b)(1) and (3) of the Executive Order, I recommend that the Assistant Secretary adopt the following order:

RECOMMENDED ORDER

Pursuant to Section 6(b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, and Section 203.26(b) of the Regulations, the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations hereby orders that Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization, MEBA, AFL-CIO, its Local Union 352, and their officers, representatives, and agents, including Dennis M. Reardon, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

a) Interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees of the Department of Transportation, Federal Aviation Administration, Air Traffic Control Tower, St. Louis, Missouri, in the exercise of their right, freely and without fear of penalty or reprisal, to form, join, and assist a labor organization or to refrain from any such activity, as guaranteed to them by Section 1 of the Executive Order, by delay in coordination in air traffic control; by refusal to approve requests for early descent of aircraft; by any threat directed at any employee because an employee has declined to invoke Article 55 of the PATCO-FAA collective bargaining agreement; by the lodging in bad faith of charges against an employee of involvement in a systems error; by any arbitrary conduct as calculated retaliation against any employee for the exercise of a right protected under the Executive Order; by interfering with, restraining, or impeding in any manner, the right of all employees to the free and unimpeded access to the complaint procedures of the Executive Order; or in any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of rights assured by Executive Order 11491, as amended.

b) Coercing, or attempting to coerce a member of the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization for the purpose of hindering or impeding his work performance, his productivity, or the discharge of his duties owed as an officer or employee of the United States, by delay in coordination in air traffic control; by refusal to approve requests for early descent of aircraft; by any threat directed at any member of PATCO because the member of PATCO has declined to invoke Article 55 of the PATCO-FAA collective bargaining agreement; by the lodging in bad faith of charges against any member of PATCO of involment in a systems error; by any arbitrary conduct against any member of PATCO as calculated retaliation against such member of PATCO for the exercise of a right protected under the Executive Order; or in any like or related manner coercing, or attempting to coerce, any member of PATCO for the purpose of hindering or impeding his work performance, his productivity, or the discharge of his duties owed as an officer or employee of the United States.

2. Take the following affirmative actions to effectuate the purposes and provisions of Executive Order 11491, as amended:

a) Post in conspicuous places in the business office of Local 352, at the National business office of Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization, MEBA, AFL-CIO, and at the Regional Office of Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization, MEBA, AFL-CIO which encompasses St. Louis, Missouri, where notices to members are customarily posted, copies of the attached Notice signed by the National President of PATCO-MEBA, by the Regional Vice President of PATCO-MEBA, for the Regions encompassing St. Louis, Missouri, and by the current St. Louis Tower Facility Representative of PATCO MEBA, which is marked "Appendix B". Said copies of the Notices shall be posted for a period of 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to members are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by PATCO-MEBA and by Local 352 to insure that said Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by other material.

b) Mail a copy of said Notice to each member of PATCO now employed at the St. Louis, Missouri, Air Traffic Control Tower and to each member of PATCO employed at the St. Louis, Missouri, Air Traffic Control Tower on June 25, 1975, but who are not now employed at the St. Louis, Missouri facility.

c) Furnish sufficient copies of said Notice to the Federal Aviation Administration for posting, if the Agency and facility agree to do so, at places at the St. Louis, Missouri, Air Traffic Control Tower where it customarily posts information to its controllers. Notices should be furnished to FAA within 14 days of the date of this Decision and Order.

d) Pursuant to Section 203.27 of the Regulations, notify the Assistant Secretary, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER CLARIFYING UNIT
OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, FOREST SERVICE, OUACHITA NATIONAL FOREST, HOT SPRINGS, ARKANSAS
A/SLMR No. 879

This case involved a petition for clarification of unit (CU) filed jointly by the National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 796 (NFFE) and the Activity seeking to clarify the status of various job classifications located in an exclusive bargaining unit at the Ouachita National Forest. The Activity took the position that employees in the various classifications were either supervisors, confidential employees, or engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity. The NFFE contended, on the other hand, that all of the classifications should be included in the unit.

The Assistant Secretary found that employees in the following classifications were supervisors within the meaning of the Order and should be excluded from the unit: Clerk (Typing), GS-4 (Technical Services); Computer Operator, GS-6; Criminal Investigator, GS-11; Supervisory Forestry Technician, GS-11 (Tree Improvement); and Supervisory Surveying Technician, GS-9. In this regard, he noted that said employees either had the authority to hire, promote, discipline and/or reward subordinate employees, or to effectively recommend such action. He also found that employees in the Clerk (Typing), GS-5 (District Clerk) and the Clerk-Typist, GS-2 (Management Services) classifications should be excluded from the exclusively recognized unit as confidential employees based on their relationship with the District Ranger or the Director of Management Services who are responsible for either formulating or effectuating management policies in the field of labor relations.

As to employees in the remaining disputed classifications, the Assistant Secretary found the evidence insufficient to establish that they were either supervisory or confidential employees. Accordingly, he ordered that the unit be clarified consistent with his findings.

DECISION AND ORDER CLARIFYING UNIT

Upon a petition duly filed under Section 6 of Executive Order 11491, as amended, a hearing was held before Hearing Officer Louis Paul Eaves. The Hearing Officer's rulings made at the hearing are free from prejudicial error and are hereby affirmed.

Upon the entire record in this case, including a brief filed by the National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 796, herein called NFFE, 1/ the Assistant Secretary finds:

In the instant joint-petition the Activity and the NFFE seek to clarify the status of employees in 18 job classifications. The Activity takes the position that employees in the disputed job classifications are confidential employees, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, or supervisors within the meaning of Section 2(c) of the Order and, therefore, should be excluded from the exclusively recognized unit. The NFFE, on the other hand, contends that there is no basis for excluding the employees in the classifications in question from its exclusively recognized unit. 2/

1/ The Activity submitted an untimely brief which has not been considered.

2/ The parties stipulated that certain named individuals in various job classifications either were or were not supervisors within the meaning of Section 2(c) of the Order; were confidential employees; or performed Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity and on these bases should be excluded from or included in the exclusively recognized unit. There is no evidence to indicate that the parties' agreement was improper. Under these circumstances, I view the agreement of the parties as a withdrawal of the request for clarification in this regard. Accordingly, I approve the withdrawal request and, therefore, find it unnecessary to make a determination as to these particular employees and classifications. Cf. New Jersey Department of Defense, A/SLMR No. 121.

The record reveals that the NFFE was certified as the exclusive representative for nonprofessional employees of the Ouachita National Forest on October 31, 1974. 3/ The mission of the Forest Service is to stimulate the effective management of forested land of state and public ownership. The National Forest System is headed by the Chief of the Forest Service and is organized into various regions each headed by a Regional Forester. The Southeast Region (Region 8), headquartered in Atlanta, Georgia, encompasses 15 National Forests, among which is the Activity, which has approximately 500 permanent and temporary employees and is headed by a Forest Supervisor who is directly responsible to the Regional Forester. Under the Forest Supervisor is a headquarters staff and 12 Ranger Districts, each of which is headed by a Forest Ranger. The headquarters staff is organized into Management Services and Technical Services.

The record reveals that the Forest Supervisor has retained hiring authority for permanent employees, and the District Rangers have been delegated hiring authority for temporary and seasonal employees. 4/ The personnel records for all personnel are maintained in the headquarters of the hiring authority involved. With regard to labor relations authority, step 2 of the parties' negotiated grievance procedure is the District Ranger level, and step 3 of the negotiated grievance procedure is the Forest Supervisor level.

Clerk (Typing), GS-4 (Technical Services); Computer Operator, GS-6; Criminal Investigator, GS-11; Supervisory Forestry Technician, GS-11 (Tree Improvement); Supervisory Surveying Technician, GS-9

The Activity contends that employees in these classifications should be excluded from the bargaining unit as supervisors within the meaning of Section 2(c) of the Order.

Clerk (Typing), GS-4 This position, currently occupied by Carol Ennis, is located in the Division of Technical Services. The record reveals that Ennis is responsible for providing clerical and administrative support to the Director of Technical Services and has one permanent employee under her direction. The evidence establishes that Ennis effectively recommended the hiring of her subordinate and that the exercise of such authority required the use of independent judgment.

3/ The certified unit is described as: "All nonprofessional employees of the Ouachita National Forest, U.S. Department of Agriculture, Forest Service, excluding management officials, professional employees, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, confidential employees, temporary employees with appointments not to exceed 90 days, employees of the Ouachita Civilian Conservation Center, and supervisors and guards as defined in Executive Order 11491, as amended."

4/ The Forest Supervisor has delegated hiring authority for permanent employees to the Director of Management Services and the Personnel Officer. Eleven of the 12 District Clerks share hiring authority for temporary and seasonal employees with their respective District Rangers.

Computer Operator, GS-6 This position, currently occupied by Bessie Reardon, is located in the Division of Management Services. The record reveals that Reardon is responsible for operating the Activity's computer terminal and related peripheral equipment, coordinating the use of the terminal, and has two permanent employees under her direction. The record also reveals that the authority exercised by Reardon in effectively recommending the hiring and subsequent promotion of her subordinates required the use of independent judgment.

Criminal Investigator, GS-11 This position, currently occupied by Edwin Outlaw, is located in the Division of Management Services. The record reveals that Outlaw serves as the primary investigator for the Ouachita and the Ozark-St. Francis National Forests in criminal cases involving the application of fire, timber, range and other resource use regulations and laws. Further, he occasionally conducts investigations of civil claims and has one permanent employee under his direction. The evidence establishes that he effectively recommended that his subordinate be retained at the end of her probationary period and, subsequently, effectively recommended that she be promoted to a higher grade.

Supervisory Forestry Technician, GS-11 (Tree Improvement) This position, currently occupied by James McMahen, is located in the Womble Ranger District. The record reveals that McMahen serves as the Seed Orchard Manager and is responsible for planning the collection and grafting of superior tree scions, outplanting, spraying and weeding of ramets, maintaining cover to prevent erosion, conducting controlled pollination, and collecting cones. He has three permanent employees working under his direction, and the evidence establishes that he effectively recommends the hiring and promotion of his subordinates.

Supervisory Surveying Technician, GS-9 These positions are located in the Fourche and Jessieville Ranger Districts. The incumbents are primarily responsible for providing technical guidance for locating, monumenting, recording, and maintaining property boundaries. Each has either three or four permanent employees under his direction. The record reveals that the incumbents in this classification possess the authority to hire or to effectively recommend hiring, disciplining and rewarding of subordinates and that the exercise of such authority requires the use of independent judgment.

Based on all the above circumstances, I find that employees in the above-noted classifications are supervisors within the meaning of Section 2(c) of the Order. Thus, the evidence establishes that they possess the authority to hire, promote, discipline and/or reward subordinate employees, or to effectively recommend such action. Accordingly, I find that employees classified as Clerk (Typing), GS-4 (Technical Services); Computer Operator, GS-6; Criminal Investigator, GS-11; Supervisory Forestry Technician, GS-11 (Tree Improvement); and Supervisory Surveying Technician, GS-9, should be excluded from the exclusively recognized unit.

Civil Engineering Technician, GS-7; Forestry Technician, GS-5 (Timber Stand Improvement); Forestry Technician, GS-6 (Timber Marking); Forestry Technician, GS-7 (Timber Marking and Sales Administration); Forestry Technician, GS-7 (Recreation Area Maintenance); Forestry Technician, GS-9 (Timber Sales Administration); Supervisory Forestry Technician, GS-5 (Sale Area Betterment); Supervisory Forestry Technician, GS-6 (Sale Area Betterment); Supervisory Forestry Technician, GS-11 (Fire Management); Surveying Technician, GS-7

The Activity contends that employees in these classifications should be excluded from the bargaining unit on the basis that they are supervisors within the meaning of Section 2(c) of the Order.

Civil Engineering Technician, GS-7 5/ These positions are located in 6 of the 12 Ranger Districts, and the incumbents are primarily responsible for providing technical engineering assistance for all aspects of surveying, construction, and maintenance of improvements, including buildings, roads, and signs. They each have three permanent employees and occasional temporary employees working under their direction. While employees in this classification have authority to recommend hiring subordinate employees, there is no evidence that such recommendations are effective. The record reveals that employees in this classification routinely approve annual leave and training and make routine performance evaluations of employees under their direction. The record also discloses that such direction as may be given by the incumbents to other employees does not require the use of independent judgment.

Forestry Technician, GS-5 (Timber Stand Improvement) 6/ This position, occupied by Guy Meek, is located in the Tiak Ranger District. Meek's duties primarily involve tree planting, pest control, cone collection and making regeneration checks of areas previously planted. The Tiak District organization chart indicates that Meek has one permanent subordinate. The position description discloses no supervisory authority as set forth in Section 2(c) of the Order.

Forestry Technician, GS-6 (Timber Marking) 7/ These positions are located in 7 of the 12 Ranger Districts, and the incumbents are primarily responsible for selecting and marking timber for cutting. Employees in this classification each direct four permanent employees in addition to occasional seasonal and temporary employees. Although the incumbents in this classification make recommendations concerning the hiring of temporary and seasonal personnel, the evidence establishes that such recommendations are not effective. The record reveals that the incumbents are authorized to routinely approve annual leave and training and make routine performance evaluations of employees under their direction. However, the record further reveals that such direction as may be given to other employees does not require the use of independent judgment.

5/ The parties stipulated that the testimony of James Chambliss should be considered applicable to five other employees of the Activity in this classification.

6/ The parties stipulated that the determination of the supervisory status of Guy Meek should be based solely on position description No. 8U1431, dated March 17, 1975.

7/ The parties stipulated that the testimony of Oscar Briggs should be considered applicable to six other employees of the Activity in this classification.

Forestry Technician, GS-7 (Timber Marking and Sales Administration) 8/ These positions are located in 4 of the 12 Ranger Districts. The incumbents' timber marking responsibilities are the same as those of the Forestry Technician, GS-6 (Timber Marking) noted above. In addition, they assist in administering the timber sales program. The record reveals that the incumbents each direct three permanent employees. Although the incumbents are authorized to recommend rewards for employees under their direction, there is no evidence that such recommendations are effective, or that such direction as may be given to other employees requires the use of independent judgment.

Forestry Technician, GS-7 (Recreation Area Maintenance) This position, occupied by Clovis Price, is located in the Womble Ranger District. Price's duties from June through August involve inspecting and maintaining the recreation areas of the district. During the winter months, he is assigned to timber marking or tree planting activities. He has two permanent employees under his direction only for the summer months. The record reveals that, although Price may routinely direct other employees, such direction as may be given does not require the use of independent judgment.

Forestry Technician, GS-9 (Timber Sales Administration) This position, occupied by Jean Hawkins, is located in the Fourche Ranger District. The record reveals that Hawkins is primarily responsible for administering the timber sales program and that he directs one permanent employee. Hawkins is authorized to routinely approve annual leave and training and to make routine performance evaluations of the subordinate employee. However, the evidence establishes that such direction as may be given to his subordinate employee does not require the use of independent judgment.

Supervisory Forestry Technician, GS-5 (Sale Area Betterment) 9/ These positions are located in 5 of 12 Ranger Districts, and the incumbents are primarily responsible for the release of desirable reproduction, regeneration release, pruning of crop trees, site preparation, prescribed burning, precommercial thinning, planting, and seeding of the forest. Employees in this classification each direct either 4 or 5 permanent employees in addition to occasional seasonal employees. While employees in this classification have authority to recommend hiring certain employees, there is no evidence that such recommendations are effective. The record discloses that the incumbents are authorized to routinely approve leave and training and make routine performance evaluations of employees under their direction. However, the record further discloses that such direction as may be given to other employees does not require the use of independent judgment.

8/ The parties stipulated that the testimony of Floyd Irons should be considered applicable to three other employees of the Activity in this classification.

9/ The parties stipulated that the testimony of Raymond Head should be considered applicable to five other employees of the Activity in this classification.

Supervisory Forestry Technician, GS-6 (Sale Area Betterment) 10/ These positions are located in 3 of the 12 Ranger Districts, and the incumbents' responsibilities are essentially the same as those of the Supervisory Forestry Technician, GS-5 (Sale Area Betterment) noted above. The incumbents each direct three permanent employees in addition to several temporary employees. While the incumbents in this classification make work priority recommendations, there is no evidence that such recommendations are effective. The record reveals that the incumbents are authorized to routinely approve annual leave and training and make routine performance evaluations of employees under their direction. However, the record further reveals that such direction as may be given to other employees does not require the use of independent judgment.

Supervisory Forestry Technician, GS-11 (Fire Management) This position, occupied by Bobby McLane, is located in the Division of Technical Services. McLane serves as a technical assistant to the Fire Management Staff Officer and performs operational duties associated with the execution of the Activity's Fire Management Program. The three permanent employees who work under McLane are not physically located in the same office as McLane. The record reveals that McLane is authorized to routinely approve annual leave and training in the course of directing other employees. However, the record also reveals that such direction as may be given by the incumbent to other employees does not require the use of independent judgment.

Surveying Technician, GS-7 This position, occupied by Henry Brown, is located in the Mena Ranger District. For eight months of the year, Brown's duties primarily involve locating and establishing property boundaries and maintaining a land corner card file. From May through August, Brown is responsible for the management of the district's recreation area. While engaged in surveying, he directs three permanent employees, who are borrowed from the Timber Stand Improvement Section. During the summer months, Brown directs two lifeguards. The evidence does not establish that Brown exercises effective authority to recommend the promotion or discharge of employees under his direction. While Brown directs other employees, the record does not reveal that such direction, as may be given, requires the use of independent judgment.

Based on all of the foregoing circumstances, I conclude that employees in the above noted classifications are not supervisors within the meaning of Section 2(c) of the Order. Thus, the evidence establishes that such employees do not possess, or exercise the authority to hire, transfer, suspend, lay off, recall, promote, discharge, assign, reward, or discipline other employees, or to adjust their grievances, or to effectively recommend such actions. Moreover, the authority exercised by these employees in directing subordinates is of a routine nature and does not require the use of independent judgment. Accordingly, I find that employees classified as Civil Engineering Technician, GS-7; Forestry Technician, GS-5 (Timber Stand Improvement); Forestry Technician, GS-6 (Timber Marking); Forestry Technician, GS-7 (Timber Marking and Sales Administration); Forestry Technician, GS-7 (Recreation Area Maintenance); Forestry Technician, GS-9 (Timber Sales Administration); Supervisory Forestry Technician, GS-5 (Sale Area Betterment); Supervisory Forestry Technician, GS-6 (Sale Area Betterment); Supervisory Forestry Technician, GS-11 (Fire Management); Surveying Technician, GS-7, 11/ should be included in the unit.

Clerk (Typing), GS-5 (District Clerk); Clerk-Typist, GS-2 (Management Services)

The Activity contends that employees in these classifications should be excluded from the bargaining unit as either supervisory employees, confidential employees or employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity.

Clerk (Typing), GS-5 (District Clerk) 12/ This position is located in each of the 12 District Offices. The incumbent, the chief clerical in each District Office, is responsible for providing clerical and administrative assistance to the District Ranger and for coordinating and directing the business management activities of the district. The District Ranger is responsible for all labor relations matters within his district. The record reveals that the incumbents attend staff meetings where personnel and labor relations matters are discussed, and type and handle confidential material pertaining to promotions, reductions-in-force, grievances, and employee discipline.

Clerk-Typist, GS-2 (Management Services) This position, occupied by Barbara Jeffers, is located in the Division of Management Services. Jeffers is a telephone operator-receptionist and serves as the personal secretary for the Director of Management Services, who has been designated the Activity's chief labor relations representative. The record discloses that she types confidential labor relations correspondence between the Activity and the NFFE, management positions on employment and labor relations matters, and memoranda of labor relations meetings. Further, she also has access to labor relations files and materials pertaining to reorganizational plans.

11/ In regard to the Surveying Technician, GS-7 classification, see U.S. Department of Agriculture, Forest Service, Francis Marion and Sumter National Forest, A/SLMR No. 227.

12/ The parties stipulated that the testimony of Bernice Keener and Patsy White should be considered applicable to the ten other employees of the Activity in this classification.

Because the employees in these classifications assist and act in confidential capacity to individuals who formulate or effectuate management policies in the field of labor relations, I find that they are confidential employees. 13/ Accordingly, I find that employees classified as Clerk (Typing), GS-5 (District Clerk) 14/ and Clerk-Typist, GS-2 (Management Services) should be excluded from the unit.

Clerk-Typist, GS-4 (Secondary Clerk)

The Activity contends that employees in this classification should be excluded from the bargaining unit as confidential employees.

The position of Clerk-Typist, GS-4 (Secondary Clerk) 15/ is located in 5 of the 12 Ranger Districts. The incumbents perform a variety of clerical, typing and receptionist duties under the direction of the Clerk (Typing), GS-5 (District Clerk). The record reveals that, occasionally, they type grievances, minutes of labor relations meetings, and correspondence between the NFFE and the Activity.

I conclude that the evidence does not establish that employees in this classification serve in a confidential capacity to an individual who formulates or effectuates management policies in the field of labor relations. 16/ Thus, even though the incumbents type labor relations materials, in my judgment, standing alone, the typing of such materials does not warrant the exclusion of an employee from a bargaining unit. 17/ Accordingly, I find that employees classified as Clerk-Typist, GS-4 (Secondary Clerk) are not confidential employees and, therefore, should be included in the unit.

13/ Cf. Virginia National Guard Headquarters, 4th Battalion, 111th Artillery, A/SLMR No. 69. 14/ In view of the foregoing, it is considered unnecessary to decide whether employees in the Clerk (Typing), GS-5 (District Clerk) classification should be excluded from the unit on any other basis.

15/ The parties stipulated that the testimony of Gretta Brunt should be considered applicable to two other employees of the Activity in this classification.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS
SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER CLARIFYING UNIT
OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

PUGET SOUND NAVAL SHIPYARD,
U.S. DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
BREMERTON, WASHINGTON
A/SLMR No. 880

This case involved a petition for clarification of unit (CU) filed by the International Federation of Professional and Technical Engineers, Local 12, AFL-CIO seeking to include approximately 70 GS-12 project engineers employed in the Activity's Combat Systems Office, Planning Department and Production Department in its exclusively recognized unit of professional employees. The Activity contended that these employees are ineligible for inclusion in the unit inasmuch as they are supervisors and, in one case, a management official.

Based on the record developed at the hearing, the Assistant Secretary concluded that certain of the disputed employees are supervisors within the meaning of the Executive Order and should be excluded from the exclusively recognized unit, and certain others are not supervisors within the meaning of the Executive Order, and should be included in the unit. As to the one employee alleged to be a management official, the Assistant Secretary found the evidence insufficient to support this contention, and concluded that this employee should also be included in the unit. Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary clarified the unit consistent with his findings.

DECISION AND ORDER CLARIFYING UNIT

Upon a petition duly filed under Section 6 of Executive Order 11491, as amended, a hearing was held before Hearing Officer John Scanlon. The Hearing Officer's rulings made at the hearing are free from prejudicial error and are hereby affirmed.

Upon the entire record in this case, including a brief filed by the Activity, the Assistant Secretary finds:

The Petitioner, International Federation of Professional and Technical Engineers, Local 12, AFL-CIO, hereinafter referred to as the Union, is the exclusive representative of a unit of all graded professional employees in the field of engineering and related physical sciences at the Puget Sound Naval Shipyard, Bremerton, Washington. In this proceeding the Union seeks to clarify the status of approximately 70 GS-12 project engineers who work in the Activity's Combat Systems Office, Production Department and Design Division, of the Planning Department. The Union contends that the disputed employees should be included in its exclusively recognized unit, while the Activity takes the position that the disputed project engineers are supervisors and, in one case, a management official and, thus, should be excluded from the unit.

The mission of the Activity is to provide logistic support for assigned ships and service craft; to perform authorized construction, conversion, overhaul, repair, alteration, drydocking, and outfitting of surface ships and submarines; and other duties as assigned.

Supervisory General Engineer, GS-801-12, Technical Publications Unit, Code 244.82; Supervisory Physicist (Sound), GS-1310-12, Acoustic Range Branch, Code 246.1, 246.2, and 246.3; Supervisory General Engineer, GS-801-12, Acoustic Range Branch, Code 246.4; Supervisory Naval Architect, GS-871-12, Stability and Preservation Branch, Code 250.1; Supervisory

Naval Architect (Arrangements), GS-871-12, Arrangement and Access Branch, Code 250.2; Supervisory Naval Architect, GS-871-12, Stowage and Fittings Branch, Code 250.3; Supervisory Naval Architect (Structures), GS-871-12, Structual (Hull) Branch, Code 250.4; Supervisory Naval Architect (Structures), GS-871-12, Structural (FDNS) Branch, Code 250.5

It was stipulated by both parties that George R. Wing, a Supervisory Naval Architect, was sufficiently similarly situated to other GS-12 project engineers in the above codes and job titles as to make any decision made as to Mr. Wing's supervisory status applicable to all the above listed GS-12 project engineers.

In his capacity as a Supervisory Naval Architect, Mr. Wing is responsible, among other things, for the performance of his section, including the supervision of his crew. In this regard, the evidence establishes that Wing assigns and directs the work of his crew utilizing independent judgment and that he effectively recommends quality step increases for the employees of his section.

Under these circumstances, I find that Wing, and all the other GS-12 project engineers in the subject classifications, are supervisors as defined in Section 2(c) of the Order and should be excluded from the exclusively recognized unit.

Supervisory General Engineer, GS-801-12, Main Propulsion Machinery (Propulsion Machinery and Fuels) Branch, Code 260.1; Supervisory Mechanical Engineer, GS-830-12, Main Propulsion Machinery (Propulsion Machinery and Fuels) Branch, Code 260.1; Supervisory Mechanical Engineer, GS-830-12, Main Propulsion Machinery (Steam Generation) Branch, Code 260.2; Supervisory Mechanical Engineer, GS-830-12, Auxiliary Machinery (Hull Machinery) Branch, Code 260.3; Supervisory Mechanical Engineer, GS-830-12, Auxiliary Machinery (Catapult and Compressed Gas), Branch Code 260.4; Supervisory Mechanical Engineer, GS-830-12, Auxiliary Machinery (Fluid Power) Branch, Code 260.5; Supervisory Mechanical Engineer, GS-830-12, Service Piping Branch, Code 260.6; Supervisory Mechanical Engineer, GS-830-12, Environmental Services Branch, Code 260.7

It was stipulated by both parties that James Jolin, a Supervisory Mechanical Engineer, was sufficiently similarly situated to other GS-12 project engineers in the above codes and job titles as to make any decision as to Mr. Jolin's supervisory status applicable to all the above listed GS-12 project engineers.

The record reveals that Mr. Jolin's duties include, among other things, the analysis and assignment of engineering work to individual members of his crew. In this regard, the evidence establishes that Jolin assigns and directs the work of his crew utilizing independent judgment.

Under these circumstances, I find that Jolin, and all the other GS-12 project engineers in the subject classifications, are supervisors as defined by Section 2(c) of the Order and should be excluded from the exclusively recognized unit.

Supervisory Electrical Engineer, GS-850-12, Electrical Control Systems Branch, Code 270.1; Supervisory Electrical Engineer, GS-850-12, Electrical Application Branch, Code 270.2; Supervisory Electronics Engineer, GS- 855-12, Electronics Application Branch, Code 270.3; Supervisory Electrical Engineer GS-850-12, Electrical Installation and Special Project Branch, Code 270.4

It was stipulated by both parties that Frank Mapes, a Supervisory Electrical Engineer, was sufficiently similarly situated to other GS-12 project engineers in the above codes and job titles so as to make any decision made as to Mr. Mapes' supervisory status applicable to all the above listed GS-12 project engineers.

In this regard the record reveals that Mr. Mapes assigns and directs the work of his crew utilizing independent judgment and that he effectively recommends incentive awards for his crew.

Under these circumstances, I find that Mapes, and the GS-12 project engineers stipulated to be similarly situated, are supervisors as defined by the Order and should be excluded from the exclusively recognized unit.

Supervisory Electrical Engineer, GS-830-12, New System Development Design, Electrical Design and Documentation Branch, Code 280.1 and Supervisory Mechanical Engineer, GS-830-12, Mechanical Design, Production Engineering and System Analysis Branch, Code 280.2

It was stipulated by both parties that Michael A. Hattamer, a Supervisory Mechanical Engineer, GS-12, was sufficiently similarly situated to all other project engineers in the aforementioned job titles and codes as to make any decision made as to Mr. Hattamer's supervisory status applicable to all the above-listed GS-12 project engineers. 1/

The record does not contain sufficient evidence to establish that Mr. Hattamer, in his role as a GS-12 project engineer, had been vested with supervisory authority. Particularly noted was the fact that Mr. Hattamer does not possess the authority to hire, transfer, suspend, layoff, recall, discharge, promote, adjust grievances or effectively discipline employees. While the record reveals that he can recommend such actions, it does not clearly show that such recommendations are effective. Further, the record reveals that Mr. Hattamer is monitored and directed by his immediate supervisor in his assignment and direction of work to his crew, and that such direction as he does give is routine in nature, within established guidelines and dictated by established procedures.

Under these circumstances, I find that Mr. Hattamer, and all the other GS-12 project engineers in the above subject classifications, are not supervisors as defined by Section 2(c) of the Order and should be included in the exclusively recognized unit.

1/ Testimony regarding Mr. Hattamer's duties related to his detail to a GS-13 project engineer's position, an acknowledged supervisory position, was not considered in the evaluation of his supervisory status as a GS-12.

Electronics Engineer, GS-855-12, FBM Fire Control Branch, Code 191.21; Supervisory Electronics Engineer, GS-850-12, Navigation NTD/COMM Branch, Code 191.31; Supervisory Electronics Engineer, GS-855-12, ECM/COMM Branch, Code 191.33; Supervisory Electronics Engineer, GS-855-12, Digital Systems Branch, Code 191.51; Supervisory Electronics Engineer, GS-855-12, Fire Control Systems Branch, Code 191.52; Supervisory General Engineer, GS-801-12, Ships Planning and Coordination Branch, Code 191.53

It was stipulated by both parties that Henry Horn, Electronics Engineer, GS-12, Code 191.21, was sufficiently similarly situated to other project engineers in the subject classifications so that any decision made as to Mr. Horn's supervisory status would be applicable to all of them.

The record reveals that Mr. Horn's duties include the analysis and assignment of engineering work to individual members of his crew. The evidence establishes that these assignments and the concurrent direction of crew members' performance require the use of independent judgment.

Under these circumstances I find that Mr. Horn, and the other GS-12 project engineers in the subject classification, are supervisors as defined by Section 2(c) of the Order and should be excluded from the exclusively recognized unit.

Supervisory Industrial Engineer, GS-896-12, Refueling Facilities Section, Code 381.1; Supervisory Industrial Engineer, GS-896-12, Support Services Section A, Support Services Section B, Support Services Section C, Codes 381.2A, 381.2B, 381.2C; Supervisory Industrial Engineer, GS-896-12, Advance Planning and Arrangements Section, Code 381.3; Supervisory Industrial Engineer, GS-896-12, Methods and Preventive Maintenance Section, Code 385.2; Supervisory Industrial Engineer, GS-896-12, Production Facilities Engineering Section, Code 385.3; Supervisory Industrial Engineer, GS-896-12, Facilities Program Management Section, Code 385.4; Supervisory Industrial Engineer, GS-896-12, Waterfront Support Engineering Section, Code 385.5; Supervisory Industrial Engineer, GS-896-12, Trident Support Section, Code 386.1

It was stipulated by both parties that David W. Curley, Supervisory Industrial Engineer, GS-12, Code 385.2, was sufficiently similarly situated to other project engineers in Codes 381.1 - 386.1 listed above so as to make any determination as to Mr. Curley's supervisory status applicable to all.

The record reveals that Mr. Curley's duties include the analysis and assignment of engineering work to individual members of his crew through the use of independent judgment and that, in addition, he is the first step supervisor authorized to resolve grievances under the parties' negotiated agreement.

Under these circumstances, I shall exclude Mr. Curley, and the other GS-12 project engineers stipulated to be similarly situated, from the exclusively recognized unit as supervisors.

Supervisory General Engineer, GS-801-12, Test Coordination Division, Code 365

Two persons testified concerning this position: George Hutchison, Branch Head (GS-13) of the Submarine Test Planning Branch, Code 365.2, and Merlin Embree, a GS-12 project engineer within Code 365.2. Both parties stipulated that Mr. Embree was sufficiently similarly situated to other project engineers in Code 365 so that any determination made as to Mr. Embree's supervisory status would be appliable to all. It was further stipulated that the testimony of Mr. Embree and Mr. Hutchison was representative of Code 365.

Upon review of the record with respect to the above noted classification, with particular emphasis on the evidence developed concerning the alleged supervisory status of Mr. Embree, I find insufficient basis upon which to make a determination of the eligibility of employees classified as Supervisory General Engineers, GS-12, Test Coordination Division, Code 365. Under these circumstances, I make no finding as to the eligibility of these employees.

General Engineer, GS-801-12, Quality Control Program Manager, Code 191.54

The Quality Control Program Manager, Code 191.54 is a position presently filled by Alvin V. Jensen. The record discloses that Mr. Jensen's assignments come directly from the Combat Systems Superintendent, a naval officer. Among others, Mr. Jensen's functions include insuring the accuracy of data collections, and the monitoring of projects to insure the use of proper procedures and scheduled completion. Mr. Jensen also represents the Combat Systems Office in managerial meetings and furnishes the Combat System Officer's interpretation of new Navy regulations and suggestions as to the best and most cost effective method for their implementation. Mr. Jensen's duties further entail the preparation of the Combat Systems Procedures Manual. The record discloses that Jensen's proposals and recommendations require the independent evaluation and approval of his Combat Systems Officer, and there is no evidence to establish that Jensen's recommendations are effective in the formulation of the Combat Systems Office's policies.

Under these circumstances, I find that Mr. Jensen is not a management official within the meaning of the Order. The record reveals that Jensen is a highly trained employee providing expert resource information or recommendations with respect to policy, rather than an active participant in the ultimate determination as to what policy in fact will be. 2/ Accordingly, I find that the employee in the subject classification should be included in the exclusively recognized unit.

ORDER

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the unit sought to be clarified herein, in which exclusive recognition was granted to the International Federation of Professional and Technical Engineers, Local 12, AFL-CIO, on September 18, 1974, be, and it hereby is, clarified by including in such unit employees in the following classifications and codes:

Supervisory Electrical Engineer, GS-830-12, New System Development Design Electrical Design and Documentation Branch, Code 290.1; Supervisory Mechanical Engineer, GS-830-12, Mechanical Design, Production Engineering and System Analysis Branch, Code 280.2; and General Engineer, GS-801-12, Quality Control Program Manager, Code 191.54; and by excluding from such unit employees in the following classifications and codes;

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR
ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS
SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

GENERAL SERVICES ADMINISTRATION, NATIONAL PERSONNEL RECORDS CENTER,
ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI
A/SLMR No. 881

This case involved an amended unfair labor practice complaint filed by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 900 (Complainant) alleging that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by not informing the Complainant of its decision to disestablish the Congressional Correspondence Office until after written instructions were sent to the supervisors and by approving the changes before any notice was sent to the Complainant. The Respondent took the position that the Complainant was given reasonable notification and ample opportunity to comment on the impact of the decision prior to its effective date and that it was willing to delay implementing the decision if the Complainant had presented any alternative proposals. The Complainant, on the other hand, maintained that bargaining over impact and implementation did not occur.

The Administrative Law Judge concluded that the Respondent had not violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order. In this regard, he found that there was opportunity for the Complainant to request bargaining concerning the impact of the decision prior to its implementation; that the Respondent met with the Complainant and explained its plan, but the Complainant offered no adverse criticism or alternative suggestions; and that the Respondent did not refuse to negotiate with respect to the impact of its decision. Nor did the Respondent's actions constitute an improper bypass or undermine the Complainant's status as the employees' collective bargaining representative.

Noting particularly the absence of exceptions, the Assistant Secretary adopted the findings, conclusions, and recommendation of the Administrative Law Judge and ordered that the complaint be dismissed.

RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

Statement of the Case

Pursuant to a complaint and amendements filed on August 11, 23, and November 9, 1976, respectively, under Executive Order 11491, as amended, by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local Union 900, (hereinafter called the Union and/or Complainant), against the General Services Administration National Personnel Records Center, St. Louis, Missouri, (hereinafter called the Respondent and/or Activity), a Notice of Hearing to be held on January 18, 1977 was issued by the Assistant Regional Director for the Kansas City Region on November 12, 1976.

The Complaint, as amended, alleges that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Executive Order 11491 (herein called the Order) by reason of the following: "On May 25, 1976, Mr. J. D. Kilgore, Assistant Director for Military Records, and then Acting Director, National Personnel Records Center, provided the Union with a copy of a memorandum subject: Disestablishment of Congressional Correspondence Office dated May 25, 1976. The Union was never officially informed of the change until written instructions were sent to all supervisors. Further, the changes were approved by Mr. Kilgore before any notice was sent to the Union."

A hearing was held on January 18, 1977 on the captioned matter in St. Louis, Missouri. All parties were afforded full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witnesses and to introduce evidence bearing on the issues involved herein.

Upon the basis of the entire record, including my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor and memoranda and/or briefs submitted by counsel or representative for the respective parties, I make the following findings, conclusions and recommendation:

Background Information

At the General Services Records Center in St. Louis, Missouri on July 12, 1973 there was a disastrous fire that destroyed some 17 or 18 million military personnel records. Before the fire, Congressional inquiries and correspondence were handled in the various record center branches by employees at the GS-6 level based on the level of difficulty that had been established for this type of work. 1/

Because of the voluminous increase of congressional inquiries and correspondence following the fire a Congressional Liasion Staff Office was established on April 15, 1974. Congressional inquiries and Correspondence previously handled by the various branches was done in the Congressional Correspondence Office at the National Personnel Records Center. Employees at the GS-6 level or above including those who had previously handled congressional inquiries and correspondence were transferred into the new Congressional Correspondence Office to handle the work load. When the emergency situation which prompted the establishment of the Correspondence Office as a part of NCPM ceased there was a decision made on May 10, 1976, to disestablish it effective June 7, 1976. All personnel handling the inquiries were transferred to the respective branches that had handled the work before the emergency Congressional Correspondence Office was established. It is the circumstances leading to and surrounding the decision to disestablish the Congressional Correspondence Office that lead to the Unfair Labor Practice Complaint.

1. The Complainant Local Union AFGE No. 900, is and was at all times material herein, the exclusive representative for the unit comprised of all non-supervisory employees working at the National Records Center, GSA, 9700 Page Boulevard, St. Louis, Missouri. 2/

1/ The various branches included the Air Force Reference Branch, Army Reference Branch, Navy Reference Branch and Military Operations Branch.

2/ Certain exceptions indicated not relevant to this decision.

2. On May 10, 1976, a decision to disestablish the Congressional Correspondence Office was made by Warren B. Griffin, Director, National Personnel Center after discussing the matter with the Assistant Director and other members of the staff.

3. A draft copy of a proposed directive to the staff announcing that the emergency situation which prompted establishment of the Correspondence Office as a part of NCPM no longer existed and the Congressional Correspondence Office would be disestablished effective June 7, 1976 was forwarded to the Complainant Union with a covering memorandum on May 25, 1976. The memorandum stated in part:

> "Request your comments, together with any suggestions you may care to offer by close of business June 4, 1976."

4. The Complainant Union President in a letter dated May 26, 1976 subject: Disestablishment of Congressional Correspondence Office, NCPM and NPRG Mail Routing Guide (MPR and CPR) both dated May 25, 1976 Requested "that the effective date for implementation be deferred," and suggested June 7, 1976 as an appropriate date for a meeting and discussion.

5. The Respondent's Acting Director on May 27, 1976 replied that: "The disestablishment of the Congressional Correspondence Office is a matter that we must proceed with immediately." He suggested June 1 or 2 as optional dates to "discuss procedures to be followed in reassignment of employees currently in the Congressional Correspondence Office." He further stated that as to the case working level in the proposed change to the NPRC Mail Routing Guide, the discussion of that matter can be deferred as requested. June 8, 1976 was suggested as an appropriate meeting date regarding this subject. The latter change is an issue separate and apart from the disestablishment of the Congressional Correspondence Office involved in this proceeding.

6. The consultation meeting as to the disestablishment of the Congressional Correspondence Office was arranged and held between Complainant and Respondent representatives on June 4, 1976.

7. The procedures to be followed in reassignment of employees in the Congressional Correspondence Office were discussed at the June 4, 1976 consultation meeting as well as matters of anticipated impact. 3/ It was announced at the meeting that all employees in the Congressional Correspondence Office would be transferred to other units at their current grade.

8. At the hearing, oral and documentary evidence was presented that employees in the Congressional Correspondence Office had been transferred to other branches in grade, and had continued to work in the same building and during the same hours as they previously worked. They continued to handle Congressional Correspondence on their new assignment, although they served in various branches. No adverse actions as to any of the employees who had previously worked in the Congressional Correspondence was claimed or shown.

9. The record establishes that the Complainant was afforded a reasonable opportunity at the June 4, 1976 meeting with Respondent to make meaningful input as to impact of the decision to disestablish the Congressional Correspondence Office. Further, the record establishes that the Complainant did in fact discuss impact as to the affected employees but after hearing the plan offered no comment or any alternative to management for consideration.

10. Initially, disestablishment of the Congressional Office was contemplated to occur on May 31, 1976, but was postponed to June 7, 1976 to allow time for Complainant to discuss implementation plans and impact affecting the employees.

11. The plan of implementation discussed between Respondent and Complainant at the June 4, 1976 meeting was sufficiently flexible to accommodate reasonable change had such been requested.

3/ See Respondent's Exhibit 8 relating to Memorandum of the Consultation meeting held on June 4, 1975. The memorandum was not referred to the Union but detail of events were brought out at the hearing. In this connection see Transcript pages 32, 33, 93, 94 and 95.

Discussion and Evaluation

The Complainant charges that the Respondent violated Sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by its action in disestablishing the Congressional Correspondence Unit Office without notifying the Union and not affording the Union an opportunity to make its input before written instructions were sent to Respondent's supervisors.

Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of Executive Order 11491 provides that " Agency management shall not (1) interfere with, restrain or coerce an employee in the exercise of rights assured by this Order; and (6) refuse to consult, confer or negotiate with a labor organization as required by this Order.

Section 11(a) of the Order, as amended imposes upon any Agency the obligation to meet at reasonable times and confer in good faith with respect to personnel policies and practices and matters affecting working conditions of unit employees.

Section 11(b) of the Order, however, makes it clear that the obligation to meet and confer (imposed by Section 11(a)) does not include matters with respect to the mission of the Agency; its budget; its organization; the number of employees; and the numbers, types, and grades of positions of employees assigned to an organizational unit, work project or tour of duty; the technology of performing its work; or its internal security practices.

The above exception contained in Section 11(b) with respect to those normally categorized as "management perogatives" is applicable only to the initial decision or action of an Agency. Thus, as noted in the last sentence of Section 11(b) and as interpreted by the Assistant Secretary and Federal Labor Relations Council, the Agency or activity is obligated, however, to consult and confer with respect to the impact of any such "initial decision" or action on unit personnel. 4/

4/ Immigration and Naturalization Service, FLRC No. 70-A-10 (April 15, 1971); Plum Island Animal Disease Laboratory, FLRC No. 71-A-11. (July 9, 1971); Griffis Air Force Base, FLRC No. 71-A-30 (April 19, 1973); Norton Air Base A/SLMR 261 (April 30, 1973); U.S. Department of Interior, Bureau of Indian Affairs, A/SLMR No. 34 (January 9, 1974); New Mexico Air National Guard, A/SLMR No. 362 (February 28, 1974); Army Air Force Exchange Service, A/SLMR No. 451 (October 31, 1974); Federal Railroad Administration, A/SLMR No. 418 (July 31, 1974).

The Respondent had the right under Section 11(b) of the Executive Order unilaterally to close the Congressional Correspondence Office Unit in furtherance of performing its work projects and the technology utilized in performing such work. Nevertheless, an agency or activity is obligated to afford the exclusive representative a reasonable opportunity to meet and confer concerning the impact and implementation of decisions taken with respect to subjects within the ambit of Section 11(b) of the Executive Order. United States Air Force Electronics System Division (AFSC) Hanson Air Force Base and Local 975, National Federation of Federal Employees, A/SLMR No. 571 (1975). The covering memorandum to the Union attached to the May 25, 1976 announcement of the disestablishment of the Congressional Correspondence office requested comments and suggestions by the close of business on June 4, 1976. There was opportunity for the Complainant to request bargaining or consultation concerning the impact of the decision prior to implementation. The Complainant did in fact meet with the Respondent on June 4, 1976, but after Respondents plan was explained concerning the affected employees prospective assignments it offered no adverse criticism or alternative suggestions. Therefore, Respondent did not refuse to consult, confer or negotiate with respect to impact of its decision in violation of Section 19(a)(6) of the Executive Order nor did the Respondents action constitute an improper bypass or undermining of the status of its employee's collective bargaining representative in violation of Sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order. Internal Revenue Service, Philadelphia Service Center, A/SLMR No. 771.

Despite the retention rights provided by Section 12(b) of the Order, 5/ management cannot escape an obligation to

5/ Section 12(b) of the Order provides that:

Management officials of the Agency retain the right, in accordance with applicable laws and regulations (1) to direct employees of the agency; (2) to hire, promote, transfer, assign, and retain employees in positions within the agency, and to suspend, demote discharge, or take other disciplinary action against employees; (3) to relieve employees from duties because of lack of work or other legitimate reasons; (4) to maintain the efficiency of Government operations entrusted to them; (5) to determine the methods, means and personnel by which such operations are to be conducted; and (6) to take whatever action may be necessary to carry out the mission of the agency in situations of emergency.

bargain with a union as to procedures to be followed in disestablishing a Congressional Correspondence Office unit when employees are adversely affected or their working conditions changed or impaired. The Federal Labor Council stated in Veterans Administration Research Hospital, Chicago Illinois, 74-A-31 that the reservation of decision making and agency authority is not intended to bar negotiations of procedures to the extent consonant with law and regulations. 6/ The Assistant Secretary followed and applied this principle in Department of the Navy, Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, Great Lakes Naval Hospital, Illinois, A/SLMR No. 289. 7/ In the latter case reduction in force notices had been issued by the agency without notification to the union. While conceding that the employer was not obliged to consult on the RIF decision, it was held that consultation was mandatory as to the procedures management intended to observe in choosing which employees were to be subject to the RIF action.

In this case, the announcement of the disestablishment of the Congressional Correspondence Office unit was given to the Union at about the same time as Activity staff officials were informed; the union was asked for its comments and suggestions and met with the Respondent on June 4, 1976, when procedures and impact as to the decision were outlined and discussed. The Congressional Correspondence Office which had been established in April 1974 to handle an emergency situation had served its purpose and its functions were transferred back to the branch offices that had handled such before the disastrous fire. All employees in the unit were transferred in grade and continue to handle Congressional correspondence as a part of their current duties. They continue to work the same hours and in the same building.

The evidence adduced at the hearing and the documentary exhibits submitted, in my opinion support the position of the Respondent that it afforded the Complainant the opportunity for meaningful exploration regarding impact as to disestablishment of the Congressional Correspondence Office and procedures that were to be followed as a result of the decision.

6/ See Naval Public Works Center, FLRC, 71-A-56.

7/ Also see Federal Aviation Administration, National Aviation Facilities, Experimental Center, Atlantic City, New Jersey A/SLMR No. 329.

Conclusion

In view of the foregoing, I conclude that the Complainant has not met its burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the Respondent violated Sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order, as alleged.

Recommendation

Upon the basis of the above findings and conclusions, I recommend that the Complaint herein against the Respondent be dismissed.

A/SLMR No. 882

This case involved a petition for clarification of unit (CU) filed by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3627, (AFGE) seeking to clarify the status of employees designated as the Secretary to the Administrative Law Judge In Charge (ALJIC) located in each of the Activity's 28 field offices. The Activity contended that employees in said position were confidential employees and should be excluded from the AFGE's exclusively recognized unit. The AFGE contended that the position in question should remain in the unit.

The Assistant Secretary found that the Secretary to the ALJIC was a confidential employee and should be excluded from the unit. In this regard, the evidence established that the ALJICs were involved in the effectuation of the Activity's labor relations policies and that the Secretaries to the ALJICs acted as their principal secretary and, in this capacity, had custodial responsibility for labor relations files containing union-management correspondence; typed confidential memoranda from the ALJICs to the Activity concerning labor relations matters; and would be required to prepare material in connection with grievances and other labor relations matters in accordance with the directions of the ALJICs.

Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary ordered that the unit be clarified consistent with his findings.

DECISION AND ORDER CLARIFYING UNIT

Upon a petition duly filed under Section 6 of Executive Order 11491, as amended, a hearing was held before Hearing Officer Robert F. Woodland, Jr. The Hearing Officer's rulings made at the hearing are free from prejudicial error and are hereby affirmed.

Upon the entire record in this case, the Assistant Secretary finds:

The Petitioner, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3627, herein called AFGE, seeks to clarify the status of employees designated as the Secretary to the Administrative Law Judge In Charge (ALJIC) at 28 field offices located within the Activity. The AFGE contends that the employees involved are not confidential employees and should be included within its exclusively recognized unit. The Activity contends, on the other hand, that employees in the disputed position assist and act in a confidential capacity to the ALJIC who formulates and effectuates management policies in the field of labor relations and, therefore, they should be excluded from the exclusively recognized unit as confidential employees.

The record reveals that the AFGE was certified as the exclusive representative for all nonprofessional employees of the Activity's field offices on May 26, 1976. 1/ The mission of the Activity is to conduct hearings and to render appeals decisions for the Social Security Administration pursuant to Title II of the Social Security Act. The Bureau of Hearings and Appeals (Bureau) is a component of the Social Security Administration, which is, in turn, a component of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. The Bureau is headed by a Director, and is organized into ten Regions, including the Activity, each headed by a Regional Administrator. The Activity, headquartered in Atlanta, Georgia, encompasses eight states and has 28 field offices. Each of the field offices is headed by an ALJIC, and has one employee designated as the Secretary to the ALJIC. The field offices vary in size from nine Administrative Law Judges and 30 staff personnel, to two Administrative Law Judges and six staff personnel.

The evidence establishes that the ALJICs effectuate management policies in the field of labor relations. Thus, they are authorized to adjust grievances at the second step; they have overall personnel and administrative responsibilities for their field offices; they have been consulted by the Activity on collective bargaining agreement provisions proposed by the AFGE; they are the reviewing officials in the field offices for performance appraisals; and they establish certain working conditions for their respective field offices.

The record reveals that the secretaries to the ALJICs perform a variety of administrative and clerical duties for the ALJICs including acting as their principal secretary. In this regard, among other things, the record reveals that the secretaries have custodial responsibility for labor relations files containing union-management correspondence; they type confidential memoranda from the ALJICs to the Activity concerning labor relations matters; they prepare correspondence concerning employee performance and discipline; and they would be required to prepare material in connection with grievances and other labor relations matters in accordance with the directions of the ALJICs.

Under these circumstances, I find that employees designated as the Secretary to the ALJIC at each of the 28 field offices herein are confidential employees inasmuch as they assist and act in a confidential capacity to officials who are involved in effectuating management policies in the field of labor relations. 2/ Thus, as noted above, employees in this classification type confidential memoranda concerning labor relations matters for the ALJICs and would be required to prepare material in connection with the ALJICs' handling of employee grievances and other labor relations matters. It has been held previously that an employee who is the principal secretary and acts in a confidential capacity to a person who is involved in the formulation and/or effectuation of management policies in the field of labor-management relations is a confidential employee. 3/ In the instant case, the evidence establishes that the

1/ The certified unit is described as: "All nonprofessional employees employed at field offices of Region IV, Bureau of Hearings and Appeals excluding professional employees, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a clerical capacity, confidential employees, management officials, and supervisors as defined in the Order."

3/ See Federal Aviation Administration, Airway Facilities Sector 37, Tampa, Florida, A/SLMR No. 647; Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, Social Security Administration, Bureau of Field Operations, (Continued)

ALJICs are involved in the effectuation of the Activity's labor-management relations policies, and that the secretaries to the ALJICs act as their principal secretary and perform confidential duties for them with respect to labor relations matters. Accordingly, I shall exclude the Secretary to the ALJIC in each of the Activity's 28 field offices from the exclusively recognized unit.

ORDER

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the unit sought to be clarified herein, for which the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3627, was certified on May 26, 1976, be, and it hereby is, clarified by excluding from said unit the employees designated as the Secretary to the Administrative Law Judge In Charge in each field office of Region IV of the Bureau of Hearings and Appeals.

A/SLMR No. 883

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by Local 2382, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, (AFGE) alleging that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (2) of the Order by discrimination and harrassment of Marie Whitecotton because of her union activities and participation in the bargaining unit as Steward and Women's Coordinator for the AFGE.

The Administrative Law Judge concluded that the Respondent had not violated Section 19(a)(1) and (2) of the Order. In this regard, the Administrative Law Judge found, based on the record and pursuant to his credibility resolutions, that there was no evidence of anti-union animus by management and that, although Whitecotton's discharge did not appear to be free from unfairness, her union activities did not appear to have had a part in the Respondent's actions toward her.

The Assistant Secretary, citing his policy of not disturbing credibility resolutions of Administrative Law Judges unless the preponderance of all the relevant evidence established that such resolutions clearly are incorrect, adopted the findings, conclusions and recommendation of the Administrative Law Judge, and ordered that the complaint be dismissed.

Francis X. Burkhardt, Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations

1/ The Respondent excepted to certain credibility findings made by the Administrative Law Judge. In Navy Exchange, U.S. Naval Air Station, Quonset Point, Rhode Island, A/SLMR No. 180, the Assistant Secretary held that as a matter of policy he would not overrule an Administrative Law Judge's resolution with respect to credibility unless the preponderance of all the relevant evidence established that such resolution clearly was incorrect. Based on a review of the record in this case, I find no basis for reversing the Administrative Law Judge's credibility findings.

RECOMMENDED DECISON AND ORDER

Preliminary Statement

This case arises under Executive Order 11491 as amended. It was initiated by a complaint dated May 5, 1976 and filed May 10, 1976. The complaint alleged that the Respondent violated Sections 19(a)(1) and (2) of the Executive Order by discrimination and harassment of Marie Whitecotton "because of her Union activities and participation in the bargaining unit as Steward and Women's Coordinator for AFGE Local 2382 -- but not limited thereto." On June 2, 1976 the Respondent responded to the complaint. It denied any violations, made a number of affirmative allegations, and asserted that the complaint should be dismissed for lack of sufficiency.

On September 22, 1976 the Regional Administrator issued a Notice of Hearing to be held November 18, 1976 in Phoenix, Arizona. No action was taken on the motion to dismiss. Hearings were held in Phoenix on November 18 and 19, 1976. Both parties were represented by counsel who examined and cross-examined witnesses and introduced exhibits. Both parties made closing arguments and filed timely briefs.

Preliminary Matter

Accompanying the Regional Administrator's Notice of Hearing was his "scope letter", setting forth to the parties his personal advice and suggestions on the issues to which he suggested the parties should adduce evidence. The "scope letter" in this case is not in the record but the typical such letter, probably all such letters, conclude with the statement that his advice was not meant to be all inclusive of the evidence that might be introduced and that the parties could develop other relevant evidence.

On September 29, 1976 the Respondent wrote to the Regional Administrator. It stated that while it understood the scope letter was not determinative of what the issues were, it was disturbed by the Regional Administrator including two issues in the scope letter because they were not raised by the complaint, and to prepare to defend on those issues would generate additional costs in time and money. It therefore moved that the Regional Administrator reconsider his letter and delete his reference to the two issues mentioned in his letter that were not within the ambit of the complaint.

On October 15, 1976 the Regional Administrator referred that Motion to the Administrative Law Judge. 1/

At the hearing the Respondent again urged its motion. I denied the motion on the ground that the Regional Administrator's scope letter set forth his personal views and I could not by my fiat declare that the Regional Administrator's views were changed. 2/

The Complainant, Local 2382, has been since 1964 the certified exclusive representative of two units of the V.A. Hospital in Phoenix. One of the units consists of the professional employees of that Hospital and the other consists of the non-professional employees; both units have the usual exclusions. The Canteen Service is a Facility of the Hospital. There are about 500 employees in the non-professional unit. About 14 of them are employed in the Facility.

On September 14, 1975 Marie Whitecotton began employment as a probationary employee as a Sales Clerk in the Canteen Service, and remained a probationary employee throughout her employment to April 9, 1976. Her principal duty was to operate a cash register but she also had other duties. 4/ There were two cash registers in the canteen, one mechanical and the other manual. The manual register did not add the prices; the drawer opened when a single item was registered and the highest price it could register was $5.99; if more than one item was purchased through that counter the various prices were added with pencil and paper and only the total registered. Mrs. Whitecotton preferred working on the manual register even though the cash drawer frequently stuck and the register sometimes had to be banged for the drawer to open and there was sometimes difficulty in closing the drawer. Because she preferred working on it, she was usually assigned to that register. Mrs. Whitecotton never complained that the register malfunctioned although she was supposed to report any defective equipment.

2/ Tr. 13, 15, 16.
3/ An unusually large proportion of the factual matters in this case was sharply controverted. In addition, about three of the numerous witnesses were not entirely credible, and about an equal number were somewhat confused.
4/ Exh. C-1B.

After working in the canteen a while Whitecotton asked Carol Schiefelbein, a clerk in the office of the Canteen Officer, by telephone from her home, about the union and Schiefelbein advised her to stay away from it because it was trouble. Nevertheless, in November 1975, Whitecotton became a member of the Complainant. Later, on December 10, 1975, Schiefelbein was promoted to the position of Administrative Assistant to the Canteen Officer, a supervisory position. In December 1975 Whitecotton became the Complainant's Women's Educational Director. Her activities as such were entirely intra-union and did not involve any contacts with the Respondent.

On December 18, 1975 Whitecotton attended a one-day conference of union Women's Educational Directors in Scottsdale, Arizona, a suburb of Phoenix. On her return she planned to attend a similar conference scheduled to be held February 13-15, 1976 in Tucson and asked for annual leave for that period. She was told she could have such leave if nothing intervened to prevent it. (She did not attend that conference because of a disabling injury sustained in January 1976.)

Late in December, 1975 Whitecotton was made the union steward for the Canteen Service. She did not in that capacity have any dealings with the Respondent; nothing arose from then until her termination that called for her to take up anything with management nor does the record indicate she did anything else in that capacity. Although the collective agreement of the parties called for the Complainant formally to notify the Respondent of the appointment of a steward within three days of the appointment, the Complainant did not give such notification with respect to Whitecotton until April 5, 1976, more than three months later, after she had been given notice that her employment was terminated effective April 9, 1976. In February, 1976 the President of the Complainant told an Employment-Relations Specialist in the Personnel Office that Whitecotton had become a steward. There is no evidence, and I do not find, that such information was communicated by the Specialist to the Personnel Officer or to the Canteen Officer or to anyone else.

Michael LeMeire was the Respondent's Canteen Officer from June, 1974, to July, 1976 when he was transferred to a similar position in the Los Angeles V.A. Hospital. He was absent on extended sick leave from February 1, 1975 to about September 9, 1975. During that period he was a patient in the Hospital and maintained some intermittent contact with the Canteen Service. On his return he employed Whitecotton as a Sales Clerk. A couple of days after Whitecotton began her employment on September 14, 1975, Le Meire called a meeting of all employees in the Service so that he could meet the new employees and try to explain how the operation was run. Whitecotton testified that at that meeting LeMeire suggested that if any employee had a labor relations problem he would appreciate it if the employee came to him before going to "the little red building" which suggestion, Whitecotton understood to mean, before going to the union with it. The President of Local 2382, Basil Reynolds, worked in research in a one-story red brick building; the Hospital building is white. LeMeire denied having made such statement. None of the other witnesses, regardless of whether they testified on behalf of the Complainant or the Respondent, had ever heard, prior to the hearing in this case, the expression "the little red building" as a reference to the union President or the place he worked. I do not find that LeMeire made that statement.

When Whitecotton began her employment she first received on-the-job training in operation of the cash registers, with an experienced employee running the register with Whitecotton observing and then Whitecotton performing the sales clerk's duties with the experienced employee observing. This was done for several days a few hours each day. On October 2, 1975 a formal training session was held on the functions and duties of a sales clerk, and training sessions were held thereafter from time to time, generally weekly.

The accepted, tolerable range of inaccuracy in operating the cash registers was to have a discrepancy in the amount rung on a register and the cash received of $3.00 per week, either under or over. The procedure for determining errors in cash-register operation, and for attributing discrepancies to a particular employee, was substantially less than necessary to assure that blame for discrepancies was properly placed. For example, the operation of a register might change hands during the day, as on lunch breaks and other breaks, but no check was made at such times and the employee primarily responsible for operation during a particular period was considered solely responsible for discrepancies during that period. Thus an employee might have operated a register only 70% or 80% of the time during a period yet was considered responsible for all the discrepancy during that period. Also, the method of checking on the accuracy of the checker was not always reliable. During LeMeire's long absence on sick leave the Personnel Department had made a study of the operation of the canteen because of complaints by employees and the union and had found that improvement should be made in individual accountability, but on LeMeire's return he made no change in procedure. He saw no need for change.

Almost from the beginning of Whitecotton's employment LeMeire, applying the method of determining accuracy and reliability described above, was dissatisfied with Whitecotton's performance. On October 16, 1975 he found her to have been in error by $11.82, far beyond tolerable limits, and counselled her on cash-register operation. On December 17 he found a shortage of $19.10. There were other discrepancies of more that $3.00 in a week, either over or under the correct amounts.

In November 1975 Whitecotton was injured on the job but managed to keep working with the help of medication. In January 1976 she was again injured by straining her back while performing non-register duties and was disabled and went on leave.

In February 1976 Whitecotton returned but worked only four and a half hours and went back on sick leave. Since her January disability she had contracted a bladder infection and had need to go to the restroom more often that was normally necessary. She told Schiefelbein her problem. She testified that Schiefelbein told her she could go to the restroom only during her two coffee breaks and her lunch break. I find that Whitecotton believed that that was Schiefelbein's instruction but that she misunderstood Schiefelbein. Schiefelbein denied having given such instructions. There had been a problem of operators of cash registers leaving the register unattended without telling anyone where they were going. Schiefelbein testified that upon Whitecotton's telling her of her need for frequent use of the restroom she told her that apart from her regular breaks she should not leave the register unattended without telling someone where she was going. Although Schiefelbein was not entirely credible on some other matters, with respect to this matter I credit Schiefelbein's testimony.

Whitecotton returned to work on March 15, 1976. She was told by LeMeire and Schiefelbein not to do any heavy lifting because of her previous back injury but just to work at the check-out counter. On March 16 her register was checked and a discrepancy of $10.22 was found. The next day a discrepancy of $2.00 was found. On March 17 LeMeire issued a memorandum to Whitecotton advising her of the foregoing with respect to the cash register for which she was "primarily responsible", that such operation "will not be tolerated", and that if Whitecotton needed assistance in improving her cash register operation she should come to LeMeire for help. The memorandum advised Whitecotton also that she did not cooperate sufficiently with the other employees of the canteen and was not a member of the team; that such had been the situation before her extended sick leave but it had become worse upon her return. 5/ Whitcotton spoke to LeMeire about the memorandum and asked him who had complained about her lack of cooperation, but he did not tell her.

The next day, March 18, LeMeire issued another memorandum to Whitecotton. It recounted the previous day's memorandum. It stated also that at the beginning of the day on March 18 her cash register was $4.10 over, at closeout at noon it was $7.99 over, that a discrepancy of $3.00 in a week was the limit of tolerance, that a discrepancy of $3.89 in three hours was "unimaginable", and that if her cash register operation did not "drastically improve immediately" he would be forced to terminate her government service. 6/ The memorandum stated also that another employee had complained about her attitude and that her attitude "will be tolerated no longer", and that if it did not improve she would be removed from government service.

When Whitecotton was appointed a steward in December she was given a steward's badge showing that she was a steward, but she did not wear it until March 19, after she had been issued the two warnings.

On March 23, 1976, after several more spot checkouts of her cash register, Whitecotton was given a memorandum recounting her prior cash register performance, and reminding her that to be retained as a probationary employee her job performance must be satisfactory. It stated that subsequent checkouts had shown additional large discrepancies, that her performance was unsatisfactory, and that because of her inability to operate a cash register satisfactorily her appointment would be terminated April 9, 1976. 7/ No mention was contained in this memorandum of Whitecotton's lack of cooperation with her fellow employees.

On March 26, after the letter of termination and before its effective date, the Complainant, in accordance with Section 203.2(a)(1) of the Regulations, served an unfair-labor-practice charge on the Respondent. Two conferences were held on the charge. At both of them the Complainant asked LeMeire for the names of the employees who complained of Whitecotton's lack of cooperation but LeMeire did not respond.

Discussion and Conclusions

The ultimate question in this case is not whether Whitecotton's performance on the job merited or did not merit the termination of her probationary appointment. The critical question is whether she was discriminated against, as alleged, because of her union activities.

The Complainant correctly states that to find a violation of Sections 19(a)(1) and (2) in this case it must be found that (1) Whitecotton was engaging in union activity, (2) the Respondent had knowledge of her union activity, (3) the Respondent showed animus against her union activity or against union activity in general, and (4) the Respondent took action against her because of her union activity. 8/ There can be little doubt that the Respondent's method of checking the cash registers and attributing responsibility for discrepancies to individual employees left much to be desired and could unfairly attribute responsibility to the wrong employee, and that the Respondent's Personnel Office was aware of this deficiency, but any such unfairness is unrelated to union activities. Let us take up the four elements of the violation alleged in this case as the Complainant sets them forth.

1. There is no doubt that Whitecotton engaged in union activities. At the very least she was a member. Later she also became Women's Educational Director. Her only activity in that capacity shown by the record is attendance at a one-day conference on a Saturday in Scottsdale, Arizona, a suburb of Phoenix. Even if she engaged in other activities in that capacity the parties agree that it was entirely intra-union and involved no contacts with management. Still later she became a steward. The record does not indicate any activity at all in that capacity; at least it is agreed by the parties that in that capacity she had no dealings or contacts with management. Such "activities" are not likely to incur the displeasure of management although it is conceivable that they might.

2. I conclude, although the evidence is conflicting, that Schiefelbein knew that Whitecotton had become a member of the union. I conclude also that Schiefelbein knew that Whitecotton was going to attend the Scottsdale conference. It is more doubtful that LeMeire knew, at any time prior to

8/ Complainant's Brief, p. 1.

March 19, 1976, that Whitecotton engaged in her union "activities" but I conclude, on the basis of tenuous and contradictory evidence, that he did. I do not mean that he gave false testimony. Some of his answers were carefully couched to conform to literal truth in response to the literal question, one of the factors that leads me to the conclusion that he knew before March 19 that Whitecotton was a union steward and hence a union member. No one else in management was shown to have known of Whitecotton's union "activities" except that, as I have found above, in February 1976 an Employment-Relations Specialist in the Personnel Office was told in the course of a conversation that Whitecotton had become a steward. However, I expressly did not find that the Specialist communicated that information to anybody.

3. With respect to anti-union animus by management, the evidence is quite skimpy. Before Schiefelbein became part of management as Administrative Assistant to LeMeire, when she was only a clerk in LeMeire's office, on two separate occasions, when asked by another employee in the canteen whether the union was worth joining, she advised the fellow employee who made the inquiry to stay away from the union, that it was trouble. There is no evidence that her attitude continued after she became Administrative Assistant and no evidence that it changed. In the absence of evidence that it changed, I conclude that it continued.

With respect to LeMeire, the evidence concerning any union animus is not only contradictory but even if the union's evidence is believed is too tenuous to find animus on his part. Whitecotton testified, and LeMeire denied, that when Whitecotton, in December 1975 asked LeMeire for leave in February 1976, LeMeire asked what it was for, she told him it was because of a meeting of Educational Directors, and he asked what kind of education she was teaching. When her counsel asked her what was derogatory to the union in such a remark she testified it was because he had a smirk on his face when he said it. 9/ LeMeire denied having had that exchange. But even if we accept Whitecotton's version, a conclusion of union animus on the part of LeMeire can hardly be predicated on Whitecotton's interpretation of an expression on LeMeire's face when he uttered words otherwise innocuous, especially when that is the only incident that could even be construed to show animus on the part of LeMeire. Even if he in fact smirked it could have been for innumerable reasons other than harboring anti-union animus.

4. I do not conclude that the termination of Whitecotton's employment was motivated by her union activity or that she was harassed because of her union activity.

The only person in management shown to have union animus was Schiefelbein, but she was shown only to have had it before she became part of management and she did not have firing authority. Whitecotton's "union activity", so far as management was concerned, was minimal. There is nothing to indicate she was a militant member or that if she was that management knew it. As Women's Educational Director her activities did not bring her in conflict or even in contact with management; it was a purely intra-union activity. There was no evidence of any activity at all by Whitecotton as a union steward after she accepted her appointment as such in December 1975; the witnesses on both sides testified that she had no dealings or contact with management as a union steward, and there was no contradictory evidence. I necessarily conclude that there were no such dealings or contact. Rather than terminating her employment because of such activity one would suppose management, even a management hostile to unionism, would welcome such a quiescent union steward. In any event, it certainly does not indicate that her union acitvity played any part in the decision to terminate her employment.

Furthermore, there is no evidence that any other members of the union were discriminated against. There were other members, at least one in the canteen, and she did not even allegedly suffer discrimination. That other employee in the canteen who was a union member had her dues checked off; Whitecotton did not.

In sum, although Whitecotton's discharge does not appear to be free from unfairness, her union activities do not appear to have had a part in such unfairness or her subsequent termination. I reach this conclusion for the reasons stated above but primarily because her activities for the union did not cause her to have any dealings or contact with management and so far as the record shows consisted exclusively of attending a one-day conference on a weekend in a suburb of the City in which she was employed. The unfair treatment of an employee who is a union adherent and steward gives rise to suspicion, but suspicion is not enough to support a violation of the Executive Order. 10/ Here the unfairness seems to have been uniformly imposed and to have had no relationship to union activity. The Complaint should be dismissed.

RECOMMENDATION

The complaint should be dismissed.

DECISION ON APPEAL FROM
ASSISTANT SECRETARY SUPPLEMENTAL DECISION

Background of Case

This appeal arose from a supplemental decision of the Assistant Secretary in which he found that two proposed bargaining units in the Defense Supply Agency,1/ Defense Contract Administration Services Region (DCASR), Cleveland, Ohio, were appropriate and left undisturbed certifications previously issued to Local 3426, American Federation of Government Employees (AFGE) and Local 73, National Federation of Federal Employees (NFFE), respectively.

The Assistant Secretary's decision and supplemental decision herein grew out of separate petitions filed by AFGE and NFFE seeking to represent units of certain employees of field activities of the Cleveland DCASR located in Akron and Columbus, respectively. The Cleveland DCASR is one of nine regions of the Defense Supply Agency (DSA or the agency), all of which provide contract administration services and support for the Department of Defense, as well as other Federal agencies. The Cleveland DCASR covers Ohio, Kentucky, Michigan, western Pennsylvania, and Canada. It consists of a headquarters organization and field activities which are divided into five Defense Contract Administration Services Districts (DCASD's)—Detroit, Cincinnati, Grand Rapids, Dayton, and Cleveland—and nine Defense Contract Administration Services Offices (DCASO's) located in Toledo, Akron, Columbus, Ottawa and at five privately owned manufacturing plants. The field activities perform basic mission functions of the region in their respective geographic areas. Generally, the DCASD's have administrative responsibility for the activities of the DCASO's. Approximately 2,000 civilian employees are employed throughout the Cleveland DCASR. All of the employees of the region are subject to uniform personnel policies and practices established at regional headquarters. In addition to units of 69 and 65 nonprofessionals respectively in the Akron and Columbus DCASO's, which are the subject of the instant case, there were, at the time of the Assistant Secretary's supplemental decision, five other exclusive bargaining units within the region: a unit composed of nonprofessional employees in headquarters and a plant DCASO in Cleveland; a unit of DCASR employees in three counties in the states of Ohio and Pennsylvania; a unit of employees in the Cincinnati DCASD; a unit in the Toledo DCASO; and a unit composed of employees assigned to the Detroit DCASD, the Grand Rapids DCASD, and the Ottawa DCASO.

In March 1974, the Assistant Secretary found appropriate the separate units in the Akron, Ohio DCASO and in the Columbus, Ohio DCASO sought by AFGE and NFFE, respectively.[2/] (Elections were thereafter conducted in the units involved and certifications of representative were issued to AFGE and NFFE.) The Council subsequently set aside that decision, concluding that in reaching his decision the Assistant Secretary had relied on an erroneous interpretation and application of Merchant Marine,[3/] and remanded the case to him for reconsideration and disposition consistent with its decision. Defense Supply Agency, Defense Contract Administration Services Region (DCASR), Cleveland, Ohio, Defense Contract Administration Services Offices (DCASO's), Akron, Ohio and Columbus, Ohio, A/SLMR No. 372, FLRC No. 74A-41 (Aug. 13, 1975), Report No. 80. In that decision, the Council further stated that the Assistant Secretary, upon reconsideration, should carefully examine the existing regulatory framework of DSA, including the DCASR's, and then weigh the impact thereon of Merchant Marine as properly interpreted and applied to the existing circumstances in order that the three criteria in section 10(b) of the Order[4/] could be properly applied. Moreover, the Council stated that in

4/ Section 10(b) provides, in pertinent part, that:

> A unit may be established on a plant or installation, craft, functional, or other basis which will ensure a clear and identifiable community of interest among the employees concerned and will promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations.

so applying Merchant Marine, the Assistant Secretary should carefully consider that the amendments to section 11(a) as adopted in E.O. 11838[5/] "were not designed to render fragmented units appropriate."

In this regard, the Council referred to section V.1. of the Report accompanying E.O. 11838 for the proposition that the changes in section 11(a) of the Order were intended to "complement" the recommendations of the Council relating to the consolidation of bargaining units.[6/] The Council stated that those recommendations (which were adopted by the President) had as their principal purpose "to reduce the unit fragmentation that had previously developed and to encourage the creation of more comprehensive bargaining units in the interest of the entire program." The Council quoted from section IV of the Report accompanying E.O. 11838 which concluded:[7/]

> We further feel that the Assistant Secretary can do much to foster this policy in carrying out his functions of deciding other representation questions including the appropriateness of newly sought units. Accordingly, in all representation questions, equal weight must be given to each of the three criteria in section 10(b) of the Order. By doing so, the result should be broader, more comprehensive bargaining units.

Upon reconsideration, the Assistant Secretary found, based on the entire record, "consistent with the earlier determination herein, that the units sought are appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under the Order." In so ruling, the Assistant Secretary determined that the employees in each of the claimed units share a clear and identifiable

> Sec. 11. Negotiation of agreements. (a) An agency and a labor organization that has been accorded exclusive recognition, through appropriate representatives, shall meet at reasonable times and confer in good faith with respect to personnel policies and practices and matters affecting working conditions, so far as may be appropriate under applicable laws and regulations, including policies set forth in the Federal Personnel Manual; published agency policies and regulations for which a compelling need exists under criteria established by the Federal Labor Relations Council and which are issued at the agency headquarters level or at the level of a primary national subdivision; a national or other controlling agreement at a higher level in the agency; and this Order. community of interest separate and distinct from other employees of DCASR Cleveland. Further, noting the Council's previous decision in these cases (FLRC No. 74A-41, supra) as well as the Council's Tulsa AFS decision,[8/] the Assistant Secretary found that the claimed units would promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations, and that agency management's contentions to the contrary were "at best, conjectural and speculative and . . . not supported by the record herein."

In finding that the units sought would promote efficiency of agency operations, the Assistant Secretary, citing his decision in Defense Supply Agency, Defense Contract Administration Services Region, San Francisco, A/SLMR No. 559 (Sept. 16, 1975), rejected the agency's argument that such units would result in fragmentation of the region and increased costs and inconvenience because the administration of personnel and labor relations policies was centralized at region headquarters. In so ruling, he stated that the agency's argument "related more to the appropriateness of the broader unit, rather than to the potential adverse impact resulting from the establishment of the claimed units upon the efficiency of agency operations," and noted further the absence of any countervailing evidence that the already-existing less than regionwide units in the Cleveland DCASR have failed to promote the efficiency of the agency's operations. Similarly, in finding that the claimed units would promote effective dealings, the Assistant Secretary again cited the absence of countervailing evidence regarding any lack of effective dealings experienced in the other, less than regionwide units already in existence in the Cleveland DCASR, and noted further that, subsequent to the Assistant Secretary's initial decision herein (A/SLMR No. 372), the chief of the Akron DCASO negotiated a complete agreement which was approved by the Regional Commander, and that the chief of the Columbus DCASO was in the process of negotiating a complete agreement.

In conclusion, the Assistant Secretary, again citing and relying upon his decision in Defense Supply Agency, Defense Contract Administration Services Region, San Francisco, A/SLMR No. 559, supra, stated that, in his view, the foregoing determination was not inconsistent with the expressed policy of the Report accompanying Executive Order 11838:

> When Section 11(a) of the Order is considered in conjunction with the principle set forth . . . in the Preamble to the Order that efficient administration of the Government is benefited by employee participation in the formulation and implementation of personnel policies and practices affecting conditions of employment, it is evident that the Order not only is intended to encourage negotiations at the local level to the maximum extent possible with respect to > these matters, but that such negotiations are desirable as they must perforce promote effective dealings between employees and the agency management with which the particular employees are most closely involved.

Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary left undisturbed the certifications previously issued to AFGE Local 3426 in Akron and to NFFE Local 73 in Columbus.

The Defense Supply Agency appealed this decision to the Council. Upon consideration of the agency's petition for review, the Council determined that a major policy issue is presented by the supplemental decision of the Assistant Secretary, namely: Whether the Assistant Secretary's decision is consistent with and promotes the purposes and policies of the Order, especially those reflected in section 10(b). None of the parties filed a brief on the merits. Pursuant to section 2411.16(b) of the Council's rules, the Assistant Secretary intervened in the case, becoming a party to the proceedings, and filed a brief. The Council, pursuant to section 2411.52 of its rules, granted the agency and unions leave to file supplemental arguments in response to the brief of the Assistant Secretary. The agency filed supplemental arguments.

As previously described, the Assistant Secretary found in his supplemental decision that separate units of 69 and 65 nonprofessional employees at two DCASO's within the Cleveland DCASR were appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition, relying substantially upon his reasoning and conclusion in Defense Supply Agency, Defense Contract Administration Services Region, San Francisco, A/SLMR No. 559. The major policy issue raised herein is whether the instant decision is consistent with and promotes the purposes and policies of the Order, especially those reflected in section 10(b).

On December 30, 1976, the Council issued its consolidated decision in Defense Supply Agency, Defense Contract Administration Services Region (DCASR), San Francisco, California, Defense Contract Administration Services District (DCASD), Salt Lake City, Utah, A/SLMR No. 461, FLRC No. 75A-14; Defense Supply Agency, Defense Contract Administration Services Region, San Francisco, A/SLMR No. 559, FLRC No. 75A-128; Defense Supply Agency, Defense Contract Administration Services Region (DCASR), San Francisco, Defense Contract Administration Services District (DCASD), Seattle, Washington, A/SLMR No. 564, FLRC No. 76A-4 (Dec. 30, 1976), Report No. 119, which presented, in a similar factual setting, the identical major policy issue involved in the instant case. In its consolidated decision, herein referred to as the consolidated DCASR decision or cases, the Council set aside and remanded the decisions of the Assistant Secretary. The Council concluded that the Assistant Secretary's decisions therein finding appropriate and directing an election in each of three separate units in the San Francisco DCASR were inconsistent with the purposes of the Order and, further, that equal application of the three criteria in section 10(b) and the resulting consistency with the purposes of the Order would dictate a finding that none of the units sought constituted a unit appropriate for purposes of exclusive recognition under the Order.

The Assistant Secretary, as intervenor in the instant case, requests that the Council reconsider its decision in the consolidated DCASR decision and urges that the Council let stand the two disputed unit certifications previously issued in the Cleveland DCASR. The Council has carefully considered the entire record in the case, including the brief of the Assistant Secretary and the views of the agency in response thereto. The Council hereby reaffirms the principles enunciated in the consolidated DCASR decision and, for the reasons fully explicated by the Council in that decision, which are equally applicable herein, finds that the Assistant Secretary's supplemental decision in the instant case is inconsistent with and fails to promote the purposes and policies of the Order, especially those reflected in section 10(b) and, further, that neither of the units sought by the unions is appropriate for purposes of exclusive recognition under the Order.9/

The Council, in response to matters discussed by the Assistant Secretary in his brief, wishes to amplify in a number of respects the policies and principles enunciated in the consolidated DCASR decision and applied in the present case:

1. Responsibility of the Assistant Secretary to develop a complete evidentiary record.

In Tulsa AFS, the Council stated (at 7-8):

9/ In so concluding, the Council must disagree with the Assistant Secretary's reliance in his supplemental decision upon the course of the parties' negotiations since his original decision and direction of elections in A/SLMR No. 372 as a factor to support his finding that the claimed units will promote effective dealings. Apart from other considerations, it is contrary to the purposes of the Order, in the Council's opinion, to require agency management to meet and confer in good faith with the unions certified as a result of the Assistant Secretary's decision and direction of elections and then to use the product of such negotiations to support the original appropriate unit determination, particularly where agency management's only recourse would be to refuse to meet and confer with the unions in good faith and thereby risk an unfair labor practice finding. See Headquarters, United States Army Aviation Systems Command, A/SLMR No. 168, 1 FLRC 473 [FLRC No. 72A-30 (July 25, 1973), Report No. 42].

> The appropriate unit determination process is non-adversary in nature. It is designed to ensure that any unit found appropriate will provide a clear and identifiable community of interest among the employees involved, and will promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. Before making a final decision concerning the appropriateness of a particular unit, therefore, the Assistant Secretary must develop as complete an evidentiary record as possible regarding each of the three criteria and must carefully consider and evaluate that evidence. The integrity and fairness of the process under the Order demands no less.
> Where the Assistant Secretary believes that the evidence furnished by the parties is not sufficient to enable him to affirmatively determine that a particular unit will satisfy the three appropriate unit criteria of section 10(b), the Assistant Secretary must actively solicit such evidence from the parties in order to develop the requisite record. Where the parties fail or are unable to respond to the Assistant Secretary's solicitation, the Assistant Secretary will have to base his decision on the information available to him, making the best-informed judgment he can under the circumstances, keeping in mind, of course, the requirement that any unit found appropriate must meet the tests of section 10(b) of the Order.

Thus, the Council noted that parties to a representation proceeding are responsible for providing the Assistant Secretary with all information relevant to the appropriate unit criteria that is within their knowledge and possession, but emphasized that the Assistant Secretary must actively solicit such evidence as necessary to enable him to make a fully-informed judgment as to whether a particular unit will satisfy each of the three 10(b) criteria. In this regard, the Council further stated in Tulsa AFS (at 10 n. 8):

> [T]here is a need for a sharper degree of definition of the criteria of effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations to facilitate both the development and presentation of evidence pertaining to those criteria by agencies and labor organizations, and the qualitative appraisal of such evidence by the Assistant Secretary in appropriate unit determinations. As he has done with the community of interest criterion, therefore, the Assistant Secretary should develop subsidiary factors or indicators which will serve as guidelines in determining effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. In this way, each of the policy goals to be achieved in unit determinations will have an equal degree of precision and, hopefully, will receive the necessary and desirable equality of emphasis in representation proceedings.

The Assistant Secretary, in finding appropriate one of the units sought in the consolidated DCASR cases, had particularly noted:

> . . . the absence of any specific countervailing evidence submitted by the Activity as to a lack of effective dealings and efficiency of operations in those regions of the DSA where less than region-wide units have been recognized or certified and where there currently exist negotiated agreements . . . .

In its consolidated DCASR decision, the Council dealt with this statement by relying on the requirements articulated in Tulsa AFS and found (at 22-23) that:

> [A] review of the record reveals that the Assistant Secretary failed to make an affirmative effort to develop as complete a record as possible with regard to the criteria of "effective dealings" and "efficiency of agency operations." While the testimony and arguments advanced by the activity as to why the proposed unit would not promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations may not have provided the Assistant Secretary with a sufficient basis on which to make a determination, as we have indicated, the development of such evidence does not stop with the parties. It is the responsibility of the Assistant Secretary to develop as complete a record as possible with regard to each of the three criteria, soliciting evidence from the parties as necessary; he did not do so here.
> [T]he Assistant Secretary may not rely upon "the absence of any specific countervailing evidence . . . as to a lack of effective dealings and efficiency of operations" in other existing bargaining units to make an affirmative finding regarding these criteria in a proposed unit. Rather, as we have previously emphasized, it is the responsibility of the Assistant Secretary to develop as complete a record as possible with regard to each of the three criteria, soliciting evidence from the parties as necessary; to give full and careful consideration to all relevant evidence in the record; and then to ground his decision upon a careful, thorough analysis of evidentiary considerations or factors which provide a sharp degree of definition and precision to each of the three criteria. Where the Assistant Secretary finds a unit to be appropriate for purposes of exclusive recognition, he must make an affirmative determination that a unit equally satisfies each of the 10(b) criteria. Reliance upon a lack of evidence fails to satisfy the requirement in the Order that the Assistant Secretary make such an affirmative determination.[10/] [Footnote omitted and footnote added.]

10/ The Council's decision in Department of Commerce, National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, National Weather Service, Central Region and Weather Service Offices (Bismarck, North Dakota; Fargo, North Dakota; St. Cloud, Minnesota; and International Falls, Minnesota), A/SLMR No. 331, FLRC No. 74A-16 (July 21, 1975), Report No. 77 [hereinafter referred to as National Weather Service] is not to the contrary. In National Weather

Accordingly, in making an appropriate unit determination, the Assistant Secretary is not required to develop evidence on behalf of either party Rather, the decisions of the Council, including the consolidated DCASR decision, emphasize the nonadversary nature of the Assistant Secretary's proceedings to determine the appropriateness of units and stress the affirmative role of the Assistant Secretary to develop as complete a record as possible in order to render an informed judgment with regard to each of the three section 10(b) criteria.[11/]

2. Responsibility of the Assistant Secretary to give equal weight to each criterion of section 10(b).

The Council has clearly stated that, in making an appropriate unit determination, the Assistant Secretary must give equal weight to each

Service, the Assistant Secretary found four separate units within a single region of the agency appropriate, relying in part on a lack of any specific countervailing evidence as to whether the proposed unit would promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. Upon review, the Council applied the principles enunciated in Tulsa AFS and determined, in contrast with its decision in the consolidated DCASR cases, that the Assistant Secretary's decision met the essential requirements of section 10(b). The difference in result is based on at least one significant factual distinction: Unlike in the consolidated DCASR cases, the union representative in National Weather Service, as noted by the Council, testified that the separate units would, if the union were certified, fall under an existing multi-unit agreement. Thus, viewing the small units as part of a multi-unit bargaining structure, the Council was of the opinion in National Weather Service that the decision of the Assistant Secretary did not conflict with the requirements of section 10(b) of the Order. (See National Weather Service n. 7 and accompanying text.)

11/ It should be noted that in the consolidated DCASR decision, the Council did not reach the question as to responsibility of the Assistant Secretary in the event that, after active solicitation by him, there is still insufficient evidence upon which he might make an affirmative determination as to effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. In the consolidated DCASR decision the Council found that the Assistant Secretary had failed to actively solicit such evidence. Moreover, a situation in which the Assistant Secretary's active solicitation of evidence would fail to produce sufficient results should be rare indeed, since the Council's consolidated DCASR decision provided the Assistant Secretary with guidance with regard to subsidiary factors or indicators of effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. See consolidated DCASR decision at 13.

criterion of section 10(b).[12] Therefore, a unit, in order to be appropriate under the Order, must clearly, convincingly and equally satisfy each of the 10(b) criteria; that is, only units which not only ensure a clear and identifiable community of interest among the employees concerned but also promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations are appropriate under the Order. Expressed another way: no greater reliance may be placed on one criterion, e.g., community of interest, than another, e.g., efficiency of agency operations. Further, where a proposed unit satisfies two of the criteria, e.g., community of interest and effective dealings, but does not satisfy the third criterion, namely, efficiency of agency operations, that unit may not be found appropriate. Thus, "equal weight" does not mean that evidence going to each criterion must be equal in amount and quality; it does mean that no one criterion or two criteria may be accorded greater weight, i.e. importance, than the other(s) in the appropriate unit determination.

Moreover, the requirement that the Assistant Secretary give equal weight to each criterion in section 10(b) does not compel the Assistant Secretary, as he put it, "to search for the most perfect conceivable bargaining unit." The Council's consolidated DCASR decision does not suggest that the Assistant Secretary is required to do so. In the consolidated DCASR decision, the Council found, among other things, that equal application of the three section 10(b) criteria would dictate a finding that the units sought were not appropriate for purposes of exclusive recognition under the Order. Furthermore, the Council stated that a regionwide unit would meet all of the section 10(b) criteria and would also be consistent with the Order's policy of promoting a more comprehensive bargaining unit structure. The Council did not hold that, of several appropriate units, the regionwide one would be "most" or "more" appropriate. The Council's consolidated DCASR decision reflects the basic policy that an appropriate unit must meet the three criteria of section 10(b) and that, in applying the three criteria, due consideration must be given to the purposes of the Order, including the dual objectives of preventing further fragmentation of bargaining units as well as reducing existing fragmentation, thereby promoting a more comprehensive bargaining unit structure. Clearly, the proper application of the three criteria requires the Assistant Secretary to exercise considerable judgment, but it does not require him to find "the most perfect conceivable bargaining unit."

3. Responsibility of the Assistant Secretary regarding the Order's policy of reducing fragmentation in the bargaining unit structure.

In its consolidated DCASR decision, the Council specifically rejected the Assistant Secretary's interpretation of the Order to the effect that negotiations at the local level are to be encouraged to the maximum extent possible. The Assistant Secretary had relied upon language in the Preamble[13] and in the revised section 11(a).[14]

It is beyond question that the Order, as evidenced by this Preamble language, encourages the participation of employees in the formulation and implementation of personnel policies and practices affecting conditions of their employment; however, the Order provides for this participation through exclusive recognition in an "appropriate" unit under section 10. Moreover, the Report accompanying E.O. 11838 clearly states that the changes in section 11(a) of the Order were intended to "complement" the recommendations of the Council relating to the consolidation of existing units which would thereby reduce unit fragmentation.[15]

Further in the above regard, it is important to remember that the Order reflects a dual policy: not only to reduce existing fragmentation through unit consolidations but also to prevent further fragmentation through new appropriate unit determinations, thereby promoting a more comprehensive bargaining unit structure. The Council acknowledges that this dual policy may have the effect in some situations of forestalling the representation of some employees; however, these employees need not be denied the opportunity for representation altogether. Rather, as is customary in cases such as here involved, representation can be achieved by expanding organizational efforts to include those employees who would constitute an appropriate unit.[16] As the Council said in the consolidated DCASR decision (at 20):

> [W]hile a unit at a lower organizational level may provide a temporary vehicle to address certain localized problems, in the long run, units broader in scope will facilitate consideration and resolution of a greater range of concerns common to employees and will better serve the interests of both the employees and the agencies. It was to achieve this end that the policies of the Order were adopted.

13/ "[T]he well-being of employees and efficient administration of the Government are benefited by providing employees an opportunity to participate in the formulation and implementation of personnel policies and practices affecting the conditions of their employment . . . ."

14/ See note 5 supra and accompanying text.

15/ See note 6 supra and accompanying text.

16/ It should be noted in this regard that section 10(b) provides in pertinent part: "A unit shall not be established solely on the basis of the extent to which employees in the proposed unit have organized . . . ."

4. Council review of Assistant Secretary decisions.

Decisions of the Assistant Secretary are subject to a limited right of appeal to the Council.[17] In accordance with its rules, the Council reviews only those Assistant Secretary decisions in which major policy issues are present or where it appears that the decision was arbitrary and capricious.[18] Further, the Council will sustain a decision of the Assistant Secretary on review unless it is arbitrary and capricious or inconsistent with the purposes of the Order.[19] Where the Council finds that a decision of the Assistant Secretary is inconsistent with the purposes and policies of the Order, it customarily has set aside and remanded the decision.[20] Only in the most exceptional circumstances will the Council substitute its judgment for that of the Assistant Secretary in applying policy to the facts of a particular case. The consolidated DCASR cases presented such circumstances. In those cases, the Council was of the opinion that extraordinary measures, beyond setting aside and remanding the decisions of the Assistant Secretary, were required in order to insure the effectuation of the Order's unit structure policy. Therefore, the Council, in addition to setting aside the Assistant Secretary's decisions, determined that none of the units sought was appropriate for purposes of exclusive recognition under the Order.

The Council is likewise of the opinion that the instant case presents exceptional circumstances and warrants extraordinary action by the Council —because of its history of having once been remanded, because of the reasoning relied upon by the Assistant Secretary, and because of the close factual similarity of this case to the consolidated DCASR cases. Therefore, as concluded above at page 6, the Council here not only has set aside the Assistant Secretary's decision but also has determined that the units sought are not appropriate under the Order for purposes of exclusive recognition.

17/ The Study Committee Report and Recommendations, August 1969, which led to the issuance of Executive Order 11491, stated:

> The Assistant Secretary should be authorized to issue decisions to agencies and labor organizations in all cases, subject to a limited right of appeal on major policy issues by either party to the Federal Labor Relations Council . . . . Labor-Management Relations in the Federal Service (1975), at 69.

Conclusion

For the reasons set forth above, and pursuant to section 2411.18(b) of the Council's rules of procedure, we set aside the Assistant Secretary's supplemental decision and remand the case to him for action consistent with our decision herein.[21]

21/ In this regard, we have been administratively advised that the Assistant Secretary currently has under consideration a petition for consolidation of units represented by AFGE within the Defense Logistics Agency, including the Akron DCASO unit involved herein. Should the Assistant Secretary determine that a consolidated unit is appropriate, it would not be inconsistent with this decision to include this unit involved herein in such a consolidated unit by reason of the special circumstances here involved, including the fact that the employees in this unit have previously indicated through the election process that they wish AFGE to serve as their exclusive representative and the length of time which has elapsed since the election. Of course, if a consolidation election should be held to determine whether the employees in the proposed consolidated unit wish to be represented in that unit, the employees in the Akron DCASO unit involved herein would have the options only of being represented in the consolidated unit or being unrepresented—unless, of course, AFGE files a separate petition seeking to represent the employees involved herein in a unit determined to be appropriate. See consolidated DCASR decision at 23.

OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

DEFENSE SUPPLY AGENCY,
DEFENSE CONTRACT ADMINISTRATION
SERVICES REGION, SAN FRANCISCO
A/SLMR No. 885

On September 16, 1975, the Assistant Secretary issued his Decision and Direction of Election in A/SLMR No. 559, finding that the petitioned for unit in the subject case was appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under Section 10 of the Order.

On December 30, 1976, the Federal Labor Relations Council (Council) issued its Decision on Appeal in FLRC No. 75A-128, in which it found that the petitioned for unit is not appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under the Order.

Based on the Council's holding in FLRC No. 75A-128 and the rationale contained therein, the Assistant Secretary ordered that the Certification of Representative previously issued to the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2723, AFL-CIO, be revoked and that the petition in the subject case be dismissed.

SUPPLEMENTAL DECISION AND ORDER

On September 16, 1975, the Assistant Secretary issued his Decision and Direction of Election in A/SLMR No. 559, finding that the petitioned for unit was appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under the Order. 2/ Thereafter, on December 30, 1976, the Federal Labor Relations Council (Council) issued its consolidated Decision on Appeals involving, among others, the subject case. The Council concluded, in essence, that the petitioned for unit in the subject case was not appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under the Order. 3/

Based on the Council's holding in the instant case and the rationale contained therein, I shall order that the Certification of Representative previously issued to the Petitioner involved herein, be revoked and that the subject petition be dismissed.

1/ Subsequent to the issuance of the Decision on Appeals in FLRC No. 75A-128, the name of the Agency involved was changed to Defense Logistics Agency.

2/ I have been administratively advised that pursuant to the Decision and Direction of Election in A/SLMR No. 559, a Certification of Representative was issued to the Petitioner involved herein.

3/ Further processing of the subject case was held in abeyance pending the Council's disposition of an appeal in Defense Supply Agency, Defense Contract Administration Services Region (DCASR), Cleveland, Ohio, etc., FLRC No. 76A-97 (July 20, 1977).

ORDER

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the Certification of Representative issued in Case No. 70-4524(RO) be, and it hereby is, revoked, and that the petition in Case No. 70-4524(RO) be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

DECISION ON APPEALS FROM
ASSISTANT SECRETARY DECISIONS

Background of Cases

These appeals arose from three separate decisions of the Assistant Secretary in which he found that three proposed bargaining units in the Defense Supply Agency, Defense Contract Administration Services Region (DCASR), San Francisco, California, were appropriate and directed an election in each. Inasmuch as the three appeals arise out of the same basic circumstances and factual background, involve the same agency and national labor organization, and present the same major policy issue, the Council here consolidates them for decision on the merits.

All three of the decisions of the Assistant Secretary grew out of petitions filed by locals of the American Federation of Government Employees (AFGE) seeking to represent units of employees of the San Francisco DCASR. The San Francisco DCASR is one of 11 regions of the Defense Supply Agency (DSA), all of which provide contract administration services and support for the Department of Defense, as well as other Federal agencies. The San Francisco DCASR covers the States of Utah, Montana, Idaho, Washington, Oregon, Alaska, Hawaii; most of Nevada; northern California; and the Mariana Islands. It consists of a headquarters organization and field activities which are divided into two Defense Contract Administration Services Districts (DCASD's), Seattle and Salt Lake City, as well as six Defense Contract Administration Services Offices (DCASO's) located in Portland, Oregon, and at five contractors' offices in the San Francisco Bay area and a Hawaii Residency Office. The field activities perform basic mission functions of the region in their respective geographic areas. With the exception of the DCASO in Portland, Oregon, which reports through the DCASD in Seattle, all DCASO's and DCASD's within the region report directly to DCASR headquarters in San Francisco. Approximately 1,250 civilian employees are employed throughout the DCASR, San Francisco, with most employees located in northern California. All of the employees of the region are subject to uniform personnel policies and practices established at regional headquarters. Prior to the filing of the subject representation petitions, none of the employees of the DCASR were in units of exclusive recognition.

FLRC No. 75A-14 (A/SLMR No. 461)

In June 1974, AFGE Local 3540 sought an election in a districtwide unit composed of the 77 eligible professional and nonprofessional employees of the Salt Lake City DCASD. The San Francisco DCASR contended that the claimed unit was not appropriate because it excluded employees who share a community of interest with the employees in the unit sought and, further, that the unit sought would not promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. The DCASR contended that the only appropriate unit was one composed of all eligible employees of the DCASR, San Francisco.

The Assistant Secretary, in a decision dated November 27, 1974, determined that the Salt Lake City DCASD unit was appropriate for the purposes of exclusive recognition under the Order. After noting particularly that the petitioned-for employees share common districtwide supervision, perform their duties within the assigned geographical locality of the DCASD, and do not interchange or have job contact with other employees of the region, and that generally transfers to or from the District Office occur only in situations involving promotions or reduction-in-force procedures, the Assistant Secretary found that the employees in the petitioned-for unit share a clear and identifiable community of interest separate and distinct from other employees of the San Francisco Region. The Assistant Secretary went on to add: "Further, based on the foregoing considerations, I find that such a unit will promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations." In making this finding with respect to effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations, the Assistant Secretary rejected the agency's contentions that certification of a less than regionwide unit would limit the scope of negotiations solely to those matters within the delegated discretionary authority of the Commander of the District Office, and thus would not result in effective dealings between the parties or promote the efficiency of agency operations.

In November 1974, AFGE Local 2723 sought an election in a unit composed of all eligible nonprofessional employees in DCASR headquarters. DCASR officials contended that the claimed unit was not appropriate because it would result in unit fragmentation and would not promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. They maintained that only a single regionwide unit would be appropriate. At the hearing, the union indicated a willingness to include the five DCASO's, all of which are located in the San Francisco Bay area, and the Hawaii Residency Office in the unit. The Assistant Secretary, on September 16, 1975, found that a unit encompassing the employees in DCASR headquarters, the five DCASO's in the San Francisco Bay area, and the Hawaii Residency Office was appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition in that the employees in such unit shared a clear and identifiable community of interest with each other, that such a unit would promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations, and that the agency contentions to the contrary were "at best, speculative and conjectural."

More particularly, with regard to efficiency of agency operations, the Assistant Secretary observed that more than cost factors should be involved in making such a determination, citing and quoting extensively from the Council's negotiability determination in the Little Rock case.[1/] The Assistant Secretary found it:

> [E]vident that a determination of efficiency of agency operations is dependent upon a complex of factors and that . . . tangible and intangible benefits to employees and activities resulting from employee representation by a labor organization can result in improved efficiency of operations despite increased cost factors. He noted:

> . . . that in unit determination proceedings the parties are obligated to come forward, for the use of the Assistant Secretary, with all relevant information including any contrary evidence with respect to efficiency of agency operations; that information related to efficiency of agency operations may well be within the special knowledge and possession of the agency involved; and that where agencies fail or are unable to respond to the solicitation of such information by the Assistant Secretary, the Assistant Secretary should base his decision on the information available to him, making the best informed judgment he can under the circumstances.

He found that the unit "could result in actual economic savings and increased productivity due to the homogeneity of its composition." Noting that "the Activity's contentions that such a unit would not promote efficiency of agency operations were based primarily on its speculative assessments of the manpower and economic costs of less than a regionwide unit, rather than on a balanced consideration of all the factors, including employee morale and well-being," the Assistant Secretary found that "standing alone, such speculation as to what might be helpful or desirable [was] insufficient to establish that the proposed unit is inappropriate within the meaning of section 10(b) of the Order."

With regard to effective dealings, the Assistant Secretary, observing that the principal or ultimate authority within the region involved in the negotiation and approval of negotiated agreements and in the resolution of grievances and other personnel matters is located in the DCASR Headquarters, concluded that the unit found appropriate would promote effective dealings to the extent that the individuals most concerned with labor-management relations, fiscal matters and the direction of operations "are located organizationally with the unit found appropriate." The Assistant Secretary went on to state, however, that, in his view, a claimed unit may be appropriate and be considered to promote effective dealings as well as efficiency of agency operations "even though it does not include all employees directly under the area or regional head, or other activity officials who have final or initiating authority with respect to personnel, fiscal and programmatic matters." Relying on the amendments to section 11(a) of the Order in E.O. 11838,[2/] the

> An agency and a labor organization that has been accorded exclusive recognition, through appropriate representatives, shall meet at reasonable times and confer in good faith with respect to personnel policies and practices and matters affecting working conditions, so far as may be appropriate under applicable laws and regulations,

Assistant Secretary stated that "it is clearly contemplated by the Executive Order that labor-management negotiations could properly be conducted at lower than agency, regional, or district levels, and that, therefore, units of less broad proportions could be appropriate." Further, he went on to say that:

> . . . the Order not only is intended to encourage negotiations at the local level to the maximum extent possible with respect to personnel policies and practices and matters affecting working conditions, but that such negotiations are desirable as they must perforce promote effective dealings between employees and the agency management with which the particular employees are most closely involved.

The Assistant Secretary concluded:

> Thus, in my view, the Order, while recognizing the appropriateness of broadly based units under certain circumstances, is also, as reflected by the amendment to Section 11(a), supportive of the concept that bargaining units at lower levels may in certain instances, promote effective dealings, as well as result in the increased efficiency of agency operations. FLRC No. 76A-4 (A/SLMR No. 564)

In October 1974, AFGE Local 3204 sought an election in a districtwide unit of all eligible General Schedule and professional employees in the Seattle, Washington DCASD. The proposed unit included, in addition to the employees of the Seattle District, employees of the Portland, Oregon DCASO which, organizationally, reports to regional headquarters through Seattle. The region contended that the unit sought was not appropriate because, among other things, it would not promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. In the activity's view, only a single DCASR-wide unit would be appropriate.

The Assistant Secretary found the petitioned-for unit appropriate in September 1975. In doing so, he determined that the approximately 180 employees sought to be included within the proposed unit of the Seattle DCASD and the Portland DCASO share a clear and identifiable community of interest separate and distinct from other employees of the region. In disagreement with the claims of regional officials, the Assistant Secretary determined that the proposed unit would promote effective dealings and the efficiency of agency operations. In this regard, he again noted, as in his decision in A/SLMR No. 559 supra, that a determination of effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations is dependent on a complex of factors, including tangible and intangible benefits to employees and activities resulting from employee representation by a labor organization which can result in improved efficiency of agency operations despite increased cost factors and that a claimed unit may promote effective dealings and efficiency of operations even though it does not include all employees directly under the area or regional head, or the activity officials who have final initiating authority with respect to personnel, fiscal, and programmatic matters. He was not persuaded by the region's arguments that the negotiating authority of the District Commander would be extremely limited, noting certain areas of responsibility that the District Commander does have. The Assistant Secretary concluded:

> Under these circumstances, and noting particularly the absence of any specific countervailing evidence submitted by the Activity as to a lack of effective dealings and efficiency of operations in those regions of the DSA where less than region-wide units have been recognized or certified and where there currently exist negotiated agreements, I find that the petitioned for District-wide unit will promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. [Footnotes omitted.]

Following each of the Assistant Secretary's decisions in these cases, separate elections were conducted in each of the three separate units which had been found appropriate and AFGE was certified as the exclusive representative in each unit. Thereafter, in each case, DSA appealed the Assistant Secretary's decision to the Council. Upon consideration of the petitions for review, the Council determined that the same major policy issue is presented by each of the decisions of the Assistant Secretary, namely: Whether the Assistant Secretary's decision is consistent with and promotes the purposes and policies of the Order, especially those reflected in section 10(b). Neither party filed a brief on the merits.

Section 6(a)(1) of the Order assigns to the Assistant Secretary the responsibility for deciding questions as to units appropriate for the purposes of exclusive recognition. The Council, pursuant to section 2411.18(a) of its regulations, will sustain such decisions unless they are arbitrary and capricious or inconsistent with the purposes of the Order. In the opinion of the Council, the decision of the Assistant Secretary in each of these cases is inconsistent with the purposes of the Order, specifically the language and intent of section 10(b).

Section 10(b) provides, in pertinent part, that:

> A unit may be established on a plant or installation, craft, functional, or other basis which will ensure a clear and identifiable community of interest among the employees concerned and will promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations.

The Council on several occasions has considered the meaning and application of section 10(b) in the establishment of appropriate units for the purposes of exclusive recognition. In particular, the Council has addressed the requirement that any proposed unit of exclusive recognition must meet all three appropriate unit criteria prescribed in section 10(b), that is, a unit must (1) ensure a clear and identifiable community of interest among the employees concerned, (2) promote effective dealings, and (3) promote efficiency of agency operations.

In the report accompanying E.O. 11838, the Council, in discussing its belief "that the policy of promoting more comprehensive bargaining units and hence of reducing fragmentation in the bargaining unit structure will foster the development of a sound Federal labor-management relations program," stated:

> We further feel that the Assistant Secretary can do much to foster this policy in carrying out his functions of deciding other representation questions including the appropriateness of newly sought units. Accordingly, in all representation questions, equal weight must be given to each of the three criteria in section 10(b) of the Order. By doing so, the result should be broader, more comprehensive bargaining units.3/

Thus, the Council concluded that the appropriate application of the three criteria will facilitate the reduction of fragmentation in bargaining unit structure in the Federal labor-management relations program and thereby promote the policy of creating more comprehensive units.

In its decision in Tulsa AFS, the Council discussed at length the obligations of the Assistant Secretary in applying the three 10(b) criteria.4/ The Council reviewed the history of the development of exclusive recognition of appropriate units in the Federal labor-management relations program and concluded:

3/ Labor-Management Relations in the Federal Service (1975), at 37.

4/ Department of Transportation, Federal Aviation Administration, Southwest Region, Tulsa Airway Facilities Sector, FLRC No. 74A-28 (May 9, 1975), Report No. 69.

> It is clear that the express language of section 10(b) requires that any proposed unit of exclusive recognition must satisfy each of the three criteria set forth therein, and that the Assistant Secretary must affirmatively so determine, before that unit properly can be found to be appropriate. This conclusion is amply supported by the purpose of the provision, as evidenced by its "legislative history" . . . especially wherein the criterion of community of interest of the employees involved was explicitly balanced with other considerations important to management and protection of the public interest in the promulgation of E.O. 11491 in 1969, i.e., that units found appropriate must also promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations.

Further, after quoting those passages of the Council's Report to the President which led to the issuance of Executive Order 11838 wherein the three criteria were discussed, the Council stated as to the required findings under section 10(b) of the Order:

> Thus, the Assistant Secretary must not only affirmatively determine that a unit will ensure a clear and identifiable community of interest among the employees concerned and will promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations, but must give equal weight to each of the three criteria before the particular unit can be found to be appropriate.

In Tulsa AFS, the Council also discussed the responsibility of the Assistant Secretary in unit determination proceedings to develop and consider evidence concerning the appropriate unit criteria in section 10(b) of the Order. The Council stressed that it is the obligation of the Assistant Secretary to "develop as complete a record as possible with regard to each of the three criteria . . . and . . . give full and careful consideration to all relevant evidence in the record in reaching his decision." In this regard, the Council noted that parties to a representation proceeding are responsible for providing the Assistant Secretary with all information relevant to the appropriate unit criteria that is within their knowledge and possession, but emphasized that the Assistant Secretary must actively solicit such evidence as necessary to enable him to make a fully-informed judgment as to whether a particular unit will satisfy each of the three 10(b) criteria. In this regard, the Council stated:

> [T]here is a need for a sharper degree of definition of the criteria of effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations to facilitate both the development and presentation of evidence pertaining to those criteria by agencies and labor organizations, and the qualitative appraisal of such evidence by the Assistant Secretary in appropriate unit determinations. As he has done with the community of interest criterion, therefore, the Assistant Secretary should develop subsidiary factors or indicators which will serve as guidelines in determining effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. In this way, each of the policy goals to be achieved in unit determinations will have an equal degree of precision and, hopefully, will receive the necessary and desirable equality of emphasis in representation proceedings.

Summarizing the responsibilities of the Assistant Secretary which flow from section 10(b) of the Order: Before the Assistant Secretary may find that a proposed unit is appropriate for purposes of exclusive recognition under the Order, he must make an affirmative determination that the proposed unit satisfies equally each of the three criteria contained in section 10(b). That is, he must consider equally the evidence going to each of the three criteria and, as required by section 10(b), find appropriate only units which not only ensure a clear and identifiable community of interest but also promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. In making the affirmative determination that a proposed bargaining unit satisfies each of the three criteria, the Assistant Secretary must first develop as complete a record as possible, soliciting evidence from the parties as necessary, and then ground his decision upon a careful, thorough analysis of subsidiary factors or evidentiary considerations which provide a sharp degree of definition and precision to each of the three criteria. Finally, and most importantly, the Assistant Secretary must make the necessary affirmative determinations that a unit clearly, convincingly and equally satisfies each of the 10(b) criteria in recognition of and in a manner fully consistent with the purposes of the Order, including the dual objectives of preventing further fragmentation of bargaining units as well as reducing existing fragmentation, thereby promoting a more comprehensive bargaining unit structure. We turn now to the application of these principles to the three cases before the Council. They will be treated seriatim.

As outlined above, in this case the Assistant Secretary found that a unit of one geographic element of the San Francisco DCASR, namely the Salt Lake City DCASD, was an appropriate unit for purposes of exclusive recognition under the Order. In so finding, he reviewed the evidence relating to certain subsidiary factors or indicators of community of interest and based upon these evidentiary considerations found that the employees in the petitioned-for unit shared a clear and identifiable community of interest separate and distinct from other employees of the San Francisco Region. Additionally, as required, the Assistant Secretary found that such a unit will promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. However, this latter conclusion was "based on the foregoing considerations," that is, the evidentiary considerations which supported a finding that the employees had community of interest, rather than on any evidence directly bearing on the promotion of effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations.

While the Assistant Secretary made an affirmative finding that the proposed unit met all of the appropriate unit criteria of section 10(b), we must conclude that in making that finding he did not fully meet his obligations under the Order. In this regard, as we have indicated, it is the responsibility of the Assistant Secretary to develop as complete a record as possible with regard to each of the three criteria, soliciting evidence from the parties as necessary; to give full and careful consideration to all relevant evidence in the record; and then to ground his decision upon a careful, thorough analysis of evidentiary considerations or factors which provide a sharp degree of definition and precision to each of the three criteria. Where the Assistant Secretary finds a unit to be appropriate for purposes of exclusive recognition, he must make an affirmative determination that a unit equally satisfies each of the 10(b) criteria. Finally, and most importantly, the Assistant Secretary must decide appropriate unit questions consistent with the purposes of the Order, including the policy of preventing and reducing fragmentation, thereby promoting a more comprehensive bargaining unit structure.

In this case, while the Assistant Secretary clearly met his responsibilities in developing and analyzing evidence pertaining to the "community of interest" criterion and in making an affirmative finding with respect to that criterion, we conclude that he failed to meet these responsibilities with respect to the criteria of "effective dealings" and "efficiency of agency operations." First, a review of the record reveals that the Assistant Secretary failed to make an intensive effort to develop as complete a record as possible with regard to the criteria of "effective dealings" and "efficiency of agency operations," soliciting evidence from the parties as necessary.5/ While the testimony and arguments advanced by the activity as to why the proposed DCASD unit would not promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations may not, in the Assistant Secretary's view, have provided him with a sufficient basis on which to make a determination,6/ the development of such evidence does not

5/ A review of the record indicates that, as to effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations, the Hearing Officer asked a few questions concerning the delegated authority of certain management officials to negotiate and sign a collective bargaining agreement and asked an agency witness only three insubstantial questions concerning whether the proposed unit would impair efficiency of agency operations.

6/ In testimony before the Assistant Secretary's Hearing Officer and in its posthearing brief to the Assistant Secretary, the agency presented evidence regarding effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations as well as evidence regarding community of interest of the employees involved. The San Francisco Region Civilian Personnel Officer testified at the hearing, among other things, in effect, that it would be more efficient for the region to negotiate and deal with the exclusive representative of employees in a single regionwide unit rather than with stop with the presentation by the parties. Although, as we stated in Tulsa AFS, the parties are responsible for providing the Assistant Secretary with all relevant information within their knowledge and possession, we emphasized in that decision that the Assistant Secretary, in carrying out his responsibility to decide appropriate unit questions, must actively solicit such information and develop the evidence necessary to enable him to make a fully-informed judgment as to whether the proposed unit will satisfy each of the three 10(b) criteria. We conclude that the Assistant Secretary did not meet that responsibility in A/SLMR No. 461. Furthermore, as to the contentions and supporting evidence which were put forward by the activity regarding these two criteria, the Assistant Secretary failed to give such contentions and evidence full and careful consideration. Indeed, his only consideration was in a footnote wherein he rejected the activity's contention that a less than regionwide unit would limit the scope of negotiations solely to those matters within the delegated authority of the Commander of the District Office.7/representatives of employees in a multiplicity of units within the region. In this regard, he testified in effect that the smaller Salt Lake City unit would, by creating the possibility of multiple units in the region, impair efficiency by exceeding the capacities of the agency's limited labor-management relations staff. In its posthearing brief to the Assistant Secretary, the agency argued, among other things, that the size and composition of the proposed unit, the potential for meaningful negotiations, and the availability of personnel management resources all demonstrate that one regionwide unit would more likely promote efficiency of agency operations and effective dealings.

7/ In rejecting the agency's contention that the certification of a less-than-regionwide unit would limit the scope of negotiations solely to those matters within the delegated discretionary authority of the Commander of the District Office, the Assistant Secretary relied on his decision in A/SLMR No. 372 wherein he had, in turn, relied on the Council's decision in United Federation of College Teachers, Local 1460 and U.S. Merchant Marine Academy, 1 FLRC 211 [FLRC No. 71A-15 (Nov. 20, 1972), Report No. 30]. However, A/SLMR No. 372 was subsequently reviewed by the Council in Defense Supply Agency, Defense Contract Administration Services Region (DCASR), Cleveland, Ohio, Defense Contract Administration Services Offices (DCASO's), Akron, Ohio and Columbus, Ohio, A/SLMR No. 372, FLRC No. 74A-41 (Aug. 13, 1975), Report No. 80. The Council set aside the Assistant Secretary's decision therein and remanded the case to him. In doing so, the Council stated, as to the Assistant Secretary's reliance upon Merchant Marine and as to the relationship of the amendments to section 11(a) of the Order to the principles enunciated in Merchant Marine:

Second, the Assistant Secretary's decision was not based upon a careful, thorough analysis of evidentiary considerations or factors which provide

> Turning to the instant case [DSA, Cleveland], it is clear that the Assistant Secretary has misinterpreted and misapplied the Merchant Marine decision. For under the Order, as presently effective, labor relations and personnel policies as established (and, of course, published) by the DCASR headquarters may properly serve to bar the matter concerned from the scope of bargaining under section 11(a) of the Order. Since these matters would thus be outside the scope of bargaining at the DCASO level, DCASR, under the Merchant Marine decision, would be under no obligation to provide representatives to negotiate and enter into agreement on such matters at the DCASO level.
> Thus, as the Assistant Secretary, in finding the separate DCASO units appropriate in the present case, relied in part on an erroneous interpretation and application of the Merchant Marine decision, we shall remand the case to him for reconsideration and disposition consistent with our opinion.
>
> We are mindful in the above regard that under the amendments to section 11(a), adopted in E.O. 11838 and to become effective 90 days after the Council issues the criteria for determining "compelling need," DCASR directives as such would not thereafter serve to limit the scope of bargaining at the DCASO level—because DCASR appears to be a subdivision below the level of "agency headquarters" or "the level of a primary national subdivision." However, the Assistant Secretary should carefully examine the regulatory framework of DSA, including the DCASR's, which prevails at the time of his reconsideration and then weigh the impact thereon of Merchant Marine as properly interpreted and applied to the existing circumstances in order that the three criteria in section 10(b) can be properly applied. Moreover, in so applying Merchant Marine, the Assistant Secretary should carefully consider that the amendments to section 11(a) as adopted in E.O. 11838 were not designed to render fragmented units appropriate.
> In the above regard, as indicated in section V.1. of the Report accompanying E.O. 11838, the changes in section 11(a) of the Order were intended to "complement" the recommendations of the Council relating to the consolidation of bargaining units. The purpose of those recommendations (which were adopted by the President) was principally to reduce the unit fragmentation that had previously developed and to encourage the creation of more comprehensive bargaining units in the interest of the entire program. [Footnotes omitted.]

a sharp degree of definition and precision to the "effective dealings" and "efficiency of agency operations" criteria. Indeed, there was no discussion of such evidentiary considerations or factors. Instead, the treatment of these two criteria amounted to little more than a conclusionary statement based solely upon evidentiary considerations which had been relied upon to support the finding of a community of interest.

While we realize that certain considerations traditionally discussed in the context of community of interest can also be relevant in ascertaining whether a proposed unit would promote effective dealings or efficiency of agency operations (e.g., supervisory hierarchy and uniformity of personnel policies), other, quite different considerations also apply. As we stated in Tulsa AFS,[8/] there is a need for a sharper degree of definition to the criteria of effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations and the Assistant Secretary should develop subsidiary factors or indicators which will serve as guidelines in determining effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. Rather than relying solely on the "foregoing considerations," the Assistant Secretary was required to examine the very kind of testimony and contentions put forward by the agency (e.g., more efficient use of negotiation resources derived from single regionwide negotiations rather than a multiplicity of negotiations in segments of the region), as well as the wide range of other considerations raised by the facts of the case. In developing such subsidiary factors or evidentiary considerations, which more precisely define what is meant by promoting effective dealings, the Assistant Secretary might well consider in the circumstances of this case such matters as the locus and scope of authority of the responsible personnel office; the limitations on the negotiation of matters of critical concern to employees because the concerns of Salt Lake City DCASO employees may be inseparable from those of other employees in the region; the likelihood that people with greater expertise in negotiations will be available in a larger unit; the actual experience of this agency in other bargaining units; and the level at which labor relations policy is set in the agency and the effectuation of agency training in the implementation of a number of negotiated agreements and grievance procedures covering employees performing essentially the same duties. As to "efficiency of agency operations" among those factors which should be considered would be the benefits to be derived from a unit structure which bears some rational relationship to the operational and organizational structure of the agency. This is certainly not to say that section 10(b) requires that each bargaining unit always be coextensive with the agency's view of how it can best organize to carry out its mission, but the relationship between the proposed bargaining unit and the operational and organizational structure of the agency should be given substantial weight in ascertaining whether the unit will promote efficiency of agency operations. In the instant case, for example, while the Assistant Secretary relied in part on the fact that the

8/ See page 7 supra.

Salt Lake City DCASD employees share districtwide supervision, he appears to have given no weight to the fact that those employees share a common supervisory structure with all employees in the region and enjoy a commonality of mission, personnel policies and practices and matters affecting working conditions with all employees of the region.

Third, in simply concluding that the proposed unit will promote effective dealings and efficiency of operations based solely upon evidentiary considerations which had been relied upon to support the finding of a community of interest, the Assistant Secretary failed to give equal weight to all three criteria.

Finally, there is the requirement that the Assistant Secretary decide appropriate unit questions consistent with the policy of the Order of preventing and reducing fragmentation in the bargaining unit structure of the Federal labor-management relations program. The Assistant Secretary's decision finding appropriate a unit limited to the Salt Lake City DCASD is clearly contrary to that policy in that his decision tends to foster and promote fragmentation. The San Francisco DCASR is a single organizational element of the agency with a chain of command headed by the Regional Commander, running down through all of the component elements. With the exception of the DCASO in Portland which reports through the DCASD in Seattle, all elements of the region report directly to DCASR headquarters. All employees of the region perform their duties pursuant to policies and procedures established by the regional headquarters staff, and the employees within the region are subject to uniform personnel policies and job benefits. The DCASR's Civilian Personnel Office, located at headquarters, has the responsibility for servicing all components within the region. The region encompasses an organizational structure of an agency which is functionally integrated. It has been established in this manner to accomplish its mission. Its employees thus share a commonality of mission, organization and personnel policies and practices and matters affecting working conditions.

There is no question that if the union sought recognition in a regionwide unit, it would meet all of the section 10(b) criteria and, more importantly, would be consistent with the Order's policy of promoting a more comprehensive bargaining unit structure. Against this backdrop, the AFGE petitioned for a single portion of the organizational and functional whole, the Salt Lake City DCASD, a unit of approximately 77 employees out of a total of approximately 1,250 eligible employees in the region. In concluding that these employees shared a community of interest with each other, the Assistant Secretary relied upon those factors which, in his view, reflected some degree of separation between these employees and the remaining employees in the DCASR. In doing so, he failed to give proper recognition to the single organizational structure of the region, its chain of command and authority, the uniform personnel policies and practices within the DCASR, and the existence of a single Civilian Personnel Office within the DCASR. As a result, the unit structure which his decision promotes within the San Francisco DCASR results in artificial distinctions between groups of employees whose mission and functions, supervisory structure and conditions of employment are identical. Moreover, finding such a unit appropriate left the remainder of the region for further piecemeal organizing efforts, thereby resulting in a fragmented bargaining unit structure, as actually subsequently occured herein.

In summary, in the circumstances of this case as reflected in the record before us, equal application of the three criteria in section 10(b) and the resulting consistency with the purposes of the Order would dictate a finding that a unit limited to the Salt Lake City DCASD is not an appropriate unit for purposes of exclusive recognition under the Order.[9/]

The Assistant Secretary, as outlined above, in this case found appropriate a unit composed of the employees in DCASR headquarters and the five DCASO's, all in the San Francisco Bay area, along with the Hawaii Residency Office. After reviewing at length the organizational and work environment of the region and its component parts, he found that there was a clear and identifiable community of interest among the employees in the unit found appropriate, noting specifically that such employees share a common mission and are covered by the same personnel and labor relations policies; that there are similar job classifications in each of the components within the headquarters, the five DCASO's and the Hawaii Residency Office; that there have been reassignments to and from the Regional Headquarters and the DCASO's; and that there is employee contact between headquarters and the DCASO's.

While the Assistant Secretary again made an affirmative finding that the proposed unit met all of the appropriate unit criteria of section 10(b), we must conclude that in making that finding he did not fully meet those obligations, outlined previously herein, which the Order imposes upon him. In this case, while the Assistant Secretary met his responsibilities in developing and analyzing evidence pertaining to the "community of interest" criterion and in making an affirmative finding with respect to that criterion,[10] we conclude that he failed to meet those responsibilities with respect to the criteria of "effective dealings" and "efficiency of agency operations." First, a review of the record reveals that the Assistant Secretary failed to make an affirmative effort to develop as complete a record as possible with regard to the criteria of "effective dealings" and "efficiency of agency operations."[11] Furthermore, as to the contentions and supporting evidence which were put forward by the activity regarding these two criteria, the Assistant Secretary failed to give such testimony appropriate and adequate consideration.

9/ In this regard, we note, as did the agency in testimony and brief before the Assistant Secretary, that the Assistant Secretary earlier considered and rejected as inappropriate various less-than-regionwide units in the San Francisco DCASR ranging in size from 18 to 686 employees. He found such units "would artifically [sic] divide and fragment . . . operations, and cannot be reasonably expected to promote effective dealings or efficiency of operations." Defense Supply Agency, Defense Contract Administration Services Region (DCASR), San Francisco, A/SLMR No. 112 (Nov. 30, 1971), decision by the then Assistant Secretary. This precedential decision was neither discussed nor even adverted to in the instant case.

As to whether the unit sought in A/SLMR No. 559 would promote efficiency of agency operations, the Assistant Secretary, relying on Council negotiability decisions[12] on the meaning of section 12(b)(4),[13] concluded that more than cost factors should be involved in making such determinations. As previously indicated, he stated:

10/ We do not here decide that the factors relied upon by the Assistant Secretary establish a separate community of interest for the employees in the unit found appropriate. Indeed, many of the factors relied upon by the Assistant Secretary indicate a community of interest that is regionwide in scope rather than limited to the employees in the unit sought by the union.

11/ A review of the record discloses that the Hearing Officer did not at any time solicit testimony concerning the criteria of effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations, limiting direct questioning solely to indicia of community of interest among employees within the unit sought.

13/ Section 12(b)(4) provides in pertinent part:

> Sec. 12. Basic provisions of agreements. Each agreement between an agency and a labor organization is subject to the following requirements--
>
> . . . . . .
>

> From the foregoing, it is evident that a determination of efficiency of agency operations is dependent on a complex of factors and that it has been recognized that the tangible and intangible benefits to employees and activities resulting from employee representation by a labor organization can result in improved efficiency of agency operations despite increased cost factors. [Footnote omitted.]

Based on these considerations, the Assistant Secretary concluded that the proposed unit would promote efficiency of agency operations, stressing that the unit would encompass the employees within the same commuting area and would include the Hawaii Residency Office which otherwise might be fragmented.[14] The Assistant Secretary concluded that the establishment of such a unit "could result" in actual economic savings and increased productivity due to the homogeneity of its composition.

While the Assistant Secretary reached a conclusion as to whether the proposed unit would promote the efficiency of agency operations, in our view, he failed properly to consider the relevant testimony and arguments advanced by the agency and, in effect, thereby failed to give the required equal weight to this criterion. At the outset, the Assistant Secretary found that the agency's views as to both this criterion and the criterion of promoting effective dealings to be "at most, speculative and conjectural." Such a rejection of the agency's views was inappropriate and a misconception of the nature of these criteria. We believe that inherent in determining whether or not a proposed unit will promote the efficiency of agency operations is the need to anticipate the impact of a given unit structure on the agency's operations. Just as the Assistant Secretary considered economic savings and increased productivity which "could result," the Assistant Secretary must also consider the costs and inefficient use of resources that, in management's opinion, "could result" from such a unit structure. The speculative and conjectural nature of a contention, in these circumstances, does not in and of itself render the contention without merit.

As to the specifics of the agency's contentions, the Assistant Secretary stated:

. . . . . .

> (4) to maintain the efficiency of the Government operations entrusted to them.

14/ In this regard, the same concern about fragmentation might have been expressed about any unrepresented portion of the region, for example, the Seattle DCASD, which in all significant respects had the same relationship with the DCASR headquarters as the Hawaii Residency Office.

> In addition, it was noted that the Activity's contentions that such a unit would not promote efficiency of agency operations were based primarily on its speculative assessments of the manpower and economic costs of less than a regionwide unit, rather than on a balanced consideration of all the factors, including employee morale and well-being, which . . . are relevant factors in making such an assessment. Thus, the Activity's position in this regard was reflected in the testimony of its Civilian Personnel Officer that "it was reasonable" to infer that a region-wide unit would do more to promote efficiency of agency operations (and effective dealings) than the originally petitioned for unit of the DCASR Headquarters, Burlingame, and that it would be a hardship on his office if several agreements were required because this would require expenditure of both manpower and financial resources "that might not be necessary if there were a single unit throughout the Region." I find that, standing alone, such speculation as to what might be helpful or desirable to be insufficient to establish that the proposed unit is inappropriate within the meaning of Section 10(b) of the Order. [Footnote omitted.]

In our view, rather than being rejected, in part, as "speculative," the contentions of the agency were valid considerations to be weighed in determining whether the proposed unit would promote efficiency of agency operations. As we have indicated, a policy of the Order is the promotion of more comprehensive bargaining units. Hence, the activity's contention that a regionwide unit of employees performing the same jobs in an organization with the same mission and subject to the same personnel policies and supervision would do more to promote efficiency of agency operations was consistent with the purposes of the Order. Similarly, while not dispositive, the efficient use of agency labor-management relations and financial resources is a valid factor in determining efficiency of agency operations.

We do not disagree with either the Assistant Secretary's conclusion that more than cost factors are involved in a determination of the promotion of efficiency of agency operations, or his conclusion that the benefits resulting from employee representation by a labor organization can result in improved efficiency of agency operations. However, the according of equal weight to the efficiency of agency operations criteria requires careful consideration of the agency's reasoned view of the impact of the proposed unit on the efficiency of its operations.[15/]

In finding that the alternative unit sought would promote effective dealings, the Assistant Secretary noted that the unit would promote effective dealings to the extent that the individuals most concerned with labor-management relations, fiscal matters and the direction of operations are located organizationally within the unit found appropriate. Thereafter, relying on the amendments to section 11(a) of the Order in E.O. 11838,[16/] the Assistant Secretary stated:

15/ In this regard, agency testimony concerning the efficiencies in agency operations experienced in other units would be relevant, as would testimony concerning the effectiveness of dealings in such units.

> Moreover, in my view, a claimed unit may be appropriate and be considered to promote effective dealings as well as efficiency of agency operations even though it does not include all employees directly under the area or regional head, or other activity officials who have final or initiating authority with respect to personnel, fiscal and programmatic matters. Thus, it is clearly contemplated by the Executive Order that labor-management negotiations could properly be conducted at lower than agency, regional, or district levels, and that, therefore, units of less broad proportions could be appropriate.

The Assistant Secretary's reliance on the recent amendments to section 11(a) to support his finding that the unit would promote effective dealings is in error. As stated above in footnote 7, the Council, in its decision in Defense Supply Agency, Defense Contract Administration Services Region (DCASR), Cleveland, Ohio, Defense Contract Administration Services Offices (DCASO's), Akron, Ohio and Columbus, Ohio, A/SLMR No. 372, FLRC No. 74A-41 (Aug. 13, 1975), Report No. 80, emphasized:

> [A]s indicated in section V.1. of the Report accompanying E.O. 11838, the changes in section 11(a) of the Order were intended to "complement" the recommendations of the Council relating to the consolidation of bargaining units. The purpose of those recommendations (which were adopted by the President) was principally to reduce the unit fragmentation that had previously developed and to encourage the creation of more comprehensive bargaining units in the interest of the entire program. [Footnote omitted.][17/]

While the changes in section 11(a) were intended to expand the scope of bargaining by eliminating unnecessary constrictions on meaningful negotiations which had been imposed by higher level agency regulations not critical to effective agency management or the public interest, the changes in section 11(a) were also intended, as stated in FLRC No. 74A-41, to complement the recommendations of the Council relating to reduction of unit fragmentation, which reduction would also serve to expand the scope of bargaining. The Assistant Secretary's reliance on the 11(a) changes to support a finding of a less comprehensive unit is therefore totally inappropriate. While the changes to section 11(a) were intended to lessen the impact of certain agency regulations upon the scope of bargaining, contrary to the conclusions of the Assistant Secretary, they were not intended to reflect a policy of encouraging the establishment of bargaining units at lower organizational levels within an agency.

16/ Note 2 supra.

17/ In the subject decision, A/SLMR No. 559, the Assistant Secretary took note of this language in FLRC No. 74A-41, but concluded that he did not find this concept to be inconsistent with the continued existence or establishment of units less comprehensive than region or districtwide, which otherwise meet the tests of appropriateness under the Order.

While it is true that units may promote effective dealings and be appropriate under section 10(b) even if established at lower agency organizational levels, in our view it is clear that, generally, effective dealings can be better achieved in more comprehensive units. As we have indicated, negotiations covering more comprehensive units permit the parties to address a wider range of matters of critical concern to greater numbers of employees. For example, employees of the entire region herein would have identical concerns as to such matters as merit staffing procedures, areas of consideration, reduction-in-force procedures, and competitive areas. Moreover, negotiations in less fragmented bargaining unit structures established at higher organizational levels permit unions and agencies to allocate their manpower resources and send to the bargaining table more experienced and skilled negotiators who should do a more efficient job of reaching a satisfactory agreement.

The instant decision of the Assistant Secretary clearly reflects a desire that negotiations be conducted at the lowest organizational levels possible and, hence, as close as possible to the particular employees who will be affected by the outcome of the negotiations; however, such a desire cannot be used as a rationale for creating units in a manner inconsistent with the purposes of the Order. Such reasoning, carried to an extreme as here, results in the fragmentation of units contrary to the policies sought to be served by the Order. Moreover, we do not agree that the resolution of local concerns is sacrificed by the creation of more comprehensive units. To the extent that there may be concerns unique to some employees which are not shared by an entire broader unit, there are obvious, well-recognized ways that these concerns may be addressed within the parameters of the bargaining relationship. And while a unit at a lower organizational level may provide a temporary vehicle to address certain localized problems, in the long run, units broader in scope will facilitate consideration and resolution of a greater range of concerns common to employees and will better serve the interests of both the employees and the agencies. It was to achieve this end that the policies of the Order were adopted. Thus, the Assistant Secretary's contrary unit determination was inconsistent with these purposes of the Order.

As previously stated with respect to A/SLMR No. 461, the Assistant Secretary must decide appropriate unit questions consonant with the policy of the Order of preventing and reducing fragmentation in the bargaining unit structure of the Federal labor-management relations program. In finding appropriate the alternative unit sought in this case, the Assistant Secretary's decision plainly contravenes that policy since his decision tends to foster and promote fragmentation. On the other hand, for the reasons previously detailed at page 14 above, there is no question that a regionwide unit, if alone sought, would meet all of the section 10(b) criteria.

While the employees in the San Francisco Bay area may have, as discussed by the Assistant Secretary, a community of interest with each other and possibly some degree of separation from other elements because of separate local supervision and geographic dispersion, the petitioned-for unit would be inconsistent with the single organizational structure of the region, its chain of command and authority, the uniform personnel policies and practices within the DCASR, and the existence of a single Civilian Personnel Office. The unit structure, which his decision promotes within the San Francisco DCASR, results in artificial distinctions between employees whose mission and functions, supervisory structure and conditions of employment are identical. Further, as noted with regard to A/SLMR No. 461, there is no question that if the union sought recognition in a regionwide unit, it would meet all of the section 10(b) criteria and, more importantly, would be consistent with the Order's policy of promoting a more comprehensive bargaining unit structure. Moreover, finding such a unit appropriate left the remainder of the region for further piecemeal organizing efforts, thereby resulting in a fragmented bargaining unit structure, as actually subsequently occurred herein.

In conclusion, the Assistant Secretary's finding that the alternative unit sought would promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations was based upon considerations which did not properly provide a sharp degree of definition and precision to these two criteria. Indeed, the considerations upon which the Assistant Secretary relied were not implementive of and were not consistent with those criteria. As a result, the Assistant Secretary failed properly to give equal weight to these criteria in his decision.

In summary, in the circumstances of this case as reflected in the record before us, equal application of the three criteria in section 10(b) and the resulting consistency with the purposes of the Order, would dictate a finding that the alternative unit sought herein is not an appropriate unit for the purposes of exclusive recognition under the Order.

In this case, the Assistant Secretary found that the employees in the petitioned-for unit, the Seattle DCASD, including the Portland DCASO, share a clear and identifiable community of interest separate and distinct from other employees of the region. In response to the activity's claim that such a unit would not promote effective dealings or efficiency of agency operations, the Assistant Secretary found that the activity took the identical position that it took in A/SLMR No. 461; he rejected the activity's position partly on the basis of the circumstances recited in A/SLMR No. 559 and his reasoning therein. The Assistant Secretary concluded:

> Under these circumstances, and noting particularly the absence of any specific countervailing evidence submitted by the Activity as to a lack of effective dealings and efficiency of operations in > those regions of the DSA where less than region-wide units have been recognized or certified and where there currently exist negotiated agreements, I find that the petitioned-for District-wide unit will promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. [Footnotes omitted.]

While the Assistant Secretary made an affirmative finding that the proposed unit met all of the appropriate unit criteria of section 10(b), we must again conclude that in doing so he did not fully meet those obligations, outlined previously herein, which the Order imposes upon him. Specifically, a review of the record reveals that the Assistant Secretary failed to make an affirmative effort to develop as complete a record as possible with regard to the criteria of "effective dealings" and "efficiency of agency operations."18/ While the testimony and arguments advanced by the activity as to why the proposed unit would not promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations may not have provided the Assistant Secretary with a sufficient basis on which to make a determination, as we have indicated, the development of such evidence does not stop with the parties. It is the responsibility of the Assistant Secretary to develop as complete a record as possible with regard to each of the three criteria, soliciting evidence from the parties as necessary; he did not do so here.

With regard to the circumstances which he particularly noted in finding that the unit sought would promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations, the Assistant Secretary plainly failed to make an affirmative determination that the unit equally satisfied each of the 10(b) criteria. As we indicated previously, the experience of an agency and labor organization under a given unit structure may be considered in determining whether a petitioned-for unit satisfies the three criteria set forth in section 10(b) of the Order. However, the Assistant Secretary may not rely upon "the absence of any specific countervailing evidence . . . as to a lack of effective dealings and efficiency of operations" in other existing bargaining units to make an affirmative finding regarding these criteria in a proposed unit. Rather, as we have previously emphasized, it is the responsibility of the Assistant Secretary to develop as complete a record as possible with regard to each of the three criteria, soliciting evidence from the parties as necessary; to give full and careful consideration to all relevant evidence in the record; and then to ground his decision upon a careful, thorough analysis of evidentiary considerations or factors which provide a sharp degree of definition and precision to each of the three criteria. Where the Assistant Secretary finds a unit to be appropriate for purposes of exclusive recognition, he must make an affirmative determination that a unit equally satisfies each of the 10(b) criteria. Reliance upon a lack of evidence fails to satisfy the requirement in the Order that the Assistant Secretary make such an affirmative determination.

Accordingly, for the reasons fully discussed above in regard to the Assistant Secretary's decision in A/SLMR No. 559, we must likewise reject the Assistant Secretary's reliance upon that decision in reaching his decision in A/SLMR No. 564. In summary, in the circumstances of this case as reflected in the record before us, equal application of the three criteria in section 10(b) and the resulting consistency with the purposes of the Order, would dictate a finding that the unit sought herein is not an appropriate unit for purposes of exclusive recognition under the Order. However, as noted with regard to both A/SLMR No. 461 and A/SLMR No. 559, there is no question that if the union sought recognition in a regionwide unit, it would meet all of the section 10(b) criteria and, more importantly, would be consistent with the Order's policy of promoting a more comprehensive unit structure.

Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, we find that the Assistant Secretary's Decision and Direction of Election in each of the above-entitled cases is inconsistent with the purposes of the Order. Accordingly, pursuant to section 2411.18(b) of the Council's rules of procedure, we set aside the Assistant Secretary's decisions and remand the cases to him for action consistent with our decision herein.

In this regard, we have been administratively advised that the Assistant Secretary currently has under consideration a petition for consolidation of units represented by AFGE within the Defense Supply Agency, including the units involved herein. (Assistant Secretary Case No. 22-07578-UC). Should the Assistant Secretary determine that a consolidated unit is appropriate, it would not be inconsistent with this decision to include the units involved herein in such a consolidated unit by reason of the special circumstances here involved, including the fact that the employees in these units have previously indicated through the election process that they wish AFGE to serve as their exclusive representative and the length of time which has elapsed since the elections. Of course, if a consolidation election should be held to determine whether the employees in the proposed consolidated unit wish to be represented in that unit, the employees in the three units involved herein would have the options only of being represented in the consolidated unit or being unrepresented--unless, of course, AFGE files a separate petition seeking to represent the employees involved herein in a regionwide unit which, as already indicated, would be appropriate.

By the Council.

A/SLMR No. 886

On November 27, 1974, the Assistant Secretary issued his Decision and Direction of Election in A/SLMR No. 461, finding that the petitioned for unit in the subject case was appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under Section 10 of the Order.

On December 30, 1976, the Federal Labor Relations Council (Council) issued its Decision on Appeal in FLRC No. 75A-14, in which it found that the petitioned for unit is not appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under the Order.

Based on the Council's holding in FLRC No. 75A-14 and the rationale contained therein, the Assistant Secretary ordered that the Certification of Representative previously issued to the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 3540, AFL-CIO, be revoked, and that the petition in the subject case be dismissed.

SUPPLEMENTAL DECISION AND ORDER

On November 27, 1974, the Assistant Secretary issued his Decision and Direction of Election in A/SLMR No. 461, finding that the petitioned for unit was appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under the Order. 2/ Thereafter, on December 30, 1976, the Federal Labor Relations Council (Council) issued its consolidated Decision on Appeals involving, among others, the subject case. The Council concluded, in essence, that the petitioned for unit in the subject case was not appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under the Order. 3/

Based on the Council's holding in the instant case and the rationale contained therein, I shall order that the Certification of Representative previously issued to the Petitioner be revoked and that the subject petition be dismissed.

1/ Subsequent to the issuance of the Decision on Appeal in FLRC No. 75A-14, the name of the Agency involved was changed to Defense Logistics Agency.

2/ I have been administratively advised that pursuant to the Decision and Direction of Election in A/SLMR No. 461, a Certification of Representative was issued to the Petitioner involved herein.

DECISION ON APPEALS FROM
ASSISTANT SECRETARY DECISIONS

Background of Cases

These appeals arose from three separate decisions of the Assistant Secretary in which he found that three proposed bargaining units in the Defense Supply Agency, Defense Contract Administration Services Region (DCASR), San Francisco, California, were appropriate and directed an election in each. Inasmuch as the three appeals arise out of the same basic circumstances and factual background, involve the same agency and national labor organization, and present the same major policy issue, the Council here consolidates them for decision on the merits.

All three of the decisions of the Assistant Secretary grew out of petitions filed by locals of the American Federation of Government Employees (AFGE) seeking to represent units of employees of the San Francisco DCASR. The San Francisco DCASR is one of 11 regions of the Defense Supply Agency (DSA), all of which provide contract administration services and support for the Department of Defense, as well as other Federal agencies. The San Francisco DCASR covers the States of Utah, Montana, Idaho, Washington, Oregon, Alaska, Hawaii; most of Nevada; northern California; and the Mariana Islands. It consists of a headquarters organization and field activities which are divided into two Defense Contract Administration Services Districts (DCASD's), Seattle and Salt Lake City, as well as six Defense Contract Administration Services Offices (DCASO's) located in Portland, Oregon, and at five contractors' offices in the San Francisco Bay area and a Hawaii Residency Office. The field activities perform basic mission functions of the region in their respective geographic areas. With the exception of the DCASO in Portland, Oregon, which reports through the DCASD in Seattle, all DCASO's and DCASD's within the region report directly to DCASR headquarters in San Francisco. Approximately 1,250 civilian employees are employed throughout the DCASR, San Francisco, with most employees located in northern California. All of the employees of the region are subject to uniform personnel policies and practices established at regional headquarters. Prior to the filing of the subject representation petitions, none of the employees of the DCASR were in units of exclusive recognition.

In June 1974, AFGE Local 3540 sought an election in a districtwide unit composed of the 77 eligible professional and nonprofessional employees of the Salt Lake City DCASD. The San Francisco DCASR contended that the claimed unit was not appropriate because it excluded employees who share a community of interest with the employees in the unit sought and, further, that the unit sought would not promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. The DCASR contended that the only appropriate unit was one composed of all eligible employees of the DCASR, San Francisco.

The Assistant Secretary, in a decision dated November 27, 1974, determined that the Salt Lake City DCASD unit was appropriate for the purposes of exclusive recognition under the Order. After noting particularly that the petitioned-for employees share common districtwide supervision, perform their duties within the assigned geographical locality of the DCASD, and do not interchange or have job contact with other employees of the region, and that generally transfers to or from the District Office occur only in situations involving promotions or reduction-in-force procedures, the Assistant Secretary found that the employees in the petitioned-for unit share a clear and identifiable community of interest separate and distinct from other employees of the San Francisco Region. The Assistant Secretary went on to add: "Further, based on the foregoing considerations, I find that such a unit will promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations." In making this finding with respect to effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations, the Assistant Secretary rejected the agency's contentions that certification of a less than regionwide unit would limit the scope of negotiations solely to those matters within the delegated discretionary authority of the Commander of the District Office, and thus would not result in effective dealings between the parties or promote the efficiency of agency operations.

In November 1974, AFGE Local 2723 sought an election in a unit composed of all eligible nonprofessional employees in DCASR headquarters. DCASR officials contended that the claimed unit was not appropriate because it would result in unit fragmentation and would not promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. They maintained that only a single regionwide unit would be appropriate. At the hearing, the union indicated a willingness to include the five DCASO's, all of which are located in the San Francisco Bay area, and the Hawaii Residency Office in the unit. The Assistant Secretary, on September 16, 1975, found that a unit encompassing the employees in DCASR headquarters, the five DCASO's in the San Francisco Bay area, and the Hawaii Residency Office was appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition in that the employees in such unit shared a clear and identifiable community of interest with each other, that such a unit would promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations, and that the agency contentions to the contrary were "at best, speculative and conjectural."

More particularly, with regard to efficiency of agency operations, the Assistant Secretary observed that more than cost factors should be involved in making such a determination, citing and quoting extensively from the Council's negotiability determination in the Little Rock case.[1/] The Assistant Secretary found it:

> [E]vident that a determination of efficiency of agency operations is dependent upon a complex of factors and that . . . tangible and intangible benefits to employees and activities resulting from employee representation by a labor organization can result in improved efficiency of operations despite increased cost factors. [Footnote omitted.]

1/ Local Union No. 2219, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, AFL-CIO, and Department of the Army, Corps of Engineers, Little Rock District, Little Rock, Ark., 1 FLRC 219 [FLRC No. 71A-46 (Nov. 20, 1972), Report No. 30].

He noted:

> . . . that in unit determination proceedings the parties are obligated to come forward, for the use of the Assistant Secretary, with all relevant information including any contrary evidence with respect to efficiency of agency operations; that information related to efficiency of agency operations may well be within the special knowledge and possession of the agency involved; and that where agencies fail or are unable to respond to the solicitation of such information by the Assistant Secretary, the Assistant Secretary should base his decision on the information available to him, making the best informed judgment he can under the circumstances.

He found that the unit "could result in actual economic savings and increased productivity due to the homogeneity of its composition." Noting that "the Activity's contentions that such a unit would not promote efficiency of agency operations were based primarily on its speculative assessments of the manpower and economic costs of less than a regionwide unit, rather than on a balanced consideration of all the factors, including employee morale and well-being," the Assistant Secretary found that "standing alone, such speculation as to what might be helpful or desirable [was] insufficient to establish that the proposed unit is inappropriate within the meaning of section 10(b) of the Order."

With regard to effective dealings, the Assistant Secretary, observing that the principal or ultimate authority within the region involved in the negotiation and approval of negotiated agreements and in the resolution of grievances and other personnel matters is located in the DCASR Headquarters, concluded that the unit found appropriate would promote effective dealings to the extent that the individuals most concerned with labor-management relations, fiscal matters and the direction of operations "are located organizationally with the unit found appropriate." The Assistant Secretary went on to state, however, that, in his view, a claimed unit may be appropriate and be considered to promote effective dealings as well as efficiency of agency operations "even though it does not include all employees directly under the area or regional head, or other activity officials who have final or initiating authority with respect to personnel, fiscal and programmatic matters." Relying on the amendments to section 11(a) of the Order in E.O. 11838,[2/] the

2/ Section 11(a) provides in pertinent part:

> An agency and a labor organization that has been accorded exclusive recognition, through appropriate representatives, shall meet at reasonable times and confer in good faith with respect to personnel policies and practices and matters affecting working conditions, so far as may be appropriate under applicable laws and regulations,

Assistant Secretary stated that "it is clearly contemplated by the Executive Order that labor-management negotiations could properly be conducted at lower than agency, regional, or district levels, and that, therefore, units of less broad proportions could be appropriate." Further, he went on to say that:

> . . . the Order not only is intended to encourage negotiations at the local level to the maximum extent possible with respect to personnel policies and practices and matters affecting working conditions, but that such negotiations are desirable as they must perforce promote effective dealings between employees and the agency management with which the particular employees are most closely involved.

The Assistant Secretary concluded:

> Thus, in my view, the Order, while recognizing the appropriateness of broadly based units under certain circumstances, is also, as reflected by the amendment to Section 11(a), supportive of the concept that bargaining units at lower levels may in certain instances, promote effective dealings, as well as result in the increased efficiency of agency operations. [Footnote omitted.]

FLRC No. 76A-4 (A/SLMR No. 564)

In October 1974, AFGE Local 3204 sought an election in a districtwide unit of all eligible General Schedule and professional employees in the Seattle, Washington DCASD. The proposed unit included, in addition to the employees of the Seattle District, employees of the Portland, Oregon DCASO which, organizationally, reports to regional headquarters through Seattle. The region contended that the unit sought was not appropriate because, among other things, it would not promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. In the activity's view, only a single DCASR-wide unit would be appropriate.

The Assistant Secretary found the petitioned-for unit appropriate in September 1975. In doing so, he determined that the approximately 180 > including policies set forth in the Federal Personnel Manual; published agency policies and regulations for which a compelling need exists under criteria established by the Federal Labor Relations Council and which are issued at the agency headquarters level or at the level of a primary national subdivision; a national or other controlling agreement at a higher level in the agency; and this Order. . . . employees sought to be included within the proposed unit of the Seattle DCASD and the Portland DCASO share a clear and identifiable community of interest separate and distinct from other employees of the region. In disagreement with the claims of regional officials, the Assistant Secretary determined that the proposed unit would promote effective dealings and the efficiency of agency operations. In this regard, he again noted, as in his decision in A/SLMR No. 559 supra, that a determination of effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations is dependent on a complex of factors, including tangible and intangible benefits to employees and activities resulting from employee representation by a labor organization which can result in improved efficiency of agency operations despite increased cost factors and that a claimed unit may promote effective dealings and efficiency of operations even though it does not include all employees directly under the area or regional head, or the activity officials who have final initiating authority with respect to personnel, fiscal, and programmatic matters. He was not persuaded by the region's arguments that the negotiating authority of the District Commander would be extremely limited, noting certain areas of responsibility that the District Commander does have. The Assistant Secretary concluded:

> Under these circumstances, and noting particularly the absence of any specific countervailing evidence submitted by the Activity as to a lack of effective dealings and efficiency of operations in those regions of the DSA where less than region-wide units have been recognized or certified and where there currently exist negotiated agreements, I find that the petitioned for District-wide unit will promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. [Footnotes omitted.]

Following each of the Assistant Secretary's decisions in these cases, separate elections were conducted in each of the three separate units which had been found appropriate and AFGE was certified as the exclusive representative in each unit. Thereafter, in each case, DSA appealed the Assistant Secretary's decision to the Council. Upon consideration of the petitions for review, the Council determined that the same major policy issue is presented by each of the decisions of the Assistant Secretary, namely: Whether the Assistant Secretary's decision is consistent with and promotes the purposes and policies of the Order, especially those reflected in section 10(b). Neither party filed a brief on the merits.

Section 6(a)(1) of the Order assigns to the Assistant Secretary the responsibility for deciding questions as to units appropriate for the purposes of exclusive recognition. The Council, pursuant to section 2411.18(a) of its regulations, will sustain such decisions unless they are arbitrary and capricious or inconsistent with the purposes of the Order. In the opinion of the Council, the decision of the Assistant Secretary in each of these cases is inconsistent with the purposes of the Order, specifically the language and intent of section 10(b).

Section 10(b) provides, in pertinent part, that:

> A unit may be established on a plant or installation, craft, functional, or other basis which will ensure a clear and identifiable community of interest among the employees concerned and will promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations.

The Council on several occasions has considered the meaning and application of section 10(b) in the establishment of appropriate units for the purposes of exclusive recognition. In particular, the Council has addressed the requirement that any proposed unit of exclusive recognition must meet all three appropriate unit criteria prescribed in section 10(b), that is, a unit must (1) ensure a clear and identifiable community of interest among the employees concerned, (2) promote effective dealings, and (3) promote efficiency of agency operations.

In the report accompanying E.O. 11838, the Council, in discussing its belief "that the policy of promoting more comprehensive bargaining units and hence of reducing fragmentation in the bargaining unit structure will foster the development of a sound Federal labor-management relations program," stated:

> We further feel that the Assistant Secretary can do much to foster this policy in carrying out his functions of deciding other representation questions including the appropriateness of newly sought units. Accordingly, in all representation questions, equal weight must be given to each of the three criteria in section 10(b) of the Order. By doing so, the result should be broader, more comprehensive bargaining units.3/

Thus, the Council concluded that the appropriate application of the three criteria will facilitate the reduction of fragmentation in bargaining unit structure in the Federal labor-management relations program and thereby promote the policy of creating more comprehensive units.

In its decision in Tulsa AFS, the Council discussed at length the obligations of the Assistant Secretary in applying the three 10(b) criteria.4/ The Council reviewed the history of the development of exclusive recognition of appropriate units in the Federal labor-management relations program and concluded:

3/ Labor-Management Relations in the Federal Service (1975), at 37.

4/ Department of Transportation, Federal Aviation Administration, Southwest Region, Tulsa Airway Facilities Sector, FLRC No. 74A-28 (May 9, 1975), Report No. 69.

> It is clear that the express language of section 10(b) requires that any proposed unit of exclusive recognition must satisfy each of the three criteria set forth therein, and that the Assistant Secretary must affirmatively so determine, before that unit properly can be found to be appropriate. This conclusion is amply supported by the purpose of the provision, as evidenced by its "legislative history" . . . especially wherein the criterion of community of interest of the employees involved was explicitly balanced with other considerations important to management and protection of the public interest in the promulgation of E.O. 11491 in 1969, i.e., that units found appropriate must also promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations.

Further, after quoting those passages of the Council's Report to the President which led to the issuance of Executive Order 11838 wherein the three criteria were discussed, the Council stated as to the required findings under section 10(b) of the Order:

> Thus, the Assistant Secretary must not only affirmatively determine that a unit will ensure a clear and identifiable community of interest among the employees concerned and will promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations, but must give equal weight to each of the three criteria before the particular unit can be found to be appropriate.

In Tulsa AFS, the Council also discussed the responsibility of the Assistant Secretary in unit determination proceedings to develop and consider evidence concerning the appropriate unit criteria in section 10(b) of the Order. The Council stressed that it is the obligation of the Assistant Secretary to "develop as complete a record as possible with regard to each of the three criteria . . . and . . . give full and careful consideration to all relevant evidence in the record in reaching his decision." In this regard, the Council noted that parties to a representation proceeding are responsible for providing the Assistant Secretary with all information relevant to the appropriate unit criteria that is within their knowledge and possession, but emphasized that the Assistant Secretary must actively solicit such evidence as necessary to enable him to make a fully-informed judgment as to whether a particular unit will satisfy each of the three 10(b) criteria. In this regard, the Council stated:

> [T]here is a need for a sharper degree of definition of the criteria of effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations to facilitate both the development and presentation of evidence pertaining to those criteria by agencies and labor organizations, and the qualitative appraisal of such evidence by the Assistant Secretary in appropriate unit determinations. As he has done with the community of interest criterion, therefore, the Assistant Secretary should develop subsidiary factors or indicators which will serve as guidelines in determining effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. In this way, each of the policy goals to be achieved in unit determinations will have an equal degree of precision and, hopefully, will receive the necessary and desirable equality of emphasis in representation proceedings.

Summarizing the responsibilities of the Assistant Secretary which flow from section 10(b) of the Order: Before the Assistant Secretary may find that a proposed unit is appropriate for purposes of exclusive recognition under the Order, he must make an affirmative determination that the proposed unit satisfies equally each of the three criteria contained in section 10(b). That is, he must consider equally the evidence going to each of the three criteria and, as required by section 10(b), find appropriate only units which not only ensure a clear and identifiable community of interest but also promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. In making the affirmative determination that a proposed bargaining unit satisfies each of the three criteria, the Assistant Secretary must first develop as complete a record as possible, soliciting evidence from the parties as necessary, and then ground his decision upon a careful, thorough analysis of subsidiary factors or evidentiary considerations which provide a sharp degree of definition and precision to each of the three criteria. Finally, and most importantly, the Assistant Secretary must make the necessary affirmative determinations that a unit clearly, convincingly and equally satisfies each of the 10(b) criteria in recognition of and in a manner fully consistent with the purposes of the Order, including the dual objectives of preventing further fragmentation of bargaining units as well as reducing existing fragmentation, thereby promoting a more comprehensive bargaining unit structure. We turn now to the application of these principles to the three cases before the Council. They will be treated seriatim.

As outlined above, in this case the Assistant Secretary found that a unit of one geographic element of the San Francisco DCASR, namely the Salt Lake City DCASD, was an appropriate unit for purposes of exclusive recognition under the Order. In so finding, he reviewed the evidence relating to certain subsidiary factors or indicators of community of interest and based upon these evidentiary considerations found that the employees in the petitioned-for unit shared a clear and identifiable community of interest separate and distinct from other employees of the San Francisco Region. Additionally, as required, the Assistant Secretary found that such a unit will promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. However, this latter conclusion was "based on the foregoing considerations," that is, the evidentiary considerations which supported a finding that the employees had community of interest, rather than on any evidence directly bearing on the promotion of effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations.

While the Assistant Secretary made an affirmative finding that the proposed unit met all of the appropriate unit criteria of section 10(b), we must conclude that in making that finding he did not fully meet his obligations under the Order. In this regard, as we have indicated, it is the responsibility of the Assistant Secretary to develop as complete a record as possible with regard to each of the three criteria, soliciting evidence from the parties as necessary; to give full and careful consideration to all relevant evidence in the record; and then to ground his decision upon a careful, thorough analysis of evidentiary considerations or factors which provide a sharp degree of definition and precision to each of the three criteria. Where the Assistant Secretary finds a unit to be appropriate for purposes of exclusive recognition, he must make an affirmative determination that a unit equally satisfies each of the 10(b) criteria. Finally, and most importantly, the Assistant Secretary must decide appropriate unit questions consistent with the purposes of the Order, including the policy of preventing and reducing fragmentation, thereby promoting a more comprehensive bargaining unit structure.

In this case, while the Assistant Secretary clearly met his responsibilities in developing and analyzing evidence pertaining to the "community of interest" criterion and in making an affirmative finding with respect to that criterion, we conclude that he failed to meet these responsibilities with respect to the criteria of "effective dealings" and "efficiency of agency operations." First, a review of the record reveals that the Assistant Secretary failed to make an intensive effort to develop as complete a record as possible with regard to the criteria of "effective dealings" and "efficiency of agency operations," soliciting evidence from the parties as necessary.5/ While the testimony and arguments advanced by the activity as to why the proposed DCASD unit would not promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations may not, in the Assistant Secretary's view, have provided him with a sufficient basis on which to make a determination,6/ the development of such evidence does not

5/ A review of the record indicates that, as to effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations, the Hearing Officer asked a few questions concerning the delegated authority of certain management officials to negotiate and sign a collective bargaining agreement and asked an agency witness only three insubstantial questions concerning whether the proposed unit would impair efficiency of agency operations.

6/ In testimony before the Assistant Secretary's Hearing Officer and in its posthearing brief to the Assistant Secretary, the agency presented evidence regarding effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations as well as evidence regarding community of interest of the employees involved. The San Francisco Region Civilian Personnel Officer testified at the hearing, among other things, in effect, that it would be more efficient for the region to negotiate and deal with the exclusive representative of employees in a single regionwide unit rather than with stop with the presentation by the parties. Although, as we stated in Tulsa AFS, the parties are responsible for providing the Assistant Secretary with all relevant information within their knowledge and possession, we emphasized in that decision that the Assistant Secretary, in carrying out his responsibility to decide appropriate unit questions, must actively solicit such information and develop the evidence necessary to enable him to make a fully-informed judgment as to whether the proposed unit will satisfy each of the three 10(b) criteria. We conclude that the Assistant Secretary did not meet that responsibility in A/SLMR No. 461. Furthermore, as to the contentions and supporting evidence which were put forward by the activity regarding these two criteria, the Assistant Secretary failed to give such contentions and evidence full and careful consideration. Indeed, his only consideration was in a footnote wherein he rejected the activity's contention that a less than regionwide unit would limit the scope of negotiations solely to those matters within the delegated authority of the Commander of the District Office.7/representatives of employees in a multiplicity of units within the region. In this regard, he testified in effect that the smaller Salt Lake City unit would, by creating the possibility of multiple units in the region, impair efficiency by exceeding the capacities of the agency's limited labor-management relations staff. In its posthearing brief to the Assistant Secretary, the agency argued, among other things, that the size and composition of the proposed unit, the potential for meaningful negotiations, and the availability of personnel management resources all demonstrate that one regionwide unit would more likely promote efficiency of agency operations and effective dealings.

7/ In rejecting the agency's contention that the certification of a less-than-regionwide unit would limit the scope of negotiations solely to those matters within the delegated discretionary authority of the Commander of the District Office, the Assistant Secretary relied on his decision in A/SLMR No. 372 wherein he had, in turn, relied on the Council's decision in United Federation of College Teachers, Local 1460 and U.S. Merchant Marine Academy, 1 FLRC 211 [FLRC No. 71A-15 (Nov. 20, 1972), Report No. 30]. However, A/SLMR No. 372 was subsequently reviewed by the Council in Defense Supply Agency, Defense Contract Administration Services Region (DCASR), Cleveland, Ohio, Defense Contract Administration Services Offices (DCASO's), Akron, Ohio and Columbus, Ohio, A/SLMR No. 372, FLRC No. 74A-41 (Aug. 13, 1975), Report No. 80. The Council set aside the Assistant Secretary's decision therein and remanded the case to him. In doing so, the Council stated, as to the Assistant Secretary's reliance upon Merchant Marine and as to the relationship of the amendments to section 11(a) of the Order to the principles enunciated in Merchant Marine:

Second, the Assistant Secretary's decision was not based upon a careful, thorough analysis of evidentiary considerations or factors which provide

> Turning to the instant case [DSA, Cleveland], it is clear that the Assistant Secretary has misinterpreted and misapplied the Merchant Marine decision. For under the Order, as presently effective, labor relations and personnel policies as established (and, of course, published) by the DCASR headquarters may properly serve to bar the matter concerned from the scope of bargaining under section 11(a) of the Order. Since these matters would thus be outside the scope of bargaining at the DCASO level, DCASR, under the Merchant Marine decision, would be under no obligation to provide representatives to negotiate and enter into agreement on such matters at the DCASO level.
> Thus, as the Assistant Secretary, in finding the separate DCASO units appropriate in the present case, relied in part on an erroneous interpretation and application of the Merchant Marine decision, we shall remand the case to him for reconsideration and disposition consistent with our opinion.
>
> We are mindful in the above regard that under the amendments to section 11(a), adopted in E.O. 11838 and to become effective 90 days after the Council issues the criteria for determining "compelling need," DCASR directives as such would not thereafter serve to limit the scope of bargaining at the DCASO level—because DCASR appears to be a subdivision below the level of "agency headquarters" or "the level of a primary national subdivision." However, the Assistant Secretary should carefully examine the regulatory framework of DSA, including the DCASR's, which prevails at the time of his reconsideration and then weigh the impact thereon of Merchant Marine as properly interpreted and applied to the existing circumstances in order that the three criteria in section 10(b) can be properly applied. Moreover, in so applying Merchant Marine, the Assistant Secretary should carefully consider that the amendments to section 11(a) as adopted in E.O. 11838 were not designed to render fragmented units appropriate.
> In the above regard, as indicated in section V.1. of the Report accompanying E.O. 11838, the changes in section 11(a) of the Order were intended to "complement" the recommendations of the Council relating to the consolidation of bargaining units. The purpose of those recommendations (which were adopted by the President) was principally to reduce the unit fragmentation that had previously developed and to encourage the creation of more comprehensive bargaining units in the interest of the entire program. [Footnotes omitted.]

a sharp degree of definition and precision to the "effective dealings" and "efficiency of agency operations" criteria. Indeed, there was no discussion of such evidentiary considerations or factors. Instead, the treatment of these two criteria amounted to little more than a conclusionary statement based solely upon evidentiary considerations which had been relied upon to support the finding of a community of interest.

While we realize that certain considerations traditionally discussed in the context of community of interest can also be relevant in ascertaining whether a proposed unit would promote effective dealings or efficiency of agency operations (e.g., supervisory hierarchy and uniformity of personnel policies), other, quite different considerations also apply. As we stated in Tulsa AFS,[8/] there is a need for a sharper degree of definition to the criteria of effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations and the Assistant Secretary should develop subsidiary factors or indicators which will serve as guidelines in determining effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. Rather than relying solely on the "foregoing considerations," the Assistant Secretary was required to examine the very kind of testimony and contentions put forward by the agency (e.g., more efficient use of negotiation resources derived from single regionwide negotiations rather than a multiplicity of negotiations in segments of the region), as well as the wide range of other considerations raised by the facts of the case. In developing such subsidiary factors or evidentiary considerations, which more precisely define what is meant by promoting effective dealings, the Assistant Secretary might well consider in the circumstances of this case such matters as the locus and scope of authority of the responsible personnel office; the limitations on the negotiation of matters of critical concern to employees because the concerns of Salt Lake City DCASO employees may be inseparable from those of other employees in the region; the likelihood that people with greater expertise in negotiations will be available in a larger unit; the actual experience of this agency in other bargaining units; and the level at which labor relations policy is set in the agency and the effectuation of agency training in the implementation of a number of negotiated agreements and grievance procedures covering employees performing essentially the same duties. As to "efficiency of agency operations" among those factors which should be considered would be the benefits to be derived from a unit structure which bears some rational relationship to the operational and organizational structure of the agency. This is certainly not to say that section 10(b) requires that each bargaining unit always be coextensive with the agency's view of how it can best organize to carry out its mission, but the relationship between the proposed bargaining unit and the operational and organizational structure of the agency should be given substantial weight in ascertaining whether the unit will promote efficiency of agency operations. In the instant case, for example, while the Assistant Secretary relied in part on the fact that the

8/ See page 7 supra.

Salt Lake City DCASD employees share districtwide supervision, he appears to have given no weight to the fact that those employees share a common supervisory structure with all employees in the region and enjoy a commonality of mission, personnel policies and practices and matters affecting working conditions with all employees of the region.

Third, in simply concluding that the proposed unit will promote effective dealings and efficiency of operations based solely upon evidentiary considerations which had been relied upon to support the finding of a community of interest, the Assistant Secretary failed to give equal weight to all three criteria.

Finally, there is the requirement that the Assistant Secretary decide appropriate unit questions consistent with the policy of the Order of preventing and reducing fragmentation in the bargaining unit structure of the Federal labor-management relations program. The Assistant Secretary's decision finding appropriate a unit limited to the Salt Lake City DCASD is clearly contrary to that policy in that his decision tends to foster and promote fragmentation. The San Francisco DCASR is a single organizational element of the agency with a chain of command headed by the Regional Commander, running down through all of the component elements. With the exception of the DCASO in Portland which reports through the DCASD in Seattle, all elements of the region report directly to DCASR headquarters. All employees of the region perform their duties pursuant to policies and procedures established by the regional headquarters staff, and the employees within the region are subject to uniform personnel policies and job benefits. The DCASR's Civilian Personnel Office, located at headquarters, has the responsibility for servicing all components within the region. The region encompasses an organizational structure of an agency which is functionally integrated. It has been established in this manner to accomplish its mission. Its employees thus share a commonality of mission, organization and personnel policies and practices and matters affecting working conditions.

There is no question that if the union sought recognition in a regionwide unit, it would meet all of the section 10(b) criteria and, more importantly, would be consistent with the Order's policy of promoting a more comprehensive bargaining unit structure. Against this backdrop, the AFGE petitioned for a single portion of the organizational and functional whole, the Salt Lake City DCASD, a unit of approximately 77 employees out of a total of approximately 1,250 eligible employees in the region. In concluding that these employees shared a community of interest with each other, the Assistant Secretary relied upon those factors which, in his view, reflected some degree of separation between these employees and the remaining employees in the DCASR. In doing so, he failed to give proper recognition to the single organizational structure of the region, its chain of command and authority, the uniform personnel policies and practices within the DCASR, and the existence of a single Civilian Personnel Office within the DCASR. As a result, the unit structure which his decision promotes within the San Francisco DCASR results in artificial distinctions between groups of employees whose mission and functions, supervisory structure and conditions of employment are identical. Moreover, finding such a unit appropriate left the remainder of the region for further piecemeal organizing efforts, thereby resulting in a fragmented bargaining unit structure, as actually subsequently occured herein.

In summary, in the circumstances of this case as reflected in the record before us, equal application of the three criteria in section 10(b) and the resulting consistency with the purposes of the Order would dictate a finding that a unit limited to the Salt Lake City DCASD is not an appropriate unit for purposes of exclusive recognition under the Order.9/

The Assistant Secretary, as outlined above, in this case found appropriate a unit composed of the employees in DCASR headquarters and the five DCASO's, all in the San Francisco Bay area, along with the Hawaii Residency Office. After reviewing at length the organizational and work environment of the region and its component parts, he found that there was a clear and identifiable community of interest among the employees in the unit found appropriate, noting specifically that such employees share a common mission and are covered by the same personnel and labor relations policies; that there are similar job classifications in each of the components within the headquarters, the five DCASO's and the Hawaii Residency Office; that there have been reassignments to and from the Regional Headquarters and the DCASO's; and that there is employee contact between headquarters and the DCASO's.

While the Assistant Secretary again made an affirmative finding that the proposed unit met all of the appropriate unit criteria of section 10(b), we must conclude that in making that finding he did not fully meet those obligations, outlined previously herein, which the Order imposes upon him. In this case, while the Assistant Secretary met his responsibilities in developing and analyzing evidence pertaining to the "community of interest" criterion and in making an affirmative finding with respect to that criterion,[10] we conclude that he failed to meet those responsibilities with respect to the criteria of "effective dealings" and "efficiency of agency operations." First, a review of the record reveals that the Assistant Secretary failed to make an affirmative effort to develop as complete a record as possible with regard to the criteria of "effective dealings" and "efficiency of agency operations."[11] Furthermore, as to the contentions and supporting evidence which were put forward by the activity regarding these two criteria, the Assistant Secretary failed to give such testimony appropriate and adequate consideration.

9/ In this regard, we note, as did the agency in testimony and brief before the Assistant Secretary, that the Assistant Secretary earlier considered and rejected as inappropriate various less-than-regionwide units in the San Francisco DCASR ranging in size from 18 to 686 employees. He found such units "would artifically [sic] divide and fragment . . . operations, and cannot be reasonably expected to promote effective dealings or efficiency of operations." Defense Supply Agency, Defense Contract Administration Services Region (DCASR), San Francisco, A/SLMR No. 112 (Nov. 30, 1971), decision by the then Assistant Secretary. This precedential decision was neither discussed nor even adverted to in the instant case.

As to whether the unit sought in A/SLMR No. 559 would promote efficiency of agency operations, the Assistant Secretary, relying on Council negotiability decisions[12] on the meaning of section 12(b)(4),[13] concluded that more than cost factors should be involved in making such determinations. As previously indicated, he stated:

10/ We do not here decide that the factors relied upon by the Assistant Secretary establish a separate community of interest for the employees in the unit found appropriate. Indeed, many of the factors relied upon by the Assistant Secretary indicate a community of interest that is regionwide in scope rather than limited to the employees in the unit sought by the union.

11/ A review of the record discloses that the Hearing Officer did not at any time solicit testimony concerning the criteria of effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations, limiting direct questioning solely to indicia of community of interest among employees within the unit sought.

13/ Section 12(b)(4) provides in pertinent part:

> Sec. 12. Basic provisions of agreements. Each agreement between an agency and a labor organization is subject to the following requirements--
>
> . . . . . .
>

> From the foregoing, it is evident that a determination of efficiency of agency operations is dependent on a complex of factors and that it has been recognized that the tangible and intangible benefits to employees and activities resulting from employee representation by a labor organization can result in improved efficiency of agency operations despite increased cost factors. [Footnote omitted.]

Based on these considerations, the Assistant Secretary concluded that the proposed unit would promote efficiency of agency operations, stressing that the unit would encompass the employees within the same commuting area and would include the Hawaii Residency Office which otherwise might be fragmented.[14] The Assistant Secretary concluded that the establishment of such a unit "could result" in actual economic savings and increased productivity due to the homogeneity of its composition.

While the Assistant Secretary reached a conclusion as to whether the proposed unit would promote the efficiency of agency operations, in our view, he failed properly to consider the relevant testimony and arguments advanced by the agency and, in effect, thereby failed to give the required equal weight to this criterion. At the outset, the Assistant Secretary found that the agency's views as to both this criterion and the criterion of promoting effective dealings to be "at most, speculative and conjectural." Such a rejection of the agency's views was inappropriate and a misconception of the nature of these criteria. We believe that inherent in determining whether or not a proposed unit will promote the efficiency of agency operations is the need to anticipate the impact of a given unit structure on the agency's operations. Just as the Assistant Secretary considered economic savings and increased productivity which "could result," the Assistant Secretary must also consider the costs and inefficient use of resources that, in management's opinion, "could result" from such a unit structure. The speculative and conjectural nature of a contention, in these circumstances, does not in and of itself render the contention without merit.

As to the specifics of the agency's contentions, the Assistant Secretary stated:

. . . . . .

> (4) to maintain the efficiency of the Government operations entrusted to them.

14/ In this regard, the same concern about fragmentation might have been expressed about any unrepresented portion of the region, for example, the Seattle DCASD, which in all significant respects had the same relationship with the DCASR headquarters as the Hawaii Residency Office.

> In addition, it was noted that the Activity's contentions that such a unit would not promote efficiency of agency operations were based primarily on its speculative assessments of the manpower and economic costs of less than a regionwide unit, rather than on a balanced consideration of all the factors, including employee morale and well-being, which . . . are relevant factors in making such an assessment. Thus, the Activity's position in this regard was reflected in the testimony of its Civilian Personnel Officer that "it was reasonable" to infer that a region-wide unit would do more to promote efficiency of agency operations (and effective dealings) than the originally petitioned for unit of the DCASR Headquarters, Burlingame, and that it would be a hardship on his office if several agreements were required because this would require expenditure of both manpower and financial resources "that might not be necessary if there were a single unit throughout the Region." I find that, standing alone, such speculation as to what might be helpful or desirable to be insufficient to establish that the proposed unit is inappropriate within the meaning of Section 10(b) of the Order. [Footnote omitted.]

In our view, rather than being rejected, in part, as "speculative," the contentions of the agency were valid considerations to be weighed in determining whether the proposed unit would promote efficiency of agency operations. As we have indicated, a policy of the Order is the promotion of more comprehensive bargaining units. Hence, the activity's contention that a regionwide unit of employees performing the same jobs in an organization with the same mission and subject to the same personnel policies and supervision would do more to promote efficiency of agency operations was consistent with the purposes of the Order. Similarly, while not dispositive, the efficient use of agency labor-management relations and financial resources is a valid factor in determining efficiency of agency operations.

We do not disagree with either the Assistant Secretary's conclusion that more than cost factors are involved in a determination of the promotion of efficiency of agency operations, or his conclusion that the benefits resulting from employee representation by a labor organization can result in improved efficiency of agency operations. However, the according of equal weight to the efficiency of agency operations criteria requires careful consideration of the agency's reasoned view of the impact of the proposed unit on the efficiency of its operations.[15/]

In finding that the alternative unit sought would promote effective dealings, the Assistant Secretary noted that the unit would promote effective dealings to the extent that the individuals most concerned with labor-management relations, fiscal matters and the direction of operations are located organizationally within the unit found appropriate. Thereafter, relying on the amendments to section 11(a) of the Order in E.O. 11838,[16/] the Assistant Secretary stated:

> Moreover, in my view, a claimed unit may be appropriate and be considered to promote effective dealings as well as efficiency of agency operations even though it does not include all employees directly under the area or regional head, or other activity officials who have final or initiating authority with respect to personnel, fiscal and programmatic matters. Thus, it is clearly contemplated by the Executive Order that labor-management negotiations could properly be conducted at lower than agency, regional, or district levels, and that, therefore, units of less broad proportions could be appropriate.

The Assistant Secretary's reliance on the recent amendments to section 11(a) to support his finding that the unit would promote effective dealings is in error. As stated above in footnote 7, the Council, in its decision in Defense Supply Agency, Defense Contract Administration Services Region (DCASR), Cleveland, Ohio, Defense Contract Administration Services Offices (DCASO's), Akron, Ohio and Columbus, Ohio, A/SLMR No. 372, FLRC No. 74A-41 (Aug. 13, 1975), Report No. 80, emphasized:

> [A]s indicated in section V.1. of the Report accompanying E.O. 11838, the changes in section 11(a) of the Order were intended to "complement" the recommendations of the Council relating to the consolidation of bargaining units. The purpose of those recommendations (which were adopted by the President) was principally to reduce the unit fragmentation that had previously developed and to encourage the creation of more comprehensive bargaining units in the interest of the entire program. [Footnote omitted.][17/]

While the changes in section 11(a) were intended to expand the scope of bargaining by eliminating unnecessary constrictions on meaningful negotiations which had been imposed by higher level agency regulations not critical to effective agency management or the public interest, the changes in section 11(a) were also intended, as stated in FLRC No. 74A-41, to complement the recommendations of the Council relating to reduction of unit fragmentation, which reduction would also serve to expand the scope of bargaining. The Assistant Secretary's reliance on the 11(a) changes to support a finding of a less comprehensive unit is therefore totally inappropriate. While the changes to section 11(a) were intended to lessen the impact of certain agency regulations upon the scope of bargaining, contrary to the conclusions of the Assistant Secretary, they were not intended to reflect a policy of encouraging the establishment of bargaining units at lower organizational levels within an agency.

16/ Note 2 supra.

17/ In the subject decision, A/SLMR No. 559, the Assistant Secretary took note of this language in FLRC No. 74A-41, but concluded that he did not find this concept to be inconsistent with the continued existence or establishment of units less comprehensive than region or districtwide, which otherwise meet the tests of appropriateness under the Order.

While it is true that units may promote effective dealings and be appropriate under section 10(b) even if established at lower agency organizational levels, in our view it is clear that, generally, effective dealings can be better achieved in more comprehensive units. As we have indicated, negotiations covering more comprehensive units permit the parties to address a wider range of matters of critical concern to greater numbers of employees. For example, employees of the entire region herein would have identical concerns as to such matters as merit staffing procedures, areas of consideration, reduction-in-force procedures, and competitive areas. Moreover, negotiations in less fragmented bargaining unit structures established at higher organizational levels permit unions and agencies to allocate their manpower resources and send to the bargaining table more experienced and skilled negotiators who should do a more efficient job of reaching a satisfactory agreement.

The instant decision of the Assistant Secretary clearly reflects a desire that negotiations be conducted at the lowest organizational levels possible and, hence, as close as possible to the particular employees who will be affected by the outcome of the negotiations; however, such a desire cannot be used as a rationale for creating units in a manner inconsistent with the purposes of the Order. Such reasoning, carried to an extreme as here, results in the fragmentation of units contrary to the policies sought to be served by the Order. Moreover, we do not agree that the resolution of local concerns is sacrificed by the creation of more comprehensive units. To the extent that there may be concerns unique to some employees which are not shared by an entire broader unit, there are obvious, well-recognized ways that these concerns may be addressed within the parameters of the bargaining relationship. And while a unit at a lower organizational level may provide a temporary vehicle to address certain localized problems, in the long run, units broader in scope will facilitate consideration and resolution of a greater range of concerns common to employees and will better serve the interests of both the employees and the agencies. It was to achieve this end that the policies of the Order were adopted. Thus, the Assistant Secretary's contrary unit determination was inconsistent with these purposes of the Order.

As previously stated with respect to A/SLMR No. 461, the Assistant Secretary must decide appropriate unit questions consonant with the policy of the Order of preventing and reducing fragmentation in the bargaining unit structure of the Federal labor-management relations program. In finding appropriate the alternative unit sought in this case, the Assistant Secretary's decision plainly contravenes that policy since his decision tends to foster and promote fragmentation. On the other hand, for the reasons previously detailed at page 14 above, there is no question that a regionwide unit, if alone sought, would meet all of the section 10(b) criteria.

While the employees in the San Francisco Bay area may have, as discussed by the Assistant Secretary, a community of interest with each other and possibly some degree of separation from other elements because of separate local supervision and geographic dispersion, the petitioned-for unit would be inconsistent with the single organizational structure of the region, its chain of command and authority, the uniform personnel policies and practices within the DCASR, and the existence of a single Civilian Personnel Office. The unit structure, which his decision promotes within the San Francisco DCASR, results in artificial distinctions between employees whose mission and functions, supervisory structure and conditions of employment are identical. Further, as noted with regard to A/SLMR No. 461, there is no question that if the union sought recognition in a regionwide unit, it would meet all of the section 10(b) criteria and, more importantly, would be consistent with the Order's policy of promoting a more comprehensive bargaining unit structure. Moreover, finding such a unit appropriate left the remainder of the region for further piecemeal organizing efforts, thereby resulting in a fragmented bargaining unit structure, as actually subsequently occurred herein.

In conclusion, the Assistant Secretary's finding that the alternative unit sought would promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations was based upon considerations which did not properly provide a sharp degree of definition and precision to these two criteria. Indeed, the considerations upon which the Assistant Secretary relied were not implementive of and were not consistent with those criteria. As a result, the Assistant Secretary failed properly to give equal weight to these criteria in his decision.

In summary, in the circumstances of this case as reflected in the record before us, equal application of the three criteria in section 10(b) and the resulting consistency with the purposes of the Order, would dictate a finding that the alternative unit sought herein is not an appropriate unit for the purposes of exclusive recognition under the Order.

In this case, the Assistant Secretary found that the employees in the petitioned-for unit, the Seattle DCASD, including the Portland DCASO, share a clear and identifiable community of interest separate and distinct from other employees of the region. In response to the activity's claim that such a unit would not promote effective dealings or efficiency of agency operations, the Assistant Secretary found that the activity took the identical position that it took in A/SLMR No. 461; he rejected the activity's position partly on the basis of the circumstances recited in A/SLMR No. 559 and his reasoning therein. The Assistant Secretary concluded:

> Under these circumstances, and noting particularly the absence of any specific countervailing evidence submitted by the Activity as to a lack of effective dealings and efficiency of operations in those regions of the DSA where less than region-wide units have been recognized or certified and where there currently exist negotiated agreements, I find that the petitioned-for District-wide unit will promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. [Footnotes omitted.]

While the Assistant Secretary made an affirmative finding that the proposed unit met all of the appropriate unit criteria of section 10(b), we must again conclude that in doing so he did not fully meet those obligations, outlined previously herein, which the Order imposes upon him. Specifically, a review of the record reveals that the Assistant Secretary failed to make an affirmative effort to develop as complete a record as possible with regard to the criteria of "effective dealings" and "efficiency of agency operations."18/ While the testimony and arguments advanced by the activity as to why the proposed unit would not promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations may not have provided the Assistant Secretary with a sufficient basis on which to make a determination, as we have indicated, the development of such evidence does not stop with the parties. It is the responsibility of the Assistant Secretary to develop as complete a record as possible with regard to each of the three criteria, soliciting evidence from the parties as necessary; he did not do so here.

With regard to the circumstances which he particularly noted in finding that the unit sought would promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations, the Assistant Secretary plainly failed to make an affirmative determination that the unit equally satisfied each of the 10(b) criteria. As we indicated previously, the experience of an agency and labor organization under a given unit structure may be considered in determining whether a petitioned-for unit satisfies the three criteria set forth in section 10(b) of the Order, However, the Assistant Secretary may not rely upon "the absence of any specific countervailing evidence . . . as to a lack of effective dealings and efficiency of operations" in other existing bargaining units to make an affirmative finding regarding these criteria in a proposed unit. Rather, as we have previously emphasized, it is the responsibility of the Assistant Secretary to develop as complete a record as possible with regard to each of the three criteria, soliciting evidence from the parties as necessary; to give full and careful consideration to all relevant evidence in the record; and then to ground his decision upon a careful, thorough analysis of evidentiary considerations or factors which provide a sharp degree of definition and precision to each of the three criteria. Where the Assistant Secretary finds a unit to be appropriate for purposes of exclusive recognition, he must make an affirmative determination that a unit equally satisfies each of the 10(b) criteria. Reliance upon a lack of evidence fails to satisfy the requirement in the Order that the Assistant Secretary make such an affirmative determination.

Accordingly, for the reasons fully discussed above in regard to the Assistant Secretary's decision in A/SLMR No. 559, we must likewise reject the Assistant Secretary's reliance upon that decision in reaching his decision in A/SLMR No. 564. In summary, in the circumstances of this case as reflected in the record before us, equal application of the three criteria in section 10(b) and the resulting consistency with the purposes of the Order, would dictate a finding that the unit sought herein is not an appropriate unit for purposes of exclusive recognition under the Order. However, as noted with regard to both A/SLMR No. 461 and A/SLMR No. 559, there is no question that if the union sought recognition in a regionwide unit, it would meet all of the section 10(b) criteria and, more importantly, would be consistent with the Order's policy of promoting a more comprehensive unit structure.

Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, we find that the Assistant Secretary's Decision and Direction of Election in each of the above-entitled cases is inconsistent with the purposes of the Order. Accordingly, pursuant to section 2411.18(b) of the Council's rules of procedure, we set aside the Assistant Secretary's decisions and remand the cases to him for action consistent with our decision herein.

In this regard, we have been administratively advised that the Assistant Secretary currently has under consideration a petition for consolidation of units represented by AFGE within the Defense Supply Agency, including the units involved herein. (Assistant Secretary Case No. 22-07578-UC). Should the Assistant Secretary determine that a consolidated unit is appropriate, it would not be inconsistent with this decision to include the units involved herein in such a consolidated unit by reason of the special circumstances here involved, including the fact that the employees in these units have previously indicated through the election process that they wish AFGE to serve as their exclusive representative and the length of time which has elapsed since the elections. Of course, if a consolidation election should be held to determine whether the employees in the proposed consolidated unit wish to be represented in that unit, the employees in the three units involved herein would have the options only of being represented in the consolidated unit or being unrepresented--unless, of course, AFGE files a separate petition seeking to represent the employees involved herein in a regionwide unit which, as already indicated, would be appropriate.

By the Council.

A/SLMR No. 887

On September 30, 1975, the Assistant Secretary issued his Decision and Direction of Election in A/SLMR No. 564, finding that the petitioned for unit in the subject case was appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under the Order.

On December 30, 1976, the Federal Labor Relations Council (Council) issued its Decision on Appeal in FLRC No. 76A-4, in which it found that the petitioned for unit is not appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under the Order.

Based on the Council's holding in FLRC No. 76A-4 and the rationale contained therein, the Assistant Secretary ordered that the Certifications of Representative previously issued to the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 3204, AFL-CIO, be revoked, and that the petition in the subject case be dismissed.

SUPPLEMENTAL DECISION AND ORDER

On September 30, 1975, the Assistant Secretary issued his Decision and Direction of Election in A/SLMR No. 564, finding that the petitioned for unit was appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under the Order. 2/ Thereafter, on December 30, 1976, the Federal Labor Relations Council (Council) issued its consolidated Decision on Appeals involving, among others, the subject case. The Council concluded, in essence, that the petitioned for unit in the subject case was not appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under the Order. 3/

Based on the Council's holding in the instant case and the rationale contained therein, I shall order that the Certifications of Representative previously issued to the Petitioner be revoked, and that the subject petition be dismissed.

1/ Subsequent to the issuance of the Decision on Appeal in FLRC No. 76A-4, the name of the Agency involved was changed to Defense Logistics Agency.

2/ I have been administratively advised that pursuant to the Decision and Direction of Election in A/SLMR No. 564, Certifications of Representative were issued to the Petitioner involved herein encompassing separate units of professional and nonprofessional employees.

3/ Further processing of the subject case was held in abeyance pending the Council's disposition of an appeal in Defense Supply Agency, Defense Contract Administration Services Region (DCASR), Cleveland, Ohio, etc., FLRC No. 76A-97 (July 20, 1977).

ORDER

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the Certifications of Representative issued in Case No. 71-3140(RO) be, and they hereby are, revoked, and that the petition in Case No. 71-3140(RO) be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

DECISION ON APPEALS FROM
ASSISTANT SECRETARY DECISIONS

Background of Cases

These appeals arose from three separate decisions of the Assistant Secretary in which he found that three proposed bargaining units in the Defense Supply Agency, Defense Contract Administration Services Region (DCASR), San Francisco, California, were appropriate and directed an election in each. Inasmuch as the three appeals arise out of the same basic circumstances and factual background, involve the same agency and national labor organization, and present the same major policy issue, the Council here consolidates them for decision on the merits.

All three of the decisions of the Assistant Secretary grew out of petitions filed by locals of the American Federation of Government Employees (AFGE) seeking to represent units of employees of the San Francisco DCASR. The San Francisco DCASR is one of 11 regions of the Defense Supply Agency (DSA), all of which provide contract administration services and support for the Department of Defense, as well as other Federal agencies. The San Francisco DCASR covers the States of Utah, Montana, Idaho, Washington, Oregon, Alaska, Hawaii; most of Nevada; northern California; and the Mariana Islands. It consists of a headquarters organization and field activities which are divided into two Defense Contract Administration Services Districts (DCASD's), Seattle and Salt Lake City, as well as six Defense Contract Administration Services Offices (DCASO's) located in Portland, Oregon, and at five contractors' offices in the San Francisco Bay area and a Hawaii Residency Office. The field activities perform basic mission functions of the region in their respective geographic areas. With the exception of the DCASO in Portland, Oregon, which reports through the DCASD in Seattle, all DCASO's and DCASD's within the region report directly to DCASR headquarters in San Francisco. Approximately 1,250 civilian employees are employed throughout the DCASR, San Francisco, with most employees located in northern California. All of the employees of the region are subject to uniform personnel policies and practices established at regional headquarters. Prior to the filing of the subject representation petitions, none of the employees of the DCASR were in units of exclusive recognition.

In June 1974, AFGE Local 3540 sought an election in a districtwide unit composed of the 77 eligible professional and nonprofessional employees of the Salt Lake City DCASD. The San Francisco DCASR contended that the claimed unit was not appropriate because it excluded employees who share a community of interest with the employees in the unit sought and, further, that the unit sought would not promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. The DCASR contended that the only appropriate unit was one composed of all eligible employees of the DCASR, San Francisco.

The Assistant Secretary, in a decision dated November 27, 1974, determined that the Salt Lake City DCASD unit was appropriate for the purposes of exclusive recognition under the Order. After noting particularly that the petitioned-for employees share common districtwide supervision, perform their duties within the assigned geographical locality of the DCASD, and do not interchange or have job contact with other employees of the region, and that generally transfers to or from the District Office occur only in situations involving promotions or reduction-in-force procedures, the Assistant Secretary found that the employees in the petitioned-for unit share a clear and identifiable community of interest separate and distinct from other employees of the San Francisco Region. The Assistant Secretary went on to add: "Further, based on the foregoing considerations, I find that such a unit will promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations." In making this finding with respect to effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations, the Assistant Secretary rejected the agency's contentions that certification of a less than regionwide unit would limit the scope of negotiations solely to those matters within the delegated discretionary authority of the Commander of the District Office, and thus would not result in effective dealings between the parties or promote the efficiency of agency operations.

In November 1974, AFGE Local 2723 sought an election in a unit composed of all eligible nonprofessional employees in DCASR headquarters. DCASR officials contended that the claimed unit was not appropriate because it would result in unit fragmentation and would not promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. They maintained that only a single regionwide unit would be appropriate. At the hearing, the union indicated a willingness to include the five DCASO's, all of which are located in the San Francisco Bay area, and the Hawaii Residency Office in the unit. The Assistant Secretary, on September 16, 1975, found that a unit encompassing the employees in DCASR headquarters, the five DCASO's in the San Francisco Bay area, and the Hawaii Residency Office was appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition in that the employees in such unit shared a clear and identifiable community of interest with each other, that such a unit would promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations, and that the agency contentions to the contrary were "at best, speculative and conjectural."

More particularly, with regard to efficiency of agency operations, the Assistant Secretary observed that more than cost factors should be involved in making such a determination, citing and quoting extensively from the Council's negotiability determination in the Little Rock case.[1/] The Assistant Secretary found it:

> [E]vident that a determination of efficiency of agency operations is dependent upon a complex of factors and that . . . tangible and intangible benefits to employees and activities resulting from employee representation by a labor organization can result in improved efficiency of operations despite increased cost factors. [Footnote omitted.]

1/ Local Union No. 2219, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, AFL-CIO, and Department of the Army, Corps of Engineers, Little Rock District, Little Rock, Ark., 1 FLRC 219 [FLRC No. 71A-46 (Nov. 20, 1972), Report No. 30].

He noted:

> . . . that in unit determination proceedings the parties are obligated to come forward, for the use of the Assistant Secretary, with all relevant information including any contrary evidence with respect to efficiency of agency operations; that information related to efficiency of agency operations may well be within the special knowledge and possession of the agency involved; and that where agencies fail or are unable to respond to the solicitation of such information by the Assistant Secretary, the Assistant Secretary should base his decision on the information available to him, making the best informed judgment he can under the circumstances.

He found that the unit "could result in actual economic savings and increased productivity due to the homogeneity of its composition." Noting that "the Activity's contentions that such a unit would not promote efficiency of agency operations were based primarily on its speculative assessments of the manpower and economic costs of less than a regionwide unit, rather than on a balanced consideration of all the factors, including employee morale and well-being," the Assistant Secretary found that "standing alone, such speculation as to what might be helpful or desirable [was] insufficient to establish that the proposed unit is inappropriate within the meaning of section 10(b) of the Order."

With regard to effective dealings, the Assistant Secretary, observing that the principal or ultimate authority within the region involved in the negotiation and approval of negotiated agreements and in the resolution of grievances and other personnel matters is located in the DCASR Headquarters, concluded that the unit found appropriate would promote effective dealings to the extent that the individuals most concerned with labor-management relations, fiscal matters and the direction of operations "are located organizationally with the unit found appropriate." The Assistant Secretary went on to state, however, that, in his view, a claimed unit may be appropriate and be considered to promote effective dealings as well as efficiency of agency operations "even though it does not include all employees directly under the area or regional head, or other activity officials who have final or initiating authority with respect to personnel, fiscal and programmatic matters." Relying on the amendments to section 11(a) of the Order in E.O. 11838,[2/] the

2/ Section 11(a) provides in pertinent part:

> An agency and a labor organization that has been accorded exclusive recognition, through appropriate representatives, shall meet at reasonable times and confer in good faith with respect to personnel policies and practices and matters affecting working conditions, so far as may be appropriate under applicable laws and regulations,

Assistant Secretary stated that "it is clearly contemplated by the Executive Order that labor-management negotiations could properly be conducted at lower than agency, regional, or district levels, and that, therefore, units of less broad proportions could be appropriate." Further, he went on to say that:

> . . . the Order not only is intended to encourage negotiations at the local level to the maximum extent possible with respect to personnel policies and practices and matters affecting working conditions, but that such negotiations are desirable as they must perforce promote effective dealings between employees and the agency management with which the particular employees are most closely involved.

The Assistant Secretary concluded:

> Thus, in my view, the Order, while recognizing the appropriateness of broadly based units under certain circumstances, is also, as reflected by the amendment to Section 11(a), supportive of the concept that bargaining units at lower levels may in certain instances, promote effective dealings, as well as result in the increased efficiency of agency operations. [Footnote omitted.]

FLRC No. 76A-4 (A/SLMR No. 564)

In October 1974, AFGE Local 3204 sought an election in a districtwide unit of all eligible General Schedule and professional employees in the Seattle, Washington DCASD. The proposed unit included, in addition to the employees of the Seattle District, employees of the Portland, Oregon DCASO which, organizationally, reports to regional headquarters through Seattle. The region contended that the unit sought was not appropriate because, among other things, it would not promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. In the activity's view, only a single DCASR-wide unit would be appropriate.

The Assistant Secretary found the petitioned-for unit appropriate in September 1975. In doing so, he determined that the approximately 180 employees sought to be included within the proposed unit of the Seattle DCASD and the Portland DCASO share a clear and identifiable community of interest separate and distinct from other employees of the region. In disagreement with the claims of regional officials, the Assistant Secretary determined that the proposed unit would promote effective dealings and the efficiency of agency operations. In this regard, he again noted, as in his decision in A/SLMR No. 559 supra, that a determination of effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations is dependent on a complex of factors, including tangible and intangible benefits to employees and activities resulting from employee representation by a labor organization which can result in improved efficiency of agency operations despite increased cost factors and that a claimed unit may promote effective dealings and efficiency of operations even though it does not include all employees directly under the area or regional head, or the activity officials who have final initiating authority with respect to personnel, fiscal, and programmatic matters. He was not persuaded by the region's arguments that the negotiating authority of the District Commander would be extremely limited, noting certain areas of responsibility that the District Commander does have. The Assistant Secretary concluded:

> Under these circumstances, and noting particularly the absence of any specific countervailing evidence submitted by the Activity as to a lack of effective dealings and efficiency of operations in those regions of the DSA where less than region-wide units have been recognized or certified and where there currently exist negotiated agreements, I find that the petitioned for District-wide unit will promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. [Footnotes omitted.]

Following each of the Assistant Secretary's decisions in these cases, separate elections were conducted in each of the three separate units which had been found appropriate and AFGE was certified as the exclusive representative in each unit. Thereafter, in each case, DSA appealed the Assistant Secretary's decision to the Council. Upon consideration of the petitions for review, the Council determined that the same major policy issue is presented by each of the decisions of the Assistant Secretary, namely: Whether the Assistant Secretary's decision is consistent with and promotes the purposes and policies of the Order, especially those reflected in section 10(b). Neither party filed a brief on the merits.

Section 6(a)(1) of the Order assigns to the Assistant Secretary the responsibility for deciding questions as to units appropriate for the purposes of exclusive recognition. The Council, pursuant to section 2411.18(a) of its regulations, will sustain such decisions unless they are arbitrary and capricious or inconsistent with the purposes of the Order. In the opinion of the Council, the decision of the Assistant Secretary in each of these cases is inconsistent with the purposes of the Order, specifically the language and intent of section 10(b).

Section 10(b) provides, in pertinent part, that:

> A unit may be established on a plant or installation, craft, functional, or other basis which will ensure a clear and identifiable community of interest among the employees concerned and will promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations.

The Council on several occasions has considered the meaning and application of section 10(b) in the establishment of appropriate units for the purposes of exclusive recognition. In particular, the Council has addressed the requirement that any proposed unit of exclusive recognition must meet all three appropriate unit criteria prescribed in section 10(b), that is, a unit must (1) ensure a clear and identifiable community of interest among the employees concerned, (2) promote effective dealings, and (3) promote efficiency of agency operations.

In the report accompanying E.O. 11838, the Council, in discussing its belief "that the policy of promoting more comprehensive bargaining units and hence of reducing fragmentation in the bargaining unit structure will foster the development of a sound Federal labor-management relations program," stated:

> We further feel that the Assistant Secretary can do much to foster this policy in carrying out his functions of deciding other representation questions including the appropriateness of newly sought units. Accordingly, in all representation questions, equal weight must be given to each of the three criteria in section 10(b) of the Order. By doing so, the result should be broader, more comprehensive bargaining units.3/

Thus, the Council concluded that the appropriate application of the three criteria will facilitate the reduction of fragmentation in bargaining unit structure in the Federal labor-management relations program and thereby promote the policy of creating more comprehensive units.

In its decision in Tulsa AFS, the Council discussed at length the obligations of the Assistant Secretary in applying the three 10(b) criteria.4/ The Council reviewed the history of the development of exclusive recognition of appropriate units in the Federal labor-management relations program and concluded:

3/ Labor-Management Relations in the Federal Service (1975), at 37.

4/ Department of Transportation, Federal Aviation Administration, Southwest Region, Tulsa Airway Facilities Sector, FLRC No. 74A-28 (May 9, 1975), Report No. 69.

> It is clear that the express language of section 10(b) requires that any proposed unit of exclusive recognition must satisfy each of the three criteria set forth therein, and that the Assistant Secretary must affirmatively so determine, before that unit properly can be found to be appropriate. This conclusion is amply supported by the purpose of the provision, as evidenced by its "legislative history" . . . especially wherein the criterion of community of interest of the employees involved was explicitly balanced with other considerations important to management and protection of the public interest in the promulgation of E.O. 11491 in 1969, i.e., that units found appropriate must also promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations.

Further, after quoting those passages of the Council's Report to the President which led to the issuance of Executive Order 11838 wherein the three criteria were discussed, the Council stated as to the required findings under section 10(b) of the Order:

> Thus, the Assistant Secretary must not only affirmatively determine that a unit will ensure a clear and identifiable community of interest among the employees concerned and will promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations, but must give equal weight to each of the three criteria before the particular unit can be found to be appropriate.

In Tulsa AFS, the Council also discussed the responsibility of the Assistant Secretary in unit determination proceedings to develop and consider evidence concerning the appropriate unit criteria in section 10(b) of the Order. The Council stressed that it is the obligation of the Assistant Secretary to "develop as complete a record as possible with regard to each of the three criteria . . . and . . . give full and careful consideration to all relevant evidence in the record in reaching his decision." In this regard, the Council noted that parties to a representation proceeding are responsible for providing the Assistant Secretary with all information relevant to the appropriate unit criteria that is within their knowledge and possession, but emphasized that the Assistant Secretary must actively solicit such evidence as necessary to enable him to make a fully-informed judgment as to whether a particular unit will satisfy each of the three 10(b) criteria. In this regard, the Council stated:

> [T]here is a need for a sharper degree of definition of the criteria of effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations to facilitate both the development and presentation of evidence pertaining to those criteria by agencies and labor organizations, and the qualitative appraisal of such evidence by the Assistant Secretary in appropriate unit determinations. As he has done with the community of interest criterion, therefore, the Assistant Secretary should develop subsidiary factors or indicators which will serve as guidelines in determining effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. In this way, each of the policy goals to be achieved in unit determinations will have an equal degree of precision and, hopefully, will receive the necessary and desirable equality of emphasis in representation proceedings.

Summarizing the responsibilities of the Assistant Secretary which flow from section 10(b) of the Order: Before the Assistant Secretary may find that a proposed unit is appropriate for purposes of exclusive recognition under the Order, he must make an affirmative determination that the proposed unit satisfies equally each of the three criteria contained in section 10(b). That is, he must consider equally the evidence going to each of the three criteria and, as required by section 10(b), find appropriate only units which not only ensure a clear and identifiable community of interest but also promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. In making the affirmative determination that a proposed bargaining unit satisfies each of the three criteria, the Assistant Secretary must first develop as complete a record as possible, soliciting evidence from the parties as necessary, and then ground his decision upon a careful, thorough analysis of subsidiary factors or evidentiary considerations which provide a sharp degree of definition and precision to each of the three criteria. Finally, and most importantly, the Assistant Secretary must make the necessary affirmative determinations that a unit clearly, convincingly and equally satisfies each of the 10(b) criteria in recognition of and in a manner fully consistent with the purposes of the Order, including the dual objectives of preventing further fragmentation of bargaining units as well as reducing existing fragmentation, thereby promoting a more comprehensive bargaining unit structure. We turn now to the application of these principles to the three cases before the Council. They will be treated seriatim.

As outlined above, in this case the Assistant Secretary found that a unit of one geographic element of the San Francisco DCASR, namely the Salt Lake City DCASD, was an appropriate unit for purposes of exclusive recognition under the Order. In so finding, he reviewed the evidence relating to certain subsidiary factors or indicators of community of interest and based upon these evidentiary considerations found that the employees in the petitioned-for unit shared a clear and identifiable community of interest separate and distinct from other employees of the San Francisco Region. Additionally, as required, the Assistant Secretary found that such a unit will promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. However, this latter conclusion was "based on the foregoing considerations," that is, the evidentiary considerations which supported a finding that the employees had community of interest, rather than on any evidence directly bearing on the promotion of effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations.

While the Assistant Secretary made an affirmative finding that the proposed unit met all of the appropriate unit criteria of section 10(b), we must conclude that in making that finding he did not fully meet his obligations under the Order. In this regard, as we have indicated, it is the responsibility of the Assistant Secretary to develop as complete a record as possible with regard to each of the three criteria, soliciting evidence from the parties as necessary; to give full and careful consideration to all relevant evidence in the record; and then to ground his decision upon a careful, thorough analysis of evidentiary considerations or factors which provide a sharp degree of definition and precision to each of the three criteria. Where the Assistant Secretary finds a unit to be appropriate for purposes of exclusive recognition, he must make an affirmative determination that a unit equally satisfies each of the 10(b) criteria. Finally, and most importantly, the Assistant Secretary must decide appropriate unit questions consistent with the purposes of the Order, including the policy of preventing and reducing fragmentation, thereby promoting a more comprehensive bargaining unit structure.

In this case, while the Assistant Secretary clearly met his responsibilities in developing and analyzing evidence pertaining to the "community of interest" criterion and in making an affirmative finding with respect to that criterion, we conclude that he failed to meet these responsibilities with respect to the criteria of "effective dealings" and "efficiency of agency operations." First, a review of the record reveals that the Assistant Secretary failed to make an intensive effort to develop as complete a record as possible with regard to the criteria of "effective dealings" and "efficiency of agency operations," soliciting evidence from the parties as necessary.5/ While the testimony and arguments advanced by the activity as to why the proposed DCASD unit would not promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations may not, in the Assistant Secretary's view, have provided him with a sufficient basis on which to make a determination,6/ the development of such evidence does not

5/ A review of the record indicates that, as to effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations, the Hearing Officer asked a few questions concerning the delegated authority of certain management officials to negotiate and sign a collective bargaining agreement and asked an agency witness only three insubstantial questions concerning whether the proposed unit would impair efficiency of agency operations.

6/ In testimony before the Assistant Secretary's Hearing Officer and in its posthearing brief to the Assistant Secretary, the agency presented evidence regarding effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations as well as evidence regarding community of interest of the employees involved. The San Francisco Region Civilian Personnel Officer testified at the hearing, among other things, in effect, that it would be more efficient for the region to negotiate and deal with the exclusive representative of employees in a single regionwide unit rather than with stop with the presentation by the parties. Although, as we stated in Tulsa AFS, the parties are responsible for providing the Assistant Secretary with all relevant information within their knowledge and possession, we emphasized in that decision that the Assistant Secretary, in carrying out his responsibility to decide appropriate unit questions, must actively solicit such information and develop the evidence necessary to enable him to make a fully-informed judgment as to whether the proposed unit will satisfy each of the three 10(b) criteria. We conclude that the Assistant Secretary did not meet that responsibility in A/SLMR No. 461. Furthermore, as to the contentions and supporting evidence which were put forward by the activity regarding these two criteria, the Assistant Secretary failed to give such contentions and evidence full and careful consideration. Indeed, his only consideration was in a footnote wherein he rejected the activity's contention that a less than regionwide unit would limit the scope of negotiations solely to those matters within the delegated authority of the Commander of the District Office.7/representatives of employees in a multiplicity of units within the region. In this regard, he testified in effect that the smaller Salt Lake City unit would, by creating the possibility of multiple units in the region, impair efficiency by exceeding the capacities of the agency's limited labor-management relations staff. In its posthearing brief to the Assistant Secretary, the agency argued, among other things, that the size and composition of the proposed unit, the potential for meaningful negotiations, and the availability of personnel management resources all demonstrate that one regionwide unit would more likely promote efficiency of agency operations and effective dealings.

7/ In rejecting the agency's contention that the certification of a less-than-regionwide unit would limit the scope of negotiations solely to those matters within the delegated discretionary authority of the Commander of the District Office, the Assistant Secretary relied on his decision in A/SLMR No. 372 wherein he had, in turn, relied on the Council's decision in United Federation of College Teachers, Local 1460 and U.S. Merchant Marine Academy, 1 FLRC 211 [FLRC No. 71A-15 (Nov. 20, 1972), Report No. 30]. However, A/SLMR No. 372 was subsequently reviewed by the Council in Defense Supply Agency, Defense Contract Administration Services Region (DCASR), Cleveland, Ohio, Defense Contract Administration Services Offices (DCASO's), Akron, Ohio and Columbus, Ohio, A/SLMR No. 372, FLRC No. 74A-41 (Aug. 13, 1975), Report No. 80. The Council set aside the Assistant Secretary's decision therein and remanded the case to him. In doing so, the Council stated, as to the Assistant Secretary's reliance upon Merchant Marine and as to the relationship of the amendments to section 11(a) of the Order to the principles enunciated in Merchant Marine:

Second, the Assistant Secretary's decision was not based upon a careful, thorough analysis of evidentiary considerations or factors which provide

> Turning to the instant case [DSA, Cleveland], it is clear that the Assistant Secretary has misinterpreted and misapplied the Merchant Marine decision. For under the Order, as presently effective, labor relations and personnel policies as established (and, of course, published) by the DCASR headquarters may properly serve to bar the matter concerned from the scope of bargaining under section 11(a) of the Order. Since these matters would thus be outside the scope of bargaining at the DCASO level, DCASR, under the Merchant Marine decision, would be under no obligation to provide representatives to negotiate and enter into agreement on such matters at the DCASO level.
> Thus, as the Assistant Secretary, in finding the separate DCASO units appropriate in the present case, relied in part on an erroneous interpretation and application of the Merchant Marine decision, we shall remand the case to him for reconsideration and disposition consistent with our opinion.
>
> We are mindful in the above regard that under the amendments to section 11(a), adopted in E.O. 11838 and to become effective 90 days after the Council issues the criteria for determining "compelling need," DCASR directives as such would not thereafter serve to limit the scope of bargaining at the DCASO level—because DCASR appears to be a subdivision below the level of "agency headquarters" or "the level of a primary national subdivision." However, the Assistant Secretary should carefully examine the regulatory framework of DSA, including the DCASR's, which prevails at the time of his reconsideration and then weigh the impact thereon of Merchant Marine as properly interpreted and applied to the existing circumstances in order that the three criteria in section 10(b) can be properly applied. Moreover, in so applying Merchant Marine, the Assistant Secretary should carefully consider that the amendments to section 11(a) as adopted in E.O. 11838 were not designed to render fragmented units appropriate.
> In the above regard, as indicated in section V.1. of the Report accompanying E.O. 11838, the changes in section 11(a) of the Order were intended to "complement" the recommendations of the Council relating to the consolidation of bargaining units. The purpose of those recommendations (which were adopted by the President) was principally to reduce the unit fragmentation that had previously developed and to encourage the creation of more comprehensive bargaining units in the interest of the entire program. [Footnotes omitted.]

a sharp degree of definition and precision to the "effective dealings" and "efficiency of agency operations" criteria. Indeed, there was no discussion of such evidentiary considerations or factors. Instead, the treatment of these two criteria amounted to little more than a conclusionary statement based solely upon evidentiary considerations which had been relied upon to support the finding of a community of interest.

While we realize that certain considerations traditionally discussed in the context of community of interest can also be relevant in ascertaining whether a proposed unit would promote effective dealings or efficiency of agency operations (e.g., supervisory hierarchy and uniformity of personnel policies), other, quite different considerations also apply. As we stated in Tulsa AFS,[8/] there is a need for a sharper degree of definition to the criteria of effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations and the Assistant Secretary should develop subsidiary factors or indicators which will serve as guidelines in determining effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. Rather than relying solely on the "foregoing considerations," the Assistant Secretary was required to examine the very kind of testimony and contentions put forward by the agency (e.g., more efficient use of negotiation resources derived from single regionwide negotiations rather than a multiplicity of negotiations in segments of the region), as well as the wide range of other considerations raised by the facts of the case. In developing such subsidiary factors or evidentiary considerations, which more precisely define what is meant by promoting effective dealings, the Assistant Secretary might well consider in the circumstances of this case such matters as the locus and scope of authority of the responsible personnel office; the limitations on the negotiation of matters of critical concern to employees because the concerns of Salt Lake City DCASO employees may be inseparable from those of other employees in the region; the likelihood that people with greater expertise in negotiations will be available in a larger unit; the actual experience of this agency in other bargaining units; and the level at which labor relations policy is set in the agency and the effectuation of agency training in the implementation of a number of negotiated agreements and grievance procedures covering employees performing essentially the same duties. As to "efficiency of agency operations" among those factors which should be considered would be the benefits to be derived from a unit structure which bears some rational relationship to the operational and organizational structure of the agency. This is certainly not to say that section 10(b) requires that each bargaining unit always be coextensive with the agency's view of how it can best organize to carry out its mission, but the relationship between the proposed bargaining unit and the operational and organizational structure of the agency should be given substantial weight in ascertaining whether the unit will promote efficiency of agency operations. In the instant case, for example, while the Assistant Secretary relied in part on the fact that the

8/ See page 7 supra.

Salt Lake City DCASD employees share districtwide supervision, he appears to have given no weight to the fact that those employees share a common supervisory structure with all employees in the region and enjoy a commonality of mission, personnel policies and practices and matters affecting working conditions with all employees of the region.

Third, in simply concluding that the proposed unit will promote effective dealings and efficiency of operations based solely upon evidentiary considerations which had been relied upon to support the finding of a community of interest, the Assistant Secretary failed to give equal weight to all three criteria.

Finally, there is the requirement that the Assistant Secretary decide appropriate unit questions consistent with the policy of the Order of preventing and reducing fragmentation in the bargaining unit structure of the Federal labor-management relations program. The Assistant Secretary's decision finding appropriate a unit limited to the Salt Lake City DCASD is clearly contrary to that policy in that his decision tends to foster and promote fragmentation. The San Francisco DCASR is a single organizational element of the agency with a chain of command headed by the Regional Commander, running down through all of the component elements. With the exception of the DCASO in Portland which reports through the DCASD in Seattle, all elements of the region report directly to DCASR headquarters. All employees of the region perform their duties pursuant to policies and procedures established by the regional headquarters staff, and the employees within the region are subject to uniform personnel policies and job benefits. The DCASR's Civilian Personnel Office, located at headquarters, has the responsibility for servicing all components within the region. The region encompasses an organizational structure of an agency which is functionally integrated. It has been established in this manner to accomplish its mission. Its employees thus share a commonality of mission, organization and personnel policies and practices and matters affecting working conditions.

There is no question that if the union sought recognition in a regionwide unit, it would meet all of the section 10(b) criteria and, more importantly, would be consistent with the Order's policy of promoting a more comprehensive bargaining unit structure. Against this backdrop, the AFGE petitioned for a single portion of the organizational and functional whole, the Salt Lake City DCASD, a unit of approximately 77 employees out of a total of approximately 1,250 eligible employees in the region. In concluding that these employees shared a community of interest with each other, the Assistant Secretary relied upon those factors which, in his view, reflected some degree of separation between these employees and the remaining employees in the DCASR. In doing so, he failed to give proper recognition to the single organizational structure of the region, its chain of command and authority, the uniform personnel policies and practices within the DCASR, and the existence of a single Civilian Personnel Office within the DCASR. As a result, the unit structure which his decision promotes within the San Francisco DCASR results in artificial distinctions between groups of employees whose mission and functions, supervisory structure and conditions of employment are identical. Moreover, finding such a unit appropriate left the remainder of the region for further piecemeal organizing efforts, thereby resulting in a fragmented bargaining unit structure, as actually subsequently occured herein.

In summary, in the circumstances of this case as reflected in the record before us, equal application of the three criteria in section 10(b) and the resulting consistency with the purposes of the Order would dictate a finding that a unit limited to the Salt Lake City DCASD is not an appropriate unit for purposes of exclusive recognition under the Order.[9/]

The Assistant Secretary, as outlined above, in this case found appropriate a unit composed of the employees in DCASR headquarters and the five DCASO's, all in the San Francisco Bay area, along with the Hawaii Residency Office. After reviewing at length the organizational and work environment of the region and its component parts, he found that there was a clear and identifiable community of interest among the employees in the unit found appropriate, noting specifically that such employees share a common mission and are covered by the same personnel and labor relations policies; that there are similar job classifications in each of the components within the headquarters, the five DCASO's and the Hawaii Residency Office; that there have been reassignments to and from the Regional Headquarters and the DCASO's; and that there is employee contact between headquarters and the DCASO's.

While the Assistant Secretary again made an affirmative finding that the proposed unit met all of the appropriate unit criteria of section 10(b), we must conclude that in making that finding he did not fully meet those obligations, outlined previously herein, which the Order imposes upon him. In this case, while the Assistant Secretary met his responsibilities in developing and analyzing evidence pertaining to the "community of interest" criterion and in making an affirmative finding with respect to that criterion,10/ we conclude that he failed to meet those responsibilities with respect to the criteria of "effective dealings" and "efficiency of agency operations." First, a review of the record reveals that the Assistant Secretary failed to make an affirmative effort to develop as complete a record as possible with regard to the criteria of "effective dealings" and "efficiency of agency operations."11/ Furthermore, as to the contentions and supporting evidence which were put forward by the activity regarding these two criteria, the Assistant Secretary failed to give such testimony appropriate and adequate consideration.

9/ In this regard, we note, as did the agency in testimony and brief before the Assistant Secretary, that the Assistant Secretary earlier considered and rejected as inappropriate various less-than-regionwide units in the San Francisco DCASR ranging in size from 18 to 686 employees. He found such units "would artifically [sic] divide and fragment . . . operations, and cannot be reasonably expected to promote effective dealings or efficiency of operations." Defense Supply Agency, Defense Contract Administration Services Region (DCASR), San Francisco, A/SLMR No. 112 (Nov. 30, 1971), decision by the then Assistant Secretary. This precedential decision was neither discussed nor even adverted to in the instant case.

As to whether the unit sought in A/SLMR No. 559 would promote efficiency of agency operations, the Assistant Secretary, relying on Council negotiability decisions12/ on the meaning of section 12(b)(4),13/ concluded that more than cost factors should be involved in making such determinations. As previously indicated, he stated:

10/ We do not here decide that the factors relied upon by the Assistant Secretary establish a separate community of interest for the employees in the unit found appropriate. Indeed, many of the factors relied upon by the Assistant Secretary indicate a community of interest that is regionwide in scope rather than limited to the employees in the unit sought by the union.

11/ A review of the record discloses that the Hearing Officer did not at any time solicit testimony concerning the criteria of effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations, limiting direct questioning solely to indicia of community of interest among employees within the unit sought.

13/ Section 12(b)(4) provides in pertinent part:

> Sec. 12. Basic provisions of agreements. Each agreement between an agency and a labor organization is subject to the following requirements--
>
> . . . . . .
>

> From the foregoing, it is evident that a determination of efficiency of agency operations is dependent on a complex of factors and that it has been recognized that the tangible and intangible benefits to employees and activities resulting from employee representation by a labor organization can result in improved efficiency of agency operations despite increased cost factors. [Footnote omitted.]

Based on these considerations, the Assistant Secretary concluded that the proposed unit would promote efficiency of agency operations, stressing that the unit would encompass the employees within the same commuting area and would include the Hawaii Residency Office which otherwise might be fragmented.14/ The Assistant Secretary concluded that the establishment of such a unit "could result" in actual economic savings and increased productivity due to the homogeneity of its composition.

While the Assistant Secretary reached a conclusion as to whether the proposed unit would promote the efficiency of agency operations, in our view, he failed properly to consider the relevant testimony and arguments advanced by the agency and, in effect, thereby failed to give the required equal weight to this criterion. At the outset, the Assistant Secretary found that the agency's views as to both this criterion and the criterion of promoting effective dealings to be "at most, speculative and conjectural." Such a rejection of the agency's views was inappropriate and a misconception of the nature of these criteria. We believe that inherent in determining whether or not a proposed unit will promote the efficiency of agency operations is the need to anticipate the impact of a given unit structure on the agency's operations. Just as the Assistant Secretary considered economic savings and increased productivity which "could result," the Assistant Secretary must also consider the costs and inefficient use of resources that, in management's opinion, "could result" from such a unit structure. The speculative and conjectural nature of a contention, in these circumstances, does not in and of itself render the contention without merit.

As to the specifics of the agency's contentions, the Assistant Secretary stated:

. . . . . .

> (4) to maintain the efficiency of the Government operations entrusted to them.

14/ In this regard, the same concern about fragmentation might have been expressed about any unrepresented portion of the region, for example, the Seattle DCASD, which in all significant respects had the same relationship with the DCASR headquarters as the Hawaii Residency Office.

> In addition, it was noted that the Activity's contentions that such a unit would not promote efficiency of agency operations were based primarily on its speculative assessments of the manpower and economic costs of less than a regionwide unit, rather than on a balanced consideration of all the factors, including employee morale and well-being, which . . . are relevant factors in making such an assessment. Thus, the Activity's position in this regard was reflected in the testimony of its Civilian Personnel Officer that "it was reasonable" to infer that a region-wide unit would do more to promote efficiency of agency operations (and effective dealings) than the originally petitioned for unit of the DCASR Headquarters, Burlingame, and that it would be a hardship on his office if several agreements were required because this would require expenditure of both manpower and financial resources "that might not be necessary if there were a single unit throughout the Region." I find that, standing alone, such speculation as to what might be helpful or desirable to be insufficient to establish that the proposed unit is inappropriate within the meaning of Section 10(b) of the Order. [Footnote omitted.]

In our view, rather than being rejected, in part, as "speculative," the contentions of the agency were valid considerations to be weighed in determining whether the proposed unit would promote efficiency of agency operations. As we have indicated, a policy of the Order is the promotion of more comprehensive bargaining units. Hence, the activity's contention that a regionwide unit of employees performing the same jobs in an organization with the same mission and subject to the same personnel policies and supervision would do more to promote efficiency of agency operations was consistent with the purposes of the Order. Similarly, while not dispositive, the efficient use of agency labor-management relations and financial resources is a valid factor in determining efficiency of agency operations.

We do not disagree with either the Assistant Secretary's conclusion that more than cost factors are involved in a determination of the promotion of efficiency of agency operations, or his conclusion that the benefits resulting from employee representation by a labor organization can result in improved efficiency of agency operations. However, the according of equal weight to the efficiency of agency operations criteria requires careful consideration of the agency's reasoned view of the impact of the proposed unit on the efficiency of its operations.[15/]

In finding that the alternative unit sought would promote effective dealings, the Assistant Secretary noted that the unit would promote effective dealings to the extent that the individuals most concerned with labor-management relations, fiscal matters and the direction of operations are located organizationally within the unit found appropriate. Thereafter, relying on the amendments to section 11(a) of the Order in E.O. 11838,[16/] the Assistant Secretary stated:

> Moreover, in my view, a claimed unit may be appropriate and be considered to promote effective dealings as well as efficiency of agency operations even though it does not include all employees directly under the area or regional head, or other activity officials who have final or initiating authority with respect to personnel, fiscal and programmatic matters. Thus, it is clearly contemplated by the Executive Order that labor-management negotiations could properly be conducted at lower than agency, regional, or district levels, and that, therefore, units of less broad proportions could be appropriate.

The Assistant Secretary's reliance on the recent amendments to section 11(a) to support his finding that the unit would promote effective dealings is in error. As stated above in footnote 7, the Council, in its decision in Defense Supply Agency, Defense Contract Administration Services Region (DCASR), Cleveland, Ohio, Defense Contract Administration Services Offices (DCASO's), Akron, Ohio and Columbus, Ohio, A/SLMR No. 372, FLRC No. 74A-41 (Aug. 13, 1975), Report No. 80, emphasized:

> [A]s indicated in section V.1. of the Report accompanying E.O. 11838, the changes in section 11(a) of the Order were intended to "complement" the recommendations of the Council relating to the consolidation of bargaining units. The purpose of those recommendations (which were adopted by the President) was principally to reduce the unit fragmentation that had previously developed and to encourage the creation of more comprehensive bargaining units in the interest of the entire program. [Footnote omitted.][17/]

While the changes in section 11(a) were intended to expand the scope of bargaining by eliminating unnecessary constrictions on meaningful negotiations which had been imposed by higher level agency regulations not critical to effective agency management or the public interest, the changes in section 11(a) were also intended, as stated in FLRC No. 74A-41, to complement the recommendations of the Council relating to reduction of unit fragmentation, which reduction would also serve to expand the scope of bargaining. The Assistant Secretary's reliance on the 11(a) changes to support a finding of a less comprehensive unit is therefore totally inappropriate. While the changes to section 11(a) were intended to lessen the impact of certain agency regulations upon the scope of bargaining, contrary to the conclusions of the Assistant Secretary, they were not intended to reflect a policy of encouraging the establishment of bargaining units at lower organizational levels within an agency.

16/ Note 2 supra.

17/ In the subject decision, A/SLMR No. 559, the Assistant Secretary took note of this language in FLRC No. 74A-41, but concluded that he did not find this concept to be inconsistent with the continued existence or establishment of units less comprehensive than region or districtwide, which otherwise meet the tests of appropriateness under the Order.

While it is true that units may promote effective dealings and be appropriate under section 10(b) even if established at lower agency organizational levels, in our view it is clear that, generally, effective dealings can be better achieved in more comprehensive units. As we have indicated, negotiations covering more comprehensive units permit the parties to address a wider range of matters of critical concern to greater numbers of employees. For example, employees of the entire region herein would have identical concerns as to such matters as merit staffing procedures, areas of consideration, reduction-in-force procedures, and competitive areas. Moreover, negotiations in less fragmented bargaining unit structures established at higher organizational levels permit unions and agencies to allocate their manpower resources and send to the bargaining table more experienced and skilled negotiators who should do a more efficient job of reaching a satisfactory agreement.

The instant decision of the Assistant Secretary clearly reflects a desire that negotiations be conducted at the lowest organizational levels possible and, hence, as close as possible to the particular employees who will be affected by the outcome of the negotiations; however, such a desire cannot be used as a rationale for creating units in a manner inconsistent with the purposes of the Order. Such reasoning, carried to an extreme as here, results in the fragmentation of units contrary to the policies sought to be served by the Order. Moreover, we do not agree that the resolution of local concerns is sacrificed by the creation of more comprehensive units. To the extent that there may be concerns unique to some employees which are not shared by an entire broader unit, there are obvious, well-recognized ways that these concerns may be addressed within the parameters of the bargaining relationship. And while a unit at a lower organizational level may provide a temporary vehicle to address certain localized problems, in the long run, units broader in scope will facilitate consideration and resolution of a greater range of concerns common to employees and will better serve the interests of both the employees and the agencies. It was to achieve this end that the policies of the Order were adopted. Thus, the Assistant Secretary's contrary unit determination was inconsistent with these purposes of the Order.

As previously stated with respect to A/SLMR No. 461, the Assistant Secretary must decide appropriate unit questions consonant with the policy of the Order of preventing and reducing fragmentation in the bargaining unit structure of the Federal labor-management relations program. In finding appropriate the alternative unit sought in this case, the Assistant Secretary's decision plainly contravenes that policy since his decision tends to foster and promote fragmentation. On the other hand, for the reasons previously detailed at page 14 above, there is no question that a regionwide unit, if alone sought, would meet all of the section 10(b) criteria.

While the employees in the San Francisco Bay area may have, as discussed by the Assistant Secretary, a community of interest with each other and possibly some degree of separation from other elements because of separate local supervision and geographic dispersion, the petitioned-for unit would be inconsistent with the single organizational structure of the region, its chain of command and authority, the uniform personnel policies and practices within the DCASR, and the existence of a single Civilian Personnel Office. The unit structure, which his decision promotes within the San Francisco DCASR, results in artificial distinctions between employees whose mission and functions, supervisory structure and conditions of employment are identical. Further, as noted with regard to A/SLMR No. 461, there is no question that if the union sought recognition in a regionwide unit, it would meet all of the section 10(b) criteria and, more importantly, would be consistent with the Order's policy of promoting a more comprehensive bargaining unit structure. Moreover, finding such a unit appropriate left the remainder of the region for further piecemeal organizing efforts, thereby resulting in a fragmented bargaining unit structure, as actually subsequently occurred herein.

In conclusion, the Assistant Secretary's finding that the alternative unit sought would promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations was based upon considerations which did not properly provide a sharp degree of definition and precision to these two criteria. Indeed, the considerations upon which the Assistant Secretary relied were not implementive of and were not consistent with those criteria. As a result, the Assistant Secretary failed properly to give equal weight to these criteria in his decision.

In summary, in the circumstances of this case as reflected in the record before us, equal application of the three criteria in section 10(b) and the resulting consistency with the purposes of the Order, would dictate a finding that the alternative unit sought herein is not an appropriate unit for the purposes of exclusive recognition under the Order.

In this case, the Assistant Secretary found that the employees in the petitioned-for unit, the Seattle DCASD, including the Portland DCASO, share a clear and identifiable community of interest separate and distinct from other employees of the region. In response to the activity's claim that such a unit would not promote effective dealings or efficiency of agency operations, the Assistant Secretary found that the activity took the identical position that it took in A/SLMR No. 461; he rejected the activity's position partly on the basis of the circumstances recited in A/SLMR No. 559 and his reasoning therein. The Assistant Secretary concluded:

> Under these circumstances, and noting particularly the absence of any specific countervailing evidence submitted by the Activity as to a lack of effective dealings and efficiency of operations in > those regions of the DSA where less than region-wide units have been recognized or certified and where there currently exist negotiated agreements, I find that the petitioned-for District-wide unit will promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. [Footnotes omitted.]

While the Assistant Secretary made an affirmative finding that the proposed unit met all of the appropriate unit criteria of section 10(b), we must again conclude that in doing so he did not fully meet those obligations, outlined previously herein, which the Order imposes upon him. Specifically, a review of the record reveals that the Assistant Secretary failed to make an affirmative effort to develop as complete a record as possible with regard to the criteria of "effective dealings" and "efficiency of agency operations."18/ While the testimony and arguments advanced by the activity as to why the proposed unit would not promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations may not have provided the Assistant Secretary with a sufficient basis on which to make a determination, as we have indicated, the development of such evidence does not stop with the parties. It is the responsibility of the Assistant Secretary to develop as complete a record as possible with regard to each of the three criteria, soliciting evidence from the parties as necessary; he did not do so here.

With regard to the circumstances which he particularly noted in finding that the unit sought would promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations, the Assistant Secretary plainly failed to make an affirmative determination that the unit equally satisfied each of the 10(b) criteria. As we indicated previously, the experience of an agency and labor organization under a given unit structure may be considered in determining whether a petitioned-for unit satisfies the three criteria set forth in section 10(b) of the Order. However, the Assistant Secretary may not rely upon "the absence of any specific countervailing evidence . . . as to a lack of effective dealings and efficiency of operations" in other existing bargaining units to make an affirmative finding regarding these criteria in a proposed unit. Rather, as we have previously emphasized, it is the responsibility of the Assistant Secretary to develop as complete a record as possible with regard to each of the three criteria, soliciting evidence from the parties as necessary; to give full and careful consideration to all relevant evidence in the record; and then to ground his decision upon a careful, thorough analysis of evidentiary considerations or factors which provide a sharp degree of definition and precision to each of the three criteria. Where the Assistant Secretary finds a unit to be appropriate for purposes of exclusive recognition, he must make an affirmative determination that a unit equally satisfies each of the 10(b) criteria. Reliance upon a lack of evidence fails to satisfy the requirement in the Order that the Assistant Secretary make such an affirmative determination.

Accordingly, for the reasons fully discussed above in regard to the Assistant Secretary's decision in A/SLMR No. 559, we must likewise reject the Assistant Secretary's reliance upon that decision in reaching his decision in A/SLMR No. 564. In summary, in the circumstances of this case as reflected in the record before us, equal application of the three criteria in section 10(b) and the resulting consistency with the purposes of the Order, would dictate a finding that the unit sought herein is not an appropriate unit for purposes of exclusive recognition under the Order. However, as noted with regard to both A/SLMR No. 461 and A/SLMR No. 559, there is no question that if the union sought recognition in a regionwide unit, it would meet all of the section 10(b) criteria and, more importantly, would be consistent with the Order's policy of promoting a more comprehensive unit structure.

Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, we find that the Assistant Secretary's Decision and Direction of Election in each of the above-entitled cases is inconsistent with the purposes of the Order. Accordingly, pursuant to section 2411.18(b) of the Council's rules of procedure, we set aside the Assistant Secretary's decisions and remand the cases to him for action consistent with our decision herein.

In this regard, we have been administratively advised that the Assistant Secretary currently has under consideration a petition for consolidation of units represented by AFGE within the Defense Supply Agency, including the units involved herein. (Assistant Secretary Case No. 22-07578-UC). Should the Assistant Secretary determine that a consolidated unit is appropriate, it would not be inconsistent with this decision to include the units involved herein in such a consolidated unit by reason of the special circumstances here involved, including the fact that the employees in these units have previously indicated through the election process that they wish AFGE to serve as their exclusive representative and the length of time which has elapsed since the elections. Of course, if a consolidation election should be held to determine whether the employees in the proposed consolidated unit wish to be represented in that unit, the employees in the three units involved herein would have the options only of being represented in the consolidated unit or being unrepresented--unless, of course, AFGE files a separate petition seeking to represent the employees involved herein in a regionwide unit which, as already indicated, would be appropriate.

By the Council.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS
SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER CLARIFYING UNIT
OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

FLORIDA AIR NATIONAL GUARD,
ST. AUGUSTINE, FLORIDA
A/SLMR No. 888

This case involved a petition for clarification of unit (CU) filed by the National Association of Government Employees, Local R5-91 (NAGE) seeking to clarify the status of three job descriptions: Aircraft Armament Systems Mechanic, WG 6652-13; Hydromechanical Fuel Control Repairer, WG 8255-12; and Turbine Powered Systems Repairer (Foreman), WG 8274-12. While the NAGE contended that all three classifications should be included in the existing unit, the Activity argued that all three positions were supervisory and should be excluded from the exclusively recognized unit.

The Assistant Secretary concluded that two of the three employees in question, the Hydromechanical Fuel Control Repairer and the Turbine Powered Systems Repairer (Foreman), were supervisors and that the other employee, an Aircraft Armament Systems Mechanic, was not a supervisor within the meaning of the Order. Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary clarified the unit consistent with his findings.

DECISION AND ORDER CLARIFYING UNIT

Upon a petition duly filed under Section 6 of Executive Order 11491, as amended, a hearing was held before Hearing Officer Hazel M. Ellison. The Hearing Officer's rulings made at the hearing are free from prejudicial error and are hereby affirmed.

Upon the entire record in the subject case, the Assistant Secretary finds:

The Petitioner, National Association of Government Employees, Local R5-91, herein called NAGE, seeks to clarify an existing exclusively recognized unit of all Florida Air National Guard Technicians 1/ to include two employees in the classification "Pneudraulic Systems Mechanic, WG-12, job numbers 45-48 and 45-35," and one employee in the classification "Aircraft Ordnance Mechanic, WG-13, job number 45-79." 2/ The NAGE contends that the three employees are not supervisors within the meaning of Section 2(c) of the Order and, therefore, should be included in the unit. The Activity takes the position that these employees are supervisors and should be excluded from the unit.

1/ On August 16, 1971, the NAGE was certified as the exclusive representative in a unit of all "Wage Board and General Schedule Florida Air National Guard Technicians, excluding Army Aviation Technicians at Craig Field, Jacksonville, Florida, Florida Army National Guard Technicians, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, professional employees, management officials, and supervisors and guards as defined by Executive Order 11491."

2/ The job titles of these three employees, as set forth in their job descriptions, are: Aircraft Armament Systems Mechanic WG 6652-13, job No. 45-79; Hydromechanical Fuel Control Repairer, WG 8255-12, job No. 45-35; and Turbine Powered Systems Repairer (Foreman), WG 8274-12, job No. 45-48. These job titles will be used hereafter to identify these positions.

The mission of the Activity is to train personnel, care for military equipment and maintain readiness in case of alert. The Activity is divided into specialized branches each of which has its particular mission. The two branches involved herein are the Munitions Branch and the Field Maintenance Branch.

Aircraft Armament Systems Mechanic, WG 6652-13, job number 45-79

This technician position, also known as the Explosible Ordnance Disposal Shop Supervisor, is located in a subdivision of the Munitions Maintenance Branch of the Aircraft Maintenance Division. At the time of the hearing, this position was filled by Mr. William L. Crouse. The evidence shows that Crouse has one subordinate employee, an Explosive Ordnance technician, Wage Grade 11.

The record reveals that Crouse does not possess the authority to hire, transfer, suspend, lay off, recall, promote, discharge, assign, reward or discipline this employee. Although it appears that he may recommend such actions, the evidence establishes that his recommendations are not necessarily effective in that his immediate supervisor evaluates and reconsiders Crouse's recommendations and on occasion reverses them. It further appears that while Crouse schedules work for his subordinate employee, this duty is sufficiently routine and clerical in nature as to make Crouse more in the nature of a work leader than a supervisor.

Under these circumstances, I find that the evidence does not establish that Crouse is a supervisor within the meaning of Section 2(c) of the Order, and I shall therefore order that he be included within the exclusively recognized unit.

Hydromechanical Fuel Control Repairer, WG 8255-12, job number 45-35 and Turbine Powered Systems Repairer (Foreman), WG 8274-12, job number 45-48 3/

The technician filling the Hydromechanical Fuel Control Repairer position is also known as the Fuel Systems Shop Supervisor. The technican filling the Turbine Powered Systems Repairer position is also known as the Environmental Shop Supervisor. The record reveals that, among their duties and responsibilities, each technician has one subordinate employee and that these technicians have effectively recommended their hiring.

On this basis, I find that employees in these classifications are supervisors within the meaning of Section 2(c) of the Order and should be excluded from the unit herein.

3/ These employees work for the Areospace System Section of the Field Maintenance Branch.

ORDER

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the unit sought to be clarified herein, in which exclusive recognition was granted to the National Association of Government Employees, Local R5-91, on August 16, 1971, be, and it hereby is, clarified by including in such unit the position of Aircraft Armament Systems Mechanic, WG 6652-13, job number 45-79; and by excluding from such unit the positions of Hydromechanical Fuel Control Repairer, WG 8255-12, job number 45-35 and Turbine Powered Systems Repairer (Foreman), WG 8274-12, job number 45-48.

SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION,
DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH, EDUCATION AND WELFARE,
WILKES-BARRE OPERATIONS BRANCH,
WILKES-BARRE, PENNSYLVANIA
A/SLMR No. 889

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2809, AFL-CIO (AFGE) alleging that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(6) of the Order by failing to bargain on the method of selection of Equal Employment Opportunity (EEO) Counselors in accordance with a written accord of May 20, 1975, entered into by the parties wherein they agreed that the method of selection would be by "joint Union/Management agreement."

The Administrative Law Judge found that under the terms of the parties' negotiated agreement and the May 20 accord, the Respondent had an obligation to bargain on the method of selection of EEO Counselors and that its failure to do so constituted a violation of Section 19(a)(6) of the Order.

The Assistant Secretary concurred in the conclusion of the Administrative Law Judge that the method of selection of EEO Counselors was a negotiable matter within the meaning of Section 11(a) of the Order, absent a statutory or other appropriate limitation, or absent a clear and unmistakable waiver of the right to negotiate on such a matter. As no such limitation or waiver was found to exist, the Respondent was found to be obligated to negotiate on the method of selection and its failure to do so was deemed violative of Section 19(a)(6) of the Order.

To remedy the Respondent's improper conduct, the Assistant Secretary ordered that the Respondent bargain with the AFGE on the method of selection, and re-evaluate all the applicants for the EEO Counselor positions in accordance with any agreed upon method of selection.

DECISION AND ORDER

On March 8, 1977, Administrative Law Judge George Fath issued his Recommended Decision and Order in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had engaged in certain unfair labor practices and recommending that it cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action as set forth in the attached Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order. Thereafter, the Respondent filed exceptions with respect to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order and the entire record in the subject case, including the Respondent's exceptions, I hereby adopt the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendations, as modified herein.

The Respondent, the Wilkes-Barre Operations Branch of the Social Security Administration, and the Complainant, American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2809, AFL-CIO, are parties to a negotiated agreement which was in effect at all times material herein. The agreement contains no specific reference to the selection or appointment of Equal Employment Opportunity (EEO) Counselors. 1/ A Social Security Administration Instruction prescribes that either the EEO or Deputy EEO Officer be the appointing authority for EEO Counselors and outlines the duties and responsibilities of the Counselors, but does not prescribe the method for selecting such Counselors.

The record reveals that on May 8, 1975, after discovering that the then current EEO Counselor was no longer eligible for that position, the Complainant's President, Joan Parsons, contacted the Respondent's Branch Chief, Joseph Roarty, and suggested that the parties meet to discuss the matter. Roarty and Parsons met and signed a written accord on May 20, 1975, whereby they agreed that applications for the vacant EEO Counselor positions would be by self-nomination and that the method of selection would be by "joint Union/Management agreement". 2/ Thereafter, in June or July 1975, Roarty was advised by higher agency management that he had lacked the authority to enter the May 20 accord because the selection of Counselors is a retained right under the Social Security Administration regulation which provides for the EEO or Deputy EEO Officer to act as the selecting official. Roarty so advised the Complainant. The Respondent further contended that under Article II, Section 3 of the parties' negotiated agreement, the Complainant had waived its right to bargain over matters which are subject to agency regulations. 3/

On August 13, 1975, a meeting was held between Alonzo Rogers, EEO Officer for the Social Security Administration's Bureau of Data Processing, Branch Chief Roarty, and the Complainant's Vice President and Chief Steward in which Rogers reiterated that applicants for the Counselor positions would be by self-nomination. Rogers then distributed a proposed draft of the agency's affirmative action plan and requested the Union's input on it. On that same date, a memorandum was sent to the Respondent's employees by Roarty indicating, in part, that Rogers would be conducting the selection process for the EEO Counselors and also that he would be "consulting and conferring with the Union officials for their input."

1/ The only references to EEO matters contained in the negotiated agreement are set forth as follows:
Article II, Section 1 provides:
The Branch and the Labor Organization agree to establish appropriate machinery, ..., for joint consultation and/or negotiation, on personnel policies, practices, and procedures relating to working conditions which are within the authority of the Branch, ..., including, ... equal employment opportunities, ...
Article X, Section 9 provides:
Labor and Management agree to cooperate in providing equal opportunity for all qualified persons, ..., and to promote the full realization of equal employment opportunity through a positive and continuing effort.

2/ This written accord contained other provisions which have no relevance to the instant proceeding.

3/ Article II, Section 3 provides in part:
The Branch and the Labor Organization agree that personnel policies

Some 37 applicants were interviewed by Rogers in September with a representative of the Complainant present as an observer. By letter of October 29, Rogers informed Roarty of the five candidates who had been selected. Thereafter, the Complainant's President met with the Respondent and indicated that the latter had failed to comply with the terms of the May 20 accord in which the parties agreed that the method of selection would be by "joint Union/Management agreement." The instant unfair labor practice complaint subsequently was filed alleging a violation of Section 19(a)(6) of the Order on the basis that the Respondent had unilaterally changed the terms of the May 20 accord by failing to negotiate over the method of selection of the EEO Counselors.

The Administrative Law Judge found that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(6) of the Order by failing to negotiate over the method of selection of EEO Counselors and by unilaterally altering the terms of the parties' negotiated agreement and the May 20 accord. He concluded, among other things, that under Article II, Section 1 of the negotiated agreement and under the terms of the May 20 accord, the Respondent had an obligation to bargain over the method of selection. As the Respondent had failed to meet its bargaining obligation in this matter, the Administrative Law Judge recommended, among other things, that the Respondent negotiate with the Complainant over the method of selection and rerun the selection process.

I concur in the conclusion of the Administrative Law Judge that the Respondent's conduct herein violated Section 19(a)(6) of the Order. In this regard, I view the procedures and factors involved in the method of selection of EEO Counselors to be a negotiable matter under Section 11(a) of the Order, 4/ absent statutory or other appropriate limitation, or absent a clear and unmistakable contractual waiver of the right to negotiate on such a matter. 5/ No such limitation or waiver existed in the instant case. Thus, the Social Security Administration regulation involved herein did not proscribe negotiations concerning procedures

3/ and procedures and working conditions that are specifically established by Federal Statutes, Executive Orders, or rules or regulations issued by the Civil Service Commission, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, or Social Security Administration cannot be the subject of negotiation.

4/ See, American Federation of Government Employees Local 997 and Veterans Administration Hospital, Montgomery, Alabama, 2 FLRC 65, in which the Federal Labor Relations Council held negotiable proposals which concerned procedures with respect to promotion of unit employees that would assure the labor organization involved an essentially noncontrolling, participatory role.

5/ See, NASA, Kennedy Space Center, Kennedy Space Center, Florida, A/SLMR No. 223.

or methods of selecting EEO Counselors and the matter was not specifically covered by the parties' negotiated agreement. 6/ Further, the record does not reflect that the Complainant clearly and unequivocally waived its right to negotiate on this matter. 7/ Accordingly, I find that the Respondent was obligated to negotiate on the method of selection of the EEO Counselors and, as it failed to fulfill such obligation, particularly after having agreed to do so in the May 20 accord, it violated Section 19(a)(6) of the Order.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 6(b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, and Section 203.26(b) of the Regulations, the Assistant Secretary for Labor-Management Relations hereby orders that the Social Security Administration, Department of Health, Education and Welfare, Wilkes-Barre Operations Branch, Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

2. Take the following affirmative actions in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Order:

(a) Meet and confer on the method of selection of Equal Employment Opportunity Counselors for the Wilkes-Barre Operations Branch with the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2809, AFL-CIO.

(b) Re-evaluate all applicants for the Equal Employment Opportunity Counselor positions at the Wilkes-Barre Operations Branch and fill those positions in accordance with any agreed upon method of selection.

6/ As the matter was not covered by the negotiated agreement, the parties could not have utilized their contractual grievance procedure to resolve the dispute herein.

7/ Contrary to the contention of the Respondent, Article II, Section 3 of the parties' negotiated agreement, set forth at footnote 3 above, was not considered to constitute a waiver of the Complainant's right to negotiate in this regard since, as indicated above, the Social Security regulation involved herein did not proscribe negotiations with respect to procedures or methods for selecting EEO Counselors.

RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

This case arises under Executive Order 11491, as amended (hereinafter called the Order). A Notice of Hearing on Complaint was issued by the Acting Regional Administrator for Labor-Management Services, Philadelphia Region, on May 28, 1976, based on a complaint filed on February 17, 1976 by Local 2809, American Federation of Government Employees (hereinafter called the Union) against Social Security Administration, Department of Health, Education & Welfare, Wilkes-Barre Operations Branch (hereinafter called Respondent and Branch). The Notice of Hearing on Complaint was issued with respect to the alleged violations of Section 19(a)(6) of the Order as set forth in the complaint. Briefly stated, the Union complaints: The Respondent violated Union-Management Agreement in that it failed to negotiate in good faith the method of selection of Equal Employment Opportunity Counselors for the Wilkes-Barre Operations Branch of the Agency.

A hearing was held on September 15, 1976, at Scranton, Pennsylvania. All parties were represented and were given full opportunity to present evidence, examine and cross examine witnesses, argue and file briefs.

The following findings, conclusions and recommendations are based upon the entire record including observation of the witnesses, their demeanor, and evaluation of their testimony.

Findings of Fact

At all times pertinent, the Union was the exclusive bargaining representative of the nonsupervisory employees of the Wilkes-Barre Operations Branch of the Agency. At the time of the incidents giving rise to this complaint there was a collective bargaining agreement between the parties effective August 16, 1972.

On May 8, 1975, Ms. Joan C. Parsons addressed a letter to Mr. Joseph N. Roarty, Branch Chief of the Branch to point out that Ms. Theresa Chupka, the EEO Officer (sic) had become an employee of the personnel office under the office of administration. The letter implies that she thereby became ineligible to continue as an officer. She expressed the belief that it would be appropriate at this time for a Union/ management meeting to discuss the matter. (Exhibit C-1).

A memorandum, of a meeting between Roarty and Parsons, Exhibit C-3, dated May 20, 1975, signed by both in pertinent part, states as follows:

> Mr. Roarty stated he received a call from Mr. Joseph Bracey, Baltimore, in regards to the EEO Officer. Mr. Roarty received an "ok" to select 3 people to hold this office. The vacancies will be by self-nomination. Mr. Roarty further stated that the method of selection will be by joint Union/ Management agreement.

In June or July of 1975, Roarty telephoned Bracey on several things connected with the selection of counselors and told him of the Union-Management agreement. Roarty testified that Bracey told him the agreement was outside the scope of his responsibility and that he could have no input into this particular area -- it was strictly the responsibility of the Baltimore office (Tr. 101, 102). Roarty interpreted this as a prohibition of negotiation extending to the entire method of selection of EEO Counselors from beginning to end, except insofar as the Union wished to submit nominees under the self-nominating process.

Mr. Alonzo Rogers, EEO Officer for the Baltimore for the Bureau of Data Processing, was assigned to Wilkes-Barre to conduct the selection process. On August 13, 1975, he held a meeting attended by management and Union officers. A document described as a proposed plan of the Respondents EEO program was handed to the Union people with the suggestion that if they had any input they could submit it. Rogers talked about why he was sent to Wilkes-Barre. The method of selecting the counselors was not discussed (Tr. 78). On the same day, a memorandum was addressed to all employees of the Branch informing them that Rogers would be conducting the selection for three to four counselors and will be consulting with the Union officials for their input.

On September 15, 1975, the interviews were begun. Rogers permitted the Union to have a representative present during the screening. (He wanted to have the Union present to show that there was nothing to hide). Although the Union was present, it was not permitted to participate in the interviews. About 37 people, self nominees, were interviewed. Five or six people, who objected to the presence of the Union during their interviews, were excluded and refused consideration. Rogers testified, "I said that any candidate in the self-nominating process that did not come in to be interviewed because the Union would be present need not come in to be interviewed because the Union would be present (Tr. 98, 99).

The interviews were calculated to elicit from the nominees their knowledge of the civil rights movement, the Equal Employment Act of 1964, the meaning of discrimination, and whether they had experienced or seen discrimination in the Wilkes-Barre Branch.

Parsons testified to a meeting she had with management after the interviews. She brought up the agreement of May 20, 1975. She testified that Rogers told her it was invalid and not worth anything.

By letter dated October 29, 1975, Rogers informed Roarty of the selection of five EEO Counselors for the Branch.

On or about November 20, 1975, the Union filed a memorandum with the Branch Chief charging the Social Security Administration with a violation of Section 19(a)(6) of the Executive Order for refusing to negotiate in good faith on the method of the selection of EEO Counselors. A Complaint alleging violation of Section 19(a)(6) of the Order was filed with the Regional Administrator on February 17, 1976.

Applicable Provisions of Executive Order and Collective Bargaining

Executive Order, as amended:

Section 11. Negotiation of agreements. (a) An agency and a labor organization that has been accorded exclusive recognition, through appropriate representatives, shall meet as reasonable times and confer in good faith with respect to personnel policies and practices and matters affecting working conditions, so far as may be appropriate under applicable laws and regulations, including policies set forth in the Federal Personnel Manual; published agency policies and regulations for which a compelling need exists under criteria established by the Federal Labor Relations Council and which are issued at the agency headquarters level or at the level of a primary national subdivision; a national or other controlling agreement at a higher level in the agency; and this Order. They may negotiate an agreement, or any question arising thereunder; determine appropriate techniques, consistent with section 17 of this Order, to assist in such negotiation; and execute a written agreement or memorandum of understanding.

Section 19. Unfair labor practices. (a) Agency management shall not--

(6) refuse to consult, confer, or negotiate with a labor organization as required by this Order.

General Agreement Between Social Security Administration, Wilkes-Barre Operations Branch and SSA Local 2809, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Effective August 16, 1972.

Article II

Section 1. The Branch and the Labor Organization agree to establish appropriate machinery, as hereinafter provided, for joint consultation and/or negotiation, on personnel policies, practices, and procedures relating to working conditions which are within the authority of the branch, and within the limitations set forth in Section 2 below, including, but not limited to such matters as safety, training, labor-management cooperation, employee services, methods of adjusting grievances, appeals, overtime, leave, promotion plans, demotion practices, equal employment opportunities, reduction in force practices, and hours of work.

Section 2. In the administration of all matters covered by the agreement, officials and employees are governed by existing or future laws and the regulations of appropriate authorities, including policies set forth in the Federal Personnel Manual; by published agency policies and regulations in existence at the time the agreement was approved; and by subsequently published agency policies and regulations required by law or by the regulations of appropriate authorities, or authorized by the terms of a controlling agreement at a higher agency level.

Section 3. The Branch and the Labor Organization agree that personnel policies and procedures and working conditions that are specifically established by Federal Statutes, Executive Orders, or rules or regulations isssued by the Civil Service Commission, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, or Social Security Administration cannot be the subject of negotiation. It is further understood and agreed that the areas of consultation or negotiation shall not extend to such areas of discretion and policy as the mission of the Branch, its budget, organization and assignment of personnel, or the technology of performing work.

General Agreement Between Social Security Administration Headquarters Bureaus and Offices In Baltimore and SSA Local 1923, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Effective September 24, 1974

Article 5

Section C. The Parties mutually agree that the Union may nominate individuals to serve as Equal Opportunity Counselors. No employee may serve as both an Equal Opportunity Counselor and a Union official or supervisor. The Union will be notified as to the specific reason for the nonselection of any of its nominees. The Parties will meet and confer on the factors to be used for the selection of these Counselors.

Conclusions of Law

The Respondent denies that it refused to consult, confer or negotiate with AFGE Local 2809 in violation of Section 19 (a)(6) of the Executive Order.

It contends that Section 11(a) of the Order limits and restricts its obligation to negotiate only on those matters which may be appropriate under applicable laws and regulations, and, hence it is obligated to negotiate on only those matters contained in the General Agreement between the parties. Within the limits imposed by this view of the Section, it points to Article II, Section 3 of the General Agreement, and says that the Union clearly and unmistakably waived its right to negotiate the matter of the method and selection of EEO Counselors. On the foregoing premises it reaches the following conclusion:

> Thus, because the selection and appointment of EEO Counselors lies solely with the EEO Officer of the Social Security Administration, in the person of Mr. Frank DeGeorge, who is > the Associate Commissioner for Management and Administration, Mr. Roarty, the Branch Chief, does not and did not have the authority to negotiate the methods of and the selection of EEO Counselors. Further, in argumento, (sic), even if such authority to negotiate had existed with Mr. Roarty, he had no obligation to negotiate the methods of and selection since the entire EEO Program is governed by the Civil Service Commission Regulations, Department of Health, Education and Welfare, and the regulations of Social Security Administration, and hence, the Complainant has waived the rights to negotiate these matters by the provisions of the General Agreement between the parties.

The Respondent further argues that Roarty misunderstood his role in the matter of EEO and made a mistake in his dealings with the Union relative to negotiation on the matter of selection of counselors. It concludes that since it was a mistake, a honest one, the Respondent cannot be guilty of violating Section 19(a)(6).

Finally, it argues that the parties on the local level did not understand and comprehend the restrictions on them. As evidence of the lack of understanding of the parties, it shows that Roarty and Parsons referred to the selection of EEO Officers rather than EEO Counselors in their early discussions. It concludes that the parties did not fully understand or comprehend the problems at hand until their meeting with Rogers on August 13, 1975.

These arguments are rejected.

In fashioning its defense, the Respondent introduced a new term into this case that was not an issue between the parties. In issue was the question as to whether or not the Respondent had an obligation to confer with the Union in the matter of the method of selection of the EEO Counselors. The question raised by the defense is whether the Respondent had an obligation to negotiate the method and selection of EEO Counselors. As proposed by the Union, it was simply a matter of discussing with management the nominating process, qualifications of nominees, and the appointment machinery. As posed by the Respondent, the Union was asking not only for a voice in the method of selection of counselors, but it was asking to be allowed to negotiate the selection as well. It is to the altered proposition that Respondent makes its argument, and attempts to show that it did not have the authority to negotiate the selection of Counselors--a management prerogative. Obviously, the argument is beside the point.

In Baltimore, the Respondent recognizes the negotiability of the method of selecting counselors. Under the terms of an agreement between the Headquarters Bureaus and the Local Union at Baltimore effective September 24, 1974, received into evidence over an objection on relevance, the Respondent is bound not only to meet and confer on all phases of the development and implementation of the Affirmative Action Plan (EEO), but, in addition, it is required to notify the Union as to the specific reason for the nonselection of a Union Nominee. While the broad terms of this agreement cannot be engrafted on the general agreement between the Respondent and the Branch, this agreement is evidence that the Respondent does have authority to negotiate the method of the selection of Counselors. Presumably, the rules, regulations, and policy under which Respondent operates in Baltimore are equally applicable at its Branch in Wilkes-Barre.

Article II Section 3 of the General Agreement between the parties, said by the Respondent to be a waiver by the Union of the right to negotiate the method of the selection of counselors, contains express recognition of certain matters, consistent with the Order, which are nonnegotiable. The proscriptions of the Order are a part of every general agreement - expressed or implied. This section of the General Agreement is precatory. Under no circumstances can it be considered a waiver for the simple reason that there are no rights to be waived where none exist. If, indeed, this section were to be construed a waiver, under the circumstances in this case, it could be extended to logically include every term of the agreement between these parties to prevent negotiation. Such an absurd conclusion is prohibited by the plain meaning of the Order which was promulgated to promote discourse between labor and management through negotiation. This argument is unsound.

Article II, Section 1 of the General Agreement between the Respondent and the Branch contains an agreement to establish approrpriate machinery for joint consultation and/or negotiation on personnel policies and procedures relating to working conditions of the Branch, including, but not limited to equal employment opportunities. There is no evidence, and the point is not made by the Respondent, that this provision does not extend to negotiation of the method of selecting EEO Counselors. There is an obligation to negotiate equal employment opportunities under the General Agreement, and the special agreement between Roarty and Parsons of May 20, 1975, serves as a reiteration and confirmation of that obligation. Where, as in this case, an agency, through its local bargaining representative, negotiated and reached agreement on a proposal in dispute as permitted by the Order, the agency cannot, after that fact, change its position. See AFGE Council of Locals 1497 and 2165 and Region 3, General Services Administration, Baltimore, Maryland, FLRC No. 74A-48 (June 26, 1975), Report No. 75.

The Respondent cannot relieve itself of the responsibilities created by the agreements by claiming honest mistake and misunderstanding. As defenses, these pleas lack legal efficacy and they do not prevail against the Complaint.

The Respondent consciously disregarded its obligation to negotiate on the matter of the method of the selection of Counselors in violation of Section 19(a)(6) of the Executive Order. It acted unilaterally in altering the terms of the general and special agreements between it and the Branch. It acted unilaterally in dictating the terms and conditions for the selection of Counselors without regard to the desires, needs, and peculiar problems of the employees of the Branch. The token participation permitted the Union was not negotiation regardless of how that term is defined, and was calculated to give the appearance "that there was nothing to hide".

In determining the remedy to be applied in this case, consideration should be given to the effects of the Respondent's conduct in this case. In contrast to its policy in Baltimore, the Respondent singled out the Wilkes-Barre Branch for unequal treatment in the matter of EEO. It undermined the authority and effectiveness of the Branch Chief in working toward harmonious labor-management relations by abruptly rescinding an agreement he had made to negotiate. The rejection of the Union in this matter tended to denigrate the Union in the eyes of the employees of the Branch. The exclusion of employees who objected to the Union being present at their interviews discriminated against those employees for their nonunion status.

Finally, the criteria used for screening nominees was restricted in perspective and, as a measurement of qualifications, capable of producing Counselors lacking in the understanding necessary to solve problems in Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania.

All things considered, the purpose of the Order and the EEO Program will be best served by discharging all of the Counselors appointed in the above described process. The parties should begin anew in the selection process with careful attention given to their obligations under the Order and their agreements.

Recommendations

The Respondent is found to have engaged in conduct violative of Executive Order 11491, as amended, and, therefore, it is recommended that the Assistant Secretary adopt the following Order which is designed to effectuate the policies of the Order.

Order

Pursuant to Section 6(b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, and Section 203.26(b) of the Regulations, the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations hereby orders that the Social Security Administration, Department of Health, Education and Welfare, Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Refusing to consult, confer and negotiate with Local 2809, American Federation of Government Employees, in the matter of the method of selection of Equal Employment Opportunity Counselors at the Wilkes-Barre Operations Branch of the Social Security Administration.

(b) Unilaterally changing the terms and conditions of the collective bargaining agreement between Wilkes-Barre Operations Branch and Local 2809.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and provisions of the Executive Order, as amended:

(a) Discharge all EEO Counselors appointed by Social Security Administration as the result of the selection process begun on or about August 13, 1975.

(b) Institute and complete within a reasonable time a selection process for the appointment of EEO Counselors which includes negotiation with the Union on the matter of the method of the selection of Counselors.

(c) Provide for participation of nonunion employees in the selection process for the appointment of EEO Counselors.

(d) Post at its facility at Wilkes-Barre Operations Branch, Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix" on forms to be furnished by the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Branch Chief and shall be posted and maintained by him for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. The Branch Chief shall take reasonable steps to insure that such notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(e) Pursuant to Section 203.26 of the Regulations, notify the Assistant Secretary, in writing, within 20 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

SUMMARY OF DECISION AND DIRECTION OF ELECTION
OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

USDA FOREST SERVICE,
CHEROKEE NATIONAL FOREST,
JACOBS CREEK CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CENTER
A/SLMR No. 890

This case arose as a result of a petition filed by the National Federation of Federal Employees seeking an election in a unit of all professional and nonprofessional employees of the Jacobs Creek Civilian Conservation Center (Center) located on the Activity, the Cherokee National Forest (Forest). The Activity maintained that only a unit comprised of all Forest employees is appropriate. It contended that employees of the Center share a community of interest with other Forest employees and that a separate unit of exclusive recognition at the Center would have an adverse effect on the efficiency of the Forest's operations and on the Forest's ability to engage in effective labor-management relations dealings.

The Assistant Secretary found that the unit sought was appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition. He found that the Center constituted a functionally distinct group of employees who share a community of interest separate and distinct from the other employees of the Forest. Additionally, he found that the claimed functional unit will promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. The Assistant Secretary noted that the Center was in existence in 1973 when the Activity consented to an election in a Forest-wide unit which specifically excluded the Center's employees. He noted further that in the Region involved, employees of five of the remaining six Civilian Conservation Centers are in exclusively recognized units separate from the National Forests in which they are located and all of these units are covered by negotiated agreements. In these circumstances, and in the absence of any evidence that the scope and character of the Activity's existing unit have changed by virtue of events subsequent to its certification, the Assistant Secretary rejected the Activity's position that only a Forest-wide unit which includes the Center's employees is appropriate. Moreover, he found that, under the particular circumstances of this case, where the claimed employees constituted a functional unit of all unrepresented employees in the Forest who have not had an opportunity to vote on the question of exclusive recognition, the establishment of the petitioned for unit will minimize fragmentation of the remaining unrepresented employees of the Activity. Also, the Assistant Secretary found, contrary to the position taken by the Activity, that four GS-186-7 Group Leaders are not supervisors and are eligible to be included in the unit found appropriate.

Thus, in accordance with Section 10(b)(4) of the Order, the Assistant Secretary ordered an election among the professional and nonprofessional employees in the unit found appropriate.

Petitioner

DECISION AND DIRECTION OF ELECTION

Upon a petition duly filed under Section 6 of Executive Order 11491, as amended, a hearing was held before Hearing Officer Ann H. Woodward. The Hearing Officer's rulings made at the hearing are free from prejudicial error and are hereby affirmed.

Upon the entire record in this case, the Assistant Secretary finds:

1. The labor organization involved claims to represent certain employees of the Activity.

2. The Petitioner, National Federation of Federal Employees seeks an election in a unit of all professional and nonprofessional employees of the Jacobs Creek Civilian Conservation Center (Center) located in the Cherokee National Forest (Forest), excluding all management officials, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, supervisors as defined by Executive Order 11491, as amended, and all other employees of the Forest. 2/ At the hearing, the Petitioner stated that it was not willing to proceed to an election in any alternative unit.

1/ The name of the Activity appears as amended at the hearing.

2/ The claimed unit appears essentially as amended at the hearing.

The Activity takes the position that the petitioned for unit is not appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under the Order. 3/ The Activity maintains that only a unit comprised of all Forest employees is appropriate. It contends that employees of the Center share a community of interest with other Forest employees and that a separate unit at the Center would have an adverse effect on the efficiency of the Forest's operations and on the Forest's ability to engage in effective labor-management relations dealings. The Activity also asserts that the substantial amount of effort that has gone into creation of a "National Forest concept" would be disrupted by the psychological barriers imposed by having two separate units in one National Forest system.

In support of the claimed unit, the Petitioner contends that not over ten percent of the job classifications within the Center are compatible with those in the Forest. Also, it asserts that other separate Forest and Center units within the Region involved have worked efficiently. Accordingly, the Petitioner takes the position that the petitioned for unit is appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under the Order.

The mission of the Forest Service, an agency of the U.S. Department of Agriculture, is accomplished through four main activities: (1) protection and management of natural resources on National Forest lands; (2) cooperation with state and local governments, forest industries and private landowners to help protect and manage non-Federal forest and associated range and watershed land; (3) research in various aspects of forestry; and (4) participation with other agencies in human resource and community assistance programs. The mission of the Cherokee National Forest involves primarily the first and fourth of these Forest Service activities. With respect to the latter activity, the Forest Service cooperates with the Departments of Labor, Commerce, and Health, Education and Welfare in a number of human resource programs which provide employment, job training and education for older Americans, youth and other individuals. In this connection, one cooperative program with the Department of Labor, the Job Corps, is unique in that it utilizes 17 separate administrative entities--Civilian Conservation Centers (Job Corps Centers)--located in various National Forests nationwide to accomplish the Job Corps' mission.

The mission of the Jacobs Creek Center located in the Cherokee National Forest is to provide youths with room and board, basic education and the opportunity to obtain training in such vocations as carpentry, painting, bricklaying, cooking, and the operation of earthmoving equipment in order that they can become employable in the job market. Together, the Center and the Forest provide the environment for training of Job Corps enrollees. As part of their training, the Job Corps enrollees from the Center construct roads, trails, recreation areas, and buildings and do other needed construction and environmental work on Forest acreage.

3/ The Activity also contends that four GS-7 group leaders are not eligible to be included in the claimed unit because they are supervisors as defined by the Order. The Petitioner disputes this contention.

The Forest is one of 15 National Forests within Region No. 8 of the Forest Service. It is administratively divided into a Forest Supervisor's Office, the Jacobs Creek Center, and six Ranger Districts. The administrative head of the Forest is the Forest Supervisor. Reporting directly to the Forest Supervisor are seven line officials: The Center Director and the six District Rangers.

The Forest is authorized 232 permanent employees: 50 in the Center, 55 in the Forest Supervisor's office, and the remaining 127 divided among the Ranger Districts. The eligible nonprofessional employees of the Forest Supervisor's office and the Ranger Districts are included currently in an exclusively recognized unit represented by the National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 913. 4/ There has never been an election or other evidence of bargaining history at the Center. The record reveals that the Center was in existence in 1973 when the Activity consented to an election in the Forest-wide unit which specifically excluded the Center's employees.

In my view, the Center constitutes a functionally distinct group of employees who share a community of interest separate and distinct from the other employees of the Forest. The evidence shows in this regard that of the approximately 29 employees in the petitioned for unit only three employees have essentially the same duties, skills, education, experience, and job classifications as certain other employees in the existing Forest-wide unit. 5/ The Center's employees have little contact, and 4/ The unit of exclusive recognition was certified on August 9, 1973. The professional employees voted to remain unrepresented. The current negotiated agreement between the parties was executed April 26, 1976, and became effective May 14, 1976, for a three year duration with automatic annual renewal thereafter not to exceed three additional years.

5/ The three employees are: One GS-322-2 Clerk-Typist, one GS-322-4 Clerk-Typist, and one GS-1105-4 Purchasing Agent. The record establishes that the following employees in the petitioned for unit have duties, skills, education, experience, and job classifications which are essentially unique to the Job Corps Center relative to the employees in the existing Forest-wide unit: Two GS-1710-5 Teachers (professional employees), three GS-1710-9 Teachers (professional employees), one GS-1712-5 Training Instructor, four GS-1712-7 Training Instructors, four GS-186-4 Group Aides, three GS-186-5 Group Leaders, four GS-186-7 Group Leaders, and two WG-7404-8 Cooks. No evidence was presented at the hearing regarding the remaining employees included in the unit: One GS-699-5 Health Technician, one WG-7305-3 Laundry Machine Operator, and one WG-6907-4 Warehouseman.

except for the three employees mentioned above, do not interchange or transfer with employees of the existing Forest-wide unit. 6/

Further, I find that the claimed functional unit will promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. The record reveals that the Center was in existence in 1973 when the Activity consented to an election in the Forest-wide unit which specifically excluded the Center's employees. Also, it appears that in the Region involved herein -- Region No. 8 of the Forest Service -- employees of five of the remaining six Civilian Conservation Centers are in exclusively recognized units separate from the National Forests in which they are located and all of these units are covered by negotiated agreements. 7/ In these circumstances, and in the absence of any evidence that the scope and character of the Activity's existing unit have changed by virtue of events subsequent to its certification, I reject the Activity's position that only a Forest-wide unit which includes the Center's employees is appropriate. 8/ Moreover, under the particular circumstances of this case, where the claimed employees constitute a functional unit of all unrepresented employees in the Forest who have not had an opportunity to vote on the question of exclusive recognition, I find that the establishment of the petitioned for unit will minimize fragmentation of the remaining unrepresented employees of the Activity. 9/

As noted above, the Activity takes the position that the four GS-186-7 Group Leaders who work at the Center are not eligible to be included in any unit found appropriate because they are supervisors within the meaning of the Order. On the other hand, the Petitioner contends that these employees are not supervisors and should be included in the claimed unit.

6/ See United States Department of Agriculture, Forest Service, Schenck Civilian Conservation Center, North Carolina and Forest Service, National Forests of North Carolina, A/SLMR No. 116, and United States Department of Agriculture, Black Hills National Forest, A/SLMR No. 58. Compare United States Department of Agriculture, Forest Service, Wolfe Creek Job Corps Civilian Conservation Center and United States Department of Agriculture Forest Service, Umpqua National Forest, Roseburg, Oregon, A/SLMR No. 567.

7/ See, in this regard, the U.S. Civil Service Commission's publication, Union Recognition in the Federal Government (November 1976).

8/ It was noted further that the funding and policy formulation for all 17 Job Corps Centers within the Forest Service originates with the Department of Labor and is channeled through the Forest Service for administrative efficiency only.

9/ See Department of the Navy, Naval Support Activity, Long Beach, California, A/SLMR No. 629, FLRC No. 76A-91.

The record reveals that three of the four GS-7 Group Leaders are Dorm Managers who are responsible for the Job Corps enrollees during their dormitory hours. Each Dorm Manager has an Assistant Dorm Manager -- GS-5 Group Leader -- working under him. The remaining GS-7 Group Leader is responsible for the enrollees' leisure time activities at the Center. He has two GS-5 Group Leaders working under him. All four GS-7 Group Leaders report to a GS-9 Group Leader who, in turn, reports to a GS-11 Supervisory Group Leader who, in turn, reports to the Center Director, a GS-13.

As a result of an expansion of the Center, a reorganization of the Center began approximately three months prior to the hearing in this matter and had not yet been completed. 10/ The evidence establishes, however, that at the time of the hearing the four GS-7 Group Leaders involved could not hire, transfer, suspend, lay off, recall or discharge the GS-5 Group Leaders working under them or effectively recommend such action. While a recommendation regarding discipline had been made by an employee in question, there was no evidence that such recommendation was effective. Further, although these employees can assign work and direct the work of their subordinates, it appears from the record that their authority is no more than routine in nature. 11/ Accordingly, I find that, under the circumstances, the four GS-7 Group Leaders involved herein do not possess the supervisory indicia set forth in Section 2(c) of the Order and, therefore, I shall include them in the unit found appropriate.

Accordingly, I find that the following employees constitute a unit appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition within the meaning of Section 10 of Executive Order 11491, as amended:

> All professional and nonprofessional employees of the Jacobs Creek Civilian Conservation Center located on the Cherokee National Forest, excluding all management officials, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, supervisors as defined by the Order, and all other employees of the Cherokee National Forest.

It is noted that the unit found appropriate includes professional employees. The Assistant Secretary is prohibited by Section 10(b)(4) of the Order from including professional employees in the unit with employees who are not professionals unless a majority of the professional employees

10/ When the reorganization is completed, it appears that the GS-186-4 Group Aides noted above at footnote 5 will be converted to GS-186-5 Group Leaders. According to the record, there is no difference between the duties performed by employees in the two classifications.

11/ See Department of Interior, Bureau of Indian Affairs, Navajo Area, Gallup, New Mexico, A/SLMR No. 99.

votes for inclusion in such a unit. Accordingly, the desires of the professional employees 12/ as to inclusion in the unit with nonprofessional employees must be ascertained. I shall, therefore, direct separate elections in the following groups:

> Voting Group (a): All professional employees of the Jacobs Creek Civilian Conservation Center located on the Cherokee National Forest, excluding all nonprofessional employees, management officials, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, supervisors as defined by the Order, and all other employees of the Cherokee National Forest.
> Voting Group (b): All nonprofessional employees of the Jacobs Creek Civilian Conservation Center located on the Cherokee National Forest, excluding all professional employees, management officials, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, supervisors as defined by the Order, and all other employees of the Cherokee National Forest.

The employees in the nonprofessional voting group (b) will be polled whether or not they desire to be represented by the National Federation of Federal Employees.

The employees in the professional voting group (a) will be asked two questions on their ballots: (1) whether or not they wish to be included with the nonprofessional employees for the purpose of exclusive recognition, and (2) whether or not they wish to be represented for the purpose of exclusive recognition by the National Federation of Federal Employees. In the event that the majority of the valid votes of voting group (a) are cast in favor of inclusion in the same unit as the nonprofessional employees, the ballots of voting group (a) shall be combined with those of voting group (b).

Unless a majority of the valid votes of voting group (a) are cast for inclusion in the same unit as the nonprofessional employees, they will be taken to have indicated their desire to constitute a separate unit, and an appropriate certification will be issued indicating whether or not the National Federation of Federal Employees was selected by the professional employee unit.

The unit determination in the subject case is based, in part, then, upon the results of the election among the professional employees. However, I will now make the following findings in regard to the appropriate unit:

12/ As noted above at footnote 5, there are 5 professional employees eligible to be included in the unit: Two GS-1710-5 Teachers and three GS-1710-9 Teachers.

1. If a majority of the professional employees votes for inclusion in the same unit as the nonprofessional employees, I find that the following employees will constitute a unit appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition within the meaning of Section 10 of the Order:

> All professional and nonprofessional employees of the Jacobs Creek Civilian Conservation Center located on the Cherokee National Forest, excluding all management officials, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, supervisors as defined by the Order, and all other employees of the Cherokee National Forest.

2. If a majority of the professional employees does not vote for inclusion in the same unit as the nonprofessional employees, I find that the following two groups of employees constitute separate units appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition within the meaning of Section 10 of the Order:

> (a) All professional employees of the Jacobs Creek Civilian Conservation Center located on the Cherokee National Forest, excluding all nonprofessional employees, management officials, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, supervisors as defined by the Order, and all other employees of the Cherokee National Forest.
> (b) All nonprofessional employees of the Jacobs Creek Civilian Conservation Center located on the Cherokee National Forest, excluding all professional employees, management officials, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, supervisors as defined by the Order, and all other employees of the Cherokee National Forest.

DIRECTION OF ELECTION

An election by secret ballot shall be conducted among the employees in the unit found appropriate as early as possible, but not later than 60 days from the date below. The appropriate Area Administrator shall supervise the election, subject to the Assistant Secretary's Regulations. Eligible to vote are those in the unit who were employed during the payroll period immediately preceding the date below, including employees who did not work during that period because they were ill, or on vacation or on furlough, including those in the military service who appear in person at the polls. Ineligible to vote are employees who quit or were discharged for cause since the designated payroll period and who have not been rehired or reinstated before the election date. Those eligible shall vote whether or not they desire to be represented for the purpose of exclusive recognition by the National Federation of Federal Employees.

SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT, LOS ANGELES AREA OFFICE
A/SLMR No. 891

This case involved an amended unfair labor practice complaint filed by the National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 477 (NFFE) alleging that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by: (1) not providing a substantive response to the NFFE's request for information concerning a contemplated adverse action against employee Russell Eaton, a member of the bargaining unit; (2) failing to inform Eaton of his right to union representation at a meeting concerning a proposed adverse action, on November 10, 1975, as required by Article 12.2 of the parties' negotiated agreement; and (3) discriminating against Eaton by assigning him to clerical duties after he was informed of his imminent termination.

In her Recommended Decision and Order, the Administrative Law Judge concluded that the Respondent had not violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order. In this regard, she concluded that: (1) the Respondent's action in failing to respond substantively to the NFFE's request for information was based upon the failure of the NFFE to indicate that Eaton had designated the NFFE as his representative, and did not reflect union animus. (2) Article 12.2 of the parties' negotiated agreement provides that employees under investigation must be notified of their right to representation, and the Respondent complied therewith at the initial stage of the continuing investigation. Article 13 of the agreement provides that employees are entitled to representation at meetings concerning proposed adverse actions, but does not specify that the employee must be so advised, and Eaton did not ask for any such representation at the November 10, 1975, meeting. Further, the Respondent was not obligated to afford the NFFE an opportunity to be present at the November 10, 1975, meeting as such meeting was not a formal discussion within the meaning of Section 10(e) of the Order. (3) The assignment of Eaton to clerical duties was not harassment or coercion under the Order since there was no evidence of union animus on the part of the Respondent. Accordingly, the Administrative Law Judge recommended that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety.

Noting particularly the absence of exceptions, the Assistant Secretary adopted the findings and recommendation of the Administrative Law Judge, and he ordered that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety.

RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

This proceeding arose upon the filing of an unfair labor practice complaint, on June 23, 1975, which was amended October 20, 1975, by W. Pedro Newbern II, first vice-president, Local 477 of The National Federation of Federal Employees against The Los Angeles Office of the Department of Housing and Urban Development (hereinafter referred to as Respondent). As amended, the complaint alleged that the Respondent engaged in certain conduct during a meeting with an employee on November 10, 1975, and certain activities relative thereto which are violative of sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of Executive Order 11491, as amended (hereinafter referred to as the Order).

The complaint alleged, in substance, that Messers. Donald Phillips and George Tousignant met with Mr. Russell Eaton, a member of Local 477, regarding the potential implementation of adverse action against Mr. Eaton, without informing Mr. Eaton of his right to union representation or his right to appeal and that these actions failed to accord Local 477 proper recognition consonant with the terms of Article 3.1 of the Agreement. It is further alleged that correspondence regarding management's action toward Mr. Eaton was not substantively responded to, which further failed to accord proper recognition to Local 477. And finally, the assignment of Mr. Eaton to clerical duties without a formal detail was demeaning and humiliating and, therefore, constituted harassment and coercion of a union member.

A hearing was held on this case on January 6, 1977, at Los Angeles, California. The parties through their counsel were afforded full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, to introduce evidence and file briefs in support of their positions.

Preliminary Motion

On February 14, 1977, the attorney for Complainant moved for leave to file a late brief on the ground that a copy of the transcript had not been received. Briefs were due no later than February 7, 1977. Respondent's attorney has filed a statement in opposition to the motion for continuance. Although the request for an extension of time was not timely filed under section 203.22 of the Rules and Regulations, the motion can be considered under section 203.19 and other pertinent sections of the Rules and Regulations. The Claimant's brief clearly is not a reply brief. Counsel for Claimant was dilatory in his request. However, the fact that the transcripts had not been received could have caused his confusion since the brief date was set seven days after the date transcripts should have been received. Additionally, it is patently clear that Respondent, who was timely in its filing, will not be harmed since the contents of Complainant's brief clearly does not reply to Respondent's brief. Accordingly, Complainant's motion will be granted, and his reply brief dated February 16, 1977, considered. Complainant also seeks to have Respondent's brief disregarded. This request is denied. The decision reached herein is predicated solely upon the evidence of record and the applicable law.

Based on the entire record, including my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor and upon the relevant evidence adduced at the hearing, I make the following findings of fact, conclusions of law and recommendation:

Issues

1. Did the Collective Bargaining Agreement impose upon Respondent an affirmative duty to inform Mr. Eaton of his right to be represented at the meeting of November 10, 1975, and if so, was such failure a unilateral change in the negotiated agreement.

2. Did the temporary assignment of Mr. Eaton to another office where he was given clerical duties constitute harassment and coercion.

3. Did Respondent fail to substantively reply to Claimant's inquiries, and if so, can such behavior be deemed a failure to accord Local 477 proper recognition.

Findings of Fact

Mr. Russell Eaton was the subject of an official investigation of the Respondent's Regional Office. The subject matter of the investigation concerned several counts of severe misconduct in his capacity as an appraiser. At the time the investigation was being conducted, it was normal agency practice to have personnel in the San Francisco Regional Office actually perform the investigation. After completing the investigation, the Regional Office telephonically notified the Los Angeles Area Director that the results were so incriminating as to justify immediate removal. The Regional Personnel Office stated it was going to prepare the removal papers for the Los Angeles Area Office. The Area Director retained the obligation to evaluate the investigative report to determine whether the results support the proposed action.

Prior to receiving the actual investigation report, but in response to the representation of Regional Counsel that removal was warranted, the Area Director met with Mr. Eaton's supervisors, Messers. Phillips and Tousignant, to determine the best course of action in dealing with the matter. Based on the assumption that certain removal was forthcoming, it was decided at this meeting to offer Mr. Eaton the opportunity to resign, thereby avoiding besmirchment of his personnel record. This decision to hold the meeting is consonant with the provisions of the Federal Personnel Manual section S1-1(b)(3) which states:

> "It is proper for an agency to initiate a discussion with an employee in which he is given an election between leaving his position voluntarily (by resignation, optional retirement, or requesting a reduction in rank or pay) or having the agency initiate formal action against him. It is also proper for the agency, in the course of the discussion, to advise the employee which of the possible alternatives will be in his best interest. The fact that the employee may be faced with an inherently unpleasant situation, or that his choice may be limited to two unpleasant alternatives, does not make the resulting action an involuntary action. However, if the agency uses deception, duress, time pressure, or intimidation to force him to choose a particular course of action, the action is involuntary."

Pursuant to the decision to offer Mr. Eaton an opportunity to resign, he was called to a meeting with his immediate supervisors on November 10, 1975, informed of the charges against him and offered the opportunity to resign prior to the arrival of the official removal papers. Mr. Eaton was not advised that he had a right to representation at the meeting nor did he request representation. Mr. Eaton chose not to resign. However, during the course of the investigation he was informed that he had the right to counsel but knowledgeably refused representation as demonstrated in his statement dated July 15, 1975. The July 15, 1975, statement clearly states that Mr. Eaton had been advised that the purpose of his interview was to obtain his responses to questions concerning his alleged violation of the Respondent Activity's standards of conduct by engaging in outside employment as a fee appraiser, the use of departmental mail franking previleges for personal business, the use of government time and photograph equipment in connection with his personal business, and the falsification of monthly travel vouchers submitted to HUD. He also initialed that section which indicated that he had been advised of his right to legal counsel and his further right to terminate any interview regarding the matter at any time he so desired.

Upon the termination of the November 10, 1975, meeting, his supervisors temporarily assigned him to the office of Mr. Les Thompson. Mr. Thompson was not instructed as to what duties Mr. Eaton was to be assigned, and Mr. Thompson took it upon himself to have Mr. Eaton engage in what is characterized as clerical duties. The decision to remove Mr. Eaton from his duties as a field appraiser was based upon the belief that his continued activities in the field would constitute a serious security problem. The record clearly shows that the assignment was not intended as punishment but, rather, was made upon the belief that removal was imminent and that there was a need for protecting the reputation of HUD by keeping him out of the field. The office headed by Mr. Thompson was the Low Rent Section, which is comprised primarily of non-clerical staff. Security problems were considered to exist because of the allegation that his outside appraisals conflicted with HUD appraisals. At the time all decisions were made regarding Mr. Eaton, neither the area director nor Messers. Phillips or Tousignant knew that Mr. Eaton was a member of Local 477 or had any union affiliation.

On November 21, 1975, Mr. Eaton delivered a letter to his supervisors, with a copy to Local 477, asking questions about the status of his removal papers. No response was received. On December 4, 1977, Local 477 sent a letter to the area director characterizing Mr. Eaton's November 21, 1975, letter as a grievance and seeking responses to questions "for informational purposes only" pursuant to the provisions of Articles 3, 9 and 13 of the collective bargaining agreement. It should be noted that Mr. Eaton testified that he did not consider his letter a grievance. The area director responded to Complainant's letter on December 10, 1975, advising that Mr. Eaton's case was still under review.

It appears that management was reticent to fully discuss the details of the investigation with third parties due to the recent enactment of the Privacy Act of 1974, which contains penalties for disclosures of certain information. The recent enactment of the Privacy Act relative to the request of Local 477 engendered difficulties in HUD's determining what should and should not be disclosed. The Executive Board of the NFFE met with the area director twenty-nine days later to discuss the Eaton case. Furthermore, on several occasions area counsel discussed Mr. Eaton's case with union representatives, informing them that pending re-evaluation of the facts, which he characterized as unsatisfactory in the investigative report, counsel was hesitant to answer the letter of November 21, 1975. The record is not clear as to whether the union agreed to this course of action. The record does clearly indicate that the employer understood that the union would await the re-evaluation. Respondent did re-open the investigation to resolve whether the suggested removal action was warranted, a fact conveyed in the December 10, 1974, letter. Furthermore, the area director believed that the investigative file was the property of the inspector-general and that he lacked the authority to release it to Complainant. It is noted that on January 6, 1976, Mr. Eaton did receive a notice of proposed removal under section 752.2 of the HUD Handbook.

Discussion and Conclusions

The initial issue for consideration is whether the activity had an obligation to inform Mr. Eaton of his right to counsel at the November 10, 1975, meeting. Was the meeting within the scope of section 10(e) of Executive Order 11491, as amended? Section 10(e) provides:

> "When a labor organization has been accorded exclusive recognition, it is the exclusive representative of employees in the unit and is entitled to act for and to negotiate agreements covering all employees in the unit. It is responsible for representing the interests of all employees in the unit without discrimination and without regard to labor organization membership. The labor organization shall be given the opportunity to be represented at formal discussions between management and employees or employee representatives concerning grievances, personnel policies and practices, or other matters affecting general working conditions of employees in the unit." (Emphasis Supplied)

Was the meeting of November 10, 1975, a formal discussion within the meaning of the Executive Order? The record demonstrates Mr. Eaton did not request representation even though during the investigation he was informed of his right to counsel. Therefore any finding of an unfair labor practice occurring at the November 10 meeting must be predicated on the affirmative finding that management had an obligation under section 10(e) of the Executive Order or the negotiated agreement to inform Mr. Eaton of his right to counsel. The record also clearly demonstrates that the proposed adverse action had not yet been instituted against Mr. Eaton at the time of the November 10 meeting since no thirty-day letter had been issued.

On November 10, there was no grievance filed and no general personnel policies and practices or other matters affecting general working conditions of employees in the unit discussed. There was no record formally made of the meeting and only the employee and his two supervisors were present. Although his immediate supervisor was not present, Mr. Eaton's second tier and third tier supervisors did attend and conduct the meeting. At the most, the meeting was a counseling session. Inasmuch as the counseling session predated the filing of any paper that could be characterized as a grievance, it cannot be found that the sessions involved a grievance. Moreover, the matters discussed at the meeting did not involve general working conditions and work performance, rather they were related solely to an individual employee's alleged shortcomings with respect to substantial allegations of wrong doing. Accordingly, the meeting did not constitute "formal discussions" in which the exclusive representative was entitled to counsel the employee by virtue of the provisions of section 10(e) of the Order. It follows that the failure to affirmatively inform Mr. Eaton of his right to representation at the November 10 meeting did not constitute a violation of section 19(a)(6) of the Order. See Department of Defense, National Guard Bureau, Texas International Guard, A/SLMR No. 336.

Additionally, the discussions did not involve general working conditions but again merely informed the employee of a pending proposed adverse action and offered that employee the opportunity to resign prior to the institution of a proposed adverse action. These discussions would have no wider ramifications than upon any individual employee at any particular time with respect to incidents related to that individual employee's work. Although it is recognized that the counseling session or any other label for pre-meeting is not dispositive of its inclusion or exclusion from the requirements of section 10(e). The nature and significance of the discussions are determinative. Even though two management representatives were present, only the individual employee was or could be affected, not the members of the unit.

This conclusion is supported by the Statement on Major Policy Issue, FLRC No. 75 P-2, which states:

> "1. An employee in a unit of exclusive recognition has a protected right under the last sentence of section 10(e) of the Order to the assistance or representation by the exclusive representative, upon the request of the employee, when he is summoned to a formal discussion with management concerning grievances, personnel policies and practices, or other matters affecting general working conditions of employees in the unit; and
> "2. An employee in a unit of exclusive recognition does not have a protected right under the Order to assistance or representation at a nonformal investigative meeting or interview to which he is summoned by management; but such right may be established through negotiations conducted by the exclusive representative and the agency in accordance with section 11(a) of the Order."

Consequently, assuming arguendo that the meeting was formal, under the Federal Labor Relation Council's policy statement the employee must request representation, which Mr. Eaton did not do in this case.

Inasmuch as the Order does not require that prior to the opening of a dialogue with Mr. Eaton, management inform him of his right to counsel, the question does remain whether the agreement between the activity and Local 477 includes a negotiated right to be advised of the right to representation. Section 12, titled Disciplinary Actions, of the negotiated agreement provides:

> "12.1 DEFINITION: For purposes of this article, a disciplinary action is a written reprimand or a suspension of thirty-days or less.
> "12.2 RIGHT TO REPRESENTATION: During the conduct of an investigation relative to disciplinary proceedings, no employee shall be subjected to questioning or inquiry without first being advised of his rights to representation.
>
> "Prior to initiating disciplinary actions against an employee, a preliminary investigation will be made to determine the facts in the case.
>
> "12.3 RIGHT OF APPEAL: Each employee shall have the right of appeal as contained in FMP Supp. 752-1 and HUD Handbook 771.2.
> ARTICLE 13 - ADVERSE ACTION
> "13.1 REPRESENTATION: Employees of the unit are entitled to representation of their choice at all discussions between employees and the employer concerning > proposed adverse actions or at any hearing with the employer following a letter of proposal and/or a letter of final decision on such adverse actions. This representation includes assistance and preparation of replies to proposed adverse actions. For the purpose of this article, adverse actions are defined as those covered by sub-part B in FPM Supp. 752.1."

During the investigation the employee was clearly informed of his right to counsel and acknowledged that fact. Therefore, even if the action were defined as a disciplinary action, the requirements of Article 12 of the negotiated agreement had been met by the activity. However, Article 12.1 of the agreement defines disciplinary actions as a written reprimand of suspension of 30 days or less, neither of which occurred.

Article 13 of the negotiated agreement entitles the employee to representation when there is a proposed adverse action. Assuming that the meeting concerned a proposed adverse action, no behavior on the part of management denied the employee his right to representation. The failure to inform the employee to his right to representation is not a denial of representation. The language of section 13.1 of the negotiated agreement does not make it a mandatory obligation of management to notify an employee of his right to representation. Each employee had a copy of the negotiated agreement, which could be construed as informing such employee of their rights. However, the vesting of a right in one party does not automatically, in the absence of specific language in the negotiated agreement, impose an affirmative duty on the other parties to the said agreement. Furthermore, the meeting could not be found to have clearly concerned a proposed adverse action, since the Federal Personnel Manual, made the operative document for the purposes of the negotiated agreement, requires that such proposed adverse actions be in writing. There had been no written notice of proposed adverse action as of November 10, 1975, and, in fact, such notice was not issued until January of 1976.

The Federal Labor Relations Council in FLRC No. 75 P-2 in a statement on Major Policy Issues issued pursuant to section 4(b) of the Order and section 2410.3 of the Council's Rules of Procedure (5 C.F.R. § 2410.3) concluded:

> "1. An employee in a unit of exclusive recognition has a protected right under the last sentence of section 10(e) of the Order to the assistance or representation by the exclusive representative, upon the request of the employee, when he is summoned to a formal discussion with management concerning grievances, personnel policies and practices, or other matters affecting general working conditions of employees in the unit; and
> "2. An employee in a unit of exclusive recognition does not have a protected right under the Order to assistance or representation at a non-formal investigative meeting or interview to which he is summoned by management; but such right may be established through negotiations conducted by the exclusive representative and the agency in accordance with section 11(a) of the Order."

As can be seen from the FLRC policy statement, even if the meeting was designated as formal, contrary to the findings herein, the employee still must request such representation in order to invoke section 10(e) of the Order. In order for a non-formal investigative meeting or interview to require representation for the employee, the negotiated agreement between the exclusive representative and the agency must so provide, in accordance with section 11(a) of the Order. As indicated above, the negotiated agreement does not provide for representation at a non-formal interview without a proposed adverse action.

Furthermore, the right of the representative to attendance at any formal discussion between management and an employee is predicated on the requirement that the discussion concern grievances, personnel policies and practices or other matters affecting general working conditions of the employees in the unit. The meeting of November 10 dealt solely with alleged violations of an employee which potentially could have led to a proposed adverse action and consonant with the Federal Personnel Manual an opportunity was being afforded that employee to resign to avoid potential besmirchment of his record.

Accordingly, I hold that the employee does not have a protected right under the last sentence of section 10(e) of the Order to the assistance or representation by the exclusive representative. I further find that if such right existed, the employee would have had to request it to invoke the provisions of the Order. Inasmuch as the negotiated agreement does not provide for representation at non-formal meetings that do not involve proposed adverse actions, there is no derivative or companion right of an employee to representation under section 10(e) of the Order.

However, it could be argued that section 1(a) of the Order grants the employee the right to representation at non-formal meetings or interviews held by management, particularly if the non-formal investigative interview is called by management. Section 1(a) of the Order, provides:

> "a. Each employee of the executive branch of the Federal Government has the right, freely and without fear of penalty or reprisal, to form, join, and assist a labor organization or to refrain from any such activity, and each employee shall be protected in the exercise of this right ... The head of each agency shall take the action required to assure that employees in the agency are apprised of their rights under this section, and that no interference, restraint, coercion, or discrimination is practiced within his agency to encourage or discourage membership in a labor organization."

The record clearly demonstrates that at the time of the November 10 meeting, management was not cognizant that Mr. Eaton was a member of the union, therefore, any actions taken by management on that date are completely free of any union animus and could not be construed as constituting actions designed to induce fear of penalty or reprisal in the forming, joining or assisting a labor organization.

As the Federal Labor Relations Council found in FLRC No. 75 P-2, the provisions of section 1(a) "...are expressly confined to the employee's right to organize, become a member of, and to support, that organization, or to refrain from any such activity." The Council further finds, "...no intent is reflected to afford union representation at a non-formal investigative interview or meeting where such right of the employee has not been established as a personnel policy or practice of the agency involved." Complainant has not introduced any evidence of record that the agency has established as a personnel policy or practice the right to representation at non-formal investigative interviews.

The predicate for the Federal Labor Relations Council's policy in FLRC No. 75 P-2 is that:

> "[A] Detailed framework of statutes and regulations already protects an employee in the Federal program against arbitrary action by an agency when serious misconduct is alleged. Thus, for example, adverse action sought to be taken by agencies against employees (i.e., removals, suspensions for more than 30 days, furloughs without pay, or reductions in rank or pay) are subject to the rigid requirements of 5 U.S.C. Chapters 75 and 77, and of FPM Supplement 990-1, Parts 752 and 772, the latter specifically including the right of representation upon appeal to the Commission from agency actions. And in matters not covered by statutory appeals procedures, and not otherwise in conflict with statutes or the Order, negotiated grievance procedures, including binding arbitration, are sactioned for employee protection under section 13 of the Order. Consequently, > no substantial purpose of the Order would be served by an interpretation of section 1(a) to include the right of an employee to union representation or assistance at a non-formal investigative interview or meeting to which he is called by management.

Inasmuch as the November 10 discussion was not a formal discussion within the meaning of the last sentence of section 10(e), failure to affirmatively inform Mr. Eaton of his right to union representation at that meeting was not a denial of a right conferred by that provision on the union nor a denial of a concomitant right of the employees that the union be given an opportunity to be present. Therefore, the failure to inform Mr. Eaton of his right to union representation was not a violation of either section 19(a)(1) or section 19(a)(6) of the Executive Order or the negotiated agreement. The finding that there was no duty to inform Mr. Eaton of a right to representation was not in controvention of the Order or the negotiated agreement requires a further finding that this failure could not constitute a unilateral change in the negotiated agreement.

Under the Executive Order, as distinguished from the National Labor Relations Act, an employee does not have a right to be represented at a pre-action investigation, nor does the union have a right to be represented at such a meeting. See Department of Defense, U. S. Navy Norfolk Naval Shipyard, Case No. 22-5283, March 4, 1975; U. S. Air Force, Headquarters Airforce Military Training Center (ATC), Case No. 63-5430(CA), February 4, 1976.

Mr. Eaton's letter of November 10, 1975, was not considered by Mr. Eaton to be a complaint. Consequently, any failure to respond in a timely manner could not be considered an unfair labor practice. The record clearly shows that there were communications between management and the union. However, the union characterizes the responses as uninformative and not the responses requested in their communications. The union's letters of November 12 and December 4, 1975, do not indicate that the union had been designated as Mr. Eaton's personal representative. It could be argued that Mr. Eaton's letter to the union dated November 10, 1975, requesting assistance was a delegation of representation. However, the adverse action was not proposed until January 1966 and the union was informed that the matter was being studied. There are no facts of record that indicate that management's responses to the union's inquiries reflected animus, but rather indicated an abundance of caution to insure that the investigative file contained sufficient evidence to warrant the institution of a proposed adverse action. The record clearly demonstrates that management's actions were directed solely to insure that the alleged wrongdoings were clearly substantiated in the investigative report for the protection of Mr. Eaton.

The final issue for consideration is whether Mr. Eaton's reassignment was harassment or coercion. The fact that Mr. Eaton was assigned to duties which he considered clerical in nature does not, in itself, constitute an unfair labor practice or harassment. The reassignment was a management decision based on the fact that there were very serious questions regarding Mr. Eaton's conduct in his position and without any knowledge that he was a member of a union. The complete lack of evidence probative of union animus precludes the finding of an unfair labor practice or violation of the Order. The record is devoid of any evidence that the reassignment was based on the potential of union assistance or representation in the investigative process or in the proposed adverse action which was instituted on January 6, 1976, well after all the activities complained of occurred.

The reassignment of Mr. Eaton cannot be viewed as coercive or intimidating by agency management for the purpose of dissuading the employee from seeking or accepting union assistance and representation with regard to such matters as the processing of grievances and, therefore, there has been no violation of sections 19(a)(1) or 19(a)(6)of the Order.

Neither the Order nor the negotiated agreement circumscribe management's prerogatives in detailing employees to lower graded positions. The method of detailing Mr. Eaton had not been shown to be in controvension of any Civil Service Regulations, the Order or the negotiated agreement. In fact, Complainant never raised the allegation that the detail was in violation of the agreement.

The record does not support a finding that the activity in any way tried to unilaterally limit the scope of the agreement nor its bargaining obligations with the Complainant. Even if Respondent erroneously interpreted section 13.1 of the negotiated agreement, it would be as a simple breach of contract and not a unilateral change in the agreement.

The dispute as to the meaning of section 13.1 of the negotiated agreement deals with the meaning of elastic words. It is not clear on the face of the agreement that management's interpretation is clearly and obviously a breach of the contract and constitutes a deliberate attempt to unilaterally change that contract. Since the management's interpretation of section 13.1 had never previously been brought in question, according to the record in this case, there appears to be at most an obligation to bargain regarding the impact and implementation of the terms of that section in the negotiated agreement. The dispute so obviously involves semantical interpretation as to require resolution in accordance with established grievance procedures. The record does indicate that one of the members of the union's negotiating team understood the section to afford an opportunity for representation when requested by the employee, consonant with the clear language of section 10(e) of the Order and further understood that each member of the union would receive a copy of the negotiated agreement and would be therefore familiar with entitlement to representation upon their own request.

Filing a grievance under a negotiated grievance procedure is a right protected by section 19(a)(1) of the Order. The Department of Defense, Arkansas National Guard, A/SLMR No. 53; National Relations Labor Board, Region 17, A/SLMR No. 295; California National Guard, A/SLMR No. 348. Since there was no grievance filed at the time of the meeting or other actions taken in regard to Mr. Eaton, it cannot be found that Respondent interfered with, restrained, or coerced Mr. Eaton in the investigative proceedings or by detailing him to another section. The timing of the reassignment was such that it precludes any suspicion that the detailing was motivated by a grievance or by Mr. Eaton's union activities or membership. If the detailing had followed the filing of a grievance or some statement by Mr. Eaton relative to his union membership or his desire to have union representation, there would become corroborative fact of union animus or coercion.

Since Complainant has not sustained its burden of proof of violation of the Order, the complaint should be dismissed.

RECOMMENDATION

The complaint should be dismissed.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR
ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS
SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

U.S. AIR FORCE,
SCOTT AIR FORCE BASE
A/SLMR No. 892

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by Local R7-23, National Association of Government Employees (Complainant) alleging that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1)and (6) of the Order by unilaterally altering the wording of a provision of a negotiated agreement after the parties purportedly had reached agreement on said provision.

The Administrative Law Judge concluded that the Respondent had not violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order. During a negotiation session on May 10, 1976, the parties initialed each other's copy of a section of a draft negotiated agreement believing they had agreed to the same language in the section. However, the Complainant's copy read " 'every' effort has been made" while the Respondent's copy read " 'normal' efforts ___ ___ ___." (emphasis added) The Respondent had a clean copy of the draft agreement typed from its copy, incorporating the phrase "normal efforts" in the draft agreement. The draft agreement was signed at a ceremonial signing on June 10, 1976, by two of the three signatories and after review by a higher headquarters it was returned to the Respondent for re-negotiation of several provisions. The Complainant then discovered the disparity in the draft agreement from its initialed copy and protested the use of the wording "normal efforts." The negotiated agreement which was ultimately signed on September 3, 1976, omitted the section of the agreement which would have included the disputed phrasing. The Complainant signed the final agreement under protest because of the omission of its version of this section of the negotiated agreement, which it alleged was agreed to by all parties on May 10, 1976.

The Administrative Law Judge found that the parties did not reach an accord concerning the contents of the disputed section of the agreement, particularly with respect to the use of the phrase "every effort" as opposed to "normal efforts." Accordingly, he found that the Respondent did not violate Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by unilaterally altering any agreed upon provision or by ultimately omitting that section from the final version of the agreement.

Noting particularly the absence of exceptions, the Assistant Secretary adopted the findings, conclusions and recommendation of the Administrative Law Judge, and ordered that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety.

DECISION AND ORDER

On June 3, 1977, Administrative Law Judge Robert J. Feldman issued his Recommended Decision in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had not engaged in the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint and recommending that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety. No exceptions were filed to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and the entire record in the subject case, and noting particularly that no exceptions were filed, I hereby adopt the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions, and recommendation.

ORDER

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the complaint in Case No. 50-13196(CA) be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

RECOMMENDED DECISION

This is an unfair labor practice proceeding in which a formal hearing of record was held pursuant to Executive Order 11491 as amended (hereinafter referred to as the Order). Respondent was charged with violating Sections 19(a)(1) and 19(a)(6) by unilaterally altering the wording of a provision of a collective bargaining agreement after a final accord was purportedly reached upon such provision. Upon all the evidence adduced, my observation of the witnesses, and my judgment of their credibility, I make the findings of fact and reach the conclusions of law set forth below.

Findings of Fact

1. Complainant is the authorized representative of collective bargaining units composed of certain non-supervisory Air Force General Schedule employees assigned to Scott Air Force Base and all non-supervisory professional and non-professional General Schedule employees of DECCO, Defense Communications Agency (DCA), Scott Air Force Base.

2. From the fall of 1975 through the spring of 1976 the parties were engaged from time-to-time in negotiating a new collective bargaining agreement.

3. Under date of February 3, 1976, the civilian personnel officer on behalf of the Base commander addressed a letter to the president of the union listing certain articles proposed by the union which management considered to be non-negotiable in that they violated specific sections of Order or of identified regulations. Among them was the following, without specification of the section of the Order or the regulation which it purported to violate:

f. Article XVII, Section 6.

> "The geographical area of consideration will be expanded beyond Scott AFB only after every effort has been made to attract qualified applicants locally. A copy of rationale and justification of expanding the geographical area will be furnished the union."

4. On May 10, 1976, the parties met and engaged in what was thought to be their final negotiation of certain disputed provisions of Article XVII entitled "Promotions and Hiring", among which was the above-quoted section. The chief negotiator for the union, one Hayes, was accompanied by the president of the union and two other representatives, one of whom attended only part of the session. The chief negotiator for management, one Artman, was accompanied by a civilian attorney employed in the office of the Base judge advocate and by a representative of DECCO.

5. At this session, the above-quoted Section 6 was renumbered Section 7; following the suggestion of Hayes to the effect that the language ought to be changed to conform with pertinent provisions of the Federal Personnel Manual, so much of the first sentence of renumbered Section 7 following the word "attract" was changed to read: "at least three highly qualified employees, except for positions included in an Air Force-wide career program (GS-13 and above)"; and the second sentence of that Section was deleted and replaced by the following: "This Section does not restrict consideration of voluntary or concurrent applications on file at the time the SF-52 is executed by the supervisor."

6. In addition to the above modifications, as to which there is no dispute, there was discussion as to whether the words "every effort" should be changed to "normal effort". Artman stated that he wanted the word "every" changed to "normal", but Hayes did not express his assent to such change.

7. The revised Sections of Article XVII were then signed-off, with the modifications stated in Finding No. 5 above interlineated by hand in the respective typewritten copies of the original proposal used by the parties as working drafts in the negotiations. Each of such working drafts was signed by the president of the union and was initialed by Artman on behalf of management.

8. The working draft retained by the union and bearing Artman's initials contains no change in the phrase "every effort".

9. The working draft retained by management and bearing the signature of the union president contains the following change: The word "every" is crossed out and above it is the handwritten word "normal".

10. On or about May 11, 1976, a clerk-steno employed in the Civilian Personnel Office at Scott AFB typed out a clean draft of the Sections of Article XVII which had been signed-off by the parties at the May 10 session. Artman's version of the renumbered Section 7, containing the word "normal" in lieu of the word "every" (see Respondent's Exhibit A), was given to her to copy. She was not instructed that an exact, faithful copy was required, so on her own initiative,and with no regard for the sanctity of a signed document, she made a further change in the wording, substituting for the phrase "after every effort has been made" in the original proposal (Complainant's Exhibit 1) the phrase "after normal efforts have been made".

11. On June 9, 1976, Artman delivered to the secretary of the DECCO representative a document purporting to be a completed final draft of the collective bargaining agreement, consisting of a preamble and 34 enumerated articles. The secretary made four or five xeroxed copies of that document, retained one stapled copy in the DECCO Labor/Management files, and turned over the remaining copies to Artman.

12. The completed final draft of the agreement contained the following Section:

> Section 7: The geographical area of consideration will be expanded beyond Scott AFB only after normal efforts have been made to attract at least three highly qualified employees, except for positions included in an Air Force-wide career program (GS-13 and above). This section does not restrict consideration of voluntary or concurrent applications on file at the time the SF-52 is executed by the supervisor. [Respondent's Exhibit E]

13. A ceremonial signing of the completed final draft was held on June 10, 1976. The actual participants were the president of the union and the Base commander; the third signatory, the DECCO commander, was not present.

14. Upon Artman's representation that the agreement could not become effective until approved by Headquarters, Military Airlift Command (MAC), and with the understanding that final proof reading and editing of the agreement was to be deferred until such time as it was ready for reproduction on the 20% reduction sheets after such MAC approval, the union president signed the signature page of the completed final draft. The signature page was also signed by the Base commander at the same time.

15. Some time during the month of August, 1976, the union president proof-read the entire agreement as prepared on the 20% reduction sheets used for reproduction purposes at the Base printing plant; and in the process of such proof-reading discovered the discrepancy between Article XVII, Section 7 as recorded in the completed final draft and such Section as it appeared in the signed-off copy retained by the union (Complainant's Exhibit 1).

16. The union president thereupon requested Artman and the Civilian Personnel Officer to change the word "normal" back to "every", but her request was refused.

17. On September 3, 1976, the Labor/Management Agreement was duly executed in final form by all three signatories with Section 7 of Article XVII omitted.

18. By letter to the Base commander dated September 3, 1976, the union president stated that she was signing such Labor/Management Agreement under protest with the understanding that it is printed with Section 7, Article XVII omitted.

Conclusions of Law

The issues herein were framed by the Acting Regional Administrator and accepted by the parties' representatives as follows: (1) whether or not the parties within the context of a collective bargaining session held on May 10, 1976, reached an accord concerning the contents of Article XVII, Section 7 of their agreement; (2) if a final accord was reached, whether or not the wording of the aforementioned provisions of the agreement was subsequently unilaterally altered by Respondent in violation of Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order.

With reference to the extent of the effort to be made to attract the qualified employees mentioned in Section 7, Complainant's representative acknowledges that it does not make any material difference whether it's "normal" or whether it's "every" (Tr. 1-81). Rather, he contends, the issue is one of principle. No question of principle arises, however, unless and until it is established that there was a meeting of the minds on the wording alleged to have been changed.

It is clear from the evidence that previous to the signing-off of Section 7, there was some discussion as to whether or not the phrase "every effort" should be modified to "normal effort", concern being expressed on the management team that the former might impose an undue burden on the personnel staff and might impede the hiring process. It is also clear that Hayes, as chief negotiator for the union, did not verbalize or otherwise express his assent to such change. It is equally apparent that Artman, as chief negotiator for the agency, did not verbalize or otherwise express his assent to the use of the phrase "every effort" in the union proposal, nor can any such assent be implied in view of the fact that the Respondent had declared the entire section as non-negotiable and the entire section was treated by both parties as open.

It must be remembered that a signed-off portion of a prospective collective bargaining agreement is not a contract per se. It is only documentary evidence that the parties have reached a mutual understanding with respect to that particular section or article, as the case may be, during the course of negotiating the entire agreement. Consequently, instead of proof that the parties were in agreement on the exact language to be employed, we have on the one hand, documentary evidence that they agreed to use the word "every"; and on the other hand, documentary evidence that they agreed to use the word "normal". In the absence of other credible evidence of mutual consent, the reasonable inference to be drawn is that the parties did not in fact reach an agreement on the use of either word.

Complainant in effect accuses Artman of a species of forgery, claiming that he crossed out the word "every" and inserted the word "normal" on his copy of the revised section 7 (Respondent's Exhibit A) after it had been signed-off by the union president. To support this allegation, the union president testified that when she signed-off Artman's copy of the revised section, the word "every" was not crossed out and the word "normal" was not inserted. It is apparent from her entire testimony, however, that her statement to that effect was not based upon actual, visual recollection, but was founded upon an implicit faith in her own infallibility with respect to her invariable practice of not signing-off on management's copy of any section without comparing it with her own copy. It is not a necessary inference from her testimony that the alteration must have taken place after she signed-off. It is not unreasonable to infer instead that among all the other interlineations appearing on Artman's copy, the union president simply did not notice that the word "every" had been changed to "normal". Complainant has not established by a fair preponderance of the credible evidence that any post-signing-off alteration was made.

Upon all the evidence adduced, I conclude that the parties did not reach an accord concerning the contents of Article XVII, Section 7, particularly with respect to use of the phrase "every effort" as opposed to "normal efforts". Consequently I must conclude that Respondent did not violate Section 19(a)(1) or (6) of the Order by unilaterally altering any agreed provision or by omitting that Section from the final version of the contract.

RECOMMENDATION

On the basis of the foregoing Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law, I hereby recommend to the Assistant Secretary that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR
ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS
SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

JACKSONVILLE DISTRICT,
INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE,
JACKSONVILLE, FLORIDA
A/SLMR No. 893

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by the National Treasury Employees Union (NTEU) alleging essentially that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by changing a testing procedure for certain IRS employees without notifying the NTEU and affording it an opportunity to request bargaining on the impact and implementation of the change.

On October 10, 1975, representatives of both parties met to discuss the Taxpayer Service Program for the upcoming tax filing season. The NTEU contended that at the meeting passing reference was made to testing of certain employees but as testing had occurred in previous years it raised no questions at the time. The Respondent, on the other hand, argued that a change in the testing procedure was discussed in the context of its overall quality control program. The record revealed that testing commenced in the Jacksonville District during the week of November 17, 1975. Thereafter, on November 25, 1975, the parties held a telephone discussion concerning the use to which the test results would be put after several unit members had expressed their concern in this connection, and on December 4, 1975, the NTEU submitted a set of proposals regarding matters discussed at the meeting of October 10.

The Administrative Law Judge made no factual findings or conclusions of law with respect to the October 10th meeting. However, he concluded, based upon the telephone conversation of November 25 and the NTEU's proposals of December 4 that the latter had knowledge of the change in the testing program and that the Respondent, therefore, had timely fulfilled its obligation of notifying the NTEU and affording it an opportunity to request bargaining on the impact and implementation of the change.

Contrary to the Administrative Law Judge, the Assistant Secretary found that the Complainant was not furnished sufficient notice of the change in the testing program prior to its implementation in the Jacksonville District. He noted that the November 25th telephone conversation and the December 4th proposals, upon which the Administrative Law Judge based his determination that the Complainant had notice of the change in the testing program, occurred after the testing had already commenced in the Jacksonville District. In deciding whether the Complainant was afforded timely notice of the change, the Assistant Secretary noted, therefore, that it was critical to determine whether the Respondent provided appropriate notice to the Complainant at the October 10th meeting. Assuming arguendo that some reference was, in fact, made to testing at the October 10th meeting the evidence did not establish that a proposed change in the testing program was a specific subject of the meeting or that at the meeting the Respondent so clearly informed the Complainant of a contemplated change in the established testing program as to constitute the type of precise and timely notification envisaged by the Order which would have enabled the Complainant to bargain in a meaningful manner, prior to the change, concerning the impact and implementation of the management decision. Under these circumstances, the Assistant Secretary found that the Respondent failed to meet its bargaining obligation in violation of Section 19(a)(1) and (6), and issued an appropriate remedial order.

DECISION AND ORDER

On March 23, 1977, Administrative Law Judge Peter McC. Giesey issued his Recommended Decision and Order in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had not engaged in the unfair labor practice alleged in the complaint and recommending that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety. Thereafter, the Complainant filed exceptions with respect to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order and the Respondent filed an answering brief to the Complainant's exceptions.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order and the entire record in the subject case, including the exceptions filed by the Complainant and the Respondent's answering brief to the Complainant's exceptions, I hereby adopt the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendations, only to the extent consistent herewith.

The complaint herein alleged essentially that a testing program, different from that which had been utilized in previous years, was conducted by the Respondent for certain Internal Revenue Service (IRS) employees in the Jacksonville District of the IRS without prior notification to the Complainant and without thereby affording the Complainant an opportunity to request and engage in bargaining on the impact and implementation of the testing program, in violation of Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order.

The record reveals that on October 10, 1975, a meeting was held in Washington, D. C. between representatives of the IRS and the Complainant, the National Treasury Employees Union (NTEU). 1/ The meeting was called by the IRS for the purpose of discussing the Taxpayer Service Program for the Fiscal Year 1976. The Complainant asserts that two topics were discussed at the meeting - the detailing of IRS employees into the Taxpayers' Service function and the hiring of "when actually employed" (WAE) employees for the Taxpayer Service Program. The Complainant further contends that only "a passing reference" was made to the testing of Taxpayers' Service Representatives (TSRs) and that it raised no question at the time because testing of TSRs had been conducted in the past and it was not until some time later that the NTEU learned that, in fact, there had been a change in the testing procedure. 2/ The Respondent asserts that in addition to discussing details and the hiring of WAE employees at the meeting, it raised the issue of "quality control" which was to be accomplished, in part, by a series of pre-tests and post-tests of the TSRs. At the conclusion of the meeting, the Complainant indicated that it would be submitting proposals on the matters discussed.

It is undisputed that testing of TSRs began in the Jacksonville District during the week of November 17, 1975. On or about November 25, 1975, the Complainant's National President and the Chief of the Respondent's Labor Relations Staff telephonically discussed the use to which the test results would be put after several NTEU members had expressed their concern in this connection to NTEU officials. On December 4, 1975, the Complainant submitted a set of proposals concerning the detailing of employees into the Taxpayers' Service function and the hiring of WAE personnel.

In his Recommended Decision and Order, the Administrative Law Judge made no factual findings or conclusions of law with respect to the October 10th meeting. He concluded, however, that the Complainant had knowledge of the testing program as evidenced both by the telephone conversation of November 25 between the Complainant's National President and a representative of the Respondent and the Complainant's proposals of December 4, one of which made reference to "monitoring quality." 3/ With regard to the Complainant's proposals of December 4, the Administrative Law Judge found it unlikely that the Complainant "would have been acquainted with the 'monitoring' portion of the program and ignorant of the testing program." 4/ Accordingly, the Administrative Law Judge concluded that the Respondent had timely fulfilled its obligation of notifying the Complainant regarding the change in the testing program thereby affording it an opportunity to request bargaining on impact and implementation. On that basis, he recommended dismissal of the complaint.

1/ At the hearing, the parties stipulated that the IRS officials present at the meeting were acting as agents of the 57 IRS district offices, including the Jacksonville District, and the NTEU officials who attended the meeting were acting as agents of various local NTEU chapters which held exclusive recognitions in the IRS, including the NTEU's Florida Joint Council, which was the exclusively recognized representative of employees in the Jacksonville District.

2/ The record reveals that in previous years TSRs had received training to acquaint them with new developments in the tax filing procedure in preparation for the tax filing season and were tested to determine whether the training had been effective. In the Fall of 1975, the testing program was changed by instituting a "pre-test," designed to measure the level of knowledge prior to the training program, which was in addition to, and different from, the "post-testing" conducted previously.

Contrary to the Administrative Law Judge's conclusion, I find that the Complainant was not furnished sufficient notice of the change in the testing program for the TSRs, prior to its implementation in the Jacksonville District, to enable it to consider what bargaining requests, if any, it would wish to make with respect to implementation and impact of the change on unit employees. The November 25th telephone conversation and the December 4th proposals, upon which the Administrative Law Judge based his determination that the Complainant had notice of the change in the testing program, occurred after the testing had already commenced in the Jacksonville District during the week of November 17, 1975. Under these circumstances, in deciding whether the Complainant was afforded timely notice of the change it is critical to determine whether the 3/ The Administrative Law Judge also took note of but made no findings with respect to a letter purportedly sent to the Complainant on September 26, 1975, in which the Respondent indicated that a representative sample of TSRs in four IRS District Offices (Jacksonville not among them) would be used to preliminarily validate a series of tests. I find that this letter did not constitute notice to the NTEU of changes in the testing program inasmuch as it did not contain information relative to the testing program in the Jacksonville District, and it did not clearly indicate that the testing program would include pre-testing. Further, the parties stipulated at the hearing in this matter that the Respondent gave the Complainant no notice of its intention to test Taxpayers' Service employees in November and December of 1975 other than that which it claims to have given through its representatives at the October 10th meeting.

4/ In view of the disposition herein, I find it unnecessary to determine whether this proposal reflected the Complainant's knowledge of the testing program.

Respondent provided appropriate notice to the Complainant at the October 10th meeting which was prior to the commencement of the testing program. 5/ As noted above, the Complainant contended that the October 10th meeting was called for the purpose of discussing two major topics - the detailing of employees into the Taxpayers' Service function and the hiring of WAE employees - and that only passing reference was made to testing. The Respondent asserted that while the new Taxpayers' Service Program was discussed in general, specific matters were talked about also, including the matter of quality control which was to be achieved, in part, through a series of pre-tests and post-tests.

In my view, even assuming arguendo that some reference was, in fact, made to testing at the October 10th meeting, the evidence does not establish that a proposed change in the testing program was a specific subject of the meeting, or that at the meeting the Respondent so clearly informed the Complainant of a contemplated change in the established practices with respect to testing as to constitute the type of precise and timely notification envisaged by the Order which would have enabled the Complainant to bargain in a meaningful manner, prior to the change, concerning the impact and implementation of the management decision. Accordingly, as, in my view, the Respondent failed to give adequate notice to the Complainant of the change in the testing program prior to its institution in the Jacksonville District of the IRS, and thereby failed to afford it an opportunity to request timely bargaining on the impact and implementation of such a change, I find that the Respondent failed to meet its bargaining obligation in violation of Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 6(b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, and Section 203.26(b) of the Regulations, the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations hereby orders that the Internal Revenue Service, Jacksonville District, Jacksonville, Florida shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Instituting a change in the testing program for Internal Revenue Service employees in the Taxpayers' Service function, represented exclusively by the National Treasury Employees Union, without notifying the National Treasury Employees Union and affording such representative the opportunity to meet and confer, to the extent consonant with law and regulations, on the procedures which management will observe in effectuating such change and on the impact of such change on adversely affected employees.

5/ See Federal Railroad Administration, A/SLMR No. 418, where the Assistant Secretary stated that, "the right to engage in a dialogue with respect to matters for which there is an obligation to meet and confer becomes meaningful only when agency management has afforded the exclusive representative reasonable notification and an ample opportunity to explore fully the matters involved prior to taking action." (emphasis in original decision)

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights assured by Executive Order 11491, as amended.

2. Take the following affirmative actions in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of Executive Order 11491, as amended:

(a) Upon request, meet and confer with the National Treasury Employees Union, to the extent consonant with law and regulations, concerning the impact on adversely affected employees of a change in the testing program in the Taxpayers' Service function which change was implemented during the week of November 17, 1975.

(b) Post at all Internal Revenue Service, Jacksonville District, facilities and installations copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix" on forms to be furnished by the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Director of the Jacksonville District and shall be posted and maintained by him for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. The Director shall take reasonable steps to insure that such notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to Section 203.27 of the Regulations, notify the Assistant Secretary, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this order as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

Before: PETER McC. GIESEY
Administrative Law Judge

This is a proceeding brought under the terms of Executive Order 11491, amended, (hereafter, "the Order") by National Treasury Employees Union (hereafter,"the Union") against Jacksonville District, Internal Revenue Service (hereafter, "Jacksonville IRS"). The Union asserts that Jacksonville IRS violated sections 19(a),(1) and 19(a),(6) of the Order by implementing certain testing requirements for personnel engaged in taxpayer assistance during the 1975 filing season without informing the Union and thereby permitting the Union timely to request and engage in negotiations on implementation and impact of the assertedly new policy or procedure.

A hearing was held in Jacksonville, Florida on November 29, 1976. Briefly, the record shows the following circumstances.

Statement of the Case

The following is undisputed.

The Florida Joint Council of the Union is the exclusive bargaining agent of employees in a appropriate unit of the Jacksonville IRS.

By mutual agreement, representatives of the IRS meet from time to time with representatives of the Union to discuss and negotiate matters which have agency wide application.

Such a meeting was held on October 10, 1975.

The General Counsel of the Union, who attended the October, 1975 meeting, testified that two "major topics" were discussed, the detailing of incumbent employees to taxpayer's service (taxpayer service representatives, "TSRs") and the hiring of extra personnel on "when actually employed" ("WAE") status for the TSR function. According to this witness "a passing reference to testing of TSRs" was made during the meeting by an "operating official" of the IRS. The witness stated that he asked no questions concerning this matter because testing of TSRs was accomplished each year. He asserted that he "only learned much later that the testing that was contemplated in the late fall of '75 was significantly different in content and thrust than was the testing that had been done in prior years," that, whereas testing had been accomplished following training in years before 1975, during that year tests were administered" at the beginning of the programs to find out the level of experience, the level of competence" in order to offer training in areas of weakness. He denied receiving any written notice of the new testing program.

This union official testified that "as soon as we learned, particularly in Jacksonville, that the [IRS] was installing a brand-new testing program [,w]e alerted all of our chapters... and did request negotiations...." He stated that because "the program had begun here [in Jacksonville], there was no way of reaching agreement on any matter because they put it in place without [notice]...."

On cross examination, the General Counsel defined the difference in programs as having "created a tremendous number of questions [,w]hat happens to me if I fail [,i]s that going to reflect on my evaluation [,a]m I going to be fired because I failed the test?" He also stated that "we learned later that the whole idea...was so that people would...be more receptive to the training."

Respondent's witness, the Chief of its Labor Relations Branch, who had attended the October, 1975 meeting, testified that the meeting was held "to make sure that [The Union] was aware of what this new [Taxpayers' Service] program would be." He stated that the program was described in general but that "we talked about specifics, also." Among the latter, according to the witness, was an effort to "build greater quality control...[which] going to take the form of testing employees, pretests and post tests...there was a pre-test to see what they knew and there were post tests to see how successful the training was in providing the individual employee with the tools necessary to provide a quality job." Another part of the "quality control" was to consist of telephone monitoring. He testified that, "somewhat to my surprise," the Union representatives made no comment on the "quality control" program but restricted the discussion to furlough and recall of WAEs and detailing of regular employees to the TSR function.

He also testified that, in September, 1975, a letter had been sent to the Union setting forth the new testing program. 1/ In November, he received a telephone call from the National President informing him that some of the employees were "concerned about how these test results - both pre-test and post test - were going to be used." He testified that he stated he would return the call on that day, that he did; > and read him portions of a telegram that was sent within the next couple of weeks to all regional commissioners across the country which indicated that the results of the pretests and the post tests were not to be given to -- particularly in the case of people that were being detailed into Taxpayers' Service -- were not to be given to their supervisors and were under no circumstances to be used for evaluation purposes, that this was part of an overall quality control program and not to get at individual employees.

Early in December, the Union submitted proposals "in response to the IRS announcement that it intends to supplement the TSR function with WAE employees." Inter alia, the six page proposal contains the following paragraph;

> Any recordation made by a supervisor as a result of 'Monitoring quality' must be shown to the employee and the employee must be provided with an opportunity to respond as required in Article 9, Section 2 of the NTEU-IRS Multi-District Agreement.

1/ The letter, addressed to the Union's National President, states;

> This is to inform you that the IRS will be utilizing a representative sample of 50-55 incumbent TSR's to preliminarily validate a series of tests designed to measure the level of knowledge achieved during the six week training course for new TSR's. These employees will be tested over a four-day period (9/30 - 10/3). We plan to conduct the tests in Chicago, Manhattan, Los Angeles, and Philadelphia Districts. The tests will be administered by members of the National Office Taxpayer Service Division and Training Division, and results will be completely confidential, having no impact on the sample group. The test participants' names will not appear on the examination.

Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law

All witnesses were credible. It is unremarkable that some witnesses memories were more precise than others. It is equally unremarkable that respondent's representative should testify to having participated in communicating with the Union's President and that the Union's General Counsel should testify that he did not receive the communication. It is of no consequence that this Union official also testified that he could "recall receiving no such letter." The letter was not addressed to him and his testimony indicates that it was not routed to him - regardless of the fact that such mail "is routinely routed to me for processing" or that such is "a general practice." The Union official to whom the September, 1975, letter was addressed did not testify. In any case, I credit the agency official's testimony that in November he personally informed the Union's President of the testing program, purpose and the restricted use of test results. Moreover, the Union's knowledge of the details of the "quality control" program is attested to by its proposals of December 4, 1975. I regard it as unlikely in the extreme that Union would have been acquainted with the "monitoring" portion of the program and ignorant of the testing program. That is not to say that the single official of the union who testified to his lack of knowledge was in any way incorrect. It is sufficient that someone, in this case the National President, had such knowledge far enough in advance to allow time for a request and for negotiation pursuant to that request.

Accordingly, I find that respondent timely fulfilled its obligation to inform the Union of the change in terms and conditions of employment of certain of the employees represented by it and thus afforded the Union reasonable opportunity to request to meet and discuss the implementation and impact of such changes.

Recommended Order

It is recommended that the Assistant Secretary dismiss the complaint.

A/SLMR No. 894

This case involved a petition for clarification of unit (CU) filed by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, Public Health Service Hospital, San Francisco, California (Activity) seeking to clarify the status of head nurses, whom it claimed were supervisors and should, therefore, be excluded from the existing exclusively recognized unit. The California Nurses Association, on the other hand, contended that the head nurses were not supervisors and should remain in the unit for which it was granted recognition in 1967.

The Assistant Secretary found that the head nurses are supervisors within the meaning of Section 2(c) of the Order. In this connection, the record revealed that head nurses assign work to subordinate employees utilizing independent judgment; designate team leaders and those patients requiring team care, often acting as team leaders themselves; evaluate employee performance, which evaluations require the use of independent judgment; make effective recommendations regarding the retention of probationary employees; provide input into the hiring process; and are designated as the first step management official under the agency grievance procedure and under a grievance procedure negotiated by the Activity and another labor organization covering certain employees under the supervision of the head nurses. Under these circumstances, the Assistant Secretary found that employees assigned to the position of head nurse are supervisors within the meaning of the Order, and clarified the existing exclusively recognized unit consistent with his findings.

DECISION AND ORDER CLARIFYING UNIT

Upon a petition duly filed under Section 6 of Executive Order 11491, as amended, a hearing was held before Hearing Officer Patricia Baran. The Hearing Officer's rulings made at the hearing are free from prejudicial error and are hereby affirmed.

Upon the entire record in this case, including the briefs filed by the parties, the Assistant Secretary finds:

The Activity/Petitioner, hereinafter called the Activity, filed the instant petition seeking to clarify the status of head nurses, whom it claims are supervisors within the meaning of Section 2(c) of the Order and should, therefore, be excluded from the existing exclusively recognized unit. The California Nurses Association, hereinafter called CNA, contends that the head nurses are not supervisors and should be included in its unit which it described as: "All staff nurses and head nurses, and other registered nurses not designated supervisors under Executive Order 10988 who are officially assigned to hospital positions and who are carried on the official hospital payroll." 1/

The Activity provides medical and surgical care for eligible individuals, and serves also as a teaching institution and research facility. The CNA and the Activity entered into a negotiated agreement in 1969, which terminated in 1972. Although the parties are not now under a negotiated agreement, a dues check-off agreement is presently in effect.

The head nurses involved herein are all employed in the Activity's Nursing Department, which is comprised of seven units: Medical-Surgical; Intensive Care; Primary Care (formerly called General Outpatient); Metabolic; Renal Dialysis; Psychiatric Outpatient; and Operating Room.

1/ The CNA was granted exclusive recognition in 1967.

Staff nurses, nursing assistants and ward clerks staff these units under the general direction of the head nurses. 2/ The responsibility for the administration of the Nursing Department is in the Office of Director of Nursing. Assigned to the Office of Director of Nursing is a Deputy Director; an Associate Director of Nursing, Education; two Clinical Supervisors, Medical-Surgical; two Assistant Directors of Nursing, one each for the evening and night shifts; two Nurse Supervisors, one each for the evening and night shifts; and an Operating Room Supervisor.

The record reveals that head nurses are responsible for their respective units on a 24-hour 7-day week basis, although, typically, the tour of duty for the head nurses is the day shift. In the exercise of their administrative duties, head nurses draw up work schedules which are submitted to the Director or Deputy Director of Nursing for review. The head nurses also designate team leaders and determine which patients need team care. Work assignments on the team are made by the team leader and, in this connection, the record reveals that head nurses often act as team leaders. When a head nurse finds a particular unit short-staffed, the Deputy Director or Clinical Supervisor is notified, who, in turn, calls in an off-duty staff nurse or transfers personnel from one unit to another. Employees taking sick leave call the nursing office which follows the same procedure as noted above to cover staffing deficiencies. Requests for annual leave are submitted to the head nurses who complete master leave schedules which are sent to the nursing office for approval. Conflicts in leave are resolved by the head nurse with the affected employees. Those conflicts that are not resolved at this level are referred to higher level supervision.

The record reveals that head nurses make recommendations for within-grade increases and complete performance evaluations for employees on their staffs. In the case of probationary employees, head nurses recommend their retention or discharge and the evidence indicates that the recommendations of the head nurses in this regard are followed. Performance evaluations for other employees are reviewed by the Clinical Supervisor who may comment on the evaluation but may not change it. In cases of unsatisfactory performance, head nurses counsel the employee involved individually and then may counsel the employee again with the Clinical Supervisor present. The head nurses report infractions of the rules to higher supervision but have themselves excused short periods of tardiness. The record indicates that head nurses are designated as the first step management official in both the agency grievance procedure and the negotiated grievance procedure covering nursing assistants and ward clerks, although there is no evidence that head nurses have been involved in grievance handling under either procedure.

Applicants seeking positions within the Nursing Department are screened by the Deputy Director before being referred to a head nurse who determines whether or not the applicant will be able to work with the other employees within a given unit and, in general, acquaints the applicant with the type of work performed in the unit. The record reveals that head nurses attend periodic meetings with personnel from the Office of Director of Nursing; serve as members of hospital committees; and have received limited supervisory training.

Based on all the foregoing circumstances, I find that head nurses are supervisors within the meaning of Section 2(c) of the Order inasmuch as they assign work to subordinate employees utilizing independent judgment; evaluate the work performance of subordinate employees; make effective recommendations regarding retention of employees; and are designated the first line authority under established grievance procedures. 3/ Accordingly, I find that the employees assigned to the position of head nurse are supervisors within the meaning of Section 2(c) of the Order, and should, therefore, be excluded from the unit.

ORDER

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the unit sought to be clarified herein, for which the California Nurses Association was granted recognition on November 17, 1967, be, and hereby is, clarified by excluding from said unit employees classified as head nurses.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR
ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR LABORMANAGEMENT RELATIONS
SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

ALABAMA NATIONAL GUARD, MONTGOMERY, ALABAMA
A/SLMR No. 895

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by Local 1445, National Federation of Federal Employees (Complainant) alleging that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by embarking on a program of more strict enforcement of grooming standards without providing the Complainant with proper notification and opportunity to discuss the matter.

The Administrative Law Judge found that the Base Commander's memorandum of May 25, 1976, to the four branch chiefs, reflected a distinct change in its policy of enforcing the grooming and uniform standards of Air Force Regulation 35-10 (AFR 35-10), in that it changed a previously existing permissive policy to a policy of vigorous enforcement of such regulation and that the Complainant was not afforded a reasonable opportunity to meet and confer on procedures the Respondent intended to use in implementing the change and on the impact of such change on adversely affected employees, thereby violating Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order.

Contrary to the Administrative Law Judge, the Assistant Secretary concluded that the Respondent's conduct was not violative of the Executive Order. In this regard, he found that the Respondent had, prior to the Base Commander's memorandum of May 25, 1976, on various occasions called to the attention of the technicians their obligations with regard to grooming and dress standards; had emphasized the need for the technicians to conform to the grooming and dress regulations; and that the parties' negotiated agreement, dated March 15, 1976, had addressed itself to the technicians' obligations to conform to such grooming and dress regulations. He further found that the evidence established that the technicians had been counselled and reprimanded for violations of AFR 35-10 prior to the Base Commander's memorandum of May 25, 1976, and that the Complainant was aware of the problems which arose from nonconformance with the grooming standards and discipline in connection therewith.

Under these circumstances, the Assistant Secretary concluded that the Base Commander's memorandum of May 25, 1976, to the four branch chiefs, which reiterated the statements concerning violations of the AFR 35-10 regulation in his previous memoranda, did not constitute a change in the Respondent's policy with respect to enforcement of the grooming standards, but rather was a reaffirmation of the existing standards and was intended to ensure uniformity of enforcement of the existing policy among subordinate supervisors. He found, therefore, that the Respondent's conduct was not inconsistent with its bargaining obligations under the Order.

Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary ordered that the complaint be dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER

On May 23, 1977, Administrative Law Judge Salvatore J. Arrigo issued his Recommended Decision and Order in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had engaged in certain unfair labor practices and recommending that it cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative actions as set forth in the attached Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order. No exceptions were filed to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order and the entire record in the subject case, I hereby adopt the findings, conclusions and recommendations of the Administrative Law Judge, only to the extent consistent herewith.

The complaint in the instant case alleges that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by embarking on a program of more strict enforcement of grooming standards without providing the Complainant with proper notification and opportunity to discuss the matter. In his Recommended Decision and Order, the Administrative Law Judge found that the Base Commander's memorandum, dated May 25, 1976, to the four branch chiefs, reflected a distinct change in the Respondent's policy of enforcing the grooming and uniform standards of the Air Force Regulation 35-10 (AFR 35-10), in that it changed a previously existing permissive policy to a policy of vigorous enforcement of the regulation in order to correct certain problems with regard to the appearance of technicians. Accordingly, he concluded that the Respondent's action constituted a unilateral change in its policy of enforcement of AFR 35-10, and thereby violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by not affording the Complainant a reasonable opportunity to meet and confer on the procedures Respondent intended to use in implementing the change and on the impact of such change on adversely affected employees.

Under the particular circumstances of this case, I do not agree with the findings and conclusions of the Administrative Law Judge. The evidence establishes, and the Complainant concedes, that since January 1973, regulations have been in existence which require technicians, while in uniform and in duty status, to conform to certain dress and appearance standards with regard to such matters as the wearing of hair, sideburns and mustaches, and the use of wigs. The obligation to comply with existing standards was brought to the technicians' attention by the Respondent as a result of the circulation of Technical Information letters on March 15 and November 13, 1974, and May 6, 1976, and also by memoranda distributed to all technicians, dated September 14, 1973, and February 12, 1975, which emphasized the need for personnel to conform to the grooming and dress regulations. 1/ In addition, the record indicates that the parties' negotiated agreement, dated March 15, 1976, addressed itself to the technicians' obligations to conform to the grooming and dress regulations. 2/

The evidence establishes that although AFR 35-10 3/ was not uniformly enforced by all the subordinate supervisors, prior to the Base Commander's memorandum of May 25, 1976, employees had, in fact, been counselled and reprimanded with regard to violations of this regulation. Moreover, the problems which arose from nonconformance by the technicians with

1/ The September 14, 1973, memorandum referred to "military bearing" with special emphasis on personal appearance. The February 12, 1975, memorandum was more emphatic and pointed out that grooming standards, which were a "firmly established legal condition of our employment here!," must be adhered to, and suggested that, if any technician was not fully aware of such grooming standards and military bearing and appearance requirements, he study AFM 35-10. It concluded with the order that without "equivocation" the Respondent expected full compliance by each of the technicians "immediately and into the future so long as the requirement still exists."

2/ The agreement was subject to existing published agency policies and regulations. In addition, Section 3 of Article II (Obligations of Technicians) of the agreement stated, in pertinent part:
> Technicians should maintain a good standard of neatness and appearance. The standard is comprised of neat haircuts, neat shoe shine, proper dress of uniforms and safety.

3/ Although AFR 35-10, was dated February 25, 1975, and was made applicable October 30, 1975, it contained appearance standards which were in effect since January 1973.

grooming standards and discipline in connection therewith were known to the Complainant and, in fact, on March 4, 1974, it requested a meeting with the Adjutant General to discuss haircuts and the alleged harassment of the technicians by threatening them with loss of employment and denial of promotions because of personal appearance.

In my view, the Base Commander's memorandum of May 25, 1976, sent to each of his four division chiefs, in which he states that the base has been "plagued for too long now by a permissiveness which has condoned gross violations" and that he was determined to correct the problem by holding the division chiefs personally responsible for any violations committed by "his assigned air technician personnel," did not constitute a change in the Respondent's prior policy with respect to enforcement of the grooming standards. Rather it was a reaffirmation of the Respondent's existing policy and was intended to ensure uniformity of enforcement of the existing policy among subordinate supervisors. 4/ Under these circumstances, I conclude that the Respondent's conduct herein was not inconsistent with its bargaining obligations under the Order and, therefore, I shall order that the instant complaint be dismissed.

ORDER

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the complaint in Case No. 40-7578(CA) be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

Preliminary Statement

This proceeding arises under the provisions of Executive Order 11491, as amended (hereafter referred to as the Order). Pursuant to the Regulations of the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations (hereafter referred to as the Assistant Secretary), a Notice of Hearing on Complaint issued on December 21, 1976 with reference to alleged violations of Sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order. The complaint, filed by Local 1445, National Federation of Federal Employees (hereafter referred to as Complainant or the Union) alleged that Alabama National Guard (hereafter referred to as Respondent or the Activity) violated the Order by embarking on a program of more strict enforcement of grooming standards without providing the Union with proper notification and opportunity to discuss the matter.

At the hearing held on February 17, 1977 the parties were represented by counsel and afforded full opportunity to adduce evidence, call, examine and cross-examine witnesses and argue orally. Briefs were received from both parties and carefully considered.

Upon the entire record in this matter and from my evaluation of the evidence and observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following:

Findings and Conclusions

Since 1971 the Union has been the exclusive collective bargaining representative of various of the Activity's employees in the State of Alabama including non-supervisory technicians working at Dannelly Air Field, Birmingham, Alabama. At all times since January 1973 Activity regulations were in effect which required technicians, while in uniform and in duty status, to conform with certain dress and appearance standards. 1/ The regulations are addressed to such matters as the wearing of uniforms, the length and condition of hair, sideburns and mustaches and the use of wigs.

The regulations were generally not strictly enforced by some supervisors when the technicians were performing their week-day employment activities. Nevertheless, the existance of these regulations and/or technicians' general obligation to comply therewith was brought to the technicians' attention by the Activity's circulating Technical Information Letters on March 15, 1974, November 13, 1974 and May 6, 1976. In addition, by memoranda distributed to all technicians at Dannelly Field dated September 14, 1973 and February 12, 1975, the Activity emphasized the need for personnel to conform to the grooming and dress regulations.

The Union was, from time to time, kept advised of any changes in these and other regulations or when publications were issued with regard thereto. The last such notification relevant to the complaint was given to the Union on March 11, 1976. The form notification read "Attached for your information and guidance are the following publications that pertain to the Alabama National Guard Technician Program...." Attached was a National Guard Bureau Technicians Personnel Supplement for filing with the appropriate Federal Personnel Manual chapter which referred, inter alia, to AFR 35-10, restated the requirement that technicians comply with grooming and uniform standards and set out various situations during which the wearing of uniforms would be inappropriate.

1/ Air Force Regulation AFR 35-10, dated February 25, 1975 and made applicable to Air National Guard personnel on October 30, 1975 contains the appearance standards which, in substance, were in effect since January 1973.

Sometime after May 17, 1976, Sgt. Schyler Ubanks, a non-supervisory technician, met with Colonel James E. Hardwick, Air Commander at Dannelly Field, and expressed his concern with the lack of technician compliance with AFR 35-10 grooming and dress standards at Dannelly Field. Colonel Hardwick shared Sgt. Ubanks' concern. Indeed, in Colonel Hardwick's view noncompliance with AFR 35-10 began to get "out of hand" in 1973 and persisted to that day. Accordingly, Colonel Hardwick solicited Sgt. Ubanks' assistance to rectify the situation and on May 21, 1976, at Colonel Hardwick's request, Ubanks made a confidential inspection of technicians' compliance with the regulations and reported numerous infractions of the regulations to Colonel Hardwick. 2/ Pursuant thereto, Colonel Hardwick, on May 25, 1976, sent a memorandum to each of his four Division Chiefs. The memo stated, inter alia:

> "1. Alabama Air National Guard units, including those based at Dannelly Field (ANG), have been plagued for too long now by a permissiveness which has condoned gross violations of AFR 35-10 by Air Guardsmen, including many air technicians. The situation can be corrected, as it has been in several ANG units, but only if our officers, non-commissioned officers, and technician supervisors do their duty. Make no mistake about it -- responsibility rests heavily and equally upon each manager and supervisor down to the first level!"

The memo went on to emphasize Colonel Hardwick's determination to "correct the problem" in the Activity's military units starting first with the air technician detachment. Division Chiefs were informed that they were personally responsible to assure compliance with the regulations and that their active involvement in the endeavor was required. In addition, the memo listed the name and various uniform, mustache, hair and wig violations which Ubanks' investigation of May 21 had disclosed.

2/ Ubanks made approximately three similar inspections during a four or five week period after which Colonel Hardwick had him cease such activities.

At no time prior to May 25, 1976 was the Union advised or made aware of Sgt. Ubanks' activities or Colonel Hardwick's inclination as set forth in his May 25 memo to the Activity's Division Chiefs.

Thereafter, the requirements of AFR 35-10 were generally more vigorously enforced by some of the Activity's supervisors. From January 1, 1973 to May 24, 1975, according to documentary evidence submitted at the hearing, a total of thirteen actions (counselling, reprimands, suspensions) were taken against technicians for violations of AFR 35-10 as opposed to twenty-nine such actions taken on May 25 to late January 1977. 3/ These actions involved seven technicians prior to May 25 and seventeen technicians on May 25 or thereafter. However, all the technicians against whom actions were taken prior to May 25 worked in the Support Services Division under the authority of Lt. Colonel Lonnie Slauson. Thus, in the Support Services Division seven technicians received thirteen actions prior to May 25 and eight technicians received nine actions after May 25. However, it is apparent from Lt. Col. Slauson's testimony given at the hearing that prior to May 25, 1976 he was aware of Colonel Hardwick's intent to more vigorously enforce AFR 35-10 and indeed contacted the branch chiefs under his command for the purpose of having the immediate supervisors "talk to" those technicians named. The record reveals that in Lt. Col. Slauson's Division nine employees were named in Colonel Hardwick's May 25 memo of which three were counselled on May 25, two were counselled on May 24, 4/

3/ The evidence included resumes of actions taken in three of the four divisions in Colonel Hardwick's command - Support Services, Aircraft Maintenance and Supply Management. The record is silent as to whether any violations were found or actions taken in the Activity's Air Operations Division.

4/ Although the Activity's summary of actions taken against technicians for violations of AFR 35-10 indicated that the two employees were counselled on May 24, it is clear from Lt. Col. Slauson's testimony that these counsellings occurred as a result of Sgt. Ubanks' investigation for Colonel Hardwick and in furtherance of Colonel Hardwick's policy as stated in his May 25 memo.

and one technician who received numerous counsellings and a letter of reprimand on previous occasions was suspended for five days as of June 29, 1976. In addition, two technicians, not named in Colonel Hardwick's memo, were counselled on May 25 and another was counselled on May 27. Two other technicians were counselled for grooming violations after May 25 - one on October 6, 1976 and the other on November 22, 1976.

With regard to the three technicians in the Supply Management Division against whom actions were taken, all received counsellings within the first two days of June 1976, one technician having been named in Colonel Hardwick's May 25 memo.

As to the Aircraft Maintenance Division, none of the seventeen actions taken against the six technicians involved predated May 26, 1976 on which date action against technicians began to be taken and continued through November 1976.

The Union essentially contends that Colonel Hardwick changed the Activity's permissive policy in enforcement policy of AFR 35-10 to a more rigid enforcement policy without giving the Union proper notification and an opportuntiy to bargain on the matter. The Activity takes the position that there was no change in its policy of enforcing AFR 35-10. Rather, Respondent contends that Colonel Hardwick's memo of May 25, 1976 merely represented an example of the Activity's continuing effort to obtain compliance with its grooming and personal appearance standards. Further, the Activity contends that, in any event, the Union was timely notified of any change in enforcement through the transmittal the Union received on March 11, 1976 of the National Guard Bureau Technician Personnel Supplement, supra.

I find and conclude that Colonel Hardwick's memo dated May 25, 1976 reflects a distinct change in the Activity's policy of enforcing the grooming and uniform standards of AFR 35-10. The decision to change from a permissive policy, which, in Colonel Hardwick's own words, "condoned gross violations of AFR 35-10" to a policy of vigorous enforcement of the regulations in order to "correct the problem" was first effectuated by Colonel Hardwick's enlisting Sgt. Ubanks to make an inspection. Clearly, Colonel Hardwick's decision as reflected in his memo dated May 25 generally resulted in substantially more actions being taken against technicians for violations of AFR 35-10 in the following nine month period than in the prior forty-one month period.

Indeed, Colonel Hardwick acknowledged that technician compliance with AFR 35-10 improved "drastically" after issuance of the May 25 memo.

I further conclude that the May 25 memo cannot be equated with the Activity's prior efforts to obtain compliance with the regulations. None of the few prior, sporadically issued communications on this subject were comparable in tone, urgency, resolve or results. This is evident from the general lack of diligent enforcement following issuance of those documents. Thus, in two of the three Division in which evidence was submitted, no technician was cited for violation of AFR 35-10 during the pre May 25, 1976 period.

In addition, I reject Respondent's contention that its March 11, 1976 transmittal to the Union provided Complainant with adequate notice of change in the Activity's policy in enforcing AFR 35-10. The cover memo was a routine form notice. The document claimed to be significant was a manual insertion which simply restated the general thrust of AFR 35-10 and specifically recited some situations in which it had been determined that the wearing of the uniforms would be inappropriate. I see nothing in the document which raises even a suspicion that somehow the Union should have recognized they were receiving notice that ten weeks hence AFR 35-10 would be strictly enforced when prior thereto, a "permissive" attitude prevailed.

Accordingly, in all the circumstances I conclude that Respondent's unilateral change in its policy of enforcement of AFR 35-10 violated Sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by not affording the Union a reasonable opportunity to meet and confer on the procedures management intended to use in implementing the change and on the impact of such change on adversely affected employees. 5/

In the Supply Management Division and the Aircraft Maintenance Division no technicians were cited for violations of the regulations after January 1973 and prior to May 25, 1976. Therefore, I conclude that all of the actions taken against technicians after May 25 were the result of the Activity's change in policy of enforcing the regulations.

5/ New Mexico Air National Guard, Department of Military Affairs, Office of the Adjutant General, Sante Fe, New Mexico, A/SLMR No. 362.

However, in the Support Services Division a policy of enforcement of the regulations existed before May 25, 1976 as demonstrated by thirteen actions taken against seven technicians during that forty-one month period. Nevertheless, since the actions taken by the Activity for violations on May 24 through June 29 occurred as a direct result of Colonel Hardwick's decision to have AFR 35-10 more vigorously enforced, I conclude that these actions would not have been taken at that time but for the Activity's decision.

Therefore, I shall recommend as a remedy for the violations of the Order found herein that:

1. The actions taken against technicians in the Aircraft Maintenance Division and Supply Management Division on May 25 or thereafter due to violations of AFR 35-10 be withdrawn and expunged from their records. Further, I recommend that John H. Phillips, who was suspended on November 16, 1976 for violation of AFR 35-10 be made whole for any loss suffered as a result of such suspension.

2. The actions taken against technicians in the Support Services Division from May 24, 1976 to June 29, 1976 due to violations of AFR 35-10 be withdrawn and expunged from their records and Robert D. Boyles be made whole for any loss suffered as a result of the five day suspension he received on June 29, 1976.

Recommendation

Having found that Respondent has engaged in certain conduct prohibited by Sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order, I recommend that the Assistant Secretary adopt the Order as hereinafter set forth which is designed to effectuate the policies of the Order.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 6(b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, and Section 203.26(b) of the Regulations, the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations hereby orders that Alabama National Guard shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Unilaterally embarking on a program of more strict enforcement of uniform and appearance standards to be observed by employees represented exclusively by Local 1445,

National Federation of Federal Employees, or any other exclusive representative, without notifying Local 1445, National Federation of Federal Employees, or any other exclusive representative, and affording such representative the opportunity to meet and confer, to the extent consonant with law and regulations, on the procedures which management will observe in effectuating its new policy with respect to the enforcement of uniform and appearance standards and on the impact such policy will have on the employees adversely affected by such action.

(b) Counselling, reprimanding, suspending or taking such other action against employees represented exclusively by Local 1445, National Federation of Federal Employees, or any other exclusive representative in furtherance of its policy announced on May 25, 1976 of more strict enforcement of uniform and appearance standards.

(c) In any like or related manner, interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights assured by Executive Order 11491, as amended.

2. Take the following affimative actions in order to effectuate the purposes and provisions of Executive Order 11491, as amended:

(a) Rescind Colonel Hardwick's memoranda of May 25, 1976 relative to the strict enforcement of uniform and appearance standards as applied to employees represented by Local 1445, National Federation of Federal Employees.

(b) Withdraw any counsellings, reprimands, or suspensions for violations of uniform and appearance standards given on May 25, 1976 or thereafter to any employee represented by Local 1445, National Federation of Federal Employees employed in the Aircraft Maintenance Division and the Supply Management Division and expunge from said employees' records any reference with regard thereto.

(c) Withdraw any counselling, reprimand, or suspension for violations of uniform and appearance standards given from May 24, 1976 to June 29, 1976 to any employee represented by Local 1445, National Federation of Federal Employees in the Support Services Division and expunge from said employees' records any reference with regard thereto.

(d) Make whole John H. Phillips and Robert D. Boyles for any loss of pay or other benefit of employment they may have suffered by reason of the suspension received on November 16, 1976 and June 29, 1976 respectively for violations of uniform and appearance standards.

(e) Notify Local 1445, National Federation of Federal Employees, or any other exclusive representative, of any intended change in policy with respect to the enforcement of uniform and appearance standards and, upon request, meet and confer in good faith, to the extent consonant with law and regulations, on the procedures which management will observe in effectuating its new policy with respect to the enforcement of uniform and appearance standards and on the impact such policy will have on the employees adversely affected by such action.

(f) Post at its facility at Dannelly Air Field, Birmingham, Alabama, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix" on forms to be furnished by the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Air Commander and shall be posted and maintained by him for sixty (60) consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. The Air Commander shall take reasonable steps to insure that such notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(g) Pursuant to Section 203.26 of the Regulations, notify the Assistant Secretary in writing within twenty (20) days from the date of this Order as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS
SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

LOCAL R7-51, NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES (NAGE)
A/SLMR No. 896

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by an individual against the National Association of Government Employees, Local R7-51 (Respondent). Essentially, the Complainant alleged that the Respondent violated Section 19(b)(1) of the Order based on the conduct of the Respondent's President in refusing to process his grievances and by denying him representation of his choice.

The Administrative Law Judge recommended that the complaint be dismissed. In reaching this conclusion, he found, among other things, that there was insufficient evidence to establish that the Respondent failed to process the Complainant's grievances consistently with the terms of the negotiated grievance procedure.

The Assistant Secretary adopted the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendations. He noted that an exclusive representative's responsibility to fairly represent unit employees in the processing of grievances under a negotiated procedure does not provide such employees with an absolute right to have each and every grievance processed on their behalf by the labor organization. Rather, the exclusive representative must be allowed full play to exercise its own discretion and judgment to, among other things, prevent frivolous grievances, protect the integrity of the union, and provide consistency in the treatment of grievances. The Assistant Secretary further noted that the duty of fair representation is breached only when the exclusive representative's conduct is arbitrary, discriminatory, or in bad faith.

As the Complainant failed to establish by a preponderance of the evidence that the Respondent herein was arbitrary, discriminatory or acting in bad faith in its decision not to process his grievances as a union matter, and as the Respondent thereafter provided representation consistent with its contractual obligations and did not prevent the Complainant from processing his grievances in his own behalf, the Assistant Secretary concluded that the Respondent's conduct was not violative of Section 19(b)(1) of the Order. Accordingly, he ordered that the complaint be dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER

On April 7, 1977, Administrative Law Judge Louis Scalzo issued his Recommendation and Order in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had not engaged in the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint, and recommending that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety. Thereafter, the Complainant filed exceptions and a supporting brief with respect to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommendation and Order.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommendation and Order, and the entire record in the subject case, 1/ including the Complainant's exceptions and supporting brief, I hereby adopt the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendations, as indicated herein.

Under the particular circumstances of this case, I agree with the Administrative Law Judge that the Respondent did not refuse to process the Complainant's grievances or deny representation to the Complainant in violation of Section 19(b)(1) of the Order.

The record indicates that on March 17, 1976, when the Respondent's President "rejected" the Complainant's grievances and relieved him of his steward's duties, such action reflected merely a decision by the Respondent not to process the grievances involved herein and was not intended to preclude such representation as the Complainant was otherwise entitled to under the negotiated agreement or to prevent him from processing the grievances on his own behalf if he so desired. 2/ Moreover, subsequent to March 17, the Respondent, while not approving use of a private attorney on the Complainant's behalf, participated in and approved of arrangements to have its national vice president represent the Complainant. Thereafter, when the Complainant decided against having the national vice president represent him and proceeded to represent himself at the second step consideration of his grievances on July 15, 1976, the Respondent interposed no obstacle.

An exclusive representative's responsibility to fairly represent unit employees in the processing of grievances under a negotiated procedure does not provide such employees with an absolute right to have each and every grievance processed on their behalf by the labor organization. 3/ Rather, the discretion and judgment of the exclusive representative must be allowed full play to, among other things, prevent frivolous grievances, protect the integrity of the union, and provide consistency in the treatment of grievances. This duty of fair representation is breached only when the exclusive representative's conduct is arbitrary, discriminatory, or in bad faith. As the Complainant in the instant case has failed to establish by a preponderance of the evidence that the Respondent was arbitrary, discriminatory or acting in bad faith in its decision not to process his grievances as a union matter, and as the Respondent thereafter provided him with such representation as was consistent with its contractual obligations and did not prevent him from processing his grievances on his own behalf, I find that the Respondent's conduct herein was not violative of Section 19(b)(1) of the Order and I shall dismiss the complaint herein.

ORDER

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the complaint in Case No. 50-13162(CO) be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

RECOMMENDATION AND ORDER

Statement of the Case

This proceeding was intiated upon the filing of a complaint on June 24, 1976, alleging a violation of Section 19(b)(1)(2) and (3) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, (hereinafter referred to as the Order), by Charles A. Quilico, (hereinafter referred to as the Complainant) against Local R7-51, National Association of Government Employees (hereinafter referred to as the Respondent or Union), a labor organization representing all non-supervisory wage grade employees of the Navy Public Works Center (NPWC), Great Lakes Naval Base, Great Lakes, Illinois.

On December 9, 1976, the Regional Administrator, Labor Management Services Administration, Chicago Region issued a decision dismissing the portion of the Complaint which alleged violation of Sections 19(b)(2) and (3) of the Order, and on December 27, 1976, the period for filing a request for review with the Assistant Secretary expired with no such request being filed. On January 11, 1977, a Notice of Hearing based on the alleged violation of Section 19(b)(1) of the Order, was issued by the Regional Administrator. Pursuant thereto, a hearing was held in Chicago, Illinois on March 3, 1977. Both parties were present at the hearing and were afforded full opportunity to call and examine witnesses, adduce relevant evidence, and file briefs.

With respect to the alleged violation of Section 19(b)(1), the Complainant, an electrician employed by NPWC, charged that the behavior of James Wilbanks, president of the Respondent Union, toward the Complainant and Complainant's activities as a Union steward had the effect of interfering, restraining, or coercing complainant in the exercise of his rights assured by the Order.

It was alleged that a series of grievances initiated by the Complainant against NPWC were not processed by the Union in accordance with a negotiated agreement entered into by the NPWC and the Respondent Union, and further that the Complainant was denied representation by the Respondent Union as provided by Section 10(e) of the Order. These allegations were denied by the Respondent.

Upon the entire record and my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following findings, conclusions and recommendations to the Assistant Secretary.

Findings of Fact

Grievance Procedure Outlined

The negotiated agreement herein involved provides a four-step grievance procedure. (Complainant's Exhibit 3). The first step contemplates that an aggrieved employee will discuss grievances at the lowest appropriate supervisory level. The employee may be represented or accompanied by his shop steward or in his absence, another steward designated by the Union.

If no satisfactory settlement is reached during step one, the employee must reduce the grievance to writing, and indicate in his written referral whether he desires to be represented by the Union, or whether he wishes to pursue the grievance without Union representation. If the employee elects to have Union representation, the written grievance must be in compliance with a format mutually acceptable to NPWC and the Union. It must be submitted to the employee's department head within ten calendar days after receipt of the immediate supervisor's decision. The department head or his representative must then meet with the employee to discuss the grievance within three working days after receiving written notice. Employees who have elected to be represented by the Union "will be accompanied and represented" at this second step discussion by the employee's shop steward and/or the vice president of the Union. Thereafter a written decision must be rendered by the department head within ten working days of the discussion.

If the employee is dissatisfied with a step two decision, he may, with the concurrence of the Union, refer the grievance in writing to the Commanding Officer of the NPWC within fifteen calendar days of the step two decision. The Union must indicate in the referral whether the Union wishes to submit the grievance to arbitration if dissatisfied with the Commanding Officer's decision. Procedures are provided for the Commanding Officer to meet with the president and vice president of the Union or the steward involved, the aggrieved employee and any management officials involved in the case, and thereafter render a decision. Step four provides for arbitration in appropriate cases.

Under the provisions of the negotiated grievance procedure the Union agrees to avoid supporting frivolous, vague or untimely complaints, to investigate grievances to assure that a reasonably valid basis exists before proceeding, and to support only reasonable remedies for grievances. Employees using the negotiated procedure must be represented by the Union or an individual approved by the Union, except in situations where the employee seeks an adjustment without Union intervention, in accordance with Section 13(a) of the Order. In such cases the Union is afforded the right to be present at meetings relating to the adjustment sought. However, in such cases the employee is not entitled to arbitration. The decision rendered at step three of the grievance procedure is final and not subject to further appeal if the employee proceeds under Section 13(a).

Complainant acknowledged that the Union had the obligation of refusing to support frivolous grievances, and further that the Union must first approve any representative appearing on behalf of any employee utilizing the Union to assert a grievance under the negotiated grievance procedure. The record disclosed that it was a regular practice to involve the president or the chief steward at the second step of the grievance procedure, a more formal proceeding requiring the grievance to be made in writing to a department head. In this regard the evidence revealed that it was a regular Union practice for the chief steward of the Union to represent stewards who have made grievances on their own behalf, inasmuch as it was considered inadvisable for an employee to represent himself during the course of the grievance procedure. 1/

1/ Article VII, Section 2 of the negotiated agreement provides that the "appropriate Union Officers shall represent the unit in meeting with officials of the Employer to discuss matters of mutual interest."

Grievances Submitted by Complainant

The Complainant was appointed as a steward of the Union in April of 1974 by Mr. Wilbanks, the Union president. He continued until the fall of 1975, when a temporary replacement was appointed due to the Complainant's inability to work following an injury. He resumed his steward role sometime in February 1976, and was removed for cause by Mr. Wilbanks on March 17, 1976. 2/

The unfair labor practice alleged is tied to three grievances brought to the attention of Complainant's supervisor on March 16, 1976. (Complainant Exhibits 4, 5, and 6). These grievances all related to the Complainant personally, and involved (1) alleged statements made by a supervisor regarding abuse of benefits provided under the Federal Employees' Compensation Act (Complainant Exhibit 4); (2) alleged failure to pay the Complainant for time spent in visiting a doctor to obtain a letter allegedly required by Complainant's supervisor (Complainant Exhibit 5); and (3) alleged unfairness in allocating overtime (Complainant Exhibit 6).

The first step of the grievance procedure, initiated on March 16, 1976 by the Complainant with respect to the three grievances mentioned, involved a discussion with Complainant's supervisor. The Complainant was accompanied to the meeting by Mr. William Staben. Mr. Staben had been selected by the Complainant as his representative. The meeting was preceded by an effort on behalf of the Complainant to have the chief steward represent the Complainant at the March 16, 1976 meeting with Mr. Nader. The chief steward advised that he thought the grievances were frivolous. 3/ Nevertheless, the chief steward appeared at the meeting, but did not participate. 4/

2/ It was the practice for stewards to be appointed by the chief steward with the approval of the president, and for the president to terminate stewards for conduct deemed improper.

3/ Testimony regarding this aspect of the case entered the record as hearsay. Although questioned at the hearing, it is found to be admissible under the authority of Section 203.14 of the Regulations. 29 C.F.R. 203.14.

4/The role played by the chief steward at the meeting is not clear. There is indication that both the chief steward and Mr. Staben were there to represent the Complainant, and that the Complainant preferred Mr. Staben.

A management official phoned Mr. Wilbanks to apprise the Union of Mr. Staben's representation since Union approval was required as the Complainant had not elected to proceed with his grievances without the intervention of the Union. At this juncture Mr. Wilbanks took the position that the Complainant had acted unilaterally without Union approval in utilizing Mr. Staben's services. 5/

The record disclosed that Mr. Staben was asked by management to play a passive listening role at the March 16, 1976 meeting. However, he did answer questions posed by the Complainant's supervisor.

The evidence fails to establish that the Complainant ever obtained Union approval for Mr. Staben's representation of the Complainant in connection with the grievances made the subject of the March 16, 1976 meeting. Instead it appeared that Mr. Staben had, in February of 1976, appeared as an unauthorized union representative in connection with another unrelated grievance and in other matters involving Complainant and NPWC management officials; that the Union then became aware of such representation, and that the Union approved Mr. Staben's limited involvement in February 1976 with the caveat that future representation of the Union by non-Union officials would have to be approved.

In this regard it is noted that Mr. Staben erroneously stated that the earlier February 1976 meeting actually involved the three grievances discussed at the March 16, 1976 step one grievance meeting; however, this notion was repudiated by the Complainant. In fact, these three grievances

5/ Although Complainant's Exhibit 4 tends to indicate contingently that the Complainant wished to proceed unilaterally without the intervention of the Union, evidence introduced by the Complainant clearly reflects an intent to proceed as a Union steward aided by Mr. Staben as an authorized Union representative.

were not even disclosed prior to the March 16, 1976 meeting; and furthermore, the earlier discussion in February could not have involved grievances which on their face occurred after the February 1976 representation of the Complainant. 6/ There is no evidentiary basis for a finding that Mr. Staben was authorized to act for the Union in connection with grievances made the subject of discussion on March 16, 1976.

It was also brought out that much hostility and misunderstanding between the parties emanated from the earlier February 1976 incident.

Complainant's Steward Duties Terminated

Mr. Staben's unauthorized representation of the Union in connection with the Complainant's grievances on March 16, 1976, was followed by the Union's clear refusal to recognize Mr. Staben as a union representative on behalf of the Complainant. In addition, Mr. Wilbanks, acting as president of the Union, decided to terminate the Complainant's position as steward. Mr. Wilbanks made arrangements for a March 17, 1976 meeting comprised of Complainant, Mr. Wilbanks and management officials involved in the processing of Complainant's grievances. Included were Mr. George Young, Director of NPWC, Mr. Bud Young, an assistant of Mr. Young's, and Mr. Nader, the Complainant's immediate supervisor.

At the meeting Mr. Wilbanks, acting for what he deemed the good of the Union, made it clear that the Complainant no longer had authority to act as a union spokesman, and further that the Complainant did not have authority to approve grievances which would receive the support of the Union. During the course of the emotionally charged meeting, Mr. Wilbanks first learned that the Complainant had, earlier that day, (March 17, 1776) submitted to Mr. Young, the three grievances discussed with Mr. Nader the day previously. The Complainant deemed the submission as the second step of the grievance procedure. When shown these grievances, Mr. Wilbanks, on behalf of the 6/ Although the grievance identified as Complainant's Exhibit 4, is dated February 6, 1976, the record indicates that this grievance was not brought up until March 16, 1976.

Union, rejected them because he deemed them frivolous, and because the Complainant had failed to follow grievance procedure with respect to approval of a Union representative to handle the processing of the grievances. He wanted it understood that the Union did not support them, though they had ostensibly been carried through the first step of the grievance procedure with apparent Union support, and filed with Mr. Young with a request for second step processing. It was clear from the record that Mr. Wilbanks wanted to make it clear to all concerned that the Complainant no longer had any official connection with the Union as a steward.

The March 17, 1976 meeting was not arranged to process the Complainant's three grievances, although it appeared from the record that the Complainant mistakenly construed the event as being second step consideration of the grievances rejected by management the previous day, and unilaterally submitted to Mr. Young early on March 17, 1976 by the Complainant in his official capacity as a Union steward.

Although the primary reason for the Complainant's removal was his arranging for an unauthorized person to represent the Union in connection with the processing of grievances on February 1976, and on March 16, 1976, additional factors underlying the termination involved alleged unauthorized use of the Union telephone to make long distance calls, failure to represent employees, the making of derogatory remarks and unsubstantiated charges against union officers and other union members, failure to pursue each step of the grievance procedure before advancing grievances to the next higher step, filing an excessive number of grievances on his own behalf to the detriment of employees he was assigned to represent, aborting grievance hearings by insisting on the use of a tape recorder during discussions of grievances with management officials, and lastly for conduct unbecoming a Union steward. There is no evidence in the record that these underlying charges were discussed at the meeting on March 17, 1976.

Although the Union was not inclined to support the grievances initiated on March 16, 1976, there is no evidence whatsoever that the Union endeavored to deny the Complainant the right to proceed with grievances on his own behalf. In this regard management officials made numerous unsuccessful efforts to process the grievances.

On March 24, 1976, just eight days after initial discussion of the grievances, the Complainant was involved in a discussion concerning the proper format required in connection with his grievances. Although the Complainant alleged that management was harassing the Complainant regarding the need for following a required format, Complainant introduced no evidence to show that the Respondent was involved in this regard, nor was any proof adduced to establish that format requirements were in fact unreasonable.

Representation of Complainant by National Vice President

As late as the end of March the Complainant was endeavoring to obtain Union support for his grievances. In this regard he stated that he wanted to work within the framework of the Union. To this end the Complainant insisted unsuccessfully on having a private attorney appointed by the Union to represent the Complainant and the Union in processing the Complainant's grievances. He also contacted the national office of the National Association of Government Employees and complained of the Union's failure to take a strong stand on his grievances. Mr. Paul Hayes, a national vice-president visited the Respondent's office on April 7, 1976, and arrangements were made for Mr. Hayes to represent the Complainant. At the meeting efforts were made to explain the Respondent's position regarding the grievances. Although the Union had the opportunity to disapprove representation by Mr. Hayes, Mr. Wilbanks acquiesced and approval was granted as of April 7, 1976. 7/

Just prior to the meeting Mr. Wilbanks exhibited verbal hostility toward the Complainant. This emanated from the strained relationship between Mr. Wilbanks and Complainant over the Complainant's attitude toward the Union. However, it clearly appeared that the Union was endeavoring to meet the Complainant's demand for representation insofar as it was possible to do so under the circumstances. No efforts were made at any point to coerce the Complainant into a withdrawal of his grievances. In fact, Mr. Hayes and Mr. Wilbanks visited Mr. Young on April 7, 1976 to advise Mr. Young that the Complainant would thereafter be represented by Mr. Hayes. The grievances were not otherwise discussed with Mr. Young.

7/ The record reflects that Complainant was not working on April 7, 1976, and that he was not working at subsequent times thereafter when efforts were made to process his grievances.

Mr. Hayes was subsequently dishcarged by the Complainant because of what the Complainant construed as a conflict of interest. There is no evidence of such conflict in the record, and Mr. Hayes was never informed that he had been relieved of his duty to represent the Complainant.

Complainant's Insistence on Use of Tape Recorder

At a July 15, 1976 meeting called to provide the Complainant with second step consideration of the Complainant's three grievances, his use of a tape recorder was observed by management. The Complainant insisted upon the right to use the tape recorder, and the meeting was canceled at the outset by Mr. Young on behalf of NPWC. The negotiated agreement did not provide for the recordation of grievance proceedings, and it was not the practice to use tape recorders at such meetings. There is no evidence that the Respondent interposed objections to recordation. The July 15, 1976 meeting was attended by Mr. Young, Mr. John Alhouse, vice president of the Union, a NPWC labor consultant and the Complainant. 8/ At this meeting the Complainant made it clear that he would thereafter represent himself.

It must be noted that the Complainant cannot be considered as being entirely credible. The record discloses that he has an explosive temper, and that he frequently misunderstands and impugns innocent motives. He exhibited

8/ The record disclosed that the Complainant had made a similar effort to tape a grievance meeting in February of 1976. Mr. Young was also present at that meeting and insisted that the Complainant not use the tape recorder. On this occasion the Complainant agreed to the request.

a tendency to exaggerate and misrepresent the facts. Medical evidence introduced into the record reflects that he suffers from recurrent severe headaches, dizziness, blurred vision, grand mal seizures, syncope and a general nervous condition. At the hearing his representative characterized him as being an "excitable person," and indicated that he was then under slight sedation. The Complainant has been endeavoring to obtain benefits under the Federal Employees Compensation Act based upon an alleged job-related aggravation of his nervous condition. Specific reference was made to the processing of this unfair labor practive complaint as being a partial cause of disability.

Discussion and Conclusions

Charges to the effect that the Complainant has been denied rights due him under the Order have not been established. Section 203.15 of the Regulations, 29 C.F.R. §203.15 provides that a complainant in asserting a violation of the Order has the burden of proving the allegations of the complaint by a preponderance of the evidence. This burden has not been met.

A labor organization is entitled to protect itself from those acts of its members which threaten its continued existence. 9/ Here, there is strong evidence that Mr. Wilbanks was acting to protect the Union. Moreover, the strong statements of Mr. Wilbanks, if made as alleged, would not, in the context of the evidence developed in this case lead to a conclusion that Mr. Wilbanks engaged in an unfair labor practice. They merely constituted a pattern of strong insistence upon compliance with the provisions of the negotiated agreement.

The decision to terminate the Complainant's role as a steward in the manner described herein was understandably difficult for the Complainant; however, there is no evidence that it was improper or otherwise designed to interfere with, restrain, or coerce the Complainant in the exercise of his rights assured by the Order. Though Mr. Wilbanks apparently utilized "words of the street" on occasion in his dealings with Complainant, the record disclosed a strong personality conflict between these two individuals, and a definite difference of opinion as to how best to utilize the resources of the Union's bargaining power. It would not be possible to find the basis of an unfair labor practice upon the part of the Respondent in such a factual setting.

It is noted that Mr. Wilbanks, acting as president of the Union had an obligation to refrain from supporting frivolous complaints. There has been no showing here that his act of noting the absence of official Union support for the Complainant's three grievances, and his termination of unauthorized and undesirable representation of the Union was anything other than legitimate.

There is no indication of bad faith or ulterior motive. Certainly the provisions of §10(e) relative to the duty of a labor organization to represent the interests of all employees in a unit may not be construed so as to require a labor organization to blindly represent the causes of its stewards and members. Here, sincere efforts were made to work with the Complainant concerning the processing of his grievances when Complainant insisted upon Union representation. Thereafter, on July 15, 1976, when the Complainant elected to proceed independently of the Union, the Complainant alone was responsible for the cessation of negotiations, by insisting, over management objections, upon a recorded step two grievance proceeding. Neither the Executive Order nor the negotiated agreement provide a basis for such a right and the Respondent would not, in light of evidence adduced here, have been responsible for such denial even if they did.

Recommendation

Based upon the foregoing findings and conclusions, I recommend that the complaint herein be dismissed.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR
ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS
SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE
A/SLMR No. 897

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by the National Treasury Employees Union (NTEU) alleging that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by denying employees' requests for union representation at interviews conducted by Internal Revenue Service (IRS) inspectors. A hearing was scheduled on this matter but was subsequently postponed pending issuance of the Federal Labor Relations Council's (FLRC) Major Policy Statement concerning the representational rights of employees under the Order. Upon issuance of the FLRC's Major Policy Statement, the Respondent filed a motion to dismiss on the basis that the FLRC's Statement was dispositive of the allegations raised in the complaint. The Complainant subsequently withdrew all the allegations of the complaint with one exception involving an employee who was interviewed at one of the IRS District Offices.

The Administrative Law Judge initially determined that, as there was no factual dispute involved herein which required an evidentiary hearing, a determination of the alleged unfair labor practice could be made on the basis of the Major Policy Statement, the Respondent's motion to dismiss, the Complainant's response to the motion and the Respondent's reply. The Administrative Law Judge found that the interview to which the employee involved was called was a nonformal investigative interview and, as such, the employee did not have the right under Section 10(e) of the Order to representation by his exclusive representative. Accordingly, the Administrative Law Judge found that the Respondent had not violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order and recommended that the complaint be dismissed.

Noting particularly the absence of exceptions, the Assistant Secretary adopted the findings and recommendation of the Administrative Law Judge and ordered that the complaint be dismissed.

REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION THAT MOTION TO DISMISS BE GRANTED

This case arises under Executive Order 11491, as amended (hereinafter also referred to as the "Order") and was initiated by a Complaint dated October 28, 1975, and filed November 3, 1975, which alleged violations of Sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by virtue of Respondent's denial of employee requests for the presence of union representation at investigative interviews. The Complaint alleged separate, but similar, violations at the Chicago District Office, at the Brookhaven Service Center, Holtsville, New York, and at the Chamblee Service Center, Chamblee, Georgia. On October 21, 1976, the Acting Regional Administrator issued a Notice of Hearing for a hearing on December 8, 1976, in Washington, D.C.; however, on November 3, 1976, the hearing was postponed at the request of both parties and on November 12, 1976, Chief Administrative Law Judge H. Stephan Gordon entered an Order, at the request of both parties, indefinitely postponing hearing in this matter pending decision of the Federal Labor Relations Council (hereinafter also referred to as the "Council") on Major Policy Issue.

The Council issued its Statement on Major Policy Issue, FLRC No. 75 P-2, on December 2, 1976 (Report No. 116, Dec. 2, 1976) and on February 4, 1977, a further Notice of Hearing issued for a hearing on April 19, 1977, at 10:00 A.M., Room 700, Vanguard Building, Washington, D.C. and the undersigned was duly designated to hear and determine this matter. By covering letter dated February 10, 1977, Respondent, pursuant to Section 203.19 of the Regulations, filed with the Assistant Regional Administrator a Motion to Dismiss. On February 22, 1977, the Acting Regional Administrator entered an order approving Complainant's request for extension of time to file response to motion to dismiss and extended the time for filing such response to February 28, 1977. Complainant timely filed its response, entitled "Union's Response to Agency's Motion to Dismiss", and on March 7, 1977, Respondent submitted to the Assistant Regional Administrator its reply, entitled "Activity's Reply to Union's Response to Motion to Dismiss."

In the meantime, Complainant's National President, Mr. Vincent L. Connery, by letter dated March 4, 1977, addressed to the Assistant Secretary for Labor-Management Relations, requested the withdrawal of the Complaint as to the allegations against the Brookhaven and Chamblee Service Centers, but not the remaining allegation against Respondent's Chicago District Office. By letter dated March 28, 1977, addressed to Chief Judge Gordon, the Acting Regional Administrator: a) approved the withdrawal of the allegations with regard to the Brookhaven and Chamblee Service Centers and stated that the only matter remaining for hearing, as scheduled for April 19, 1977, involves the Chicago District Office; and b) referred, without decision, Respondent's Motion to Dismiss, Complainant's Response, and Respondent's Reply to Union's Response, received after issuance of the February 4, 1977, Notice of Hearing, for disposition by this Office.

Allegation of the Complaint

Attachment 1 to the Complaint, as material to the remaining allegation, concerning Respondent's Chicago District Office, reads, in part, as follows:

> "The substance of this Complaint concerns several situations [now one] where Internal Revenue Service employees were interrogated by IRS Inspectors. Inspectors are employed by the IRS to investigate the actions of other IRS employees. The employees [now one] interrogated by the Inspectors reasonably believed that they would be the subject of disciplinary action, requested the presence of a representative at the interrogation and the request was denied.
>
> "CHARGE I: On March 14, 1975, Mr. Donald L. Disier, an IRS employee in the Chicago District, was directed to report to Inspection. Mr. Disier was interrogated by Inspectors Schwebber and Sommers on March 18, 19, and 20, 1975.
>
> "Upon arriving at the place of interrogation, Mr. Disier requested a representative. His request was denied. He was told he would have a right to a representative only if a Miranda warning was given 1/ . . . Since no such warning was given, Mr. Disier had no representative.

1/ Mr. Disier's statement, Exhibit 2, stated, in part,

> "I was told by Inspector Schwebber that I was not entitled to any representation as we were not discussing any criminal material and that the only way I would be entitled to an attorney would be that if at any time I was advised by Inspectors of my rights under the Miranda warning."

* * * *

"Mr. Disier was so upset at the interrogation and the manner of the interrogation, that he resigned ... upon subsequent reconsideration, Mr. Disier withdrew his resignation and presently remains an IRS employee.

"When Mr. Disier was summoned to Inspection, he reasonably belived he may be the subject of disciplinary action, he requested a representative, and the request was denied. Such an action violated Executive Order 11491, as amended."

MOTION TO DISMISS

The sole basis alleged in the Complaint for an unfair labor practice is that "Mr. Disier was summoned to Inspection, he reasonably believed he may be the subject of disciplinary action, he requested a representative, and the request was denied. Such action violated Executive Order 11491, as amended." This is fully confirmed by Complainant's Response to Respondent's Motions to Dismiss. 2/ The issue,about which there is

2/ In its Response, Complainant stated, in part, as follows:

"The charge was based on the fact that during March, 1975 individual employees in those activities had been similarly interrogated by IRS Inspectors and, reasonably believing they would be the subject of disciplinary action, had requested and been denied the presence of a representative at their interrogation." (Response, p. 1)

Complainant then argues: a) 75 P-2 is distinguishable because the Council did not consider together Section 1(a) and the first two sentences in Section 10(e); and b) the Council did not consider the type of investigative interviews involving Mr. Disier, which Complaint asserts was outrageous. Nevertheless, Complainant affirms that the sole basis for the alleged violation of Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order was the denial of Mr. Disier's request for representation at the investigative interview concerning Mr. Disier's deviate conduct.

no factual dispute requiring resolution in an evidentiary hearing, is whether Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by its denial of Mr. Disier's request for representation at an investigative interview. Respondent's Motion to Dismiss is based, foursquare, on the Council's Statement on Major Policy Issue, FLRC No. 75 P-2. Complainant has had full opportunity to respond to Respondent's Motion to Dismiss and has done so. Accordingly, as the sole question for determination is a question of law, as to which parties have fully stated their respective views and arguments, and as there is no disputed question of fact requiring an evidentiary hearing, it is appropriate to determine the dispute on the basis of the Complaint, Respondent's Motion, Complainant's Response and Respondent's Reply. For reasons set forth hereinafter, the Council's Statement on Major Policy Issue, FLRC No. 75 P-2, is dispositive and the denial of Mr. Disier's request for representation at his investigative interview did not constitute a violation of Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order.

Complainant states, in its Response to Respondent's Motion to Dismiss, that the Council decided that an employee does not have a protected right under Executive Order 11491, as amended, to assistance by the exclusive representative when he is summoned to an interview with agency management; but asserts that the Council rested its decision on an interpretation of the last sentence of Section 10(e) and that the Council "did not consider the fact that, read together, Section 1(a) and the first two sentences in Section 10(e) establish a right of an employee to union representation in investigative interviews wholly separable from an employee's rights derived from those situations enumerated in the last sentence of Section 10(e)." Complainant's argument proceeded:

"The first sentence of Section 10(e) provides that a labor organization ... is entitled to act for and negotiate agreements for employees in the unit. These rights to represent employees are in addition to the right also provided in Section 10(e) to represent employees in formal discussions.

"Moreover, the second sentence of Section 10(e) states that a union ... must represent the interest of all employees 'without discrimination and without regard to labor organization membership.'

"In Fort Wainwright, supra, the Assistant Secretary stated that this duty not only requires representation of employees in formal discussions, but also vests a corresponding right in an employee to request union representation in those discussions.

"Therefore, since an employee has a vested right to request union representation at formal meetings as a result of the union's duty to represent all employees, an employee also has a right to request a union to 'act for' this employee as stated in the first sentence of Section 10(e).

* * * *

"... Based on the rights vested in an employee by both Section 1(a) and Section 10(e), an employee can request that a union 'act for' or represent him in a situation where discipline may be imposed. A denial of that right would, therefore, clearly be a violation of Section 19(a)(1) of the Executive Order.

"This interpretation ... is not precluded by the Council's Statement on Major Policy Issue since the Council explicitly considered the rights vested by Section 10(e) of the Order as divisible from those rights vested by Section 1(a) of the Order ... therefore the instant case is not within the scope of the Council's decision."

Complainant's syllogistic argument must be rejected. While only the Council could say what it did, or did not, consider in reaching its Statement on Major Policy Issue, FLRC No. 75 P-2, the Council's Statement makes it abundantly clear that it considered together the provisions of Section 1(a) and 10(e) of the Order, as well as other portions of the Order, including the Preamble and Section 7(d)(1). Indeed, the issue before the Council was:

"Does an employee in a unit of exclusive recognition have a protected right under the Order to assistance (possibly including personal representation) by the exclusive representative when he is summoned to a meeting or interview with agency management, and, if so, under what circumstances may such a right be exercised?" (Emphasis by the Council.)

The first two sentences of Section 10(e) do, indeed, treat the rights and obligations of the exclusive representative, but, as the Council stated,

"Unlike the express provisions relating to formal discussions, section 10(e) provides no right of a union to representation at nonformal meetings or interviews held by management with an employee (absent agreement of the parties [footnote 4. omitted) and therefore no derivative or companion right of an employee to such assistance or representation may be predicated on that section of the Order. However, the question remains whether section 1(a) of the Order may be deemed to grant an employee any such right to representation at nonformal meetings or interviews held by management with an employee particularly at nonformal investigative interviews called by management with the employee.

"... In our opinion, these provisions [Section 1(a)] fail to establish any right of an employee to union assistance or representation at a nonformal investigative intereview or meeting conducted by management on matters of individual concern to that particular employee.

"Clearly, nothing in the literal wording of section 1(a) refers either to union attendance at a meeting or interview between employees and management or to any employee right to request such union attendance when summoned to a meeting or interview by management. Rather, the subject provisions are expressly confined to the employee's right to organize, become a member of, and support, that organization, or to refrain from any such activity.

"Moreover, the stated purposes of the Order would not be effectuated by an interpretation of section 1(a) to afford such right of an employee to union assistance or reprsentation at a nonformal investigative interview or meeting regarding his own possible misconduct and without immediate significance to the employment interests of other personnel in the bargaining unit.

"Furthermore, ... a detailed framework of statutes and regulations already protect an employee in the Federal program against arbitrary action by an agency when serious misconduct is alleged ... Consequently, no substantial purpose of the Order would be served by an interpretation of section 1(a) to include the right of an employee to union representation or assistance at a nonformal investigative interview or meeting to which he is called by management.

"Conclusion

"Accordingly, as set forth above, we find that:

"1. An employee in a unit of exclusive recognition has a protected right under the last sentence of section 10(e) of the Order to the assistance or representation by the exclusive representative, upon the request of the employee, when he is summoned to a formal discussion with management concerning grievances, personnel policies and practices, or other matters affecting general working conditions of employees in the unit; and

"2. An employee in a unit of exclusive recognition does not have a protected right under the Order to assistance or representation at a nonformal investigative meeting or interview to which he is summoned by management; but such right may be established through negotiations conducted by the exclusive representative and the agency in accordance with section 11(a) of the Order."

Mr. Disier was summoned by Respondent to a nonformal investigative interview, or meeting, regarding Mr. Disier's own possible misconduct, i. e., his deviate conduct, which was without immediate significance to the employment interests of other personnel in the bargaining unit, did not concern a grievance, personnel policies or practices, or other matters affecting general working conditions of employees in the unit; and, as the Council has determined, Mr. Disier had no protected right under the Order to assistance or representation at such investigative meeting or interview and the denial of his request to representation was not a violation of Section 19(a)(1) or (6) of the Order.

Complainant next argues that the nature of the investigative meeting, or interview, created a right to representation. It may be assumed that Mr. Disier was distraught by the investigation of his deviate conduct; but Complainant's argument begs the question. Either he had a right under the Order to representation at the investigative interview or he did not, and the Council has firmly held that an employee does not have a protected right under the Order to assistance or representation at a nonformal investigative meeting or interview to which he is summoned by management. It necessarily follows that, as Mr. Disier had no protected right under the Order to representation, the manner in which the investigative interview was conducted created no such protected right under the Order to representation or assistance.

As has been stated many times, the Order is very limited; it does not seek to right all wrongs; and conduct may be highly objectionable and still not violate in any manner the provisions of the Order. As the Council stated in FLRC No. 75 P-2, " a detailed framework of statutes and regulations already protects an employee in the Federal program against arbitrary action by an agency when serious misconduct is alleged."

For the foregoing reasons, as the employee, Mr. Disier, had no protected right under the Order to assistance or representation at the nonformal investigative meeting or interview to which he was summoned by Respondent, Respondent's denial of his request for such representation did not violate Section 19(a)(1) or (6) of the Order. Statement on Major Policy Issue, FLRC No. 75 P-2 (Report No. 116, December 2, 1976);

Department of the Navy, Naval Air Rework Facility, Alameda, California, A/SLMR No. 781 (1977); United States Army Training Center Engineer and Fort Leonard Wood, A/SLMR No. 787 (1977); Social Security Administration, Great Lakes Program Center, Chicago, Illinois, A/SLMR No. 804 (1977).

Accordingly, it will be recommended that Respondent's Motion to Dismiss be granted. In view of the recommended disposition of this matter, the hearing, now set for April 19, 1977, has, by separate Order issued this day, been cancelled.

RECOMMENDATION

Having found that Respondent's denial of the request of an employee, Mr. Disier, for representation or assistance at a nonformal investigative meeting or interview to which the employee, Mr. Disier, was summoned by Respondent did not violate Section 19(a)(1) or (6) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, for the reason, as determined by the Council in Statement on Major Policy Issue, FLRC No. 75 P-2, that an employee in a unit of exclusive recognition does not have a protected right under the Order to assistance or representation at a nonformal investigative meeting or interview, it is recommended that the Complaint herein be dismissed in its entirety.

OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION,
AUSTIN, TEXAS
A/SLMR No. 898

This case involved a unit clarification petition filed by the Austin, Texas, Southwestern Regional Office of the Economic Development Administration, U.S. Department of Commerce. The Activity/Petitioner sought clarification of the status of seven of its employees classified as Economic Development Representatives. In this regard, it contended that these employees have recently been assigned additional duties as supervisors which warrant their exclusion from the unit. The American Federation of Government Employees, Local 3225, AFL-CIO, (AFGE) contended that the disputed employees are not supervisors and should continue to remain in the unit.

The Assistant Secretary noted that each Economic Development Representative (EDR) heads a two person area office, and that the EDRs' duties include the analysis, assignment, direction and review of work performed by their subordinate employee, an Economic Development Assistant. He also noted that the EDRs approve the leave and vacations of their assistants, make effective performance evaluations, act as first level supervisors in resolving grievances subject to their authority and make effective recommendations as to the hiring of their assistants.

Under these circumstances, the Assistant Secretary found that employees classified as Economic Development Representative, GS-301/12-13, are supervisors within the meaning of Section 2(c) of the Order, and should be excluded from the exclusively recognized unit.

DECISION AND ORDER CLARIFYING UNIT

Upon a petition duly filed under Section 6 of Executive Order 11491, as amended, a hearing was held before Hearing Officer William J. Autry. The Hearing Officer's rulings made at the hearing are free from prejudicial error and are hereby affirmed. 1/

Upon the entire record in this case, including briefs submitted by the parties, the Assistant Secretary finds:

The Activity/Petitioner, hereinafter called the Activity, seeks to clarify the status of seven of its employees classified as Economic Development Representatives (EDRs). In this regard, the Activity contends that these employees have recently been assigned additional duties as supervisors which warrant their exclusion from the exclusively recognized unit. The American Federation of Government Employees, Local 3225, AFL-CIO, hereinafter called AFGE, contends that the disputed employees are not supervisors within the meaning of Section 2(c) of the Order and should continue to remain in the unit. 2/

The Economic Development Administration (EDA) was established in 1965 by the Secretary of Commerce to carry out certain provisions of the Public Works and Economic Development Act of 1965. The primary function of the EDA is the long-range economic development of areas with severe unemployment and low family income problems. The EDA has six Regional Offices, one of which is the Activity herein.

The Activity is responsible for overseeing the performance of the EDA mission in the states of Arkansas, Louisiana, New Mexico, and Texas. Within the Activity, each of seven EDRs is responsible for a particular geographic area, with the mission of providing assistance and acting as a liaison between the Activity and grant applicants, local government officials, planning organizations and state agencies. The EDRs are stationed in the following area offices: Lubbock, Texas; Austin, Texas; Laredo, Texas; Baton Rouge, Louisiana; Santa Fe, New Mexico; Little Rock Arkansas; and Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

The record reveals that while all EDRs report to the Activity's Deputy Director in Austin, Texas, each EDR generates his own work and responds to local requests for assistance without detailed supervision from the Regional Office; that all seven EDRs work in area offices with just one other person, their Economic Development Assistant; and that these offices, with one exception, are all located significant distances from the Regional Office with telephone communication being the only regular form of contact. The Economic Development Assistants were all hired between January 1976, and January 1977, to assist the EDR in fulfilling the mission of the area office. They perform a variety of programmatic, administrative and clerical tasks.

As indicated above, each of the seven EDRs heads a two person area office which constitutes an operational unit for administering the programs of the Regional Office within their specific geographic areas. The record reveals that the EDRs' duties include the analysis, assignment, direction and review of work performed by the Economic Development Assistant through the exercise of independent judgment. The EDRs approve the leave and vacations of their assistants, make effective performance evaluations, and act as first level supervisors in resolving grievances subject to their authority. The record further reveals that the EDRs have effectively recommended the hiring of their assistants.

Under these circumstances, I find that employees classified as Economic Development Representative, GS-301/12-13, are supervisors within the meaning of Section 2(c) of the Order as they perform supervisory functions requiring the exercise of independent judgment with regard to their Economic Development Assistants. Accordingly, I shall exclude them from the exclusively recognized unit.

ORDER

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the unit sought to be clarified herein, for which the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 3225, AFL-CIO, was certified on July 31, 1973, be, and hereby is, clarified by excluding from said unit employees classified as Economic Development Representative, GS-301/12-13.

Dated, Washington, D.C.
September 20, 1977

Francis X. Burkhardt, Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations

1/ The petition herein listed only six individuals in the classification sought to be clarified, while at the hearing testimony was offered as to seven. In the absence of objection or claim of prejudice by either party, I find that no prejudicial error was committed in allowing testimony as to the seventh individual.

2/ In July 1973, the AFGE was certified as the exclusive representative of a unit of the Activity's employees described as: "All nonsupervisory professional and nonprofessional employees in the Southwestern Regional Office of the Economic Development Administration" with the normal exclusions. There is no negotiated agreement between the parties.

SUMMARY OF DECISION AND DIRECTION OF ELECTION
OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

NON-APPROPRIATED FUND ACTIVITY,
HEADQUARTERS, 24th INFANTRY DIVISION,
FORT STEWART, GEORGIA
A/SLMR No. 899

This case involved a representation petition filed by the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1922, AFL-CIO, (AFGE) seeking a unit of all nonprofessional Non-Appropriated Fund (NAF) Activity employees at the Headquarters, 24th Infantry Division, Fort Stewart and Hunter Army Air Field, Georgia. The parties were in agreement generally as to the scope and composition of the claimed unit but the Activity opposed the inclusion in the claimed unit of "intermittent" employees on the basis they do not share a community of interest with regularly scheduled employees and that their inclusion would hamper effective dealings and be inimical to the efficiency of the agency's operations.

The Assistant Secretary, noting particularly the agreement of the parties as to the scope of the unit sought, found the claimed unit to be appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition as the employees involved share a clear and identifiable community of interest and the proposed unit would promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations.

The Assistant Secretary found also that the "intermittent" employees should be included in the unit found appropriate. He noted that the employees in this classification have a reasonable expectation of future employment; that a large number of the "intermittent" employees work for a substantial period of time during the year; and that the "intermittent" employees share with regular full-time and part-time employees common supervision, pay scales, job supervision, job assignments, working conditions and labor relations policies. Therefore, the Assistant Secretary concluded that they share a clear and identifiable community of interest with the regular full-time and regular part-time employees and their inclusion in the claimed unit with all other NAF employees subject to the same labor relations and personnel policies administered by Fort Stewart's Civilian Personnel Office would promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations.

Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary directed that an election be conducted in the unit found appropriate.

DECISION AND DIRECTION OF ELECTION

Upon a petition duly filed under Section 6 of Executive Order 11491, as amended, a hearing was held before Hearing Officer Adam J. Conti. The Hearing Officer's rulings made at the hearing are free from prejudicial error and are hereby affirmed.

Upon the entire record in the subject case, the Assistant Secretary finds:

1. The labor organization involved claims to represent certain employees of the Activity.

2. The Petitioner, American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1922, AFL-CIO, herein called AFGE, seeks an election in a unit of all Non-Appropriated Fund (NAF) Activity employees employed at Headquarters, 24th Infantry Division, Fort Stewart, and Hunter Army Air Field, Georgia, excluding professional employees, management officials, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity and supervisors as defined in the Order. The parties were in agreement generally as to the scope and composition of the claimed unit. However, the Activity opposed the inclusion within the claimed unit of "intermittent" employees on the basis that they do not share a community of interest with regularly scheduled employees and that their inclusion would hamper effective dealings and be inimical to the efficiency of the agency's operations.

1/ The name of the Activity appears as amended at the hearing.

The record indicates that Fort Stewart, herein called the Fort, is the home base of the 24th Infantry Division, and that its primary function is to train and house infantry soldiers. The Fort also serves as a training base for National Guard and Army Reserve Forces. In addition to the NAF employees located at the Fort, the claimed unit includes employees of the NAF Activity at its facilities at Hunter Army Air Field, which is located some 35 miles from the Fort, and which provides airborne support for the Fort. The NAF Activity consists of facilities whose purpose is to contribute to the morale, welfare and recreation of the military personnel of the United States Army. Among the NAF Activity facilities available at the Fort there is an Officers Club, a Non-Commissioned Officers Club (NCO), a Top Five Club, a Morale Support fund, and a nursery.

The personnel policies and procedures of the NAF Activity are established by regulations and directives of the United States Army. The Civilian Personnel Office (CPO) of the Fort, which handles all personnel matters for the NAF Activity, has the authority and responsibility for implementing these policies and procedures and has final responsibility for action with regard to hiring, firing, and promotions. The employees of the various NAF activities number approximately 340 and include such job classifications as Waiters, Waitresses, Food Service Workers, and Bartenders.

Under all of the circumstances, and noting particularly the agreement of the parties as to the scope of the unit sought, I find that the claimed unit of all NAF Activity employees employeed at Headquarters, 24th Infantry Division, Fort Stewart and Hunter Army Air Field, Georgia, is appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition as the employees involved share a clear and identifiable community of interest and such a unit will promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations.

Intermittent Employees

The record reveals that the NAF Activity employs approximately 193 employees in positions which are classified as "intermittent." The Department of Army's regulations with respect to NAF civilian employees define "intermittent" employees as those having no regularly scheduled workweek or a regularly scheduled workweek of less than 20 hours a week. 2/ The "intermittent" employees with no regularly scheduled workweek are essentially "on call" employees, whose employment pattern will vary according to the vagaries of the operations sponsored by the NAF Activity. The record reveals that when these "on-call" employees develop a regular work pattern, they are converted to regular full-time or part-time status, as had happened in five instances in the six-month period prior to the hearing in this matter. Although not eligible for all the benefits available to regular employees, all the "intermittent" employees receive the same Workmen's Compensation, Social Security, and shift differential benefits as the regular full-time and part-time employees receive, they share the same supervision, are eligible for similar promotions, are eligible for similar step increases and are subject to the same labor relations policies administered by the Fort's CPO.

2/ There are only two employees with regularly scheduled workweeks of less than 20 hours. At the hearing, the AFGE sought to exclude from the claimed unit these two "intermittent" employees. As their employment status meets all of the indicia by which I have included all other "intermittent" employees in the unit found appropriate, and as no argument for their exclusion was presented, I will include them in the unit found appropriate herein.

Under all of the circumstances, I find that the "intermittent" employees involved herein should be included in the unit found appropriate. Thus, the record reflects that employees in this classification have a reasonable expectation of continued employment; that a large number of the "intermittent" employees work for a substantial period of time during the year; 3/ and that they share with regular full-time and part-time employees common supervision, pay scales, job supervision, job assignments, working conditions and labor relations policies. In my view, therefore, they share a clear and identifiable community of interest with the regular full-time and regular part-time employees and their inclusion in the claimed unit with all other NAF employees subject to the same labor relations and personnel policies administered by the Fort's CPO will promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. 4/

Based on the foregoing, I find that the following employees constitute a unit appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under Executive Order 11491, as amended:

> All Non-Appropriated Fund Activity employees, including intermittent employees, employed at Headquarters, 24th Infantry Division, Fort Stewart and Hunter Army Air Field, Georgia, excluding professional employees, management officials, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity and supervisors as defined in the Executive Order.

DIRECTION OF ELECTION

An election by secret ballot shall be conducted among employees in the unit found appropriate, as early as possible, but not later than 60 days from the date below. The appropriate Area Administrator shall supervise the election, subject to the Assistant Secretary's Regulations. Eligible to vote are those in the unit who were employed during the payroll period immediately preceding the date below, including employees who did not work during that period because they were out ill or on vacation or on furlough, including those in the military service who appear in person at the polls. Ineligible to vote are employees who have quit or were discharged for cause since the designated payroll period and who have not been rehired or reinstated before the election date. Those eligible shall vote whether or not they desire to be represented for the purpose of exclusive recognition by the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1922, AFL-CIO.

3/ The record reveals that in a six month period prior to the hearing some 79 "intermittent" employees averaged 15 hours or more of work a week and some 71 "intermittent" employees averaged between 7 1/2 and 15 hours of work a week.

4/ See United States Army Infantry Center, Non-Appropriated Fund Activity, Fort Benning, Georgia, A/SLMR No. 188.

SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

UNITED STATES EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY COMMISSION
A/SLMR No. 900

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2667 (Complainant) alleging that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by refusing to bargain with the Complainant concerning the impact of a reorganization announced on September 25, 1975.

The Administrative Law Judge concluded that the Respondent had not violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order. The Respondent announced tentative reorganization plans in November 1974, and soon thereafter provided the Complainant with information concerning its plans. Subsequent to the September 25, 1975, announcement concerning the reorganization of the Respondent's Headquarters organization and prior to its effective date, the Respondent, pursuant to the Complainant's request, set up several meetings with the Complainant to discuss the impact of the reorganization. The Complainant was unable to attend these meetings because of prior commitments. After the announced effective date of the reorganization a meeting was scheduled for November 4, 1975. After a further request from the Complainant on December 16, 1975, the Respondent wrote the Complainant three times December 19, 1975, and January 5 and January 26, 1976 - requesting meetings to discuss matters concerning the reorganization. However, on February 12, 1976, the Complainant responded that it was suspending attempts to meet and confer while the Respondent implemented changes "without prior consultation."

Under these circumstances, the Administrative Law Judge found that the Complainant had not established by a preponderance of the evidence that the Respondent had failed to fulfill its obligation to bargain about the implementation of its plans and was unable to demonstrate that any impact occurred without prior bargaining because it ignored the Respondent's invitations to discuss the matter on December 19, 1975, and January 5 and January 26, 1976. Accordingly, he found that the Respondent did not violate Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order.

Noting particularly the absence of exceptions, the Assistant Secretary adopted the findings, conclusions and recommendation of the Administrative Law Judge, and ordered that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety.

DECISION AND ORDER

On June 22, 1977, Administrative Law Judge John H. Fenton issued his Recommended Decision and Order in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had not engaged in the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint and recommending that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety. No exceptions were filed to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order and the entire record in the subject case, and noting particularly that no exceptions were filed, I hereby adopt the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions, and recommendation.

ORDER

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the complaint in Case No. 22-6691(CA) be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

Statement of the Case

Pursuant to a complaint filed by Complainant on February 19, 1976, under Executive Order 11491, a Notice of Hearing on Complaint was issued by the Acting Regional Administrator for the Philadelphia Region on August 19, 1976. The complaint alleged that Respondent violated Sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by refusing to bargain with Complainant concerning the impact of a reorganization announced on September 25, 1975.

A hearing was held on September 27, 28 and 29, 1976 in Washington, D.C. All parties were afforded full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, to introduce evidence bearing upon the issues and to submit briefs. On the basis of the entire record, I make the following findings of fact, conclusions and recommendations.

Findings of Fact

Since July 6, 1971, the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, has been the certified collective bargaining representative of a nationwide unit of EEOC's employees. Pursuant to a Memorandum of Understanding signed on April 28, 1975, Headquarters Local 2667 was recognized as the representative of all employees until such time as other locals were "chartered within each EEOC Region". That Memorandum also provided that Local 3555 (New York) and Local 3599 (Atlanta) "will represent all of the unit employees located within their respective regions". By letter of September 18, 1975 from AFGE's National President to EEOC's Chairman, AFGE outlined its delegation of authority to administer its national exclusive recognition. Pending the chartering of a Council, authority to deal with the Chairman on all matters national in scope was to reside in Local 2667.

Although there is much background to be set forth later, it may be said that the series of events which led to the complaint began with an announcement by Chairman Lowell W. Perry on September 25, 1975. In a memo to all employees he said that changes in the Executive Director's organizational structure were being formulated, that the reorganization was intended to achieve a realignment of the Headquarters organization, and that the details of reorganization would be published upon its implementation. Four days later Doris X. (McGruder), President of Local 2667, wrote Leroy B. Curtis, Chief, Labor Management Relations Branch, requesting as soon as possible and well in advance of implementation, a meeting about the planned reorganization. On October 7 Curtis responded, suggesting a meeting on October 8, at 10:00 a.m., in the office of Personnel Director Beverly Gary, "to discuss the impact of the pending reorganization in various components of headquarters". Ms. X. (McGruder) responded on the same day, noting a conflict with a prior commitment and requesting another date as soon as possible. On October 8, Executive Director B.G. Mathis issued EEOC

Notice N-110, announcing the reorganization of his Office. 1/ Also, apparently on October 7 or 8, the Agency rescheduled the meeting with the Union to October 9 at 2:00 p.m. On that day President Doris X. (McGruder) informed Curtis by memo that she would be unable to attend due to a previously scheduled meeting "of which he was aware". Finally, on October 30, the Union confirmed a meeting for November 4.

The evidence as to what transpired at the November 4 meeting was presented in documents. A letter from Union President David Butler to Chairman Lowell Perry, dated December 16, recites that the Union again complained that it had been denied an opportunity, prior to the October 14 implementation of the reorganization plan, to meet with management and discuss "the methods to be adopted or the impact of the decision upon employees". (Complainant's Exh. No. 5). The letter further states that the Union unsuccessfully requested information which it needed in order to assess "the potential impact the reorganization might have on employees". The letter then went on to request that EEOC freeze implementation pending negotiation, deliver voluminous information, and immediately pledge in writing its commitment to good faith bargaining. In a memo "for the record" from Leroy Curtis (Agency Exh. No. 25), he indicated that the rationale for reorganization was explained to the Union, that it was informed that implementation had not taken place and could take up to five months to complete. He also indicated that the Union was concerned with the difficulty of dealing with the new structure and with the question of steward alignment and grievance processing.

On December 19, Mr. Curtis replied to the Union's letter, advising that a meeting could be arranged to discuss the matters raised by the Union, and stating that he awaited

1/ Notice 110 (Jt. Exh. No. 2) assigned missions, designated organization and position titles and office codes, identified key incumbent officials, and called for the preparation of detailed functional statements. Its "effective date" was October 14. On October 29, Mr. Mathis issued a memorandum to all Regional Directors establishing guidelines for the conversion of EEO Specialist (investigator) positions to generalist positions (Complainant's Exh. No. 14).

contact by the Union regarding the scheduling of such a meeting.

On January 5, 1976, Curtis wrote Butler with respect to the organization of the Office of Compliance, transmitting certain documents and requesting a meeting to discuss impact. On January 26, Curtis again wrote Butler asking that he meet on the following day to discuss the impact of the reorganization. The Union finally responded, so far as this record shows, on February 12, announcing its decision to "suspend any further attempt to meet in good faith and negotiate as required while the agency continues to implement changes without prior consultation", on the ground that it had been unsuccessful in arranging meetings with management concerning the reorganization. Seven days later it filed its complaint. This record discloses no reason for the failure of the parties to meet after November 4, 1975, notwithstanding several invitations from the Agency. 2/

Respondents' defense, in essence, is that it had prolonged discussion, beginning as early as December 12, 1974, concerning the planned reorganization, that much information was made available over the months, that a failure of communication between the three successive presidents of Local 2667 during material times left the last and presently complaining one, Butler, with the erroneous impression that consultation had not occured, and that Butler therefore precipitously filed a complaint rather than accepting Respondent's repeated offers to consult.

I conclude that Respondents' defense is well taken. Long before any duty to bargain concerning impact arose, in fact beginning with the announcement of Respondent's tentative reorganizations plans in 1974, Respondent voluntarily shared with the Union much information concerning its plans. Its first announcement in 1974 precipitated the filing of an unfair labor practice charge by then president Alicia Columna, and there followed considerable discussion and exchange of information before that charge was withdrawn in July, 1975.

2/ One may surmise that the reassignment of president Doris X. (McGruder), and the unfair labor practice charge [footnote continued on next page]

It is perhaps significant, at least in terms of the spirit of such exchanges, that Columna, upon leaving office as president of Local 2667 on August 4, 1975, wrote Curtis expressing her "appreciation for the manner in which you and your office has conducted labor-management relations duing...my tenure as President...." (Agency Exhibit 22). Examination of the voluminous documentary record introduced by the Agency reveals that it supplied enormous quantities of information relevant to its plans to reorganize and to convert from EEO specialist to generalist in the absence of any legal requirement that it do so at that point in time. I take this as strong background evidence of its desire to deal constructively with Local 2667. 3/

Conclusions

I am troubled by the fact that no discussions ensued between the September 25, 1975 announcement of reorganization and its "effective date" of October 14. However, I find no persuasive evidence that any implementation affecting the terms and conditions of employment for those in the bargaining unit in fact occurred. 4/ While the record is a confusing one, it is clear that the Union three times filed charges addressed to the same essential reorganizaiton plan. Two were resolved after extensive consultation.

addressed to it, so charged the atmosphere as to gravely undermine any prospect for friendly and therefore useful discussion. See Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, A/SLMR No. 707.

3/ In this respect, the record indicates that Local 2667 was furnished with a copy of the proposed guidelines for conversion to the generalist position, was given until 5/30/75 to comment, and failed ever to do so.

4/ I should go further and say that no implementation of any kind, even as to matters which would not give rise to a bargaining obligation, occurred pior to the break-off of negotiations.

Complainant, of course, bears the burden of proof. It has in my judgment not established by a preponderance of the evidence that the Agency failed to fulfill its obligation to bargain about the implementation of its plans as they affected Complainant's constituency. Complainant was unable to demonstrate that any impact occurred without prior bargaining because it ignored the Agency's invitations to discuss the matter in Mr. Curtis' letters of December 19, 1975, January 5, and January 26, 1976. Instead of responding and attempting to sort out what, if any, bargainable implementation was in fact taking place, the Union on February 12 abruptly announced its decision to suspend any further attempts to bargain during what it assumed to be the Agency's ongoing implementation effort. The proposed changes were designed to affect higher management levels. There has been no showing that the Agency effected changes in the terms and conditions of rank and file employees without first discussing such impact. The change from EEO Specialist to Generalist is not embraced in the Complaint and, in any event, the decision was made to rewrite that job description after the Union was fully informed and failed to deliver any input for management's consideration. As the complaint was never amended in this respect, and the subject was not adequately litigated, I do not pass on the Union's contention that such changes have taken place without the required consultation. While a central concern of the Union was what it perceived as a forced realignment of stewards, or the confusion with respect to what stewards were to deal with what management officials in the new chain of command that was very slowly evolving, I cannot find on this record that the Agency was unwilling to deal constructively with such problems. The decisive fact is that Complainant never put the Agency to the test in this respect; instead it called off bargaining. The consequence of such action was that it could not establish that the Agency failed to bargain in good faith concerning the implementation of its scheme, as it might affect those in the bargining unit.

Recommendation

Having found that Respondent did not fail to meet and confer with Complainant on the impact and implementation of its reorganization plan in violation of Sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order, I recommend that the Assistant Secretary dismiss the complaint.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR
ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS
SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY,
89th ARMY RESERVE COMMAND, WICHITA, KANSAS
A/SLMR No. 901

This case involved an RA petition filed by the 89th Army Reserve Command (89th ARCOM), which, in effect, sought a determination by the Assistant Secretary as to the impact of a reorganization and transfer of personnel and administrative functions on a unit of exclusive recognition of certain Army Reserve elements represented by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3330 (AFGE) and located in the states of Nebraska, Minnesota and Iowa.

As a result of a reorganization in October 1973, Nebraska employees exclusively represented by the AFGE were transferred into a newly established military command, the 89th ARCOM and were transferred from the administrative authority of the Fifth U.S. Army, to the control and authority of the Sixth U.S. Army. The 89th ARCOM encompassed Army Reserve Units in Nebraska, Kansas, North Dakota and South Dakota. In October 1976, the Civilian Personnel Office (CPO) servicing 89th ARCOM employees was changed from the Fifth Army's Fort McCoy, Wisconsin, to the CPO of the Sixth Army at Fort Riley, Kansas.

The 89th ARCOM contended that, as a result of the 1973 reorganization, the subsequent transfer of personnel and administrative functions, and the execution of a negotiated agreement which covered only bargaining unit employees in Minnesota and Iowa, the certified unit is no longer appropriate and the unit criteria contained in Section 10(b) of the Order could only be fulfilled by severance of the Nebraska employees from the existing unit and their inclusion in a unit which would comprise only 89th ARCOM employees. The AFGE, on the other hand, contended that the reorganization was only a paper exercise and that it has, and can in the future, adequately represent the needs of Nebraska unit employees, as well as the employees remaining within the jurisdiction of the Fifth Army, by negotiating a separate contract with the Sixth Army for Nebraska employees who have, in effect, been "severed" from the exclusively recognized unit.

The Assistant Secretary found that the Nebraska employees no longer share an identifiable or viable community of interest with unit employees in Minnesota and Iowa who remain in the Fifth Army and who are serviced by the CPO, Fort McCoy. In this regard, he found that Nebraska employees are subject to a different set of policies, directives, and regulations promulgated by the Sixth Army and administered by Fort Riley, that they no longer share the same competitive areas of consideration for promotions and reduction-in-force procedures, and that there is no significant degree of interchange between 89th ARCOM employees and the employees located in Minnesota and Iowa and represented by the AFGE. The Assistant Secretary found also that the continued inclusion of the Nebraska employees in the certified unit would adversely impair both effectiveness of dealings and efficiency of agency operations. In this connection, he noted that the AFGE's negotiated agreement covered only Iowa and Minnesota employees, that the parties consider the Nebraska employees "severed" from the exclusively recognized unit, and that effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations would be promoted by including Nebraska employees in a unit which would coincide with the appropriate command structure.

Under these circumstances, the Assistant Secretary ordered that the RA petition be dismissed. In this regard, he noted that although an RA petition is an appropriate vehicle for an activity (or agency) to seek a determination of representational status of employees in a substantially changed unit, it does not follow that an election will be appropriate in each instance where some of an activity's employees had been previously employed by another activity and were included in an exclusively recognized unit. Thus, in the Assistant Secretary's view, elections in newly established units which are not substantially identifiable with any pre-existing units but, rather, essentially include employees who have been unrepresented, should result only from petitions filed by labor organizations seeking exclusive recognitions in such units. Accordingly, while the Assistant Secretary, in the instant case, had determined the impact of the reorganization and transfer of personnel and administrative functions on the unit represented by the AFGE, the particular circumstances were not found to warrant the election sought by the 89th ARCOM's RA petition.

DECISION AND ORDER

Upon a petition duly filed under Section 6 of Executive Order 11491, as amended, a hearing was held before Hearing Officer Majorie Thompson. The Hearing Officer's rulings made at the hearing are free from prejudicial error and are hereby affirmed.

Upon the entire record in the subject case, including a brief filed by the Activity-Petitioner, the Assistant Secretary finds:

On September 14, 1971, the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, hereinafter called AFGE, 1/ was certified as the exclusive representative of all Wage Grade and General Schedule nonsupervisory and nonprofessional employees of the 88th Army Reserve Command, 416th Engineer Command, 300th Military Police Command, 425th Transportation Command, 89th Division (Training) and the 205th Infantry Brigade located within the states of Minnesota, Iowa and Nebraska. 2/ A negotiated agreement which covered only bargaining unit employees in Minnesota and Iowa was executed by the parties in March 1977.

1/ On May 10, 1972, pursuant to a petition for amendment of certification, the name of the exclusive representative was amended to: American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3330.

On October 1, 1973, pursuant to an Army-wide reorganization, a new military organization, the 89th Army Reserve Command, hereinafter called the 89th ARCOM or Activity-Petitioner, was established. Its mission is to supervise and control all Army Reserve elements in the states of Kansas, Nebraska, North Dakota and South Dakota.

The reorganization resulted in the transfer of the Nebraska employees exclusively represented by the AFGE to the new command. 3/ Also, on October 1, 1973, the states of Kansas and Nebraska were transferred from the administrative authority of the Commander, Fifth U.S. Army, headquartered at Fort Sam Houston, Texas, to the authority and control of the Commander, Sixth U.S. Army, with headquarters at the Presidio, San Francisco, California. The record discloses that at the request of the Commander, Sixth Army, and in order to promote efficiency of operations, the Civilian Personnel Office, hereinafter called CPO, servicing 89th ARCOM employees was changed from the Fifth Army's CPO at Fort McCoy, Wisconsin, to the CPO of the Sixth Army at Fort Riley, Kansas. The effective date of this transfer was October 1, 1976. Thereafter, the 89th ARCOM filed the subject RA petition, which, in effect, seeks a determination by the Assistant Secretary as to the impact of the aforementioned reorganization and transfer of CPO functions on the unit exclusively represented by the AFGE.

The Activity-Petitioner contends that, as a result of the reorganization and transfer of CPO functions, the certified unit is now inappropriate and the unit critieria contained in Section 10(b) of the Order can only be fulfilled by severance of the Nebraska employees from the existing unit and their inclusion in a unit which would comprise only 89th ARCOM employees. The AFGE, on the other hand, contends that the reorganization was only a paper exercise with no actual changes in employee duties, immediate supervision or work sites, and that it has, and can in the future, adequately represent the needs of Nebraska unit employees, as well as the employees remaining under the Fifth Army, by negotiating a separate agreement with the Sixth Army for the Nebraska employees who have been, in effect, "severed" from the exclusively recognized unit.

2/ The 205th Infantry Brigade subsequently became part of the 88th Army Reserve Command and the 89th Division (Training) was deactivated in 1975.

3/ The record reflects that of the approximately 293 civilian employees employed by the 89th ARCOM, some 63 are located in Nebraska and had been included in the AFGE's bargaining unit.

The evidence establishes that, pursuant to the 1973 reorganization, the Nebraska employees are now solely within the administrative authority of the Commander, 89th ARCOM, and are subject to the policies, directives, and regulations, including labor relations policy, issued by the Sixth Army, which are interpreted and administered on behalf of the 89th ARCOM and the Sixth Army by the CPO, Fort Riley, Kansas. Iowa and Minnesota bargaining unit employees, on the other hand, remain divided among several independent commands, and are subject to a different set of policies, directives, and regulations promulgated by the Fifth Army and interpreted and administered by the CPO, Fort McCoy, which also provides labor relations guidance for the Fifth Army commander and all its serviced commands.

The record indicates that although the Nebraska employees, now within the 89th ARCOM, for the most part remain in the same location and continue to perform the same duties under the same immediate supervision as prior to the reorganization, they no longer share with the Iowa and Minnesota employees the same competitive area of consideration for promotions or the same competitive areas for reduction-in-force procedures. Nor does the record show any significant degree of interchange between 89th ARCOM employees and the employees located in Minnesota and Iowa represented by the AFGE.

Based on the foregoing, I find that, subsequent to the 1973 reorganization and the transfer of administrative and personnel functions for the Nebraska employees from the Fifth to the Sixth Army, the latter employees no longer share a clear and identifiable community of interest with the unit employees in Minnesota and Iowa who remained in the Fifth Army and who are serviced by the CPO at Fort McCoy. I find also that the continued inclusion of the Nebraska employees in the certified unit would adversely impair both effectiveness of dealings and efficiency of agency operations. In this regard, it is noted that the AFGE's negotiated agreement covers only the Iowa and Minnesota employees, that the parties consider the Nebraska employees as "severed" from the exclusively recognized unit, and that effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations would be promoted by including Nebraska employees in a unit which would coincide with an appropriate command structure within the Sixth Army.

Under the particular circumstances of this case, however, I shall dismiss the subject RA petition. Although an election pursuant to an RA petition may be deemed appropriate where one or more exclusively recognized units have been combined to form a new unit containing essentially all of the components of the previously recognized units, 4/ in my view, such an election in the 89th ARCOM, Sixth Army, would not be appropriate in the circumstances herein. While an RA petition is an appropriate vehicle for an activity (or agency) to seek a determination of the representational status of employees in a substantially changed unit, it does not follow that an election will be appropriate in each instance where, as here, some of an activity's employees had been previously employed by another activity and were included in an exclusively recognized unit. In my view, elections in newly established units which are not substantially identifiable with any pre-existing units but, rather, essentially include employees who have been unrepresented, should result only from petitions filed by labor organizations seeking exclusive recognition in such units. 5/

Accordingly, while, pursuant to the 89th ARCOM's RA petition herein, I have determined the impact of the instant reorganization and transfer of personnel and administrative functions on the unit represented by the AFGE, I find that the particular circumstances herein do not warrant an election. Therefore, I shall dismiss the instant RA petition.

ORDER

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the petition in Case No. 60-4995(RA), be, and it hereby is, dismissed. 6/

5/ Cf. United States Coast Guard Air Station, etc., A/SLMR No. 561. As noted at footnote 3, above, the 89th ARCOM employs some 293 civilian employees of whom only 63 were previously within the AFGE unit.

6/ While I have dismissed the RA petition in the subject case, it is noted that such finding does not preclude the filing of an appropriate petition for amendment of certification for the unit in which the AFGE continues to be the exclusive representative, in order to conform the certification to the existing circumstances.

SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION SERVICE
A/SLMR No. 902

This case arose as a result of an unfair labor practice complaint filed by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO (Complainant) alleging that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by refusing to provide documents which were necessary and relevant for the Complainant to engage in meaningful negotiations on changes in a merit promotion plan.

The Administrative Law Judge concluded that the Respondent's refusal to supply the requested documents did not violate the Order. He based his conclusion on, among other things, the fact that the survey on which the documents were based was instituted by the Civil Service Commission under statutes and Executive Orders. Further, he determined that the documents sought were not necessary and relevant to enable the Complainant to intelligently perform its bargaining functions because management's proposals were not the sole result of the documents, and such proposals remained open to negotiation.

The Assistant Secretary agreed with the Administrative Law Judge's ultimate conclusion that dismissal of the complaint is warranted. However, he did not adopt the Administrative Law Judge's conclusion or rationale for determining that the documents, formulated following a survey by a "tri-partite" team including representatives of the Agency and Activity as well as the Civil Service Commission, contained information not necessary and relevant for the Complainant to enable it to intelligently fulfill its collective bargaining obligation. Further, he noted that it is not required that the documents sought be the sole basis for negotiating proposals, or that they form the basis for fixed, final proposals before they become necessary and relevant for negotiating purposes.

Because he found, contrary to the Administrative Law Judge, that the documents contained information which was necessary and relevant, the Assistant Secretary inspected the documents in camera and compared them with a summary of the documents which was offered to the Complainant during the negotiations. The Assistant Secretary found that the summary adequately reflected the necessary and relevant information contained in the documents to which the Complainant was entitled. He, therefore, found that the Respondent had fulfilled its obligation and that no violation of Section 19(a)(1) and (6) occurred.

Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary ordered that the complaint be dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER

On March 16, 1977, Administrative Law Judge Gordon J. Myatt issued his Recommended Decision and Order in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had not engaged in the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint and recommending that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety. Thereafter, the Complainant filed exceptions and a supporting brief with respect to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order and the entire record in this case, including the exceptions and supporting brief filed by the Complainant, I hereby adopt the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendations, to the extent consistent herein.

The Complainant alleged that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by refusing to provide it with documents which were necessary and relevant for the Complainant to engage in meaningful negotiations on a merit promotion plan.

As detailed more fully by the Administrative Law Judge, the parties in May 1975, began negotiations regarding changes in a merit promotion plan which had been in existence for some time. During negotiations, the Complainant's negotiator asked whether the Respondent had used certain documents in preparing its negotiating proposals. The Respondent's chief negotiator answered that the documents referred to by the Complainant were "input" documents and that some of its proposals "flowed" from them. The Complainant sought the documents as necessary and relevant to carrying out its representational functions, and the Respondent declined contending the documents were intra-managerial communications, privileged communications, and exempted under the Freedom of Information Act.

The documents involved consist of a Personnel Management Evaluation Report, referred to hereafter as the "Report," and a Personnel Management Action Plan, referred to hereafter as the "Plan." The Report was published in 1973 after a survey of the Respondent's entire personnel structure initiated by the Civil Service Commission pursuant to law and various Executive Orders. At the request of the Department of Justice, employees of the Department of Justice, the Immigration and Naturalization Service, and of the Civil Service Commission participated equally in the survey rendering the survey team "tri-partite." Topics covered in the Report included those under consideration in the negotiations herein. The Plan, published in January 1975, was the Respondent's response to the Report and included its reactions to the suggestions made in the Report.

The Complainant filed a pre-complaint charged on May 17, 1975, alleging that the Respondent's failure to provide the disputed documents was violative of the Order. On June 20, 1975, while the negotiations were in progress, the Department of Justice offered to give the Complainant a summary of the Report. Nevertheless, on July 15, 1975, the instant complaint was filed. On September 23, 1975, the Department of Justice submitted a summary of both documents to the Complainant.

The Administrative Law Judge concluded that the Respondent had not violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by refusing to supply the Complainant with the requested documents. He based his conclusion, among other things, on the fact that the survey was initiated by the Civil Service Commission pursuant to statutes and Executive Orders. Further, he determined that the findings and recommendations of the documents were not necessary and relevant to enable the Complainant to intelligently perform its bargaining functions because management's proposals were not the sole result of the documents and, further, those proposals remained open to negotiation.

While I agree with the Administrative Law Judge's ultimate conclusion that dismissal of the instant complaint is warranted, I do not adopt his conclusion or rationale for determining that the disputed documents herein were not necessary and relevant. In my view, to enable a labor organization to intelligently perform its bargaining duties, it is not required that the documents sought be the sole basis for proposals, or that they form the basis for fixed, final proposals, before they become necessary and relevant to the exclusive representative for negotiating purposes. Under the circumstances of this case, I find that the documents formulated following a survey by a "tri-partite" team which included representatives from the Agency and the Activity contained information which was necessary and relevant for the Complainant to enable it to intelligently fulfill its collective bargaining obligation. In view of this determination, I have undertaken an in camera inspection of the documents herein and compared them with the summary offered by the Respondent to the Complainant. Upon careful examination, I find that the summary adequately reflects the necessary and relevant information to which the Complainant is entitled that is contained in the disputed documents.

In view of the fact that the summary was offered to the Complainant during the course of negotiations, and that an adequate summary was, in fact, presented to the Complainant, I find that the Respondent fulfilled its obligation in this regard and that no violation of Section 19(a)(1) and (6) occurred as, in fact, the requested information was not ultimately withheld from the Respondent.

Accordingly, I shall order that the complaint in this case, alleging violations of Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, be dismissed.

ORDER

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the complaint in Case No. 22-6276(CA) be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

Statement of the Case

Pursuant to a complaint filed on July 17, 1975 by American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO (hereinafter called Complainant Union) alleging that Department of Justice, Immigration and Naturalization Service (hereinafter called Respondent Activity) violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, the Acting Regional Administrator for Labor-Management Services issued a Notice of Hearing on Complaint on March 25, 1976. The gravaman of the complainant was that the Respondent Activity failed to negotiate in good faith, as required by the Executive Order, by refusing to provide the Complainant Union with certain documents on which proposals were based for changes in a negotiated merit promotion and reassignment plan. The complaint asserts that the refusal of the requested documents constituted an unlawful denial of information necessary and relevant for the Complainant Union to engage in meaningful contract negotiations.

A hearing was held on June 22, 1976, in Washington, D.C. on this matter. All parties were represented by counsel and afforded full opportunity to be heard and to introduce relevant evidence and testimony on the issues involved. Briefs were submitted by counsel and have been duly considered in arriving at the decision in this case. Upon the entire record in this matter, 1/ including my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following:

Findings of Fact

A. Background Facts

The Complainant Union holds national exclusive recognition as the representative of the employees of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, which in turn is a national primary subdivision of the Department of Justice. Since approximately 1969, the parties have had negotiated agreements on a nation-wide basis for two separate categories of employees of the

1/ The official transcript herein contains numerous errors, a number of which are repetitive. For example, the phrase "Merit Promotion and Reassignment Plan" is recorded throughout the transcript as "American Motion Reassignment Plan". Similarly the sections of the Executive Order alleged to have been violated are recorded throughout the official transcript as 19A1 and 19A6 instead of 19(a)(1) and 19(a)(6). Accordingly, the transcript is hereby corrected to substitute "Merit Promotion and Reassignment Plan" in every instance where it is recorded as "American Motion Reassignment Plan". Likewise, the transcript is hereby corrected to read "19(a)(1)" and "19(a)(6)" in every instance that 19A1 and 19A6 is cited. In addition, the following corrections are hereby made to the transcript:

Page 79, line 13 - "226504" is corrected to read "2265.04"

Respondent Activity. One agreement covered the border patrol employees and the other related to all other bargaining unit employees of the Respondent Activity. In addition, the parties negotiated a separate Merit Promotion and Reassignment Plan in 1969 applicable to both categories of employees. Because of certain deficiencies in this negotiated merit promotion plan a number of grievances were generated shortly after its implementation, and the parties renegotiated the agreement in October 1970. The renegotiated plan was issued by the Respondent Activity in November 1970, as Administrative Manual §2265. 2/ This plan was in effect at the time of the dispute giving rise to this case.

By its terms, the Merit Promotion and Reassignment Plan applied to employees serving in the "Officer Corp" and bargaining unit employees who were considered part of the "Non-Officer Corp". These two categories of employees were defined in the Administrative Manual as follows:

> All positions above the training level in the classification series entitled "Border Patrol Agents", "Criminal Investigator," "Deportation Officer," "Immigration Inspector," and "Immigration Examiner" and all grade GS-10 positions entitled "Immigration Officer" comprise the "Officer Corp".
>
> All positions in other classification series and all other Immigration Officer positions comprise the "non-Officer Corp".

B. The Evaluation Survey and Action Report

Sometime in 1973, the Civil Service Commission (CSC) commenced a nation-wide review of the effectiveness of the personnel program of the Respondent Activity. This review was initiated by CSC under its authority conferred by Title 5 of the United States Code and various Executive Orders. The Department of Justice, however, insisted that officials from its personnel office and from the Respondent Activity be included as "fully participating members" of the review teams. CSC agreed to these arrangements.

2/ Complainant Union Exhibit No. 1.

The personnel management review was completed and presented to the Respondent Activity and Justice in September 1973, in a document entitled "Personnel Management Evaluation Report." The Report contained the analyses and findings of the reviewing group and recommendations for changes or improvements in specific personnel policies and practices. The Respondent Activity reviewed the Report and regarding those recommendations which it accepted, issued a "Personnel Management Action Plan" in January 1975. The Action Plan identified the accepted recommendations, set forth the specific action intended to be taken, established time targets for the proposed action and assigned official responsibility for its accomplishment. 3/

C. The 1975 Negotiations on the Merit Promotion and Reassignment Plan

In May 1975, the parties met for negotiations on the existing Merit Promotion and Reassignment Plan (Administrative Manual 2265). John Mulholland, Director of the Contract Negotiations Department of the Complainant Union, was the chief negotiator on behalf of the labor organization. Dennis Ekberg, Labor-Management Relations Specialist, was the chief negotiator for the Respondent Activity. During the course of negotiations, Ekberg proposed changes in the existing promotion and reassignment agreement. Management proposed that: (a) the area of consideration for promotion and reassignment be restricted to regions rather than Activity-wide as the current agreement required; (b) the methodology employed in evaluating candidates be changed; and (c) seniority be eliminated in the evaluation and ranking of employees who were candidates for promotion or reassignment. Mulholland questioned management concerning the need for the changes contemplated by the proposals, and Ekberg replied that there were numerous complaints about the current plan and employees were unhappy with it. According to Mulholland, he asked Ekberg how management became aware of this and was informed that it "flowed" from the Evaluation Report. After a caucus with his fellow union representatives, Mulholland returned to the bargaining table and specifically asked management if their proposals were based on the Evaluation Report. 4/ Ekberg replied that the Evaluation Report was used as "an input document." He testified at the hearing that management also relied on the recommendations of 20 field managers who were brought in to help formulate the proposals on the basis of their field experience. In addition, management was assisted by responses to questionnaires submitted to regional field offices. When Ekberg stated that management had used the Evaluation Report as an "input document", the union representative asked for both the Evaluation Report and the Action Plan in order to analyze management's proposals. Ekberg refused to supply the documents on the grounds that they were (1) intra-management communications, (2) privileged communications and (3) exempted under the Freedom of Information Act. When questioned at the hearing, Ekberg stated that management took the position during the negotiations that the proposals were negotiable items, and that management was not compelled to insist upon the proposals because of anything contained in the Evaluation Report. When asked if the Evaluation Report and the Action Plan contributed, at least partially, to the formulation of management's proposals, Ekberg replied as follows:

3/ One of the areas considered by the Evaluation Report and addressed by the Action Plan was the effectiveness of the current negotiated Merit Promotion and Reassignment Plan.

> "We had knowledge of them. They were used in coming up with the proposals. We didn't -- you know, look at it and say this is the law that has come down from the Civil Service Commission and the proposals must be this way."

The union representatives continued to insist on production of the documents and management continued to resist this request. As a result of the refusal of management to supply the Evaluation Report and the Action Plan, the Union filed an unfair labor practice charge with the Respondent Activity on May 16, 1975; citing a violation of 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Executive Order. On July 15, 1975, the Complainant Union filed an unfair labor practice complaint with the Labor-Management Services Administration. On 4/ The union representatives were aware that management and the Civil Service Commission were conducting the evaluation review in 1973, and they were also aware that management had issued its Action Plan in 1975. However, they had never seen either document.

September 23, 1975, the Department of Justice on behalf of the Respondent Activity submitted a "sanitized summary" of the Evaluation Report and Action Plan to the Union. The summary was rejected by the union representatives as being completely unsatisfactory in assisting it to analyze management's proposals. The Complainant Union renewed its request for the original documents, while conceding that names and identification of individuals could be deleted to protect their privacy. Management refused to comply with this request on the same grounds stated during the negotiations.

Contentions of the Parties

In support of its claim to access to the Evaluation Report and Action Plan, the Complainant Union argues in very sweeping terms that the only standard to be applied in determining whether production of the documents is required is one of "necessity and relevance", i.e., whether the documents were necessary and relevant to the Union to enable it to represent its members during negotiations as required by Section 10(e) of the Executive Order. 5/ This argument specifically rules out any consideration of whether management chose to rely upon the documents during negotiations. (Complainant Union's Brief, page 3). In determining "necessity and relevancy" the Complainant Union relies heavily upon cases dealing with the private sector, and asserts there need only be a showing that the requested material is "reasonably appropriate" or "necessary" to enable the union to carry out its negotiation function by checking the accuracy of the material undergirding management's proposals. 6/ Transferring this rationale to 5/ Section 10(e) provides, in part:

(e) when a labor organization has been accorded exclusive recognition, it is the exclusive representative of employees in the unit and is entitled to act for and to negotiate agreements covering all employees in the unit... the labor organization shall be given the opportunity to be represented at formal discussions between management and employees or employee representatives concerning grievances, personnel policies and practices, or other matters affecting general working conditions of employees in the unit.

the public sector, the Complainant Union contends that "necessity and relevancy" are likewise controlling criteria under the Assistant Secretary 7/ and Council 8/ decisions and support its claim for the production of documents.

The Respondent Activity, however, resists on several grounds. First, it asserts compliance with the Executive Order and the Council requirements upon submission of the "sanitized summary" to the Complainant Union. It also argues that the original documents are intra-management communications privileged from disclosure, and exempted by virture of the Freedom of Information Act (FIOA). 5 U.S.C. §552(b), et seq., Finally, the Respondent Activity asserts that the Evaluation Report and Action Plan are the result of an evaluation process initiated by the Civil Service Commission pursuant to statute and is not the product of agency management. Therefore, under the Assistant Secretary's decision in U.S. Civil Service Commission, Washington, D.C., A/SLMR No. 640, the documents need not be given to the exclusive representative.

Concluding Findings

In my judgment, the Executive Order and the case law do not require as much as claimed by the Complainant Union, nor do they prohibit disclosure for the reasons asserted by the Respondent Activity in this case.

The sweep of the argument advanced by the Complainant Union closely approximates a request for an automatic determination that documents become relevant and necessary, and should be made available to the exclusive representative, once it is established that they have played some role in the formulation of proposals submitted by management for negotiation. I do not perceive this to be the law in either the private or the public sector. An examination of the Labor Board cases revealed that the Board in the exercise of its discretion determines whether documents and records should be produced upon request for negotiations and grievances. The Board does so under standards set by it in order to make such a determination.

Likewise, the Assistant Secretary, in the exercise of his discretion, has established criteria against which claims for access or production of documents must be measured in order to determine whether the refusal to do so is a violation of the Executve Order. In Social Security Administration, Kansas City Payment Center 9/ the Assistant Secretary stated that it must be shown, "...that the information requested is necessary for intelligent bargaining, is not readily available from some other source, and that without which the Union will be impeded in carrying out the responsibilities imposed upon it by the Order." While it is true that the Social Security case involved production of information necessary to enable the union to make a decision on whether to process a potential grievance, the same criteria must be applied to documents requested during negotiations. Accordingly, I find that the standards set forth in the Social Security case control analysis of the facts contained in the instant case.

On this basis, I find and conclude that the Complainant Union was not entitled to have access to or to inspect the Evaluation Report and Action Plan. While it is evident that management's proposals would have caused substantial changes in the negotiated merit promotion and reassignment plan, there is nothing in the record to indicate that management considered its proposals to be fixed and set by the recommendations of the Evaluation Report or the goals of the Action Plan. On the contrary, it is apparent that during the course of the discussions, management consistently stated that the proposed changes were negotiable. The mere fact that management indicated that its proposals were formulated in part by the results of the Evaluation Report and Action Plan in no way placed any limitations on its willingness to negotiate these matters. Management never took the position that it could not negotiate or vary its proposals because they were fixed by the Evaluation Report and Action Plan. In these circumstances, it cannot be said that the failure to produce those documents prevented the Union from bargaining intelligently or impeded it in performing its representational duties imposed by the Executive Order. In my judgment, it was incumbent upon the Union at this posture of the negotiations to advance counterproposals and engage in the normal "give and take" associated with the collective bargaining process.

The Complainant Union places great emphasis on the language contained in the NASA case decided by the Council.10/ In that case agency headquarters-level representatives conducted meetings and interviews with activity-level employees in order to get opinions regarding the operation of the EEO program of the agency. The union, which was the exclusive representative, was not allowed to have observers present nor were they notified of the meetings between agency management and activity employees. The Assistant Secretary found that there was no obligation on the part of agency officials to allow union representatives to be present because no bargaining relationship existed between the agency and the union; rather it existed between the activity and the union. Since the officials of the activity had no control over agency headquarters-level representatives, he found that the bargaining obligation under the Executive Order had not been violated. He did conclude, however, that a violation of Section 19(a)(1) had been committed in that the agency representatives discussed "terms and conditions of employment" with the activity employees without having the exclusive representative present. This was held to be counter to the "purposes and policies" of the Order, and the violation was not based on the existence of a bargaining relationship.

On appeal the Council held that no violation had occurred. In so doing, the Council stated that the discussions "were a mechanism whereby agency headquarters-level management sought to evaluate the effectiveness of an agencywide program which existed totally apart from the collective bargaining relationship. The Council went on to state that "without the benefit of such information-gathering mechanisms, agency management would be seriously impeded in effectively carrying out its responsibility -- often mandated by statute...to conduct periodic evaluations of the effectiveness of such agencywide programs." The Council made it clear, however, that such information-gathering techniques can be employed only in certain circumstances. Those circumstances which would apply to the issues presented here were set forth as instances were management does not:

> "...deal with specific employee grievances or other matters cognizable under an existing agreement; or gather information regarding employee sentiments for the purpose of using it subsequently to persuade the union to abandon a position taken during negotiations regarding the personnel policies or practices concerned."

It is this language which the Complainant Union relies upon to buttress its claim to the requested documents in the existant case. It points out, and correctly so, that the Evaluation Report and Action Plan contained specific matters which were subject to the negotiation process, and that the information gathered by the Report was subsequently used, in part, to help formulate management's proposals for revising the negotiated merit promotion and reassignment plan.

While it presents a close question, I am not persuaded that the personnel management survey, initiated by the Civil Service Commission pursuant to statute and Executive Orders, is the type of information-gathering mechanism the Council had in mind in NASA when it set forth the circumstances that would permit the presence of union representatives -- and by extension, which would permit the Union to have access to the results. My conclusions in this regard would not be the same if the survey had been undertaken by the Respondent Activity or by its parent Agency, as in the NASA case. Here, however, the survey was initiated by an authority outside of the Agency/Activity, under mandate of statute, to evaluate on an activitywide basis the effectiveness of the personnel management program of the Respondent Activity. It was not initiated by the Activity for the purpose of undermining any gains or benefits the Union had achieved through the bargaining process. That the findings and recommendations of the survey and the Activity's action plan were among several factors considered by management in formulating its proposals for subsequent negotiations did not cause the documents, at that point, to become necessary and relevant to enable the Complainant Union to intelligently perform its bargaining responsibilities. Management did not indicate that its proposals were the sole result of the survey or that it was required to insist upon the proposed changes in the existing program as a result of the evaluation findings and recommendations. Rather, the Respondent Activity consistently took the position the matters were negotiable. Thus, making it evident that the negotiations were not circumscribed by the Evaluation Report or Action Plan.

In these circumstances, I find that the Evaluation Report and Action Plan are not necessary or relevant to allow the Complainant Union to engage in intelligent bargaining, and that the refusal to produce the documents did not impede the Union from discharging its representational function imposed by the Executive Order.

In arriving at the above, I do not consider it necessary to consider the claim of exemption based on the Freedom of Information Act asserted by the Respondent Activity. This defense does not properly belong in this forum. It can only arise in the Federal District Court in an action brought under that particular statute. The exemptions written into the statute have no relevancy or materiality in determining entitlement to the production of documents under the Executive Order. For this reason, I also find it unnecessary to determine whether the requested documents are intra-management communications and therefore privileged from disclosure. This claim also arises under the Freedom of Information Act and cannot be asserted here.

Finally, there is one other claim asserted by the Respondent Activity which merits comment here. It is urged that since the evaluation survey was initiated by the Civil Service Commission, and under the decision of the Assistant Secretary in the Civil Service case 11/ the survey teams were not a part of and did not represent agency management. I find that case, however, to be inapposite to the facts of the instant case. There the survey or evaluation review was initiated and conducted solely by the Civil Service Commission. The facts here disclose that although the evaluation review was initiated by the Civil Service Commission, the survey groups were tripartite in composition, i.e., they were composed of representatives of the Commission, the Department of Justice and the Respondent Activity acting as full participating members. Accordingly, I consider that case to be distinguishable on its facts and its holding is not controlling here.

11/ United States Civil Service Commission, Washington, D.C., supra.

Based on the finding that the requested documents are not relevent and necessary to enable the Complainant Union to carry out its bargaining responsibilities under the Executive Order, I find and conclude that the Respondent Activity has not violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order.

RECOMMENDED ORDER

On the basis of the foregoing findings of fact and conclusions of law, I find that Department of Justice, Immigration and Naturalization Service has not engaged in conduct which violates Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of Executive Order 11491, as amended. Accordingly, I recommend that the complaint in this case be dismissed in its entirety.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE
DEPENDENT SCHOOLS, EUROPE
A/SLMR No. 903

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by Dr. Heidemarie D. Shurtleff (Complainant) alleging that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (2) of the Order by declining to transfer the Complainant to a location coinciding with that offered her spouse (an administrator of the Respondent) in order to discourage union membership and as a result of the Complainant's activities as a union officer.

The evidence disclosed that at the time of the offer to her spouse, no vacancies existed for which the Complainant was qualified within commuting distance of the area where her husband would have been employed. Further, the Administrative Law Judge found that the Activity official responsible for finding a transfer position for the Complainant had no knowledge of her union activity. He, therefore, recommended that the complaint be dismissed.

Noting particularly the absence of exceptions, the Assistant Secretary adopted the findings, conclusions and recommendations of the Administrative Law Judge and ordered that the complaint be dismissed.

RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

Statement of the Case

Pursuant to a Notice of Hearing on Complaint issued on July 13, 1976 by the Regional Administrator for Labor-Management Services Administration of the U.S. Department of Labor, Philadelphia Region, a hearing was held before the undersigned on November 8, 1976 at Sembach, Germany.

1/ The name of the employer appears as amended at the hearing.

This proceeding was initiated under Executive Order 11491, as amended (herein called the Order) by the filing of a complaint on October 3, 1975 by Dr. Heidemarie Shurtleff (herein called the Complainant) against Department of Defense Dependents Schools, Europe (herein called the Respondent and DODDSEUR). It was alleged therein that Respondent discriminated against Complainant and violated Section 19(a)(2) of the Order 2/ by declining to transfer her to a position as counselor or teacher to a location coinciding with that offered her spouse (who was offered a transfer to Schweinfurt as an administrator with Respondent) - all in order to discourage union membership and as a result of Complainant's activities as a union vice president.

Respondent denies the commissions of any unfair labor practices under the Order. It contends that at the date Dr. John C. Shurtleff was offered a promotion and transfer to Schweinfurt, Germany, there was no available position nearby for his wife, Heidemarie Shurtleff.

All parties were represented at the hearing, were afforded full opportunity to be heard, to adduce evidence and to examine as well as cross-examine witnesses. Thereafter, briefs were filed with the undersigned which have been duly considered.

Upon the entire record in the case, from my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, and from all of the testimony and evidence at the hearing, I make the following findings, conclusions and recommendations:

Findings of Fact

1. DODDSEUR, which is composed of five districts, is under the supervision of a Directorate. Districts II, III, and IV are located in Germany. The Director of DODDSEUR and his deputy are responsible for selecting the administration throughout all districts. A superintendent directs each district, and he is responsible for the selection and reassignment of non-administrative personnel, educators and counselors.

2/ At the hearing the complaint was amended, without objection, to include 8(a)(1) based on the same allegations in the complaint.

2. Various elementary and secondary schools, Junior and Senior High Schools, are located in each district, and about 5500 teachers are employed throughout the system in Europe. About 15% of this group consists of NTE's - those temporary employees who employment is not to exceed one year. About 1100 teachers at 44 schools are employed in District IV which included, inter alia, the Towns of Schweinfurt, Bad Kissingen, Kitzingen, Nuernberg, Ansbach and Stuttgart.

3. At all times material herein, Dr. J. Mason was the Director of DODDSEUR and its five schools districts; Roger Prince was the superintendent of District III, which included Weierhof, Ramstein, Kaiserslautern and Sembach; Robert Brooks was Chief of Employment and Services - head of recruitment, replacement and promotion at the Directorate and acted on behalf of Dr. Mason; Francis J. Schwerd was Chief, Recruitment and Placement Branch, Kaiserslautern area Civilian Personnel Office, who evaluated the qualifications of educators for non-administrative positions; Walter Ingram was the superintendent of District IV, and Robert Tracy was its administrative officer who was responsible for keeping information on current vacancies in that district; Martin Frantz was a Labor-Management Employee Relations Specialist for Respondent, who was responsible for labor relations and conducted management training workshops for administrators. 3/

4. At all times material herein the teachers in DODDSEUR's school system were represented by either Overseas Education Association (OEA) or Overseas Federation of Teachers (OFT) as the exclusive bargaining representative at respective schools. OEA acted as the bargaining representative at the Sembach School, whereas OFT represented the teachers at Kaiserslautern, Ramstein, Mannheim and other schools within District III.

5. On June 6, 1975, at approximately 9:30 a.m. Dr. Mason telephoned to John C. Shurtleff, a class II teacher - principal at Weirhof and husband of the Complainant herein and informed Shurtleff that he had been selected for a promotion as a GS-11 Assistant Principal at Schweinfurt Elementary Junior High School. Upon being asked if he were interested in the promotion and transfer, Shurtleff replied in the affirmative and inquired whether his wife, Complainant herein could also be transferred. Mason said that could be easily arranged and suggested Shurtleff contact Prince in that regard. Whereupon Shurtleff called Prince, related the offer made to him, and inquired if a position could be found for his wife as a counselor class II or an English teacher. Prince replied he did not know but would contact Ingram about it.

3/ This term included teacher-principals of schools, such as Dr. John C. Shurtleff, husband of Complainant.

6. Later in the morning of June 6, 1975 Prince called Ingram and asked if a vacancy existed for Heidemarie Shurtleff in the Schweinfurt area as a counselor class II or teacher of Junior High School English. Ingram asked his administrative officer, Tracy, who said there was no such vacany in District IV, and Ingram informed Prince no opening was available within commuting distance of Schweinfurt. Several days later Prince so advised John Shurtleff, and the latter remarked he would not move without his wife. Prince suggested Shurtleff take the job promotion; that he would continue to work with Ingram for a job for Heidemarie, and he felt sure a vacancy would occur in the summer. Shurtleff replied he could not transfer without a guarantee that his wife would also be moved.

Complainant spoke to both Prince and Mason on June 9, 1975 re her request for a transfer, and she mentioned such areas as Kitzingen, Bad Kissingen, Bamberg, Wuerzburg and Nuernberg. Both officials confirmed the fact that nothing was available 4/, and Mason stated he had to abide by the information obtained from the superintendent with respect to the existence of job vacancies.

7. Complainant Heidemarie Shurtleff commenced employment with DODDSEUR in August 1968. She taught at the secondary level at Ramstein Junior High School - english, german and social studies in the 7th, 8th and 9th grades. In 1970 Heidemarie was promoted and transferred as a class II counselor to Stuttgart Elementary School. In 1971 she was reassigned in the same position to Sembach where she continues to counsel children, parents, teachers, and regulate the educational program for Special Education Children. Complainant taught for two years at the University of Maryland and she taught service level courses in Psychology, Counseling, Mental Health and Curriculum.

4/ Complainant's testimony that Prince remarked nothing would be available for her is refuted by the superintendent. I am persuaded that Prince did not make such a declaration and thus foreclose all future possible job openings for Heidemarie.

8. In 1973 Complainant became active in OFT. She was involved in the election campaign in the Kaiserslautern - Ramstein area, helped to charter a local at Sembach, and was elected vice-president of said union. In 1974 she became a member of the OFT negotiating team which negotiated an agreement with Respondent, and subsequently Heidemarie along with others, engaged in consultation at the Directorate and District levels. She was selected in 1974 by the union to be a member of the Federal Women's Program Committee as its representative, and Complainant so served until the fall of 1975. Complainant takes no part in the union affairs at Sembach.

Record facts show that since 1973 there have been other teachers active in OFT, including a president, secretary, and treasurer. Complainant was unaware of any discriminatory action taken by management against any personnel who were active in the union or were union officials.

9. Following her election as vice-president of OFT in 1973, Complainant attended a PTA conference at Chiemsee. Dr. Olson, Community Coordinator at the Directorate, Karlsruhe, spoke to her thereat and said he noticed Heidemarie joined a union and became an elected official of a group that vilifies the administration.

10. In 1975 Timothy Kelley, Complainant's superintendent, told her that she could no longer be on the Federal Women's Program Committee as the union representative - that she could not attend the workshop in that capacity. Complainant had attended 4 or 5 meetings previously as a committee member and participated in planning for schools, curriculum, etc. There were representatives from 7-8 schools with the District serving on said committee.

Prince, who had welcomed Heidemarie to the committee when she was appointed thereto, testified, and I find, that a new committee was formed and Complainant was not appointed by OFT to serve thereon; that the FWPC is awaiting the selection of the union representative; and that if Heidemarie is designated by OFT as its representative, she would be entitled to serve as a member thereof.

11. A Joint Labor-Management Committee monthly meeting was held at Karlsruhe in the spring of 1975. At this meeting Peter J. Migliaccio 5/, who is an administrator, teacher -

5/ The complaint herein was filed by Migliaccio, on behalf of Heidemarie Shurtleff, as OFT, EEO representative and District union representative.

Assistant Principal, Naples Elementary School, Naples, Italy, discussed with Frantz what the latter considered to be excessive grievances and unfair labor practices in the Naples area. Migliaccio said he didn't consider them excessive; that they were just dissatisfied employees expressing their feelings, and that Naples isn't the only place where there are dissatisfied employees. Frantz replied there are a lot of dissatisfied employees wherever you find a union investigator - "for instance, like Heidemarie Shurtleff". He also inquired why they couldn't control her, stating Heidemarie was ruining the credibility of the union. Migliaccio replied she is not ruining it from "our point of view", and added that if she's the vice-president, people naturely go to an officer to seek advice. 6/

12. A workshop meeting of principals and administrators was held on July 7, 1975. Its purpose was to discuss the Order, unions, and how to handle union representatives who may be bothering principals. An unidentified individual setting behind John Shurtleff stated to Frantz, who presided over the workshop, they would be glad to stick the knife in the back of the union if he would back them up. Frantz testified, and I find, he did not hear that statement, and the record reflects he made no retort thereto. Shurtleff further testified someone said that the principals should remember they evaluate the union person coming to a particular school. There is no showing that Frantz or a management representative made this statement or that it was acknowledged by Respondent, and I do not impute it to the latter.

13. In respect to transfer of personnel, DODDSEUR has adhered to the practice and policy of trying to find a vacancy for the spouse of the administrator who may be offered a position at a different location. About 50% of the time no position is available for the spouse at the time an offer is made to the primary administrator, but nearly 6/ Frantz testified he had a conversation with Migliaccio at this meeting re the changes and grievances filed against Respondent, and that he was seeking to gain information to help resolve the problems. There was, however, no denial by Frantz of the statements attributed to him by Migliaccio. Accordingly, I credit the latter's version of this conversation.

all are placed at a later date. 7/ The record reflects that Respondent cannot accept an arrangement when the administrator offered a transfer insists it be made dependent upon a guarantee of a job move for his spouse. This is due to the fact that the transfer affects other moves and schools have to be staffed within a short period of time.

14. Respondent's records indicate that in June 1975 Complainant was eligible for the position of english teacher, secondary and junior high school level. Schwerd testified that a determination was made that Complainant did not qualify to teach social studies - that she did not have the necessary credentials since a minimum of 20 hours was required in this area, whereas Heidemarie had but 9 hours in History. 8/

15. The record reflects that in June 1975 there were several job openings at various locations for teachers in the school system of DODDSEUR. Thus, a counselor position was vacant at Nuernberg, as well as a dorm counselor thereat due to the transfer of such occupant to the daytime staff. Another opening occurred at Nuernberg High School when Janet Russell, a teacher of spanish and social studies, was replaced by Carolyn Duck who returned after one year's leave of absence.

16. Federal Personnel Manual Chapter 3-51, subchapter 4, section 4.4 defines a local cummuting area as including a population center and surrounding localities in which people live and reasonably can be expected to travel back and forth daily from home to work. No rule prevails which would be arbitrarily applied to the maximum limit of the commuting area. The determination of such area is governed by common practice, what can be reasonably expected based on availability and cost of public transportation, convenience or adequacy of highways, and travel time to and from work.

7/ Subsequent to the charge herein, or the complaint being filed, Complainant and her husband, John C. Shurtleff, were offered transfers to Frankfurt Junior High and Hanau High respectively in August 1975, and to Bahrain, an island in the Persian Gulf, in June 1976. Since both offers were made after the instant charge and complaint, circumstances surrounding the proposed transfers as well as refusal by the Shurtleffs are deemed immaterial and not determative. Accordingly, no further findings are made with respect thereto.

8/ Standards for the evaluation were based on DODDSEUR's requirements.

17. Testimony by Ingram reveals that he did not consider Complainant for job openings at Nuernberg because of the commuting time involved. The schools in Nuernberg are located in Furth and the distance between Schweinfurt and Nuernberg is 115 kilometers - 71 miles over secondary roads. Ingram did not view Complainant, in any event, as qualified for dorm counselor at Nuernberg since particular hours in Psyschology were required, nor did he deem her qualified to replace Janet Russell since she did not have the language background. The District III superintendent considered, as reasonably within the Schweinfurt area, teaching possibilities for Heidemarie as follows: Junior High, grades 1 through 9, and kindergarten at Bamberg; High School, grades 7 through 12, at Wuerzburg; and Elementary School, kindergarten through 8th grade, at Kitzingen. The record reflects, base on this superintendent's testimony, there were no vacancies in June 1975 at these three schools.

18. In respect to Bad Kissingen, Ingram did not consider Complainant for that area since it is a school of kindergarten through grade 6. Since he was told by Prince that Heidemarie was a counselor and teacher of english, social studies, this signified she should be placed somewhere between 7th and 12th grades.

19. No OFT schools are located in Ingrams's District IV, and the superintendent neither had contact with that union nor engaged in any consultation with them. Ingram testified, and I find, he was unaware of the fact that Complainant had been involved in the union election at Ansbach High School several years earlier, nor did he know of her union activities. 9/9/ The May-June issue of "The Overseas Schools Newspaper" contains a front page article of DODDSEUR-OFT negotiations with practices of several union negotiators, including Complainant. Ingram testified he was not sure whether he, read that issue. On the basis of the foregoing, I do not impute to Ingram knowledge of Complainant's union activities on behalf of OFT.

Conclusions

It is contended by Complainant that she was discriminatorily denied a transfer from Sembach in District III to a District IV school, as a teacher or counselor, on June 9, 1975 when her husband was offered a promotion and transfer from Weierhof (III) to Schweinfurt (IV) as an Assistant Principal. Complainant asserts the denial was due to her activities as vice-president of OFT, as well as her participation on behalf of the union in consultations or negotiations with management. She adverts to various statements made by a DODDSEUR official evincing anti-union animus, and further insists there were vacancies which she could have filled at other schools within the area to which John Shurtleff would have been assigned. Therefore, it is argued, the failure to effect a transfer for Complianant in June 1975 constituted discrimination under the Order in violation of 19(a)(1) and (2) thereof.

Section 19(a)(2) of the Order protects an employee from discriminatory treatment at the hands of an employer where it occurs as a result of the individual's union activities. Thus, a failure to promote an employee was held violative of the aforesaid section of the Order when the employer permitted an employee's activities as union steward to play a role in determining her fitness for such promotion. Department of the Army, U.S. Army Infantry Center, CPO, Fort Benning, Georgia, A/SLMR No. 515. In each instance, as in the case at bar, the issue as to whether unionism played a part in management's conduct toward an employee is largely factual in nature. Thus, a resolution of such issue requires a careful examination of the facts at hand and a weighing of the relevant evidence in regard thereto.

In support of his contention, Complainant's representative cites two cases in which, it is averred, the Assistant Secretary found a violation of Section 19(a)(2) of the Order based on allegedly parallel situations: Department of Defense, National Guard, Texas Air National Guard, A/SLMR No. 336; Environmental Protection Agency, Perrine Primate Lab, A/SLMR No. 133. In the former case the Assistant Secretary found he had no jurisdiction to decide whether an employee was denied reenlistment for discriminatory reasons. He concluded that since the individual followed an appeals procedure, the issue could have been raised therein - and hence the matter was barred by Section 19(d) of the Order.

The Environmental Protection case, supra, involved acts of harassment and intimidation directed toward the president of the union as a reprisal for intervening in an administrative leave problem of another individual. The discriminatee's union activities were restricted, and she received disparate treatment at the hands of management.

An analysis of the record herein convinces me that the instant case is distinguishable from the Environmental Protection case, and that there is a substantial difference between the two factual presentations. In the cited case the individual's union activities were a focal point of concern to the employer, and resulted in her receiving warnings about them. There is no showing herein that Complainant's activities as vice-president of the OFT local were ever restricted, curtailed, or hampered in any way. Moreover, other teachers held official positions in that union and were as active as Heidemarie Shurtleff. Nevertheless, it does not appear that Respondent reprimanded or intimidated those individuals, or discriminated against them in any manner. No evidence exists to show that Complainant was treated disparately or singled out by DODDSEUR for reprimands, warnings, or censure, due to her postion with OFT as its representative.

Reference is made in the record to comments by unidentified individuals at a workshop meeting on July 7, 1975 of principals and administrators held for the purpose of dealing with the union representatives. There were certain voluntary statements made by several of those in attendance, i.e. that they would be glad to stick the knife in the back of the union if management would support them. Record facts do not reveal that Frantz, who conducted the meeting, heard the remark or that he in any way either adopted or concurred in the statement. Accordingly, I do not hold Respondent responsible for that utterance or similar comments, made by other individuals in attendance.

Complainant testified she was not allowed to continue as a member of the Federal Women's Program Committee in 1975 as a result of her principal, Timothy Kelley, telling her she could not attend as a union representative. While such a restriction by management might tend generally to support a discriminatory motive toward this employee, the record discloses that a new committee had been formed and OFT had not yet selected its designee. Thus, I am persuaded that any inference of discrimination in this regard is rebutted by the unrefuted explanation given by Prince as to why Heidemarie was told not to attend as the union representative.

Certain statements were also made by Frantz in the spring of 1975, at a Joint Labor-Management meeting, re the existence of dissatisfied employees in view of Complainant's being a union instigator. At this meeting Frantz also asked union representative Migliaccio why they couldn't control Heidemarie, and remarked she was ruining the union. Under certain circumstances reference by management to an employee as a "union instigator" could well give rise to a conclusion that such remarks manifested an illegal motive for any subsequent action taken toward such employee. In the instant matter, however, Heidemarie had been active for several years and dealt with management in negotiations. Nevertheless, there is no evidence of any retaliation directed toward her because of her union activities. Moreover, these remarks were not made by the District IV superintendent who, as the record reveals, had no knowledge of Complainant's unionism. Accordingly, and though such a statement is not to be condoned, I do not find it to be sufficiently probative of discriminatory motivation, especially in view of the explanations recited for the failure to offer Heidemarie a transfer to accompany her husband in June 1975. 10/

Past practice and experience shows that in 50% of the instances where a job offer is made to the primary administrator, no vacancy exists at the time for the spouse so that both can be transferred together. Thus, the absence of a job opening for Complainant in District IV, at the time her husband was selected for a promotion and transfer to Schweinfurt, is not deemed unusual or indicative of any disparate treatment toward Heidemarie Shurtleff. However, it is argued that there were vacancies 11/ in District IV which Complainant was qualified to fill, and the failure to appoint her was traceable to a discriminatory motive.

10/ See Department of the Air Force, 439 2d Aerospace Support Group, Vandenberg Air Force Base, California, A/SLMR No. 537. In the cited case it was held that comments re filing of charges by the union president, and query as to what could be done to stop it, were not coercive or violative of 19(a)(1).

11/ The record reveals that, at times, some teachers may learn of impending moves by other teachers which could create vacancies in particular areas. Since these are not officially communicated to management and not listed as vacancies, I do not consider such "potential" openings as definite and available vacancies for Complainant or any other teacher in the employer's school system.

Record testimony establishes that there were some vacancies at Nuernberg in June 1975. The superintendent of District IV testified that he did not consider that a suitable location for Complainant since it was 70 miles distant from Schweinfurt - the area to which Heidemarie's husband would be reassigned. While Complainant may well have thought otherwise, I cannot deem Ingram's conclusion so unreasonable as to be labeled "pretextuous" under the circumstances. A distance of this nature may well be excluded from consideration in effecting a transfer of husband and wife. Moreover, the job opening for dorm counselor at Nuernberg required a particular number of hours in Psychology as a prerequisite. Thus, this job opening was, in the mind of Ingram, not suitable for Complainant in view of her qualification as a counselor.

The record is not supportive of an intent by the District IV superintendent to foreclose Complainant from being considered, in any event, for a transfer to his district. Consideration was given to possibilities in this regard for openings in Bamberg Junior High, Wuerzburg High, and Kitzingen elementary schools. No evidence controverts the lack if any vacancies thereat as testified to by Ingram. In respect to Bad Kissingen, the superintendent determined that since it was a school of kindergarten through grade 6, it lay out side the scope of Complainant's interest and background - Junior High or Secondary schools.

The foregoing constrains me to conclude that, contrary to the contention that Heidemarie was not considered for any transfer from Sembach, attempts were made to locate an opening for her in June 1975 to accompany her husband; that DODDSEUR did not hermetically seal its mind to the granting of a transfer to Complainant in retribution for any of her actions as a union adherent on behalf of OFT. Had there been continual denials or refusals by Respondent to effect a transfer for this teacher, one might be more than suspicious - and, along with anti-union utterance, such conduct could well give rise to an inference of discrimination. In the case at bar, the record reflects that in nearly all instances of this nature openings do ultimately occur for the spouse. However, Dr. John Shurtleff did not see fit to accept the job promotion and await the outcome of this likelihood. While his refusal to transfer without his wife may be understandable, it does not lie with Complainant to characterize DODDSEUR's inability to find a vacancy for her at that precise time period as discriminatory under the Order. Contrariwise, I am persuaded, on the basis of the foregoing, that there were no vacancies on June 5, 1975 for which Complainant was qualified in District IV that would have been within reasonable commuting distance from Schweinfurt. In any event, and quite apart from the conclusions in this regard, I would be reluctant to substitute my judgment for that of the supervisors in District IV concerning the foregoing. Accordingly, and in light of my determination that no illegal motive was responsible for a failure to transfer Complainant with her husband, I conclude that Respondent did not violate Section 19(a)(1) and (2) of the Order.

RECOMMENDATION

Upon the basis of the foregoing findings and conclusions it is hereby recommended that the complaint herein be dismissed in its entirety.

PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE,
3245th AIRBASE GROUP, UNITED STATES
AIR FORCE
A/SLMR No. 904

This case involved a petition for amendment of certification (AC) filed by the National Federation of Federal Employees, Professional Local 1384 (Petitioner) seeking to amend its certification to reflect the result of a reorganization. The reorganization, effected by the Air Force Systems Command, essentially removed two divisions intact from the Air Force Cambridge Research Laboratory and created the Deputy for Electronic Technology, placing it under different first line operational direction. The remaining divisions became the Air Force Geophysics Laboratory. The Petitioner claimed that the reorganization had no more effect on its exclusive unit other than to require a change in its unit designation from Air Force Cambridge Research Laboratory to Deputy for Electronic Technology and Air Force Geophysics Laboratory.

The National Association of Government Employees, Local R1-8 (NAGE) and the National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 975 (NFFE) intervened in the proceeding contending that certain of the employees of the Petitioner's unit accreted to their units as a result of the reorganization. The Activity expressed no objections to the amendment sought by the Petitioner.

The Assistant Secretary agreed with the amendment sought by the Petitioner. Thus, he found that the employees of the two organizational entities continued after the reorganization to share a clear and identifiable community of interest separate and distinct from other employees of the Activity. In this regard, he noted that subsequent to the reorganization the employees of both organizations continued to perform the same job functions, pursuant to the same mission, in the same location, with no substantial change in working conditions, immediate supervision, job contact or personnel policies. Further both organizations continued under the same overall operational command and enjoy a degree of interchange of employees as a result of an administrative memorandum providing for the exchange of services. Moreover, he found that the existing bargaining unit continued to promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations as the employees continued to enjoy common personnel policies and practices and the same areas of consideration for reductions-in-force and promotions, and the Activity Commander continued to exercise substantial authority for labor relations and personnel matters affecting such employees.

Accordingly, and noting the long history of effective labor relations in the unit, as well as the fact the Activity did not oppose the amendment sought by the Petitioner, the Assistant Secretary found that the unit certification should be amended to reflect the change in designation sought by the Petitioner.

DECISION AND ORDER AMENDING CERTIFICATION

Upon a petition duly filed under Section 6 of Executive Order 11491, as amended, a hearing was held before Hearing Officer William Koffel. The Hearing Officer's rulings made at the hearing are free from prejudicial error and are hereby affirmed.

Upon the entire record in this case, including briefs filed by the National Federation of Federal Employees, Professional Local 1384, herein called the Petitioner, the National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 975, herein called NFFE, and the National Association of Government Employees, Local R1-8, herein called NAGE, the Assistant Secretary finds:

1/ The name of the Activity appears as amended at the hearing.

2/ The name of the Petitioner appears as amended at the hearing.

The Petitioner filed the subject petition seeking to amend its certification to reflect the result of a reorganization affecting its unit, which it maintained was merely a change in the unit designation from "Air Force Cambridge Research Laboratory" to "Air Force Geophysics Laboratory and Deputy for Electronic Technology." 3/ The NAGE and the NFFE intervened, contending that certain of the employees in the Petitioner's unit, as a consequence of the reorganization, accreted to their respective units. 4/ The Activity, while remaining neutral at the hearing, took the position that it had no objection to the amendment sought by the Petitioner.

The Hanscom Air Force Base Complex (Complex), where the unit in question is located, is under the administrative direction of the Commanding Officer of the 3245th Air Base Group. The latter is under the operational direction of the Commanding Officer of the Electronic Systems Division (ESD), which is the major component of the Complex. Prior to January 1, 1976, the Air Force Cambridge Research Laboratory (AFCRL), which was under the overall supervision of the Air Force Systems Command, was the other major component of the Hanscom Complex, employing approximately 1000 of the 2800 civilian employees located at the Complex. While both the ESD and the AFCRL were under the operational command of the Air Force Systems Command, the record reflects that there was little or no interaction or job contact between employees of the ESD and the AFCRL with respect to their missions or day-to-day activities. In this regard, the primary mission of the AFCRL was basic research, while the mission of the ESD is the development and implementation of technological systems for the Air Force.

Effective January 1, 1976, two divisions of the AFCRL, which employ approximately 200 employees, were redesignated as the Deputy for Electronic Technology (DET) by the Air Force Systems Command, and were assigned to the operational command of the Rome Air Development Center

3/ The unit for which the Petitioner was certified as the exclusive representative on October 8, 1970, included: "All nonsupervisory General Schedule, and nonsupervisory professional employees of the Air Force Cambridge Research Laboratories serviced by the Central Civilian Personnel Office, L.G. Hanscom Field, Bedford, Mass.; excluding management officials, supervisors, security guards and Federal personnel employees except those in a purely clerical capacity."

4/ The NAGE is the exclusive representative of all Wage Grade employees serviced by the Civilian Personnel Office, Hanscom Air Force Base, and all nonprofessional General Schedule employees serviced by the Civilian Personnel Office, Hanscom Air Force Base, excluding those represented by the Petitioner. NFFE Local 975 is the exclusive representative of all professional General Schedule employees serviced by the Civilian Personnel Office, Hanscom Air Force Base, excluding, among others, those employees represented by the Petitioner.

(RADC) located at Griffiss Air Force Base, New York. 5/ The purpose of the redesignation was to place the two divisions of the AFCRL involved primarily in command control and communication development and application research under the direction of the RADC, which has this technological area as its primary mission. In addition, effective January 15, 1976, the remaining divisions of the AFCRL were redesignated as the Air Force Geophysics Laboratory (AFGL), which continued under the same operational command.

The record reflects that the only change resulting from the January 1 and 15 redesignations was that the DET and the AFGL now report to the Air Force Systems Command through different operational chains of command, and that there was little change in their day-to-day activities. Thus, all of the employees of both the DET and the AFGL continue, after their respective redesignations, to perform the same work, in the same location, under the same supervision, and continue to have little job related contact with other Complex employees. Most of the employees of the DET and AFGL work in the same buildings and use the same laboratory facilities, which are separated from other facilities of the Hanscom Complex. Moreover, through a memorandum signed by both the DET Director and the AFGL Director, at the direction of the Air Force Systems Command, the AFGL agreed to provide the necessary laboratory support services to the DET in return for the DET providing the AFGL with certain manpower.

In addition, the record reveals that, after the redesignations, the Complex Commander continues to exercise full authority for personnel and related administrative services provided to the DET and AFGL through the Central Civilian Personnel Office located at the Complex, including the authority under Air Force Regulations for the negotiation of labor-management agreements, and acting as the final step in any negotiated grievance procedure. Further, the area of consideration for both reductions-in-force and merit promotions for employees of both the DET and the AFGL continues to be base-wide under current Air Force Regulations.

Based on all the foregoing circumstances, I find that the employees of the DET and the AFGL continue, after the administrative reorganization, to share a clear and identifiable community of interest separate and distinct from other employees of the Complex. Thus, the evidence establishes that subsequent to the reorganization the employees of both organizations continued to perform the same job functions, pursuant to the same mission, in the same location, with no substantial change in their working conditions, immediate supervision and job contacts or personnel policies. In addition, as a consequence of the memorandum signed by both organizations, there is a degree of interchange of personnel between the DET and the AFGL and both the DET and the AFGL continued, subsequent to the reorganization, under the same overall operational command.

5/ The RADC is under the operational direction of the Commanding Officer of the ESD and under the administrative direction of the Commanding Officer of Griffiss Air Force Base.

Moreover, I find that the existing bargaining unit continues to promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. Thus, all unit employees continue to enjoy common personnel policies and practices, the same area of consideration for both reductions-in-force and promotions, and the Complex Commander continues to exercise substantial authority for labor relations and personnel matters affecting such employees.

Accordingly, and noting also the long history of effective labor relations in the unit, as well as the position of the Activity, which is not in opposition to the amendment sought herein, I find that the Petitioner's existing certification should be amended to include all nonsupervisory professional and nonprofessional General Schedule employees of the Deputy for Electronic Technology and the Air Force Geophysics Laboratory serviced by the Central Civilian Personnel Office, Hanscom Air Force Base, Bedford, Massachusetts.

ORDER

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the unit description sought to be amended herein for which the National Federation of Federal Employees, Professional Local 1384 was certified as exclusive representative on October 8, 1970, be, and it hereby is, amended to read: All professional and nonprofessional General Schedule employees of the Deputy for Electronic Technology and the Air Force Geophysics Laboratory serviced by the Central Civilian Personnel Office, Hanscom Air Force Base, Bedford, Massachusetts, excluding management officials, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, security guards and supervisors as defined in the Order.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR
ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS
SUMMARY OF DECISION, ORDER AND DIRECTION OF ELECTION
OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

DEFENSE CONTRACT ADMINISTRATION
SERVICES REGION,
BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS
A/SLMR No. 905

This case involved two RA petitions filed by the Defense Contract Administration Services Region, Boston, Massachusetts, (DCASR) which, in effect, sought a determination by the Assistant Secretary as to the impact of a reorganization on certain units of exclusive recognition represented by the National Association of Government Employees, Locals R1-76 and R1-181 (NAGE).

As a result of a reorganization in November 1976, the Defense Contract Services District, Hartford, Connecticut, (DCASD), was disestablished and replaced by two Defense Contract Administration Services Management Areas, (DCASMAs) in Hartford and in Bridgeport. Prior to the reorganization, the DCASD, Hartford, was comprised of four Defense Contract Administration Services Offices (DCASOs), including an area office at Bridgeport exclusively represented, along with the Hartford District Office employees, by the NAGE Local R1-76, and three offices at plant sites, DCASO, Avco, exclusively represented by the NAGE Local R1-181, DCASO, Hamilton Standard, represented by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1906 (AFGE), and DCASO, General Electric, Burlington, exclusively represented by the NAGE Local R1-170.

The DCASR took the position that the 1976 reorganization changed the character and scope of the exclusively recognized units so as to render them inappropriate, and that, as a result of the reorganization, there now existed two separate units, DCASMA, Hartford and DCASMA, Bridgeport. The NAGE Locals R1-76 and R1-181, did not object to the unit descriptions as defined by the DCASR. However, they disagreed as to whether Local R1-76 is the exclusively recognized representative in both DCASMAs.

In Case No. 31-10642(RA) the Assistant Secretary found that the unit exclusively represented by the NAGE Local R1-76 at the Hartford, DCASD, while diminished in personnel and geographic area, continued, after the reorganization, to remain appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition. He noted that the employees in the Hartford, DCASMA, continued to share a clear and identifiable community of interest and that the unit will continue to promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations by establishing a unit structure which coincides with the Activity's command structure and which constitutes the level at which agreements may be negotiated. In the Assistant Secretary's view, the reorganization did not essentially alter either the mission or type of duties performed. He noted that personnel policies and practices, including promotions, classifications and training, are still established within regional headquarters. He also noted that bargaining unit employees continue to be serviced by the DCASR Personnel Office concerning personnel matters and labor relations guidance continues to flow from DCASR headquarters. Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary ordered that the petition in Case No. 31-10642(RA) be dismissed.

In regard to the petition in Case No. 31-10651(RA) covering the newly established DCASMA, Bridgeport, the Assistant Secretary noted that after the reorganization the DCASO, Bridgeport, physically moved to the offices of the DCASO, Avco, which was disestablished, and they were designated as the DCASMA, Bridgeport. He found that the employees of the former DCASO, Bridgeport, exclusively represented by NAGE Local R1-76, and the employees of the former DCASO, Avco, exclusively represented by NAGE Local R1-181, have become so intermingled within the DCASMA, Bridgeport, that neither unit, DCASO, Avco, nor DCASO, Bridgeport, is separately appropriate. The Assistant Secretary found that all the employees of the DCASMA, Bridgeport, perform their duties pursuant to policies and procedures established by the DCASR, Boston, and they are serviced by the DCASR Personnel Office. He noted that the employees involved enjoy common supervision, are subject to the same personnel policies and working conditions, perform their duties within the same geographic area and share the same areas of consideration for promotions and reduction-in-force procedures. Under these circumstances he found that they shared a clear and identifiable community of interest separate and distinct from other employees of DCASR, Boston. He also found that the petitioned for unit of all the employees of the DCASMA, Bridgeport, would promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations by reducing unit fragmentation and by establishing a bargaining unit which coincides with the Activity's organizational structure and which constitutes the level at which agreements may be negotiated. Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary ordered an election in the unit found appropriate.

DECISION, ORDER AND DIRECTION OF ELECTION

Upon petitions duly filed under Section 6 of Executive Order 11491, as amended, a consolidated hearing 1/ was held before Hearing Officer

1/ The American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1906, hereinafter called AFGE Local 1906, petitioned for an election [Case No. 31-10614(RO)] in a unit of Nuclear Core Division employees of the (Continued)

Carol C. Blackburn. The Hearing Officer's rulings made at the hearing are free from prejudicial error and are hereby affirmed.

Upon the entire record in these cases, the Assistant Secretary finds:

The Defense Contract Administration Services Region, Boston, Massachusetts, hereinafter called DCASR or Activity-Petitioner, filed RA petitions seeking a determination by the Assistant Secretary with respect to the effect of a reorganization on certain existing exclusively recognized units. In Case No. 31-10642(RA), the Activity-Petitioner contends that certain exclusively recognized units are now inappropriate as a result of a reorganization in which the Defense Contract Administration Services District, Hartford, Connecticut, hereinafter called DCASD, Hartford, was disestablished as a separate administrative entity, and which resulted in, among other things, the establishment of two separate Defense Contract Administration Services Management Areas, hereinafter called DCASMA(s), in Hartford and Bridgeport, Connecticut. 2/ In Case No. 31-10651(RA), the Activity-Petitioner contends that as a result of the aforementioned reorganization, the exclusively recognized unit at the Defense Contract Administration Services Office at the Avco Corporation facilities, Stratford, Connecticut, hereinafter called DCASO, Avco, represented by the National Association of Government Employees, Local R1-181, hereinafter called NAGE Local R1-181, has lost its organizational identity and is no longer appropriate. Under the current circumstances, the Activity-Petitioner contends that the Avco unit employees should now be included within the DCASMA, Bridgeport, unit.

1/ Quality Assurance Directorate of the Defense Contract Administration Services Region, Boston, Massachusetts, which case was originally consolidated for hearing with the above numbered RA petitions. Prior to the hearing, AFGE Local 1906 and the Activity entered into a consent agreement for an election and the case was severed from the hearing in this matter.

2/ The Activity-Petitioner contends that the appropriate units are as follows:

> All professional and nonprofessional employees of the Defense Contract Administration Services Management Area (DCASMA), Hartford, Connecticut, excluding management officials, confidential employees, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity and supervisors as defined in the Order.
> All professional and nonprofessional employees of the Defense Contract Administration Services Management Area (DCASMA), Bridgeport, Connecticut, excluding management officials, confidential employees, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity and supervisors as defined in the Order.

DCASR, Boston, is one of nine regions of the Defense Logistics Agency, formerly the Defense Supply Agency. It provides contract administration services in support of the Department of Defense and other Federal agencies, and encompasses a geographic area which includes the states of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut and New York (except New York City and adjoining counties). The DCASR is headed by a Regional Commander, a military officer, whose office is located at the DCASR headquarters in Boston. Reporting to the Commander and located at headquarters are several offices and directorates which are responsible for planning and monitoring all regional operations. The offices are concerned primarily with matters regarding planning, administration, contract compliance and security problems and the directorates oversee matters regarding contract administration, production, and quality assurance.

Prior to the reorganization of November 1, 1976, there were two Defense Contract Administration Services Districts (DCASD) within the DCASR, Boston. They were the DCASD, Rochester, and the DCASD, Hartford, 3/ the subject of the instant petitions. The DCASD, Hartford, encompassed a geographic area which included the states of Connecticut and Vermont, and areas of western Massachusetts and eastern New York. Within the DCASD, Hartford, were four Defense Contract Administration Services Offices, (DCASO), including an area office at Bridgeport, which was within NAGE Local R1-76's unit, and three offices located at plant sites--DCASO, Avco, at Stratford Connecticut, 4/ DCASO, Hamilton Standard, at Windsor Locks, Connecticut, 5/ and DCASO, General Electric, Burlington, at Burlington,

3/ The record reveals that on January 11, 1968, the National Association of Government Employees, Local R1-76, hereinafter called NAGE Local R1-76, was recognized as the exclusive representative for a unit of all eligible nonprofessional employees under the jurisdiction of DCASD, Hartford, with the exception of DCASO, Avco, represented by NAGE Local R1-181, and a DCASO, at the Hamilton Standard facilities represented since October 1971, by AFGE Local 1906. The record reflects that the parties have entered into negotiated agreements in the past and that a new agreement is awaiting renegotiation pending the disposition of the instant case. In addition, prior to the reorganization, the DCASD, Hartford, included the DCASO, General Electric, Burlington, represented exclusively by NAGE Local R1-170 since 1969.

4/ As indicated above, the record reflects that on November 5, 1969, NAGE Local R1-181 was granted exclusive recognition for a unit of all eligible employees of DCASO, Avco, and that it has a currently effective negotiated agreement with the Activity covering the unit employees.

5/ The record indicates that pursuant to the reorganization, the DCASO, Hamilton Standard, is no longer an independent entity but is now only a resident branch of DCASMA, Hartford. All of the employees, except Vermont.

Subsequent to the reorganization, the record reveals that the DCASD, Hartford, was disestablished and replaced by the two DCASMAs, Hartford and Bridgeport. In addition, the former three-tier chain of command--(1) the DCASR, (2) the DCASD, and (3) the DCASO--has become a two-tiered administrative structure consisting of the DCASMA's in Hartford and Bridgeport and a Defense Contract Administration Services Plant Representative Office (DCASPRO) in the General Electric Plant in Burlington, Vermont, which all report directly to the DCASR. 6/ The evidence indicates that the DCASMA's and DCASPRO are, like the DCASR, commanded by military officers, and perform essentially the day-to-day operations of the DCASR within their assigned geographic areas.

The Activity-Petitioner contends essentially that the bargaining units should coincide with the structure of the secondary field activities, the DCASMA, Hartford, and the DCASMA, Bridgeport. The NAGE Locals R1-76 and R1-181 do not object to the unit descriptions as defined by the DCASR. However, they disagree as to whether NAGE Local R1-76 is the exclusively recognized representative in both DCASMAs. NAGE Local R1-76 contends that its bargaining unit is still appropriate, that it is the exclusive representative of both DCASMAs and that NAGE Local R1-181 has lost its separate identity at Avco. On the other hand, NAGE Local R1-181 argues that it still maintains the support of a majority of DCASMA, Bridgeport, employees and should continue to represent them.

The record reveals that, as a result of the reorganization, there has been a substantial decrease in both personnel and the geographic area of responsibility for the former DCASD, Hartford, now DCASMA, Hartford, with 5/ the Chief and his secretary, remain at the same duty stations performing the same duties; however, the Chiefs of each of the three functional entities of quality assurance, production support and contract administration now report to their respective DCASMA Division Chief in Hartford. The DCASR had filed an RA petition for the Hamilton Standard unit in view of the reorganization; however, the petition was severed from the instant proceeding pending the disposition of a unit consolidation petition filed by the AFGE for all its units in DCASR, Boston.

6/ As the DCASPRO, General Electric, Burlington, is independent of the two DCASMAs and reports directly to the DCASR, Boston, it was not made subject to the instant RA petitons.

a corresponding transfer of personnel and geographic responsibility to the DCASMA, Bridgeport. Prior to November 1, 1976, DCASD, Hartford, employed approximately 690 persons. 7/ Subsequent to the reorganization, approximately 384 employees remain at the DCASMA, Hartford, and approximately 201 employees are now employed by the DCASMA, Bridgeport. In addition, the record shows that the DCASMA, Bridgeport, now has the responsibility for contract administration in southern Connecticut and added responsibilities in contract employment compliance and in industrial security which the former Bridgeport area office did not have.

With respect to the mission and duties performed by the DCASMA, Hartford, employees, the record reflects that the reorganization has not, except for the change in its geographic area of responsibility, essentially altered either the mission or type of duties performed. Those employees previously employed at the Hartford Office, for the most part, remain in the same location and continue to perform the same duties under the same immediate supervisors. Further, they are subject to the same personnel policies and practices established by the DCASR, Boston, such as promotions, classifications and training, and there have not been significant changes in the area of consideration for promotions and the competitive areas for reduction-in-force procedures. Moreover, the record indicates that under DCASMA, Hartford, bargaining unit employees continue to be serviced by the DCASR Personnel Office concerning personnel matters 8/ and primary responsibility and guidance in labor relations matters continue to flow from the DCASR headquarters. However, the record reflects that while DCASR, Boston, provides guidance on labor relations policy and provides Section 15 approval of all negotiated agreements, DCASMA and DCASPRO Commanders have been delegated considerable authority for administering labor relations policies within their commands and are free to negotiate agreements and consult with the exclusive bargaining representative.

7/ Prior to the reorganization, DCASD, Hartford, was comprised of 11 military officers and some 679 civilian employees who were employed as follows:

Hartford Office - 478 employees
DCASO, Bridgeport - 160 employees
DCASO, Avco - 46 employees
DCASO, Hamilton Standard - 34 employees
DCASO, G.E. Burlington - 22 employees

8/ There is an individual personnel specialist assigned to handle personnel matters for all of the DCASR secondary field activities but no on-site personnel office except at regional headquarters.

Under all of the above circumstances, I find that the RA petition in Case No. 31-10642(RA) which seeks an election in the DCASMA, Hartford, should be dismissed. Subsequent to the reorganization, the DCASMA, Hartford, employees remaining from the DCASD, Hartford, continue, in general, to fulfill the same duties with no substantial change in job functions, immediate supervision, or terms and conditions of employment as the former DCASD, Hartford, employees. Thus, I find that the former, DCASD, Hartford, unit, exclusively represented by the NAGE Local R1-76, although diminished, in part, by the loss of some former unit employees, and geographic responsibility, continues as DCASMA, Hartford, to remain an identifiable and viable bargaining unit with a clear and identifiable community of interest. Additionally, I find that such a unit will continue to promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations by establishing a unit structure which coincides with the Activity's command structure and which constitutes the level at which agreements may be negotiated, thus establishing clear parameters for negotiations. Accordingly, I find that the NAGE Local R1-76's unit located in the DCASMA, Hartford, remains appropriate, albeit reduced, and, therefore, I shall order that the instant RA petition be dismissed. 9/

The evidence establishes that, pursuant to the reorganization, the former DCASO, Bridgeport, was assigned additional personnel and responsibilities and was redesignated as the DCASMA, Bridgeport, under a Commander reporting directly to the DCASR, Boston. The record further reveals that the DCASMA, Bridgeport, physically moved to the offices of the DCASO, Avco, which was disestablished. The result of this change was that the employees of DCASO, Avco, formerly represented by NAGE Local R1-181, and the employees of DCASO, Bridgeport, formerly represented by NAGE Local R1-76, now share common supervision and have become so physically intermingled in the newly established DCASMA, Bridgeport, (now located at Avco) that neither the DCASO, Avco, unit nor the DCASO, Bridgeport, unit is separately appropriate.

All of the employees of the DCASMA, Bridgeport, perform their duties pursuant to policies and procedures established by the DCASR, Boston, and under a Commander whose authority is co-equal to that of the Commander, DCASMA, Hartford. They are serviced by the DCASR Personnel Office and guidance in labor relations matters is similarly provided by regional headquarters. The DCASMA, Bridgeport, Commander has, as does his DCASMA, Hartford, counterpart, the authority to negotiate agreements with the exclusive bargaining representative, subject to Section 15 approval at the DCASR. The record reflects that there is no evidence of any degree of interchange between employees of the DCASMA, Bridgeport, and other commands within the DCASR and that certain of the employees of the newly established DCASMA have changed areas of consideration for promotion and reduction-in-force procedures coinciding with the new administrative organization. Moreover, the evidence establishes that the Bridgeport employees enjoy common supervision, are subject to the same personnel policies and similar working conditions, and perform their duties within the same geographic area. Under these circumstances, I find that the employees of DCASMA, Bridgeport, share a clear and identifiable community of interest separate and distinct from other employees of DCASR, Boston.

9/ While it has been found that the exclusively recognized unit herein continued, after the reorganization, to remain appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition, it is noted that such a finding would not preclude the filing of an appropriate petition for amendment of recognition in order to conform the recognition to the existing circumstances.

Further, I find that the petitioned for unit of all the DCASMA, Bridgeport, employees will promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations by reducing unit fragmentation and by establishing a bargaining unit which coincides with the Activity's organizational structure and which constitutes the level at which agreements may be negotiated. Additionally, the petitioned for unit would foster a better bargaining relationship by enabling the Commander, DCASMA, Bridgeport, who is responsible for the negotiations of agreements in the DCASMA, to administer a single negotiated agreement and to negotiate with a single labor organization.

Based on the foregoing, I find that the following employees of the Activity-Petitioner may constitute a unit appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under Executive Order 11491, as amended:

> All professional and nonprofessional employees, of DCASMA, Bridgeport, excluding management officials, confidential employees, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, and supervisors as defined in the Order.

As stated above, the unit found appropriate includes professional employees. However, the Assistant Secretary is prohibited by Section 10(b)(4) of the Order from including professional employees in a unit with nonprofessional employees unless a majority of the professional employees votes for inclusion in such a unit. Accordingly, the desires of the professional employees as to inclusion in a unit with nonprofessional employees must be ascertained. I shall, therefore, direct that separate elections be conducted in the following groups:

Voting Group (a): All professional employees of the DCASMA, Bridgeport, excluding all nonprofessional employees, management officials, confidential employees, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, and supervisors as defined in the Order.

Voting Group (b): All nonprofessional employees of the DCASMA, Bridgeport, excluding all professional employees, management officials, confidential employees, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, and supervisors as defined in the Order.

Employees in the nonprofessional voting group (b) will be polled whether they desire to be represented for the purpose of exclusive recognition by Local R1-76, National Association of Government Employees; by Local R1-181, National Association of Government Employees; or by neither of these labor organizations.

Employees in the professional voting group (a) will be asked two questions on their ballots: (1) whether or not they wish to be included with the nonprofessional employees for the purpose of exclusive recognition, and (2) whether they wish to be represented for the purpose of exclusive recognition by Local R1-76, National Association of Government Employees; by Local R1-181, National Association of Government Employees; or by neither of these labor organizations. In the event that a majority of the valid votes of voting group (a) are cast in favor of inclusion in the same unit as nonprofessional employees, the ballots of voting group (a) shall be combined with those of voting group (b).

Unless a majority of the valid votes of voting group (a) are cast for inclusion in the same unit as nonprofessional employees, they will be taken to have indicated their desire to constitute a separate unit, and an appropriate certification will be issued by the Area Administrator indicating whether Local R1-76, National Association of Government Employees; Local R1-181, National Association of Government Employees; or neither of these labor organizations was selected by the professional employee unit.

The unit determination in the subject case is based, in part, then, upon the results of election among the professional employees. However, I will now make the following findings in regard to the appropriate unit:

1. If a majority of the professional employees does not vote for inclusion in the same unit as the nonprofessional employees, I find the following units appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition within the meaning of Section 10 of the Order:

(a) All professional employees of the DCASMA, Bridgeport, excluding all nonprofessional employees, management officials, confidential employees, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, and supervisors as defined in the Order.

(b) All nonprofessional employees of the DCASMA, Bridgeport, excluding all professional employees, management officials, confidential employees, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, and supervisors as defined in the Order.

2. If a majority of the professional employees votes for inclusion in the same unit as the nonprofessional employees, I find the following unit appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition within the meaning of Section 10 of the Order:

> All professional and nonprofessional employees of the DCASMA, Bridgeport, excluding management officials, confidential employees, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, and supervisors as defined in the Order.

ORDER

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the petition in Case No. 31-10642(RA) be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

DIRECTION OF ELECTION

An election by secret ballot shall be conducted among employees in the voting groups described above, as early as possible, but not later than 60 days from the date below. The appropriate Area Administrator shall supervise the elections, subject to the Assistant Secretary's Regulations. Eligible to vote are those in the voting groups who were employed during the payroll period immediately preceding the date below, including employees who did not work during that period because they were out ill, or on vacation or on furlough, including those in the military service who appear in person at the polls. Ineligible to vote are employees who have quit or were discharged for cause since the designated payroll period and who have not been rehired or reinstated before the election date. Those eligible shall vote whether they desire to be represented for the purpose of exclusive recognition by Local R1-76, National Association of Government Employees; by Local R1-181, National Association of Government Employees; or by neither of these labor organizations.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR
ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS
SUMMARY OF DECISION AND DIRECTION OF ELECTIONS
OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

BUREAU OF LAND MANAGEMENT, RIVERSIDE DISTRICT OFFICE AND DESERT PLAN STAFF,
RIVERSIDE, CALIFORNIA
A/SLMR No. 906

This case arose as a result of a petition filed by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1061 (AFGE) seeking an election in a unit of all professional and nonprofessional employees of the Riverside District Office and the California Desert Plan Staff (DPS) of the Bureau of Land Management. The Activity contended that the proposed unit was inappropriate because it would contain two separately identifiable units of employees who do not share a community of interest and that such a unit would not promote efficiency of agency operations and effective agency dealings. The Intervenor, the National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 119 (NFFE) asserted that its present unit composed of Riverside District nonprofessional employees was an appropriate bargaining unit.

The Assistant Secretary found that the unit petitioned for by the AFGE was inappropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition. In this regard, he noted that while the Riverside District Office and the DPS are both components of the California State Office, located in geographic proximity to each other, they have separate missions, different job classifications, do not enjoy integrated operations or job contacts, and do not experience significant transfer or interchange of personnel. Under these circumstances, the Assistant Secretary found that the unit sought by the AFGE lacked a clear and identifiable community of interest and, moreover, noting the authority and autonomy of the respective Directors of the District and the DPS, found that the proposed unit could not reasonably be expected to promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations.

However, the Assistant Secretary found that the employees of the District and the employees of the DPS, separately, would constitute units appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition. In this regard, the Assistant Secretary found that in each organizational component the respective employees enjoy a common mission, common supervision, have generally uniform job classifications, duties and functions, and enjoy common personnel policies and practices, and essentially similar working conditions. Under these circumstances, the Assistant Secretary found that the employees of the District and employees of the DPS, separately, share a clear and identifiable community of interest separate and distinct from each other and other state employees of the Bureau of Land Management. Moreover, noting the position of the Activity that each unit separately would constitute an appropriate unit and the fact that each Director has substantial personnel authority, the Assistant Secretary found that separate units would promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations.

Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary ordered elections in the units found appropriate.

DECISION AND DIRECTION OF ELECTIONS

Upon a petition duly filed under Section 6 of Executive Order 11491, as amended, a hearing was held before Hearing Officer Thomas R. Wilson. The Hearing Officer's rulings made at the hearing are free from prejudicial error and are hereby affirmed. 1/

Upon the entire record in this case, including briefs filed by the Activity and the Intervenor, the Assistant Secretary finds:

1. The labor organizations involved claim to represent certain employees of the Activity.

2. The Petitioner, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1061, herein called AFGE, seeks an election in a unit of all professional and nonprofessional employees of the Riverside District Office and the California Desert Plan Staff, excluding management officials, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, and supervisors as defined in the Order. The Activity contends that the proposed unit is inappropriate because it is composed of two separately identifiable units of employees who do not share a community of interest and that such a unit would not promote efficiency of agency operations and effective dealings. The Intervenor, National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 119, hereinafter called NFFE, asserts that its present unit, composed of all the Riverside District nonprofessional employees, is the appropriate bargaining unit. 2/

The Bureau of Land Management manages the national resource lands and their resources. It also administers the mineral resources connected with acquired lands and the submerged lands of the Outer Continental Shelf. The Bureau organization consists essentially of a headquarters in Washington, D. C. and one detached headquarters office having Bureau-wide support responsibilities for State, District, and Outer Continental Shelf offices. The Riverside District is one of six operational districts within the State of California and has the responsibility for administering approximately 9.5 million acres of Federal land within five Southern California counties. Due to its vast area, the Riverside District has four area offices, two of which are located within the District Office Building in Riverside, with the other two offices being located at Barstow and El Centro. 3/ The District has approximately 70 employees in the following 33 classifications: Maintenanceman, Soil Scientist, Biological Technician, Clerk Typist, Public Contract Specialist, Outdoor Recreation Planner, Cartographic Aid, Natural Resource Specialist, Dispatcher, Wildlife Biologist, Mining Engineer, Landscape Architect, Laborer, Warehouseman, Records Management Specialist, Range Conservationist, Accounts Maintenanceman, Information Specialist, Plan Physiologist, Botanist, Electronic Technician, Technical Publication Editor, Realty Specialist, Archaeologist, Geographer, Range Technician, Clk-Dict-Mach-Transcriber, Contract Representative, Geologist, Civil Engineering Technician, Voucher Examiner, Meteorologist, and Recreation Technician.

The District is supervised by a District Director who is the selecting official for all personnel hired by the District up to GS-9. The State Director is the selecting official for GS-11 and above. The District Director establishes local policy regarding personnel and labor relations for his District, but he has no authority over Desert Plan Staff (DPS) personnel.

The record reveals that the DPS is a special staff task force, responsible to the California State Director, whose mission is to prepare a long-range comprehensive plan for the allocation of land uses and resources within the California Desert, as required by the Federal Land Policy and

1/ At the hearing, the Activity requested a postponement of one week in order to gather and prepare evidence concerning the professional status of Range Conservationists and Outdoor Recreation Planners of the Riverside District Office. This request was denied by the Hearing Officer. In view of the fact that no evidence was introduced at the hearing with regard to these classifications, I will make no determination with regard to the professional status of the employees involved.

2/ The NFFE intervened solely on the basis of its exclusively recognized unit, and did not express an interest in representing the professional employees of the Riverside District or the professional and nonprofessional employees of the Desert Plan Staff.

3/ The sought unit includes all four area offices.

Management Act of 1976 (FLPMA). This plan must be completed by September 30, 1980. The DPS functions as an integrated operational unit and includes professional, technical, administrative and management personnel. At the time of the hearing, the Riverside District provided certain administrative services to the DPS; however, it is anticipated that such services will be discontinued or substantially modified when the DPS moves to separate quarters. 4/ The DPS is headed by a Desert Plan Director who receives policy direction and guidance from the State Director. Operational practices and procedures follow Bureau of Land Management Manual requirements unless deviations therefrom are approved by the State Director.

The DPS Director is the approving official for all staff hiring decisions up to and including GS-9. The State Director has approval authority for the hiring of personnel above GS-11. The DPS contains approximately 30 employees in the following classifications: Outdoor Recreation Planner, Zoologist, Archaeologist, Cartographic Aid, Wildlife Biologist, Soil Scientist, Range Conservationist, Computer Specialist, Landscape Architect, Community Planner, Geologist, Urban Planner, Cartographic Technician, Secretary, Clerk-Typist and Clerk-Stenographer.

The DPS functions extend beyond the Riverside District to include a portion of the California Desert in the Bakersfield District. Personnel positions in the DPS are filled by the state personnel office in Sacramento and directives involving both the DPS and Riverside District employees are signed by both the Desert Plan Manager and Riverside District Director. While both the District and the DPS use similar techniques in the collection of data, each utilizes its data in a different way; i.e., interim management verses comprehensive long-range planning.

Based on all the foregoing, I find that the unit sought by the AFGE, including all professional and nonprofessional employees of both the Riverside District and the DPS, is not appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under the Order. Thus, as noted above, while the District and the DPS constitute components of the California State Office and are located in geographic proximity to each other, they are engaged in totally separate missions. As a consequence, the employees in each component generally have different job classifications and functions, do not enjoy integrated operations or job contacts, and do not experience significant transfer or interchange. Under these circumstances, I find that the employees of the District and the DPS do not share a clear and identifiable community of interest. Moreover, noting the delegation to the respective Directors of significant authority and autonomy with respect to personnel and labor relations policies, I find that the claimed unit could not reasonably be expected to promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations.

However, I further find, under all the above circumstances, that the employees of the District and the employees of the DPS, separately, would constitute units appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under the Order. Thus, in each of the organizational components, the respective employees enjoy a common mission, common supervision, have generally uniform job classifications, duties and functions, and enjoy common personnel policies and practices and essentially similar working conditions. Under these circumstances, I find that the employees of the District and employees of the DPS, separately, share a clear and identifiable community of interest separate and distinct from other employees of the Bureau of Land Management and from each other. Moreover, noting particularly the position of the Activity with respect to the appropriateness of the units, and the fact that the respective Directors in both the District and the DPS appear to have been delegated substantial authority in labor relations matters concerning employees in their respective organizations, I find that such units will promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations.

Accordingly, I shall direct separate elections to be conducted in the following units which I find to be appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under the Order: 5/

> All professional and nonprofessional employees of the Riverside District Office of the Bureau of Land Management, excluding management officials, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, and supervisors as defined in the Order.
> All professional and nonprofessional employees of the Desert Plan Staff of the Bureau of Land Management, excluding management officials, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, and supervisors as defined in the Order.

As noted above, the units found appropriate include professional employees. However, the Assistant Secretary is prohibited by Section 10(b)(4) of the Order from including professional employees in any unit with nonprofessional employees unless a majority of the professional employees votes for inclusion in such unit. Accordingly, the desires of the professional employees must be ascertained.

Having found that the professional and nonprofessional employees of the Riverside District Office and the professional and nonprofessional employees of the Desert Plan Staff may constitute separate appropriate units, I shall not make any final determinations at this time, but shall first ascertain the desires of such employees by directing elections in the following voting groups:

5/ The parties stipulated that temporary employees of both the District and the DPS share in the community of interest enjoyed by the regular full-time employees of each organization. However, as there is no evidence in the record whether or not such employees have a reasonable expectancy of continued employment, I shall make no finding as to their eligibility.

(a) All professional employees of the Riverside District Office of the Bureau of Land Management, excluding nonprofessional employees, management officials, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity and supervisors as defined in the Order.

(b) All employees of the Riverside District Office of the Bureau of Land Management, excluding professional employees, management officials, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, and supervisors as defined in the Order.

(c) All professional employees of the Desert Plan Staff of the Bureau of Land Management, excluding nonprofessional employees, management officials, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, and supervisors as defined in the Order.

(d) All employees of the Desert Plan Staff of the Bureau of Land Management, excluding professional employees, management officials, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, and supervisors as defined in the Order.

The nonprofessional employees in voting group (b) shall vote whether they desire to be represented by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1061, the National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 119, or neither. The employees in professional voting group (a) will be asked two questions on their ballots: (1) whether or not they wish to be included with nonprofessional employees for the purpose of exclusive recognition, and (2) whether or not they wish to be represented for the purpose of exclusive recognition by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1061. In the event that a majority of the valid votes in voting group (a) are cast in favor of inclusion with the nonprofessional employees, and the majority of valid votes in voting group (b) are not cast for the NFFE, 6/ the votes of voting group (a) shall be combined with the votes of voting group (b).

Unless a majority of the votes of voting group (a) are cast for inclusion in the same unit as the nonprofessional employees in voting group (b), or if the majority of votes in voting group (b) are cast in favor of the NFFE, a separate professional unit will be established and an appropriate certification will be issued by the Area Administrator indicating whether or not the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1061 was selected by the professional employees.

The employees in the nonprofessional voting group (d) will be polled whether or not they desire to be represented by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1061. The employees in the professional voting group (c) will be asked two questions on their ballots: (1) whether or not they wish to be included with the nonprofessional employees in voting group (d) for the purpose of exclusive recognition, and (2) whether or not they wish to be represented for the purpose of exclusive recognition by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1061. In the event that a majority of the valid ballots of voting group (c) are cast in favor of inclusion in the same unit as the nonprofessional employees in voting group (d), the ballots of voting group (c) shall be combined with those of voting group (d).

Unless a majority of the valid votes of voting group (c) are cast for inclusion in the same unit as the nonprofessional employees of voting group (d), they will be taken to have indicated their desire to constitute a separate unit, and an appropriate certification will be issued by the Area Administrator indicating whether or not the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1061 was selected by the professional employees.

The unit determinations in the subject case are based in part, then, upon the results of the elections among the professional employees and/or the results of the election among the nonprofessional employees in voting group (b). However, I will now make the following findings in regard to the appropriate units:

1. If a majority of the professional employees in voting group (a) votes for inclusion in the same unit as the nonprofessional employees in voting group (b), and/or a majority of the nonprofessional employees in voting group (b) does not vote for the National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 119, I find that the following employees will constitute a unit appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition within the meaning of Section 10 of the Order:

> All professional and nonprofessional employees of the Riverside District Office of the Bureau of Land Management, excluding management officials, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, and supervisors as defined in the Order.

2. If a majority of the professional employees in voting group (a) does not vote for inclusion in the same unit as the nonprofessional employees in voting group (b), and/or the majority of employees in voting group (b) votes for the National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 119, I find that the following two groups of employees will constitute separate units appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition within the meaning of Section 10 of the Order:

> (a) All professional employees of the Riverside District Office of the Bureau of Land Management, excluding nonprofessional employees, management officials, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, and supervisors as defined in the Order.

6/ The NFFE intervened in the instant petition solely on the basis of its existing recognition as the exclusive representative of the nonprofessional employees of the District [voting group (b)] and does not seek to represent any other group of employees involved herein. Accordingly, the NFFE will appear on the ballot only with respect to that group. If a majority of valid votes in voting group (b) are cast for the NFFE, the votes in voting group (a) will not be combined with the votes of voting group (b).

(b) All employees of the Riverside District Office of the Bureau of Land Management, excluding professional employees, management officials, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, and supervisors as defined in the Order.

3. If a majority of the professional employees in voting group (c) votes for inclusion in the same unit as the nonprofessional employees in voting group (d), I find that the following employees will constitute a unit appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition within the meaning of Section 10 of the Order:

All professional and nonprofessional employees of the Desert Plan Staff of the Bureau of Land Management, excluding management officials, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, and supervisors as defined in the Order.

4. If a majority of professional employees in voting group (c) does not vote for inclusion in the same unit with the nonprofessional employees in voting group (d), I find that the following two groups of employees will constitute separate units appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition within the meaning of Section 10 of the Order:

(a) All professional employees of the Desert Plan Staff, excluding nonprofessional employees, management officials, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, and supervisors as defined in the Order.

(b) All employees of the Desert Plan Staff, excluding professional employees, management officials, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, and supervisors as defined in the Order.

DIRECTION OF ELECTIONS

Elections by secret ballot shall be conducted among the employees in the units found appropriate, as early as possible, but not later than 60 days from the date below. The appropriate Area Administrator shall supervise the elections, subject to the Assistant Secretary's Regulations. Eligible to vote are those in the units who were employed during the payroll period immediately preceding the date below, including employees who did not work during the period because they were out ill, or on vacation or on furlough, including those in the military service who appear in person at the polls. Ineligible to vote are employees who quit or were discharged for cause since the designated payroll period and who have not been rehired or reinstated before the election date. Those eligible to vote in voting group (b) shall vote whether they desire to be represented for the purpose of exclusive recognition by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1061, the National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 119, or neither. Those eligible to vote in voting groups (a), (c) and (d) shall vote whether or not they desire to be represented for the purpose of exclusive recognition by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1061.

Because the above Direction of Elections involves units substantially different than that sought by the AFGE, I shall permit it to withdraw its petition if it does not desire to proceed to elections in the units found appropriate in the subject case upon notice to the appropriate Area Administrator within 10 days of the issuance of this decision. If the AFGE desires to proceed to elections, because the units found appropriate are substantially different than it originally petitioned for, I direct that the Activity, as soon as possible, shall post copies of the Notice of Unit Determination, which shall be furnished by the appropriate Area Administrator, in places where notices are normally posted affecting the employees in the units I have herein found appropriate. Such Notice shall conform in all respects to the requirements of Section 202.4(c) and (d) of the Assistant Secretary's Regulations. Further, any labor organization which seeks to intervene in this matter must do so in accordance with the requirements of Section 202.5 of the Assistant Secretary's Regulations. Any timely intervention will be granted solely for the purpose of appearing on the ballot in the elections among the employees in the units found appropriate.

CHARLESTON, SOUTH CAROLINA
A/SLMR No. 907

This case involved a representation petition filed by the Federal Employees Metal Trades Council of Charleston, Metal Trades Department, AFL-CIO (MTC) for a unit of all employees of the Telephone Services Division, Communications Department, U.S. Naval Station, U.S. Naval Base, Charleston, South Carolina. The Activity contended, among other things, that the unit is not appropriate as it does not include employees who share a community of interest separate and distinct from the remaining unrepresented General Schedule (GS) employees at the Activity, and that such fragmentation would not promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. The MTC, on the other hand, maintained, among other things, that the unit sought is appropriate as the claimed employees have a community of interest separate and distinct from the other employees at the Activity.

The record revealed that the employees in the petitioned for unit are serviced by the same Consolidated Civilian Personnel Office as the remaining unrepresented GS employees, and that all the GS employees enjoy common personnel policies and practices, including the same area of consideration for promotions and reduction-in-force procedures, common overall mission and supervision, and generally similar working conditions. Under these circumstances, the Assistant Secretary found that the claimed employees did not have a clear and identifiable community of interest separate and distinct from the other GS employees of the Activity. Further, noting that labor relations authority is vested in the Activity Commander, the Assistant Secretary concluded that the claimed unit would not promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations, but, rather, would result in fragmentation of the Activity's GS employees. Accordingly, he ordered that the petition be dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER

Upon a petition duly filed under Section 6 of Executive Order 11491, as amended, a hearing was held before Hearing Officer Otis Chennault. The Hearing Officer's rulings made at the hearing are free from prejudicial error and are hereby affirmed.

Upon the entire record in this case, the Assistant Secretary finds:

1. The labor organization involved claims to represent certain employees of the Activity.

2. The Petitioner, Federal Employees Metal Trades Council of Charleston, Metal Trades Department, AFL-CIO, herein called MTC, seeks an election in a unit composed of all employees of the Telephone Services Division, Communications Department, U.S. Naval Station, U.S. Naval Base, Charleston, South Carolina, excluding management officials, professional employees, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, guards and supervisors as defined in Executive Order 11491, as amended. The Activity contends that the proposed unit is inappropriate as it excludes certain other employees of the Activity who share a community of interest with those in the claimed unit. It contends further that the resulting fragmentation would not promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations and that only an activity-wide unit of all unrepresented General Schedule (GS) employees would be appropriate. The MTC asserts that the proposed unit is appropriate as the claimed employees are the only employees at the Activity providing telephone services. In the MTC's view, an activity-wide unit would not promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations as the employees' diverse skills, working hours, locations and functions would made it difficult to negotiate an agreement.

The mission of the Activity is to provide logistical support for all shore and sea commands assigned to the Charleston Naval Base. Headed by a Commanding Officer, it is organized into 11 Departments and 4 Staff Offices. The claimed unit is located in the Telephone Services Division, one of three divisions of the Communications Department, which provides message traffic and telephone services for the Activity and the entire Charleston Naval Complex. The Activity employs approximately 338 Civil Service employees, 800 Non-Appropriated Fund employees and 500 military personnel. At the time of the hearing herein, three exclusively recognized units were in existence at the Activity. The MTC represents an activity-wide unit of all Wage Grade employees, and also a unit of all police officers. In addition, the International Association of Fire Fighters, Local 56, represents a unit of firefighters.

The record reveals that the claimed unit, which includes 14 employees physically located in two buildings approximately two miles apart, provides telephone operator service and compiles, revises and publishes the telephone book for the entire Complex. In addition, there are approximately 87 other unrepresented GS employees assigned to various departments throughout the Activity. All GS employees enjoy generally similar working conditions and uniform personnel policies and practices. In this latter regard, the record discloses that all GS employees are serviced by the Consolidated Civilian Personnel Office (CCPO) of the Naval Supply Center, Charleston, South Carolina, pursuant to a cross servicing agreement between the Activity and the Naval Supply Center. In addition, all GS employees are in the same area of consideration for promotion and reduction-in-force procedures, and the Activity's Commanding Officer has been delegated full labor relations authority for employees under his command.

Based on all of the foregoing circumstances, I find that the unit sought herein is not appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under Section 10 of the Order. In my view, the claimed GS employees do not constitute a clear and identifiable grouping of employees. In this regard, the evidence establishes that all of the GS employees at the Activity, including those in the unit sought, enjoy common overall mission and supervision, generally similar working conditions, and uniform personnel policies and practices. Accordingly, I find that the claimed unit does not include all employees at the Activity who share a clear and identifiable community of interest. Further, noting the delegation of labor relations authority to the Activity Commander, I find that the sought unit would not promote effective dealings or efficiency of agency operations, but, rather, would result in fragmentation of the Activity's GS employees. In view of the above, I shall dismiss the petition herein.

ORDER

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the petition in Case No. 40-7631(RO) be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

Francis X. Burkhardt, Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR
ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS
SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE,
U.S. NAVY, NORFOLK NAVAL SHIPYARD
A/SLMR No. 908

This case arose as a result of an unfair labor practice complaint filed by Tidewater Virginia Federal Employees Metal Trades Council, AFL-CIO (Complainant) alleging that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by denying union representation to four probationary employees at meetings where disciplinary action was discussed; the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(2) of the Order by discouraging employees from joining the Complainant by denying representation to four probationary employees at meetings where contemplated disciplinary action was discussed, while permitting union representation to career employees in similar circumstances; and the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(6) of the Order by unilaterally establishing and implementing a system for disciplining probationary employees different from that established by the negotiated agreement for disciplining career employees.

The Administrative Law Judge found that under the Assistant Secretary's prior holdings the Respondent did not violate the Order as alleged and reluctantly recommended that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety. In reaching this determination, he found that although the individual interviews involving the four probationary employees were "formal" in nature, they did not pertain to "grievances, personnel policies and practices or other matters affecting general working conditions of employees in the unit" within the meaning of Section 10(e) of the Order. Further, while the Respondent accorded probationary employees less rights than non-probationary employees upon the imposition of discipline, and such distinction makes union membership less attractive to probationary employees, there was no violation of Section 19(a)(2) of the Order because Respondent's conduct was not based on, or motivated, at least in part, by the union membership or activity of the employees involved. The Administrative Law Judge also found that the Complainant's allegation that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(6) of the Order by the unilateral promulgation of Instruction 12300.1 was not properly before him because, although the Complainant amended the complaint to include an allegation of Section 19(a)(6) in this regard, it did not amend the factual allegations to include the basis of the alleged violation. Finally, the Administrative Law Judge determined that Section 19(d) of the Order and the Assistant Secretary's Report No. 49 did not preclude him from deciding the matter.

The Assistant Secretary deferred his decision in the subject case pending the Federal Labor Relations Council's (Council) Statement On Major Policy Issue concerning the representation rights of employees under the Order. The Council's statement was issued on December 2, 1976.

While agreeing with the Administrative Law Judge's conclusion with respect to the Section 19(a)(2) allegation, the Assistant Secretary found that the meetings called by management for the purpose of notifying the four probationary employees in question of their terminations were formal discussions within the meaning of Section 10(e) of the Order. In this regard, he noted particularly that the meetings involved the termination of probationary employees, who, except in a limited number of instances not relevant in this case, have no statutory appeal rights and, therefore, no right of representation upon appeal from an agency action. Additionally, he noted that the meetings were called specifically for the purpose of terminating the employees and not for investigatory purposes. Under the circumstances, he viewed such meetings as not only substantially affecting personnel policies and practices as they related to the specific employees' security, but also substantially affecting personnel policies and practices as they pertained to other employees in the bargaining unit.

Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary found that the Respondent's refusal to allow the Complainant to participate in the meetings involved and its denial of the employees' request for representation at such meetings were violative of Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order and issued an appropriate remedial order.

DECISION AND ORDER

On March 4, 1975, Administrative Law Judge Milton Kramer issued his Recommended Decision in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had not engaged in the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint and recommending that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety. Thereafter, the Complainant filed exceptions and a supporting brief with respect to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision.

On July 24, 1975, the Assistant Secretary informed the Complainant and the Respondent that it would effectuate the purposes and policies of the Order to defer his decision in the subject case pending the Federal Labor Relations Council's (Council) resolution of a major policy issue which has general application to the Federal Labor-Management Relations program.

> Does an employee in a unit of exclusive recognition have a protected right under the Order to assistance (possibly including personal representation) by the exclusive representative when he is summoned to a meeting or interview with agency management, and, if so, under what circumstances may such a right be exercised?

On December 2, 1976, the Council issued its Statement On Major Policy Issue, FLRC No. 75P-2, Report No. 116, finding, in pertinent part, that:

1. An employee in a unit of exclusive recognition has a protected right under the last sentence of Section 10(e) of the Order to the assistance or representation by the exclusive representative, upon the request of the employee, when he is summoned to a formal discussion with management concerning grievances, personnel policies and practices, or other matters affecting general working conditions of employees in the unit; and

2. An employee in a unit of exclusive recognition does not have a protected right under the Order to assistance or representation at a nonformal investigative meeting or interview to which he is summoned by management; but such right may be established through negotiations conducted by the exclusive representative and the agency in accordance with Section 11(a) of the Order.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and the entire record in the subject case, including the Complainant's exceptions, I hereby adopt the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendations, to the extent consistent herein.

The amended complaint herein alleges that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1),(2),(5) and (6) of the Order. In essence, the Complainant contends that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by denying union representation to four probationary employees at meetings where disciplinary action was discussed and imposed; the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(2) of the Order by discouraging employees from joining the Union by denying representation to four probationary employees at meetings where disciplinary action was discussed and imposed, while permitting union representation to career employees in similar circumstances; and the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(6) of the Order by unilaterally establishing and implementing a system for disciplining probationary employees distinct from that established by the negotiated agreement for disciplining career employees.

As noted above, the Administrative Law Judge recommended that the instant complaint be dismissed in its entirety. In reaching this determination, he noted that while a rounded system of labor relations would entitle an employee, in a situation such as was involved herein, to have his union represent him at his meeting with management, he was bound by previous decisions of the Assistant Secretary. Accordingly, he found that although the individual meetings involving the four probationary employees were "formal" in nature, they did not pertain to "grievances, personnel policies and practices, or other matters affecting general working conditions of employees in the unit" within the meaning of Section 10(e) of the Order. Further, while the Respondent accorded probationary employees less rights than non-probationary employees upon the imposition of discipline, and such distinction makes union membership less attractive to probationary employees, in the Administrative Law Judge's view, there was no violation of Section 19(a)(2) of the Order because the Respondent's conduct was not based on, or motivated, at least in part, by the union membership or activity of the employees involved.

With respect to the Complainant's allegation that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(6) of the Order by the unilateral promulgation of Instruction 12300.1 1/, the Administrative Law Judge concluded that such allegation was not properly before him because, although the Complainant amended the complaint to include an allegation of 19(a)(6) in this regard, it did not amend the factual allegations to include the basis of the alleged violation. Further, the Administrative Law Judge determined that Section 19(d) of the Order and the Assistant Secretary's Report No. 49 did not preclude him from deciding the matters before him.

In its exceptions, the Complainant argued that the Administrative Law Judge erred in finding that the individual meetings with each of the four employees involved herein were not "formal discussions" within the meaning of Section 10(e) of the Order; that the employees were entitled to representation under the provisions of the parties' negotiated agreement; and that the Administrative Law Judge erred in finding that the Respondent's denial of a probationary employee's right to be represented did not violate Section 19(a)(2) of the Order.

The essential facts in the case, which are not in dispute, are set forth, in detail, in the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision, and I shall repeat them only to the extent necessary.

Employees Banks, Cox, Harold and Knecht, probationary employees in their first year of employment, were employed in the Respondent's Shop 51, which is part of the bargaining unit represented exclusively by the Complainant. During the 12 hour shift on March 3 and 4, 1974, they were assigned certain duties by their supervisor. Upon completion of their assignment, and while following the specific instructions of their supervisor to await, upon completion of the assigned task, his return, they were discovered sleeping by Foreman Eldridge, who reported the incident in writing to Shop 51 Superintendent Robert B. McDonald. On March 5, 1974, pursuant to Article 31 of the parties' negotiated agreement, McDonald ordered Walton, the administrative officer of Shop 51, to appoint a supervisor other than Eldridge to conduct a "pre-action investigation." 2/

1/ Instruction 12300.1 dealt with the procedure for terminating temporary and probationary employees.

2/ Article 31, Disciplinary and Adverse Actions, reads, in pertinent part: Section 2

> "When it is determined by the supervisor having authority that formal disciplinary or adverse action may be necessary, an investigator will normally be appointed within 5 workdays to conduct a pre-action investigation of the incident or knowledge of the incident by the supervisor. . . . The investigator assigned will conduct whatever inquiry is necessary to determine and document the facts. In all cases . . . a discussion will be held with the employee as part of the pre-action investigation. It is agreed that during any discussion held with the employee as part of the pre-action investigation the employee shall be advised of his right to be represented by the cognizant steward. If the employee declines representation, the cognizant steward or appropriate chief steward in his absence shall be given the opportunity to be present to represent the Council . . . ."

Walton designated Gay, a foreman in Shop 51, to conduct the "pre-action investigation." Gay held a meeting on March 5 with the four employees and the Complainant's Chief Steward for Shop 51, White. Gay asked each man if he wanted White to represent him and they all replied in the affirmative. Gay informed the men of the charges against them, and the purpose of the investigation. White asked for a couple of days to prepare to represent the men, and Gay agreed.

On March 7, 1974, Gay told White that Superintendent McDonald had taken over the matter. McDonald had done so because he had been advised by Walton that since the employees were probationary, there was no necessity for a "pre-action investigation" under the provisions of NAVSHIPDNOR/SURSHIPFIVE Instruction 12300.1, which provided for the termination of probationary employees. 3/ Thereafter, McDonald, pursuant to NAVSHIPDNOR/SURSHIPFIVE Instruction 12300.1, scheduled individual meetings with the employees involved on March 8, 1974, for the purpose of terminating their employment and gave the Complainant advance notice of these meetings. In the absence of White, Brock, a steward in Shop 51, represented the Complainant. Before the meeting, McDonald told Brock that because the men were probationary employees they were not entitled to be represented at the meetings, but that he could represent the Complainant as an observer. McDonald met with each employee individually and in each case informed the employee that he was not entitled to representation but that the Complainant was entitled to an observer. During the course of the meetings Brock tried to speak several times, but McDonald stopped him each time and told him that he was only an observer and could make a statement for the Complainant at the end of the meeting. Each meeting took about five minutes and resulted in the termination of all four employees because they failed to meet the standards for satisfactory performance. 4/

3/ On August 16, 1973, Respondent issued NAVSHIPDNOR/SURSHIPFIVE Instruction 12300.1, which provided for the termination of probationary employees by the Branch or Shop Head for conduct after appointment. The Instruction made no mention of any "pre-action investigation" as described in Article 31, Section 2 of the parties' negotiated agreement.

4/ Superintendent McDonald's testimony, in part, as to what occurred at each meeting is as follows:

Q. "What did you say?"

A. "When the employee came in I informed them why he was there, for the purpose of removal action, that he was not entitled to union representation, but that the union representative was there as an observer only. And at the end of our conversation he would be given an opportunity to make any statement he wished for Council." (Tr. pp. 86.)

When Brock was permitted to speak, he stated that the employees were entitled to be represented by the Complainant, and that termination was too harsh for the offense with which the men were charged.

In agreement with the Administrative Law Judge, I find that Respondent's refusal to afford the probationary employees involved herein union representation during the meetings in question did not, standing alone, constitute a violation of Section 19(a)(2) of the Order. Thus, while the Respondent's disparate treatment of probationary employees and career employees may have had the effect of making union membership less attractive to probationary employees, there was no evidence that such conduct was based on, or motivated, at least in part, by union membership considerations. Accordingly, I find that the Respondent's conduct in this matter was not violative of Section 19(a)(2) of the Order.

However, I disagree with the conclusion of the Administrative Law Judge that the March 8, 1974, meetings called by management for the purpose of notifying the probationary employees in question of their termination were not formal discussions within the meaning of Section 10(e) of the Order. 5/ In this regard, I note particularly that the meetings involved the termination of probationary employees who, except in a limited number of instances not relevant here, have no statutory appeal rights and, therefore, no right of representation upon appeal from an agency

4/ Q. "Did you ask the employees any questions during the course of their interviews?"

A. "No. I simply told them that I had received a written report that they were sleeping on the job, and that since they were on a one-year probation, I felt that their employment had not met the requirements of satisfactory performance, or satisfactory conduct, [and] as a result I was going to remove them." (Tr. pp. 86, 87.)

5/ Section 10(e) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, provides:

> "When a labor organization has been accorded exclusive recognition, it is the exclusive representative of employees in the unit and is entitled to act for and to negotiate agreements covering all employees in the unit. It is responsible for representing the interests of all employees in the unit without discrimination and without regard to labor organization membership. The labor organization shall be given the opportunity to be represented at formal discussions between management and employees or employee representatives concerning grievances, personnel policies and practices, or other matters affecting general working conditions of employees in the unit."

action. 6/ Additionally, the meetings which were held herein were called specifically for the purpose of terminating the probationary employees and not for investigatory purposes. 7/ Such meetings not only substantially affected personnel policies and practices as they related to the specific employees' job security, but they also substantially affect personnel policies and practices as they pertain to other employees in the bargaining unit. Thus, the union representative whose representation the probationary employees were seeking would, in effect, be safeguarding not only interests of the particular employees involved, but also the interests of others in the bargaining unit by exercising vigilance to make certain that the agency does not initiate or continue a practice of imposing punishment unjustly. The representative's presence is an assurance to other probationary employees in the bargaining unit that they too can obtain his aid and protection if called upon to attend a like meeting where such discipline is imposed.

Further, in my view, such right of union representation will effectuate the purposes and policies of the Order by allowing the individual employee who may be too fearful or inarticulate to relate accurately what occurred, or too ignorant of the law of the shop to raise extenuating factors, the benefit of a knowledgeable union representative. In view of the probationary status of the employees in this case and their lack of appeal rights, this, indeed, may be their only opportunity for knowledgeable union representation.

Accordingly, I find that the meetings of March 8, 1974, called for the explicit purpose of terminating probationary employees, were formal discussions within the meaning of Section 10(e) of the Order. Consequently, the Respondent's refusal to allow the Complainant, the exclusive representative of the unit employees involved, the right to participate in such discussions was violative of Section 19(a)(6) of the Order. 8/ Further, noting the vested derivative right of representation at formal meetings under Section 10(e) when the employee

6/ Compare the Federal Labor Relations Council's Statement On Major Policy Issue, FLRC No. 75P-2, Report No. 116, dated December 2, 1976, at page 5, where the Council, noting that a detailed framework of statutes and regulations already protect an employee in the Federal program against arbitrary action by an agency when serious misconduct is alleged, held that an employee does not have a protected right under the Order to representation at a nonformal investigative meeting or interview to which he is summoned by management.

7/ See footnote 4 above.

8/ In agreement with the Administrative Law Judge, I view the right of an exclusive representative to be represented at such discussions to mean the right to be represented as a participant and not merely as, (Continued) deems such representation imperative for the protection of his own employment interests, I find that the Respondent's denial of the employees' request for union representation at the March 8th meetings was violative of Section 19(a)(1) of the Order. 9/

ORDER 10/

Pursuant to Section 6(b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, and Section 203.25(b) of the Regulations, the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations hereby orders that the Department of Defense, U. S. Navy, Norfolk Naval Shipyard shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Conducting formal discussions concerning grievances, personnel policies and practices, or other matters affecting general working conditions of employees in the unit without giving the Tidewater Virginia Federal Employees Metal Trades Council, AFL-CIO, the employees' exclusive representative, the opportunity to be represented at such discussions by its own chosen representative.

(b) Interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Order by failing to grant their request for representation by the Tidewater Virginia Federal Employees Metal Trades Council, AFL-CIO, at formal discussions concerning grievances, personnel policies and practices, or other matters affecting general working conditions of employees in the unit.

2. Take the following affirmative actions in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Executive Order:

(a) Notify the Tidewater Virginia Federal Employees Metal Trades Council, AFL-CIO, of, and give it the opportunity to be represented at, formal discussions concerning grievances, personnel policies and practices, or other matters affecting general working conditions of employees in the unit.

8/ in this case, an observer. Being permitted to be present only as an observer would frustrate not only the labor organization's interest in the discussions but could also frustrate the fulfilling of its obligation imposed by the second sentence of Section 10(e), the obligation to represent the interests of all employees in the unit.

9/ See the Federal Labor Relations Council's Statement On Major Policy Issue, cited above.

10/ Under the particular circumstances of this case, in view of the nature of the violation herein, I find that a remedial order requiring a return to a status quo ante is unwarranted.

(b) Post at its facility at the U.S. Navy, Norfolk Naval Shipyard, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix" on forms to be furnished by the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Commanding Officer, U.S. Navy, Norfolk Naval Shipyard and they shall be posted and maintained by him for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. The Commanding Officer shall take reasonable steps to insure that such notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to Section 203.27 of the Regulations, notify the Assistant Secretary, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this order as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the complaint in Case No. 22-5283(CA), insofar as it alleges violation of Section 19(a)(2) and (5) of the Order, be and it hereby is, dismissed.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This case arises under Executive Order 11491, as amended. It was initiated by a complaint dated April 15, 1974 and filed April 17, 1974. The complaint alleged that on March 8, 1974 the head of Shop 51 held a discussion with four Shop 51 employees; that the discussion contemplated disciplinary action; and that the employees were denied representation by the Union. Such conduct was alleged to be in violation of Sections 19(a)(2) and (5) of the Executive Order. Under date of May 7, 1974 the Respondent filed an answer to the complaint with the Assistant Area Director.

Pursuant to a Notice of Hearing by the Assistant Regional Director dated June 17, 1974 and Order Rescheduling Hearing dated July 17, 1974, hearings were commenced August 22, 1974 in Norfolk, Virginia. At the beginning of the hearing, upon motion made and granted, the complaint was amended to allege that the conduct alleged in the complaint constituted also violations of Sections 19(a)(1) and (6). At the end of that day the hearing was recessed to September 3, 1974 for closing arguments which were had on that date in Washington, D. C. Both sides were represented by counsel at the hearings both in Norfolk and Washington. Timely briefs were filed by the parties on October 4, 1974.

Facts

William S. Banks, Jr., Allan Cox, Charlie Harold, and George P. Knecht, Jr. were probationary employees of the Respondent in their first year of career conditional appointments. Banks was employed on November 12, 1973, Cox on January 14, 1974, Harold on January 28, 1974, and Knecht on February 4, 1974. All four were employed in Shop 51, the electrical shop. They were employed in the unit represented by the Complainant.

On March 3, 1974 they began a 12-hour tour of duty beginning at 7:30 p.m. and ending at 7:30 a.m. on March 4. About 8:00 p.m. on March 3 their foreman, Jordan, told them and about five other employees to go with him to the aircraft carrier "Forrestal" to do some work on that ship. They finished that task about 10:30 p.m. Jordan told them to wait on the ship until they heard from him, and Jordan left. At 3:00 a.m. on March 4 they had not yet heard from Jordan. About that time Hosea Eldridge, another foreman in Shop 51 but not the foreman of these men, came by and later reported in writing to Superintendent Robert B. McDonald, the head of Shop 51, that these men had been asleep at that time. This was about five hours after the men had completed their task on the Forrestal and were waiting on the Forrestal for further word from Jordan pursuant to Jordan's instruction. McDonald told Walton, the administrative officer of Shop 51, to appoint a supervisor other than Eldridge to conduct a "pre-action investigation" of Eldridge's charges.

Pursuant to such instruction, Walton designated Robert Gay, another foreman in Shop 51, to conduct the "pre-action investigation". Such an investigation, in accordance with the agreement between the Complainant and the Respondent, is held when discipline is contemplated. 1/ The purpose of such an investigation is for the investigator to ascertain the facts of the incident and report them to the person contemplating the imposition of discipline.

Gay arranged a meeting with the four men for March 5. Pursuant to advice from the Personnel Office, Bernard W. White, the Complainant's Chief Steward for Shop 51, was present. White had no previous knowledge of the incident. Gay asked each of the four men whether he wanted White to represent him and they all replied in the affirmative. Gay then said that the four men were charged with sleeping on the job, and that the purpose of the meeting was for Gay to develop the facts and report them to McDonald. White asked for a couple of days postponement of the investigation because he knew nothing of the matter and was unprepared to represent the four men. Gay acquiesced. Two days later White was told by Gay that McDonald had taken over the matter. McDonald had done so because on March 6 Walton had advised him that the four men were all in their first year of employment, were therefore probationary employees, and that the pre-action investigation procedure was not required.

The current "Negotiated Agreement" was signed by the parties on August 22, 1973, was approved on September 24, 1973, and by agreement of the parties became effective October 9, 1973. Article 31, Section 2 of the agreement provides for a pre-action investigation "when it is determined by the supervisor having authority that formal discipline or adverse action may be necessary". It does not distinguish between probationary and other employees in this respect, although it does make such distinction with respect to other steps in the discipline procedure. 2/ On August 16, 1973 the Respondent had issued Instruction 12300.1. It provides for termination of probationary employees by the Branch or Shop Head for conduct after appointment without mention of any pre-action investigation. On the basis of the advice he received from Walton and Instruction 12300.1, McDonald rescinded his request for a pre-action investigation.

1/ Exh. C-1, p. 71.

2/ See, e.g., Section 3 and Section 6 of Article 31, Exh. C-1.

On March 8, 1974 McDonald had individual meetings with each of the four men. White was advised by McDonald of the meetings but could not attend and sent H. D. Brock, a union steward in Shop 51, to attend on behalf of the MTC. McDonald told Brock, as he had told White, that because the men were probationary employees they were not entitled to be represented at the meetings but that the Union could have a representative present as an observer. This was before the individual meetings began. The four men were then called in one at a time. McDonald told each of them that they were not entitled to representation but that MTC could have a representative present as an observer. McDonald told each of them also that the purpose of the meeting was for McDonald to get their version of the facts pertaining to the charges Eldridge had made against them. McDonald testified, and I find, that:

> "When the employee come in I informed them why he was there, for the purpose of removal action, that he was not entitled to Union representation, but that the Union representative was there as an observer only. And at the end of our conversation he would be given an opportunity to make any statement he wished for the Council." 3/

During the discussions Brock tried to speak several times but McDonald stopped him each time and told him he was there only as an observer for the Union and would be permitted to make a statement for the Metal Trades Council at the end.

At the end of each meeting McDonald told the employee that he had not met the standards for satisfactory performance and that McDonald was going to remove him from his job, that the actual separation would be several days later, and in the meantime the employee was to return to his job. Brock then was permitted to speak and said that he believed the man was entitled to be represented by the Union and that termination was too harsh for the offense with which the man was charged. Each meeting lasted about five minutes.

McDonald, at all relevant times, was a member of Local 734 of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, a constituent of the Metal Trades Council and the representative of the unit within which the four men were employed. There is no evidence of any anti-union animus by McDonald or anyone else; indeed, there is no evidence that any of the four dischargees were Union members or active in Union affairs.

A period of several days was required for McDonald's decision to have the employment of the four men terminated carried out. The employment of all four was terminated effective March 15, 1974 "due to sleeping during working hours". 4/ Each of the men was told, and in accordance with Civil Service Commission regulations, that as a probationary employee he could appeal his termination to the Civil Service Commission only on the grounds that his termination was based on such grounds as race, religion, sex, and the like.

On April 16, 1974, the day before the complaint in this case was filed, the Union presented a grievance on behalf of one Montgomery who was a career-conditional employee in his probationary first year of employment, the same status as the four men here involved. Montgomery had also been removed by McDonald after a discussion at which he was not permitted to have representation but at which a representative of MTC was permitted to be present as an observer. Representation was denied to Montgomery, and the Union's representative was permitted only observer status, on the same grounds that the Respondent took such position in this case.

The Respondent does permit union representation to non-probationary employees in the unit at a pre-action interview at which discipline is contemplated.

Contentions of the Parties

The Complainant contends:

1. The denial of representation to the four men violated Sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, because Section 10(e) of the Executive Order gives the Union the right to represent employees in the unit at meetings the purpose of which may be the termination of employment of individual employees.

2. The Respondent violated Section 19(a)(2) by discouraging probationary employees from joining the Union by denying representation to probationary employees at such meetings while permitting representation to other employees in similar circumstances.

3. The Respondent violated Section 19(a)(6) by unilaterally establishing and implementing a system for disciplining probationary employees different from the system for disciplining other employees.

4. The fact that the Respondent's conduct may also be in violation of the contractual discipline procedure and that the Union had commenced a grievance on behalf of another employee in the same circumstances the day before filing the complaint in this case does not bring this case within the provisions of the second sentence of Section 19(d) of the Executive Order prohibiting the pursuit of the same issue under both the grievance procedure and the unfair labor practice procedure of the Executive Order.

The Respondent contends:

1. The filing of the grievance on behalf of the fifth employee the day before filing the complaint in this case precludes the Complainant from pursuing the unfair labor practice remedy on behalf of the four employees here involved.

2. The policy expressed by the Assistant Secretary in Report No. 49, that where an unfair labor practice complaint is predicated on a disagreement over the proper interpretation of a collective agreement which provides a procedure for resolving the disagreement, the parties will be left to the contract remedy, calls for the dismissal of the complaint.

3. The Complainant had no right under the Executive Order to represent the four employees, and the employees had no right to representation under the Executive Order, at the pre-discipline meetings.

4. Denying representation to probationary employees at pre-discipline discussions while permitting representation to other employees was not unlawful discrimination in violation of Section 19(a)(2).

5. The termination of the probationary appointments of the four employees was not the imposition of discipline but was part of the process of continuing evaluation of probationary employees.

Discussion and Conclusions

I. Whether the Complainant is Pursuing Both the Grievance Procedure and an Unfair Labor Practice Over the Same Issue

The second sentence of Section 19(d) of the Executive Order provides:

> "Issues which can be raised under a grievance procedure may, in the discretion of the aggrieved party, be raised under that procedure or the complaint procedure under this section, but not under both procedures."

The day before the complaint in this case was filed, the Complainant filed a grievance under the contract grievance procedure. The grievance arose because an employee, Montgomery, a probationary employee in Shop 51, was called in to see McDonald who was contemplating separating Montgomery from his employment. Montgomery asked for a Union representative, and McDonald told Brock, who apparently was present, that as a probationary employee Montgomery would not be permitted to have Union representation at the discussion. 5/ The merits of the propriety of the procedure followed in the Montgomery case are the same as the merits of the propriety of the procedure followed in the termination of the four employees here involved.

The Respondent argues that: the Montgomery grievance raised the "issue" of whether a probationary employee is entitled to representation by the Complainant at a discussion with the deciding official on whether his probationary appointment should be terminated and the "issue" of whether the Complainant has a right to be "represented" at such discussion; the same issues are raised in this proceeding under the unfair labor practice procedure of the Executive Order by a complaint filed a day later than the filing of the grievance in the Montgomery case; ergo, the Complainant made an irrevocable election in the Montgomery instance to pursue the contract grievance procedure for the resolution of such issues and is precluded by the above-quoted provision of Section 19(d) of the Executive Order from pursuing the unfair labor practice procedure of the Executive Order with respect to the four employees. I cannot subscribe to such verbal literalism.

To be sure, the second sentence of Section 19(d) literally speaks in terms of "issues" that may be raised under the grievance procedure or the unfair labor practice procedure. The Respondent candidly concedes that its position is predicated on Section 19(d) being "issue oriented" and not "incident oriented". 6/

It is antithetical to the common-law tradition to find that one who is wronged (assuming he was wronged) and pursues one remedy against the wrongdoer is bound, unto eternity or a change in the contract or a change in the remedial legislation, whichever first occurs, to pursue the same remedy against the same wrongdoer if the same wrong should again be committed. The termination of the appointment of Montgomery does not raise the same issues in a realistic sense, or may not, as the termination of the appointments of the four employees. The record does not show why Montgomery was terminated.

I conclude that the second sentence of Section 19(d) refers not to issues in the abstract but issues in the same incident. Accordingly, presenting the issues by the grievance procedure in the Montgomery case did not preclude the Complainant from presenting the same issues in the cases of the four employees in an unfair labor practice proceeding.

5/ Exh. R-1, Attachment No. 2. The grievance form showed that H.D. Block, an electrician, was the grievant and was signed by him as the "employee". It was signed by him also as the "chief steward". Whatever nomenclature may have been used, I have found above in the text that the grievance was presented by the Complainant. The particular appellations used by those interested should not be governing.

6/ Brief, p. 30.

II. Whether the Policy Expressed in Report No. 49 Precludes Entertainment of the Complaint

In Report No. 49, issued February 15, 1972, the Assistant Secretary said that:

> "...where a complaint alleges as an unfair labor practice, a disagreement over the interpretation of an existing collective bargaining agreement which provides a procedure for resolving the disagreement, the Assistant Secretary will not consider the problem in the context of an unfair labor practice but will leave the parties to their remedies under their collective bargaining agreement."

The policy announced in Report No. 49 does not have the broad sweep given to it by the Respondent's interpretation. Of course, not all contract violations are unfair labor practices. Where there is a bona fide disagreement over the meaning of a contractual provision and the Respondent acts in accordance with its interpretation, Report No. 49 would govern and the parties will be left to their remedies under their collective bargaining agreement. However, where one party initiates a course of conduct clearly inconsistent with the terms of the collective agreement, such conduct constitutes an attempted unilateral change in the agreement and would be not only in violation of the agreement but a violation of Section 19(a)(6) or 19(b)(6) and would be entertained as an unfair labor practice. Veterans Administration Hospital, Charleston, South Carolina and Service Employees International Union, A/SLMR No. 87, at page 5, August 3, 1971.

Although the Charleston Veterans Hospital case antedated Report No. 49, that Report was not intended to rescind the principle followed in that case. In NASA, Kennedy Space Center and American Federation of Government Employees the Assistant Secretary expressly so stated. A/SLMR No. 223 at page 3, December 4, 1972. See also Veterans Administration Center, Bath, New York and Local 491, National Federation of Federal Employees, A/SLMR No. 335, January 8, 1974.

In Department of the Air Force, Base Procurement Office, Vandenburg Air Force Base and National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1001, A/SLMR No. 485, February 4, 1975, the Respondent filed with the Assistant Regional Director a motion to dismiss on the ground that the dispute was essentially a matter of contract interpretation subject to resolution under the negotiated grievance procedure, the same contention as is made here. The Assistant Regional Director denied the motion stating that the issues went beyond merely contract interpretation and that Section 19(d) of the Executive Order gave the Complainant the election of proceeding by way of the grievance procedure or by way of complaint of an unfair labor practice. The motion was renewed before the Administrative Law Judge. In his Report and Recommendation Judge Devaney recommended that the motion be denied on two grounds one of which was that the second sentence of Section 19(d), especially in view of the explicit language of the Report and Recommendation on the Amendment of Executive Order 11491, clearly and unambiguously gave the aggrieved party the option to pursue his grievance under the grievance procedure or to pursue a remedy by way of an unfair labor practice complaint under the Order. The Assistant Secretary denied the motion without considering this point.

I conclude that the policy expressed in Report No. 49 does not preclude deciding this case under a complaint of an unfair labor practice. For this reason, and based on the conclusion reached under the preceding caption, the Respondent's Motion to Dismiss is denied.

III. The Termination of the Employment of the Four Employees Was the Imposition of Discipline

As an original proposition, it would appear beyond cavil that terminating a probationary employee's employment, during the probationary period, "due to sleeping during working hours", the reason given for "termination during probation" in the "Notification of Personnel Action", 7/ was the imposition of discipline for sleeping during working hours. Certainly this is so in any ordinary usage of words. But the Respondent argues, and even introduced evidence, that the terminations here involved were not disciplinary in nature. The argument, which has some support in Civil Service Commission regulations, 8/ is that a probationary employee is, during the period of probation, under a process of continuing examination and evaluation, and that termination during that period is part of the examining and evaluating process and not the imposition of of discipline and not reviewable. 9/ It would follow, in accordance with the Respondent's arguments, that whatever

7/ Exh. C-4.

8/ Exh. R-4, subch. 8, pp. 315-27 ff.

9/ Except on special grounds not relevant here, such as alleged termination because of sex, religion, race and the like.

rights an employee may have to a union representative to appear on his behalf with respect to discipline, he does not have the right to have a representative appear on his behalf on his examination.

Whatever legalese or personnelese the Commission or personnel officers may employ cannot change the fact that terminating a probationary employee's employment prior to the end of the probationary period "due to sleeping during working hours" is imposing discipline for sleeping during working hours. Involuntary termination of employment for misconduct is not only discipline, it is the ultimate discipline.

IV. The Respondent's Disparate Procedure in Disciplining Probationary and Non-Probationary Employees Is Not Unlawful Discrimination in Violation of Section 19(a)(2)

The Complainant argues that by permitting the Union to be present at a "pre-action investigation" of a permanent employee and recognizing the right of such an employee to have a union representative represent him at such a meeting, while denying such right to probationary employees, the Respondent makes union membership less valuable and less attractive to probationary employees, thereby discourages probationary employees from joining the Union, and therefore violates Section 19(a)(2) of the Executive Order. I find such conclusion unsound, although it has some literal validity.

Section 19(a)(2) makes it an unfair labor practice for agency management to:

> "encourage or discourage membership in a labor organization by discrimination in regard to hiring, tenure, promotion, or other conditions of employment;"

The right to have a union representative act on behalf of an employee at the imposition of discipline or at a pre-discipline investigation is a condition of employment. And the Respondent does discriminate between probationary and non-probationary employees in that condition of employment. And that discrimination does make union membership less attractive to probationary employees. But I conclude that such discrimination is not in violation of Section 19(a)(2).

I conclude that not all discrimination in conditions of employment that makes union membership less valuable and therefore discourages membership would be in violation of Section 19(a)(2) of the Executive Order. I believe that for the discrimination to be proscribed it must be based on or motivated by, at least in part, union membership or activity or sympathy, that it must have a union relationship.

If the Respondent permitted all employees to be represented by the Union at the imposition of discipline and at discipline investigations, except employees named Smith, such disparate procedure would make union membership less valuable to employees named Smith and perhaps discourage them from seeking membership. But I believe that such procedure, however reprehensible otherwise, would not violate the proscription of Section 19(a)(2). The same result would follow if the discrimination were based on sex or religion or race instead of surname. The discrimination would be wrong and probably remediable, but not under Section 19(a)(2) or any other provisions of the Executive Order. I find the discrimination involved here, against employees whose status is that of probationary employee, to be of that nature.

Furthermore, the complaint alleges no facts pertaining to discrimination in a condition of employment based on employee status. There is no intimation that union animus is involved in this case. I conclude there was no violation of Section 19(a)(2) of the Executive Order.

V. The Unilateral Establishment and Implementation of a Separate System for Disciplining Probationary Employees

On August 16, 1973, the Respondent issued Instruction 12300.1 10/ concerning the termination of temporary employees or employees in a probationary period. It provides for termination of a probationary employee by the Branch or Shop Head, for conduct after appointment, after discussion with the employee. It does not mention any pre-action investigation or any representation of the employee at the discussion or otherwise. The Instruction was issued without negotiation or consultation with the Complainant. The Complainant argues that such promulgation was of a "personnel policy or practice" that was negotiable and that its unilateral promulgation without negotiation or consultation was a violation of Section 19(a)(6) of the Executive Order.

The complaint in this case states that the "Basis of the Complaint" is as follows:

> "On March 8, 1974 Mr. McDonald Shop 51 head held a discussion with four (4) Shop 51 Employees. Disciplinary action was contemplated.
>
> "Mr. McDonald denied these people representation."

There is not a word in the complaint to indicate that the Respondent improperly issued the Instruction or failed or refused to negotiate or consult about anything. Indeed, the complaint as filed does not even allege that Section 19(a)(6) was involved. At the beginning of the hearing the complaint was amended to allege a violation of Section 19(a)(6) without amendment of the factual allegations. 11/ Indeed, the Complainant does not even contend in its brief on this point that the alleged violation vitiated the termination of the four employees; the only relief it seeks for this alleged violation is that the Secretary find that the Activity unlawfully refused to negotiate in unilaterally promulgating the Instruction. 12/

Since the complaint does not allege any facts pertaining to the Instruction or its promulgation, the issue is not properly before me and is not considered.

VI. The Denial of Representation to the Four Employees and the Refusal to Permit the Complainant to Represent Them

McDonald denied to the Complainant the right to be represented other than as an observer at his discussion with each of the four employees and denied to each of the four employees the right to be represented by the Complainant at his discussion with McDonald concerning his alleged sleeping during a tour of duty at the end of which discussion McDonald told him his employment would be terminated. The Complainant was permitted to have a representative present as an observer and not as a participant; when the representative, Brock, tried to speak during the discussions McDonald stopped him and told him he could only observe and would be permitted to make a statement at the end of the discussions.

The last sentence of Section 10(e) of the Order provides:

> "The labor organization shall be given the opportunity to be represented at formal discussions between management and employees or employee representatives concerning grievances, personnel policies and practices, or other matters affecting general working conditions of employees in the unit."

The right of a labor organization to be represented at such discussions means the right to be represented as a participant, not merely as an observer. Being permitted to be present only as an observer would frustrate not only the labor organization's interests in the discussion but could also frustrate its fulfilling its obligation imposed by the second sentence of Section 10(e), the obligation to represent the interests of all employees in the unit. Should agency management deny to a labor organization the opportunity to be represented at such discussions as a participant, it would violate the proscription of Section 19(a)(6) against refusing to confer. And since all employees in the unit have the right to have the Union fulfill its obligation of the second sentence of Section 10(e) to represent them, it would also violate Section 19(a)(1).

11/ Tr. 10.

12/ Complainant's Brief, page 29.

The questions here, then, are whether the four discussions between McDonald and the four employees were formal discussions and if they were whether they concerned "grievances, personnel policies and practices, or other matters affecting general working conditions of employees in the unit".

I conclude that the discussions were "formal" in nature within the meaning of Section 10(e). Each discussion was with the Head of Shop 51, several supervisory levels above the employee. It was held pursuant to a formal Instruction promulgated by the Commander of the Activity, the Norfolk Naval Shipyard. The subject was a charge of serious misconduct by the employee, and, in accordance with the Instruction, the employee was to be told at the discussion whether he was to be retained. 13/ A discussion in which the employee's job is at stake and at which a decision is to be made, and communicated to the employee, whether he will be retained or terminated as an employee, cannot be characterized as an informal discussion.

The discussions here meet the test of formal discussions within the meaning of Section 10(e) of the Executive Order. There remains the question of whether they concerned "grievances, personnel policies and practices, or other matters affecting general working conditions of employees in the unit."

Were this a case of first impression, I would conclude that the employees were entitled to be represented at the discussions by the Complainant and that the Complainant was entitled to be represented as a participant. Before the decision in Federal Aviation Administration, National Aviation Facilities Experimental Center, Atlantic City, New Jersey, A/SLMR No. 438, there were numerous decisions on both sides of the line separating discussions between an employee and higher level at which the labor organization was or was not entitled to be represented and at which the employee was entitled to be represented and discussions at which he was not entitled to be represented by the labor organization. 14/ But in view 13/ Exh. R-3, sec. 3(b).

14/ Probably the most significant for present purposes were U. S. Army Headquarters, U. S. Army Training Center, Infantry, Fort Jackson Laundry Facility, A/SLMR No. 242; Department of the Army, Transportation Motor Pool, Fort Wainwright, Alaska, A/SLMR No. 279; Department of Defense, National Guard Bureau, Texas Air National Guard, A/SLMR No. 336; Department of Health, Education and Welfare, Social Security Administration, Great of the decision in that case, I am constrained to conclude that the discussions here involved, although formal in nature, do not fall within the provisions of Section 10(e) of the Executive Order.

In the National Aviation Facilities Experimental Center case an employee was called by the Chief of the Division, several supervisory steps above the employee, to a meeting with him. When she arrived he told her he wanted to discuss the basis on which he believed he should issue a formal letter of reprimand to her. The employee stated she did not want to discuss the matter without her representative. The Chief denied her request. An official reprimand was issued the next day. The Administrative Law Judge concluded that the discussion was a formal discussion and governed by Section 10(e) and that the failure to afford the Union an opportunity to be represented at the discussion violated Sections 19(a)(1) and 19(a)(6) of the Executive Order. The Assistant Secretary disagreed. He did not, at least not expressly, disagree that the discussion was a formal discussion; as in this case the discussion was required by regulation. Noting the absence of a pending grievance, he held that the meeting pertained merely to the application of certain regulations to an individual employee and had no wider ramifications and hence did not involve matters encompassed within Section 10(e).

The only difference of significance between that case and this case is the degree of discipline imposed. In both cases the discipline imposed was formal discipline. I can find no indication anywhere, nor can I conclude a priori, that the degree of formal discipline imposed is determinative of whether the representative had a right to be present or the employee had a right to have the representative represent him at the critical meeting.

It could be argued that the National Aviation Facilities Experimental Center case is distinguishable from this case on the ground that in that case the employee, after the imposition of discipline, could present its imposition as a grievance and that in the grievance procedure the Union unquestionably would have the right to be represented and she would have the right to have the Union represent her. In this case the employee, as a probationary employee, could not have a second bite. But to predicate a difference in result on such distinction would in effect hold that probationary employees have greater rights to representation at formal meetings at which discipline is to be imposed than permanent employees. Such a result is nowhere indicated in the Order, nor do I find it otherwise sustainable.

14/ (continued) Lakes Program Center, A/SLMR No. 419; Internal Revenue Service, Mid-Atlantic Service Center, A/SLMR No. 421.

Nor may this case be distinguished on the ground that here there were four discussions with four employees with all having the same result, and that taken together they established a personnel policy or practice that probationary employees who slept during duty hours would have their employment terminated. That was the result in each instance, but it was not established as a personnel policy or practice in the unit. McDonald was not a personnel officer nor was he shown to have had authority to establish personnel policies or practices. He was the Head of Shop 51, only one of numerous components of the Respondent Activity. He did not establish a policy or practice even for Shop 51. He simply reached a conclusion and acted in each case. In any future case, even in Shop 51, McDonald or any one else would not be bound to reach the same result because of what was done in this case.

A rounded system of labor relations would entitle the employee, in a situation such as was involved here, to have his Union represent him at his meeting with management. For that reason perhaps the Executive Order should, since it can, be interpreted to confer such right. But I do not write on a clean slate. Such a suggestion was made by the Administrative Law Judge in the Texas Air National Guard case 15/ and rejected by the Assistant Secretary. I conclude from the decisions of the Assistant Secretary that it is his position that the meetings between an employee and management at which the labor organization is entitled by virtue of the Executive Order to be represented are only those spelled out, however loosely, in the Executive Order. I am bound by those decisions, and cannot find the meetings here involved to fall within the Executive Order.

This conclusion is not affected by the recent decisions of the Supreme Court on February 19, 1975 in National Labor Relations Board v. J. Weingarten, Inc., 43 Law Week 4275, and International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union v. Quality Manufacturing Company, 43 Law Week 4282. In those cases the Supreme Court upheld decisions of the National Labor Relations Board which had been set aside by the Courts of Appeals for the Fourth and Fifth Circuits. So far as relevant here, the facts in those two cases were identical. An employee was called in by management for an interview which the employee reasonably feared might result in the imposition of discipline. The employee requested union representation. The request was denied, and results unfortunate for the employee eventuated as a proximate consequence. The N. L. R. B., departing from its earlier precedents, held that the employer violated Section 8(a)(1) of the National Labor Relations Act which declares it an unfair labor practice for an employer to interfere with, restrain, or coerce employees in the exercise of rights guaranteed by Section 7 of the Act. The right guaranteed by Section 7 that the N. L. R. B. found had been interfered with was "the right...to engage in concerted activities for the purpose of...mutual aid or protection." The Supreme Court held that such construction of that provision of Section 7 was a permissible construction and that the Courts of Appeal "impermissibly encroached upon the Board's function," the "'special function of applying the general provisions of the Act to the complexities of industrial life'" "in light of changing industrial practices and the Board's cumulative experience." 43 Law Week at 4279.

Those decisions are not persuasive of the result I should reach in this case. There is no provision in the Executive Order like the above-quoted excerpt from Section 7 of the National Labor Relations Act. But more fundamentally, the Supreme Court held in those decisions that the Board's "newly arrived at construction of Section 7" was a permissible construction, as had been its earlier contrary construction over a period of some thirty years, arrived at in the light of its greater accumulation of expertise in changing industrial practices. I read the decisions of the Assistant Secretary in the cases cited above in footnote 14 and in the National Aviation Facilities Experimental Center case as expounding the application of his expertise in this field in the manner described above in discussing those cases. Perhaps, in the application of his now greater expertise, he will reach a new construction of the Executive Order. But until then I am bound by his past decisions.

Accordingly, I must conclude that the complaint should be dismissed.

Recommendation

The complaint should be dismissed.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR
ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS
SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY,
INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE,
INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA
A/SLMR No. 909

This case involves an unfair labor practice complaint filed by the National Treasury Employees Union and its Chapter 49 (NTEU) alleging that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1), (2) and (6) of the Order by unfairly and inaccurately evaluating the job performance of the President of the NTEU Chapter, restricting her job responsibilities, and by reimplementing the security restrictions in its Classification Section, the President's work area, without notifying the Complainant.

The Respondent maintained that the Union President's performance evaluation was equitable, fair and without any showing of anti-union animus and that it was not obligated to bargain with the Complainant concerning the decision to reinstitute the security restrictions in the Classification Area as such decision is not negotiable under Section 11(b) of the Order. It contended, further, that the Complainant was made aware at meetings in October 1974, and June 1975, that the restrictions were going to be reinstituted but there was no request for bargaining.

The Administrative Law Judge, noting that performance evaluations are subjective evaluations by supervisors, found insufficient evidence to establish that the Union President's performance evaluation was discriminatory or motivated by anti-union animus and recommended that the complaint, in this regard, be dismissed. With regard to the allegation concerning the Respondent's reinstitution of security restrictions without notifying the Complainant, the Administrative Law Judge found that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by not formally notifying the Complainant and giving it an opportunity to meet and confer on the procedures to be observed in implementing the reinstitution of security measures in the Classification Area and on the impact of the decision on adversely affected employees. In this regard, he noted that the Complainant was never specifically or sufficiently informed when the security restrictions would be reinstituted.

In adopting the findings, conclusions and recommendations of the Administrative Law Judge, the Assistant Secretary noted that although the Respondent notified the Complainant in October 1974, of its intention to reinstitute security restrictions, it never specified when it intended to take such action. Under these circumstances, and noting the length of time between the "notice" afforded the Complainant and the action by Respondent in November 1975, the Assistant Secretary found that the Respondent failed in its duty under the Order to specifically notify the Complainant of its decision, and provide the Complainant an opportunity to bargain about the impact and implementation of the decision. Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary ordered the Respondent to cease and desist from the action found violative, and to take certain affirmative actions.

DECISION AND ORDER

On April 21, 1977, Administrative Law Judge Gordon J. Myatt issued his Recommended Decision and Order in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had engaged in certain unfair labor practices and recommending that it cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative actions as set forth in the attached Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order. Thereafter, the Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief with respect to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order and the Complainant filed an answering brief.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order and the entire record in the subject case, including the Respondent's exceptions and supporting brief and the Complainant's answering brief, I hereby adopt the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendations.

The Administrative Law Judge found, and I concur, that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by reinstituting security restrictions in November 1975, without first notifying the Complainant and affording it a reasonable opportunity to bargain concerning the impact and implementation of the decision. In the instant matter, although the Respondent apparently informed the Complainant of its intention to reinstitute the security restrictions at a meeting held on October 10, 1974, a year before the resumption of the security restrictions, it never specified when such action would take place. Similarly, at the parties' June 1975, meeting no indication was given by the Respondent as to when the Classification Section would be moved or when the security restrictions would be enforced. Under these particular circumstances, and noting the length of time between the "notice" afforded the Complainant and the action by the Respondent in November 1975, I find that the Respondent failed in its obligation under the Order to afford the Complainant specific notice of its intentions, 1/ and to provide the Complainant with a reasonable opportunity to bargain over the procedures to be observed in implementing its decision to reinstitute the security measures, and on the impact of its decision on adversely affected employees.

ORDER 2/

Pursuant to Section 6(b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, and Section 203.26(b) of the Regulations, the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations hereby orders that the Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Indianapolis, Indiana, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Reinstituting security restrictions without notifying the National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter 49, the exclusive bargaining representative, and affording it a reasonable opportunity to meet and confer, to the extent consonant with law and regulations, on the procedures to be observed in implementing such change, and on the impact the change will have on adversely affected employees.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of rights assured by Executive Order 11491, as amended.

2. Take the following affirmative actions in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of Executive Order 11491, as amended:

(a) Upon request by the National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter 49, meet and confer, to the extent consonant with law and regulations, concerning the procedures used in reinstituting the security restrictions which became effective in November 1975, and on the impact of the change on adversely affected employees.

1/ Compare Department of the Navy, Marine Corps Supply Center, Barstow, California, A/SLMR No. 692, and Internal Revenue Service, Philadelphia Service Center, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, A/SLMR No. 771.

2/ In its exceptions, the Respondent contended that the Administrative Law Judge's proposed remedy is, in effect, a return to the status quo ante and should not be required as a part of the remedial order herein. In my view, where, as here, there has been an improper failure to meet and confer over the impact and implementation of a management decision which is not within the ambit of Section 11(a) of the Order, generally it will not effectuate the purposes and policies of the Order to require a return to the status quo ante as part of the remedial order. See Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Manhattan District, A/SLMR No. 841.

(b) Post at the Internal Revenue Service, Indianapolis, Indiana, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix" on forms to be furnished by the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the District Director of the Indianapolis District and shall be posted and maintained by him for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. The Director shall take reasonable steps to insure that such notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to Section 203.27 of the Regulations, notify the Assistant Secretary, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this order as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the complaint in Case No. 50-13140(CA), insofar as it alleges violations of Section 19(a)(2) of the Order, be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

Statement of the Case

Pursuant to a complaint filed April 1, 1976, by National Treasury Employees Union and NTEU Chapter 49 (hereinafter called the Union) alleging that Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Services, Indianapolis, Indiana (hereinafter called the Activity) violated Section 19(1),(2) and (6) of the Executive Order 11491, as amended, the Regional Administrator of Labor-Management Services Administration for the Chicago Region issued a Notice of Hearing on complaint on September 16, 1976. The complaint alleged that the Respondent Activity engaged in discriminatory treatment of the president of the local chapter of the Union in the following manner:

(a) Unfairly and inaccurately evaluating her job performance because of her union activities.

(b) restricting her job responsibilities by taking away work she previously performed and refusing to inform her of changes in procedures and programs.

(c) refusing to assign her work to perform.

(d) interfering with her right and the right of other employees to discuss job or union-related matters by restricting her right to meet and confer with employees.

A hearing was held on the issues in this case on November 18, 1976, in Indianapolis, Indiana. All parties were represented by counsel and afforded full opportunity to be heard and to introduce relevant evidence and testimony on the issues involved. Briefs were submitted by counsel and have been duly considered in arriving at the decision in this case. 1/ The Union brief withdrew that portion of the allegations relating to the restriction of job responsibilities and the refusal to assign work to Ms. Brickens. Accordingly, no findings will be made on this aspect of the Complaint.

Upon the entire record in this matter, including my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following:

Findings of Fact

Chapter 49 of the Union is the exclusive representative of all district bargaining unit employees of the Respondent Activity within the state of Indiana. It has held this status since July 1971. The labor organization and the Activity are parties to a Multi-District Agreement between the National Treasury Employees Union and the Internal Revenue Service.

1/ The time for filing briefs was orginally set for December 20, 1976. Because of the failure of the official reporter to supply copies of the transcript to the parties the time for submitting briefs was extended on three different occasions. The final extension was until March 25, 1977.

Ms. Jenny Brickens has been the President and Chief Steward of Chapter 49 since it first achieved exclusive recognition. She is employed as a clerk-stenographer for the Returns Program Manager in the Classification Area of the Audit Division. Among other things, her duties initially included preparing statistical reports on audit programs, initial screening of informants' letter, maintaining control and records on special audit programs as well as general clerical duties for the Returns Program Manager. 2/

Ms. Brickens first supervisor and the person under whom she worked the longest period of time was Robert Rawley. He was the Returns Program Manager from mid-1968 until July 1974, when he retired. 3/ Rawley was succeeded by Robert Padilla, for a period fo approximately a month. On August 4, 1974, Robert Bennett became the Returns Program Manager and was Brickens' supervisor during the time that the issues arose in this case.

Under the IRS regulations the Classification Area was considered a restricted area. (Respondent Activity Exhibit No. 1). This means that access was limited solely to authorized employees. The requirements set forth in the IRS Manual regarding "restricted areas" states as follows:

2/ The above recital of Ms. Brickens' duties is in general terms and does not purport to include all of her job-related responsibilities. Her job description is in evidence as Complainant Union's Exhibit No. 2. However, a number of the duties set forth in the job description have been changed or removed because of changes in IRS procedures or consolidation of functions for reasons of efficiency.

3/ Rawley retired to Florida and an affidavit given by him was received in evidence, over the objection of the Respondent Activity. (Complainant Union Exhibit No. 1). The affidavit is considered herein only insofar as it relates to Rawley's satisfaction with Brickens job performance and the freedom of access employees had to come into Brickens' area to discuss job-related problems with her.

241 Restricted Area

> A restricted area is an area to which access is limited to authorized employees. Restricted areas shall be prominently posted as such and shall be separated from non-restricted areas by physical barriers which will eliminate free access. Bank-type partitions, rows of file cabinets or similar barriers will suffice for this purpose. The number of entrances to a restricted area should be kept to a minimum and each entrance should be controlled....

From 1972 to July 1974, the Returns Program Office was located in the Consolidated Building. This was several blocks away from the main offices of the Activity which were in the old Federal Building. Although Ms. Brickens' office was a part of the Classification Division, the regulations requiring the restriction of her area were not enforced because the actual classification of returns was being performed in the old Federal Building. This was the same situtation which prevailed prior to 1972 when the Returns Program Office was located in the Century Building -- away from the main IRS offices. The testimony and record evidence indicates that while Ms. Brickens was located in the Century and Consolidated Buildings, all employees were free to come to her desk to discuss job-related matters with her in her capacity as union president and chief steward.

In July 1974, the Returns Program Office was moved into the old Federal Building and physically relocated in the Classification section. However, the employees continued to have unrestricted access to Ms. Brickens on union matters until sometime in 1974. There is dispute in the testimony as to how and to what extent management curtailed this practice. Ms. Brickens testified that in October there was publicity over informational picketing taking place outside the building, and a news reporter was directed to her as the chief union official. According to Brickens, this incident resulted in Vernon Dawson, Chief of the Administration Division, informing her that unauthorized persons were not allowed in the restricted area. Brickens testified that he did not mention employees of the Activity, and she interpreted his restriction to apply to non-IRS personnel. However, on cross-examination she acknowledged that after the incident she met with individuals in designated conference rooms outside the area and that she may have met with employees in these conference rooms. Dawson and Bennett testified that in October 1974, Dawson began to enforce the restricted area requirements and so informed Brickens. Dawson stated that he provided several conference rooms outside the area to Ms. Brickens to allow her to confer with employees who were not authorized to enter the Classification Section. He also informed her that if the conference rooms were occupied, he would make other space available to her. In view of Brickens' acknowledgement that she did meet with individuals in the conference room and that she may have met with employees there, I credit the testimony of Dawson and Bennett regarding this arrangement.

In December 1974, the Respondent Activity moved its entire operation into the new Federal Building. Management had been meeting regularly with the union representatives for more than a year prior to discuss the details and the impact of the move upon the employees. Brickens did not recall any discussion regarding enforcement of the security arrangements for the Classification Section, but a joint summary of a meeting held on October 10, 1974, discloses that this subject was considered by the parties. (Respondent Activity Exhibit No. 2). The matter was of concern to management because "anyone wishing to see the union president" (Brickens) had "to go through the Returns Classification Area." Dawson testified that he informed Brickens there had been an oversight in the planning, and the Classification Area would be open and exposed when they first moved into the new building. He stated this could not be corrected until the building was fully occupied and the contractor turned control over to GSA. Because Dawson's testimony in this regard is consistent with the jointly signed summary, I credit his account of this meeting.

After the Respondent Activity moved into the new Federal Building, the restrictions for the Classification Area were not enforced by management. The area was not partitioned off due to the planning oversight, and employees were free to come to Brickens' desk to discuss matters with her that required union advice or assistance.

Brickens' desk was located near the entrance to Bennett's office. Her discussions with employees, both in person and on the telephone, were a cause of concern and irritation to Bennett. On one occasion, when an employee from another section was seated beside Brickens' desk discussing a matter nvolving an investigation of her conduct, Bennett called that employee's supervisor to ascertain if she had advised him that she was going to see the union official. This was a requirement contained in the negotiated agreement. On another occasion, on a Saturday, Bennett was in the office and decided to move Brickens' desk away from the entrance to his office to a position closer to the doorway leading to the public hallway. Mattingly, Vice President of the union was in the office that day and offered to assist Bennett. Mattingly testified that Bennett volunteered that he was moving Brickens' desk to get her away from him as "he was tired of listening to people come in and talk to Jenny", and "he didn't know what he could do, but he was tired of carrying all of that dead time in his unit." As a partial solution to this problem, he moved Ms. Brickens' desk further away so her union business would be more private and he would not be disturbed by her telephone conversations. 4/

The year 1975 was an unfortunate period personally for Ms. Brickens. She was compelled to take leave from her job at various times due to death in her family, serious illness of her husband, and her own personal illness. In September 1975, Bennett completed his first supervisor's promotion appraisal evaluation of Brickens. He rated her as a "satisfactory" employee and assigned her a numerical rating of 3 on all of the evaluation factors. 5/ In all of her prior appraisals by Rawley, dating back to 1970, she was rated "satisfactory", but the numerical rating assigned to the evaluation factors were generally higher than 3. 6/ Brickens took issue with Bennett's appraisal and refused to sign it. She told him she felt his assessment of her job performance was too low. 7/

4/ See attachment to Assistant Secretary Exhibit No. 1-C.

5/ A rating of 3 is a satisfactory rating under the terms of the negotiated agreement.

6/ Assistant Secretary Exhibit 1-C; Complainant Union Exhibit Nos. 3, 4 and 5.

7/ When questioned at the hearing, Bennett testified that at no time did he take into account Brickens' absence from the job; whether union-related or for personal reasons. He stated that his evaluation was based on the employee's job performance, and absences, regardless of reason, did not effect the evaluation either way.

Sometime in November 1975, Ms. Brickens was on extended leave because her husband had suffered a stroke. While she was out, Bennett and the Chief of the Audit Service Branch issued a joint memorandum to the audit managers reminding them that the Service Branch and the Classification Area were security areas with access limited to authorized personnel. The memorandum stated that enforcement of the security requirements had been "rather relaxed due to our physical layout", but that the regulations would now be enforced as the remodeling had been completed. The remodeling referred to in the memorandum consisted of erecting partitions to wall off an area on the same floor, and moving the Returns Classifications Section and the Audit Service Branch within that space. 8/ The following day, Bennett issued a memorandum to the employees under his supervision (Assistant Secretary Exhibit 1-C, Attachment 6) reminding them of their responsibility to see that the security regulations were enforced. The only exceptions made to the restrictions were for the secretaries of the division chief and the examination branch chiefs. This was to allow them access to the coffee maker to get coffee for their respective supervisors.

It is clear there was no discussion between management and the union representatives in Ms. Brickens' absence regarding the reimposed security restrictions. Management indicated that it felt there was no need to discuss the matter because Ms. Brickens was the only representative of the Union affected by the security limitations. Therefore, a decision was made to wait until she returned to work before informing her of the renewal enforcement of the regulations.

When Ms. Brickens returned in December 1975, she was told by Dawson and Bennett that the security restrictions would be enforced again. She mentioned to Dawson that it would impede her in her representational duties as union president and chief steward because it would make it difficult for employees to get to her. She asked if the area where her desk was located could not be carved out as an exception to the security requirements. Dawson said this was not permissable under the regulations, but that management would provide her with the use of three conference rooms which were adjacent to her office off of the public hallway. Management stated that if these rooms were occupied at the time she needed to confer with the employees, another room would be secured for her. Ms. Brickens continued to object that the security requirements would make it impossible for her to carry out her duties as union president.

8/ This had been the subject of a discussion at a labor-management meeting in June 1975. Ms. Brickens testified that nothing was said at this meeting about enforcing the access restrictions. However, Dawson recalled that it was mentioned and the notes summarizing that meeting (although not signed by Brickens) indicated there was discussion on "shifting the Service [Audit] Branch and the Returns Classification" section. (Respondent Activity Exhibit No. 3).

On December 30, 1975, the union officials and management met to discuss a number of matters. During the course of discussion Ms. Brickens again raised the subject of the reimposition of the security restrictions and the limitation it would place upon the employees seeking to confer with her. Management took the position that the IRS regulations could not be altered, and reaffirmed that arrangements were made for the use of one of the three available conference rooms. Management indicated that it was aware it would be an inconvenience to Ms. Brickens in carrying out her union activities, but it had no choice other than to place these restrictions into effect. (Respondent Activity Exhibit No. 5).

Contention of the Parties

The Union contends that the performance evaluation by Bennett on September 15, 1975, was based on improper considerations relating to her position and involvement as an officer of the labor organization. The Union further contends that the resumption of the security of restrictions for the Classification Area in November 1975, constituted a change in existing practices whereby the Activity permitted employees to freely meet and confer with Ms. Brickens, as the chief representative of the labor organization. It is argued that the Activity had an obligation to notify the Union prior to changing the practice and afford it an opportunity to negotiate on the impact the resumed restrictions would have upon the employees and Ms. Brickens.

The Activity argues that the evaluation appraisal was not discriminatory as there was no showing that the rating was motivated by anti-union animus on the part of Bennett. As to the renewed enforcement of the security restrictions, the Activity takes the position that under Section 11(b) of the Order 9/ the duty to bargain concerning the security restrictions is specifically excluded from the negotiating process. While the Activity acknowledges that there is a duty to negotiate on the impact of the decision to enforce the security regulations, it contends that the union officials never requested negotiations for this purpose; although they were aware that the restrictions were going to be resumed.

Concluding Findings 10/

Considering first the allegation that the performance appraisal of Ms. Brickens was discriminatory motivated, I find and conclude that the record evidence does not support this claim. The testimony shows that Ms. Brickens, as the senior union official responsible for representing the unit employees throughout the entire state, received numerous visits and telephone calls from employees on job-related problems. The affidavit of Rawley indicates that he did not find this to be an irritant, nor did he feel that it interfered with her job responsibilities while he was her supervisor. It is evident, however, that the conversations, both in person and on the telephone, were a source of annoyance and irritation to Bennett. On one occasion he called the supervisor of a visiting employee to ascertain whether she had received permission to make such a visit to the union official, as required by the negotiated agreement. He also moved Ms. Brickens' desk from the close proximity to his office to a position nearer to the public hallway when the offices were relocated to the new 9/ Section 11(b) of the Order states in pertinent part:

> In prescribing regulations relating to personnel policies and practices and working conditions, an agency shall have due regard for the obligation imposed by paragraph (a) of this section. However, the obligation to meet and confer does not include matters with respect to... its internal security practices. (Emphasis supplied).

10/ As noted, no findings are made herein concerning the withdrawal of duties or the failure to assign work to Ms. Brickens.

Federal Building. However, there is a distinction between irritation on the part of a supervisor over numerous visits and conversations relating to union matters and actions which manifest anti-union animus. At no time did Bennett interfere with Ms. Brickens performance of her responsibilities as a union official. Indeed, it might be said that the relocation of her desk was as much for her convenience as his, since it afforded her more privacy in her conversations both on the telephone and face to face with employees. Nor can it be said that when Bennett contacted the supervisor of one of the employees who was conversing with Ms. Brickens, that he was doing anything other than ascertaining whether the requirements of the negotiated agreement were being followed.

It is well understood that a performance evaluation is a subjective appraisal by a supervisor. Department of Transportation, Federal Aviation Administration, Houston Area Office-Southwest Region, A/SLMR No. 126 (January 24, 1972). The mere fact that all of Ms. Brickens' prior appraisals by Rawley were numerically higher than the appraisal given by Bennett on September 15, 1975, does not, in the absence of evidence of antipathy toward her because of her union activities, indicate that the appraisal was discriminatory motivated. It should be noted that both Bennett and Rawley considered her to be a satisfactory employee and their ratings reflected this judgement. On the basis of the record evidence, I find that the Union has failed to establish that Bennett's evaluation of Ms. Brickens was anything other than his honest assessment of her performance of her job duties. 11/

Accordingly, I find and conclude that the record does not support a finding that the evaluation appraisal of Ms. Brickens was discriminatory, or that her rating was lowered because she was involved in activities on behalf of the labor organization. For this reason, I find that the Union has failed to sustain the burden of proof by a perponderance of the evidence as required by Section 203.15 of the Regulations, and that this allegation of the complaint must be dismissed.

The issue regarding the resumption of the security restrictions for the Classification Area presents a closer question in my opinion. It is clear from all of the testimony and the evidence in this record that prior to moving into the new Federal Office Building, management officials were very lax about enforcing the limited access requirements as they related to the Returns Program Section. This was due, in part, to the physical arrangements when that section was located in the Century and Consolidated buildings. The creditable testimony of Dawson indicates that the actual classification of tax returns was being performed in the old Federal Building, and there was no real need to impose the restrictions on the section where Ms. Brickens was employed. Although the restrictions were enforced for approximately a month when the Returns Program Unit moved into the Old Federal Building, they were relaxed by necessity when the entire office moved into the new building because of the failure to plan for the partitioning-off of the Audit Branch and the Classification Area. While it is not clear that management specifically informed the Union that the security requirements would be reinstated once in the new office building, there is indication -- at least in June 1975 -- that management did advise the union representatives that the Audit Branch and the Classification Area would be moved once partitions were installed.

However, it is management's conduct after the June meeting which gives rise to the central issue on this aspect of the case. Once the remodeling was completed, management immediately issued a memorandum indicating that the restrictions were reimposed. Ms. Brickens was absent from work for personal reasons at the time the memoranda were issued to audit managers and employees in the Classification Section. It is evident that none of the union officials were formally notified of the decision prior to its implementation, and thus were not afforded an opportunity to consult and confer on the impact the restrictions would have on unit employees who had enjoyed unlimited access to the Chief Steward. Management's explanation for this action was that Ms. Brickens was the only person affected and there was no need to discuss the matter until she returned to work. In my opinion, this conduct falls short of the obligations imposed upon management by the Executive Order. When an agency action falls within the scope of Section 11(b) of the Order, there is still an obligation to give reasonable notice to the exclusive representative to afford it amply opportunity to request bargaining -- not on the decision, but on the procedures involved and the impact on employees adversely affected-- prior to its implementation. 12/ In the instant case there was no advance notification, nor was this failure justified by the fact that Ms. Brickens was on leave at the time. There were other union officials available, and the decision affected employees generally as well as Ms. Brickens in her capacity as president and chief steward. Although the Activity asserts that the Union was notified of this action during the meeting in June 1975, I do not find that the union officials were specifically informed that the security limitations would be resumed at this meeting. They were advised that the Audit Branch and the Classification Area would be moved once the partitions were installed. If this implied that the security arrangements would then be enforced, I find that it was not specific or sufficient notification to satisfy the requirements under the Order. Nor did the subsequent discussion with Ms. Brickens cure the violation. In each of these discussions management presented the union with a fait accompli, and there was no meaningful bargaining on procedures or impact. I am not unmindful that management made available to the Union the conference rooms outside the restricted area. But this was solely management's decision -- made without consulting or conferring with the union representatives. It is entirely possible that the parties would have agreed to the solution directed by management, or they may not have, but that is not the issue here. It is the opportunity to engage in meaningful negotiation in situations as presented by this case, that the Order preserves in order to foster harmony in labor-management relations.

Accordingly, I find that the Activity violated Section 19(a)(6) of the Executive Order by resuming enforcement of the security restricitons in November 1975, without first notifying the Union and affording it a reasonable opportunity to negotiate on the procedures involved and the impact on the employees adversely affected by the decision. 13/ This conduct also has a concommitant coercive effect upon and interfered with the rights assured employees under Section 19(a)(1) of the Order. I do not find, however, that the above conduct violates Section 19(a)(2) of the Order. It is evident from the circumstances of this case that the conduct was not intended to discourage union membership nor did it have such an effect.

13/ I do not find that the facts of this case are controlled by the recent decision in Internal Revenue Service, Brookhaven Service Center, supra. There is no question here that the Activity's action caused a change by restricting access which was previously permitted.

Having found that the Respondent Activity has engaged in conduct which violates Section 19(a)(1) and (6), I shall recommend that the Assistant Secretary adopt the following Recommended Order designed to effectuate the policies of Executive Order 11491, as amended.

RECOMMENDED ORDER

Pursuant to Section 6(b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended and Section 203.26(b) of the Regulations promulgated thereunder, the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations hereby Orders that Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Indianapolis, Indiana, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

   (a) Resuming enforcement of security area restrictions required by regulations without first notifying National Treasury Employees Union and NTEU Chapter 49, as the exclusive bargaining representative, and affording it a reasonable opportunity to consult and confer on the procedures involved and the impact of the security restrictions on employees adversely affected by them.

   (b) In any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce employees in the exercise of rights assured by Executive Order 11491, as amended.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and provisions of the Executive Order.

   (a) Notify National Treasury Employees Union and NTEU Chapter 49 of any intended resumption of enforcement of security restrictions and, upon request, consult and confer in good faith on the procedures involved and the impact on employees adversely affected thereby.

(b) Post at the Internal Revenue Service, Indianapolis, Indiana, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix" on forms to be furnished by the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Director of the Administration Division and shall be posted and maintained by him for sixty (60) consecutive days thereafter, in conspicious places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. The Director shall take reasonable steps to insure that such notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to Section 203.27 of the Regulations notify the Assistant Secretary in writing within twenty (20) days from the date of this Order as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

U. S. DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
NATIONAL OCEANIC AND ATMOSPHERIC ADMINISTRATION, NATIONAL WEATHER SERVICE, CENTRAL, WESTERN AND SOUTHERN REGIONS
A/SLMR No. 910

Petitions were filed by employees of the three activities involved seeking to decertify the Incumbent-Intervenor, National Association of Government Employees, Councils of Central, Western, and Southern Regions Locals (NAGE), as the exclusive representative in three units containing professional and nonprofessional employees. The National Weather Service Employees Organization, MEBA, AFL-CIO (NWSEO) was granted intervention in each case. The NAGE indicated its opposition to any election conducted which provided for a self-determination election for the professional employees, contending that Section 10(b)(4) of the Order requires such an election only upon the establishment of a unit and, therefore, such an election is only required where either a new professional-nonprofessional employee unit, or a change in the established unit, is proposed. It refused to enter into consent election agreements providing for such a self-determination election.

This matter was brought before the Assistant Secretary pursuant to a Regional Administrator's Order Consolidating and Transferring Cases pursuant to Section 206.5(a) of the Assistant Secretary's Regulations solely for the purpose of determining, under the particular circumstances involved herein, whether the professional employees should be granted a self-determination election.

The Assistant Secretary found that, under the particular circumstances herein, the elections to be conducted in this matter are subject to the requirements of Section 10(b)(4) of the Order. Accordingly, he ordered the cases remanded to the appropriate Regional Administrator for further processing in accordance with his finding that any election conducted in the subject cases must provide for a self-determination election for the professional employees.

DECISION AND ORDER

This matter is before the Assistant Secretary pursuant to Regional Administrator Cullen P. Keough's Order Consolidating and Transferring Cases to the Assistant Secretary pursuant to Section 206.5(a) of the Assistant Secretary's Regulations solely for the purpose of determining whether, under the particular circumstances involved herein, the professional employees in each of the existing professional-nonprofessional employee units in the above-named cases should be granted the option of separately expressing their desires respecting their continued inclusion in such units. 1/

Upon the entire record in the subject cases, including the briefs filed by the National Association of Government Employees, Councils of Central, Western, and Southern Regions Locals (NAGE) and by the Activity

1/ Notice was given by the Regional Administrator in the Order Consolidating and Transferring Cases of his intent to sever the above-captioned cases subsequent to the decision of the Assistant Secretary.

in Case No. 60-4612(DR), the Assistant Secretary finds:

The petitions in the above-named cases were filed by individual employees seeking to decertify the NAGE which currently is the exclusive bargaining representative in three units containing professional and nonprofessional employees. The NAGE and the National Weather Service Employees Organization, MEBA, AFL-CIO (NWSEO) were granted intervention in each of the subject cases.

The NAGE indicated its opposition to the consent election agreements herein which provide for a self-determination election for the professional employees. In this regard, it contends that Section 10(b)(4) of the Order 2/ requires a self-determination election only upon the establishment of a unit, and that a self-determination election, therefore, is only required where either a new professional-nonprofessional employee unit, or a change in the established unit, is proposed. It further argues that a self-determination election for the professional employees herein could only serve to encourage fragmentation of existing bargaining units. In Case No. 60-4612(DR), the Activity takes the position that fragmentation would result if a self-determination election for the professional employees is ordered, but states that it will comply with the Assistant Secretary's determination.

Under the particular circumstances, I find that the elections to be conducted in the cases herein are subject to the requirements of Section 10(b)(4) of the Order. Particularly noted in this connection was the Assistant Secretary's holding in Indian Health Service Area Office, Window Rock, Arizona, and Public Health Service Indian Hospital, Fort Defiance, Arizona, Department of Health, Education and Welfare, A/SLMR No. 778, which involved a challenge to the status of an incumbent labor organization in an existing professional-nonprofessional employee unit. In that case, the Assistant Secretary concluded that where an election is ordered in an existing mixed unit of professional and nonprofessional employees, the professional employees must be given the option to decide whether they wish to continue in a combined professional and nonprofessional employee unit, regardless of the fact that they have already enjoyed the opportunity of such separate expression in a prior election for a mixed unit of professional and nonprofessional employees. 3/

2/ Section 10(b)(4) provides that a unit shall not be established "if it includes both professional and nonprofessional employees, unless a majority of the professional employees vote for inclusion in the unit."

3/ In reaching this disposition, it was noted that the consolidation procedures established by the Federal Labor Relations Council provide that in every case where a consolidation of units would mix both professional and nonprofessional employees, all of the involved professionals, including those already in mixed units, should be given a separate self-determination election on the issue of being included in the proposed consolidated unit with nonprofessionals.

Accordingly, I shall order that the subject cases be remanded to the appropriate Regional Administrator for further processing in accordance with my finding that any election conducted in the above-named cases must provide for a self-determination election for the professional employees.

ORDER

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the subject cases be, and they hereby are, remanded to the appropriate Regional Administrator.

SUMMARY OF DECISION AND DIRECTION OF ELECTION
OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

GENERAL SERVICES ADMINISTRATION,
REGION 4
A/SLMR No. 911

This case involved a representation petition filed by the National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1766 (NFFE) seeking a unit of all Federal Protective Officers and guards employed by the General Services Administration, Region 4 (Activity). The Activity took the position that the only appropriate unit would consist of a region-wide residual unit of all GSA employees not covered by current negotiated agreements.

The Assistant Secretary found that the unit sought was appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition. In this regard, he noted that the petitioned for unit was a functionally distinct group of employees who shared a clear and identifiable community of interest separate and distinct from the other employees of the Activity as the employees in the claimed unit shared a common mission, performed the same job functions, received specialized training, wore uniforms and, if qualified, carried firearms in the performance of their duties. The Assistant Secretary further noted that the establishment of such a unit would promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations inasmuch as the unit had been previously represented by another labor organization, and there was no evidence that the scope and character of this pre-existing unit had changed subsequent to its initial certification.

Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary ordered an election in the unit found appropriate.

DECISION AND DIRECTION OF ELECTION

Upon a petition duly filed under Section 6 of Executive Order 11491, as amended, a hearing was held before Hearing Officer Annette Allen. The Hearing Officer's rulings made at the hearing are free from prejudicial error and are hereby affirmed.

Upon the entire record in the subject case, including the brief filed by the Petitioner, the Assistant Secretary finds:

1. The labor organization involved claims to represent certain employees of the Activity.

2. The Petitioner, National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1766, hereinafter called NFFE, seeks an election in a unit of all Federal Protective Officers (FPOs) and guards employed by the General Services Administration (GSA), Region 4, excluding professional employees, management officials, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity and supervisors as defined in the Order. 1/ The Activity contends that the petitioned for unit is not appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition because the claimed employees do not possess a clear and identifiable community of interest separate and distinct from other employees of Region 4 of the GSA; such a unit would not promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations; and the intent of the Federal Labor Relations Council to establish broader and more comprehensive units would not be effectuated by establishing the proposed unit. It further asserts that the only appropriate unit would consist of a region-wide residual unit of all GSA Region 4 employees not covered by current negotiated agreements. 2/

The Activity, headquartered in Atlanta, Georgia, and covering an eight state area, 3/ is organizationally comprised of four services: Public Buildings Service; Automated Data and Telecommunications Service; National Archives and Records Service; and Federal Supply Service. All of the employees in the claimed unit are employed in the Federal Protective Service Division of the Public Buildings Service, which is responsible for the protection of personnel and property under the control or jurisdiction of GSA. In this connection, such employees perform patrol duties, respond to emergency situations, and investigate bomb threats and other crimes occurring in buildings under the control of the GSA.

Federal Protective Officers have an internal ranking structure in which the highest ranking FPO, a GS-11 captain, reports directly to the Director of the Federal Protective Service Division. Assisting the captain are two GS-9 lieutenants, each having jurisdiction over a four state zone. Ranking below the lieutenants are GS-7 sergeants and GS-6 corporals with the remaining FPOs and guards at the GS-4 and GS-5 levels.

Successful completion of an eight week academy training course is one of several prerequisites applicants must meet prior to becoming full-fledged FPOs. 4/ Applicants must also initially take a battery of tests, a physical examination, and undergo a background investigation. After meeting the above-noted requirements, FPOs are assigned to one of many duty stations located throughout Region 4. Additionally, FPOs may volunteer for a special operations response team which requires additional training and entitles members to wear a special arm patch. FPOs and guards wear special uniforms and, if qualified, carry firearms in the performance of their duties.

Labor relations matters are handled by the Region's Personnel Division, which also administers personnel policies for all employees within Region 4. In addition to an employee handbook governing GSA employees, there exists a separate handbook containing rules and regulations applicable only to Federal protective personnel, whose tour of duty, unlike other employees, consists of three eight hour shifts during each 24 hour period.

1/ The International Federation of Federal Police was previously certified as the exclusive representative of the claimed employees and entered into a negotiated agreement with the Activity. However, subsequently it disclaimed interest in such unit.

2/ The record reveals that there are currently some 17 exclusively represented units in Region 4.

3/ Region 4 encompasses the states of Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina and Tennessee.

4/ In this connection, GSA guards, of which there are two in Region 4, are those individuals who have not completed this academy training course, but in other respects have similar duties and responsibilities and are subject to the same supervision as FPOs.

Under all of the circumstances herein, I find the claimed unit of all FPOs and guards in Region 4 is appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition. In my view, such a region-wide unit constitutes a functionally distinct group of employees within the meaning of Section 10(b) of the Order who share a clear and identifiable community of interest separate and distinct from other employees of the Activity. 5/ In this regard, the record reveals that FPOs and guards share a common mission, perform the same job functions, share common supervision and are subject to common personnel policies which are administered by the Region's Personnel Division. Additionally, FPOs receive special training and they, along with guards, wear uniforms and, if qualified, carry firearms in the performance of their duties.

Further, I find that such a region-wide unit will promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. In this connection, the record reveals that a region-wide unit of FPOs and guards was previously represented exclusively by the International Federation of Federal Police and covered by a negotiated agreement. In the absence of evidence that the scope and character of this pre-existing unit have changed by virtue of events subsequent to its initial certification, I reject the Activity's contention that the only appropriate unit in these circumstances would consist of a region-wide residual unit of all currently unrepresented Region 4 employees. Rather, I find that the bargaining history in this unit demonstrates that it will promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations.

Based on the foregoing, I find that the following employees constitute a unit appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under Executive Order 11491, as amended:

> All Federal Protective Officers and guards employed by the General Services Administration, Region 4, excluding professional employees, management officials, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, and supervisors as defined by the Order.

DIRECTION OF ELECTION

An election by secret ballot shall be conducted, as early as possible, but not later than 60 days from the date below. The appropriate Area Administrator shall supervise the election, subject to the Assistant Secretary's Regulations. Eligible to vote are those in the unit who were employed during the payroll period immediately preceding the date below, including employees who did not work during that period because they were out ill, or on vacation or on furlough, including those in the military service who appear in person at the polls. Ineligible to vote are employees who quit or were discharged for cause since the designated payroll period and who have not been rehired or reinstated before the election date. Those eligible shall vote whether or not they desire to be represented by the National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1766.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS
SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

WARNER ROBINS AIR LOGISTICS CENTER,
ROBINS AIR FORCE BASE, GEORGIA
A/SLMR No. 912

These cases involved two unfair labor practice complaints filed by the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 987, AFL-CIO (Complainant). One complaint alleged that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1), (2) and (6) of the Order by its unilateral implementation of its last negotiation offer regarding the amount of official time available to stewards for representational purposes when the issue was pending before the Federal Service Impasses Panel (FSIP). The second complaint alleged that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by its unilateral implementation, after the Complaint's request for negotiations, of a system for recording stewards' use of official time for representational activities.

Regarding the first complaint, the Administrative Law Judge found that no overriding exigency existed to permit the implementation of an impassed issue while pending before the FSIP, citing U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, A/SLMR No. 673, and he therefore concluded that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order. He recommended dismissal of the Section 19(a)(2) allegation.

The Administrative Law Judge recommended dismissal of the second complaint concluding that there is an arguable basis under the parties' negotiated agreement for the Respondent's position that "consultation" (as defined in the agreement) rather than negotiation fulfilled its obligations before implementing the record keeping system. Therefore, the Administrative Law Judge found the case involved differing and arguable interpretations of the agreement, rather than a clear unilateral breach which could be the basis for an unfair labor practice finding.

Noting particularly the absence of exceptions regarding the second case, the Assistant Secretary adopted the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendations and he ordered that the Respondent cease and desist from the conduct found violative of the Order in the first case and that it take certain affirmative actions with respect thereto.

DECISION AND ORDER

On May 4, 1977, Administrative Law Judge Gordon J. Myatt issued his Recommended Decision and Order in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had engaged in certain unfair labor practices and recommending that it cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action as set forth in the attached Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order. Thereafter, the Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief with respect to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order and the entire record in the subject cases, including the Respondent's exceptions and supporting brief, and noting particularly that no exceptions were filed in connection with Case No. 40-7585(CA), I hereby adopt the findings, 1/ conclusions and recommendations of the Administrative Law Judge.

1/ At page 5 of his Recommended Decision and Order, the Administrative Law Judge inadvertently used the word "overtime" rather than "official time." This inadvertent error is hereby corrected.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 6(b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, and Section 203.26(b) of the Regulations, the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations hereby orders that the Warner Robins Air Logistics Center, Robins Air Force Base, Georgia shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Unilaterally implementing matters which have been bargained to impasse during collective bargaining negotiations with the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 987, AFL-CIO, or any other exclusive representative, and which have been submitted to the Federal Service Impasses Panel, including limitations on the use of official time by stewards for representational purposes, until the processes of the Federal Service Impasses Panel have been allowed to run their course.

(b) In any like or related manner interferring with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights assured by Executive Order 11491, as amended.

2. Take the following affirmative actions in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of Executive Order 11491, as amended:

(a) Notify the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 987, AFL-CIO, or any other exclusive representative, that management will not unilaterally implement matters which have been bargained to impasse during collective bargaining negotiations and which have been submitted to the Federal Service Impasses Panel, including limitations on the use of official time by stewards for representational purposes, until the processes of the Federal Service Impasses Panel have been allowed to run their course.

(b) Post at its facility at Warner Robins Air Logistics Center, Robins Air Force Base, Georgia, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix" on forms to be furnished by the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Commanding General, Warner Robins Air Logistics Center, Robins Air Force Base, Georgia, and shall be posted and maintained by him for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices of employees are customarily posted. The Commanding General shall take reasonable steps to ensure that such notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to Section 203.27 of the Regulations, notify the Assistant Secretary, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this order as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the complaint in Case No. 40-7514(CA), insofar as it alleges a violation of Section 19(a)(2) of the Order, and the complaint in Case No. 40-7585(CA) be, and they hereby are, dismissed.

RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

Statement of the Case

Pursuant to a Complaint filed in Case No. 40-7514(CA) by American Federation of Government Employees, Local 987, AFL-CIO (hereinafter called the Union), against Warner Robins Air Logistics Center, Robins Air Force Base (hereinafter called the Activity), and a subsequent complaint filed in Case No. 40-7585(CA), the Regional Administrator for Labor-Management Services Administration for the Atlanta Region issued Notices of Hearing on Complaint on October 21, and October 26, 1976, respectively. The cases were consolidated for purposes of hearing by an Order issued October 26, 1976.

The Complaint in Case No. 40-7514 alleged that the Activity violated Section 19(a)(1), (2) and (6) of Executive Order 11491, as amended. The Complaint in Case No. 40-7585 alleged that the Activity violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order.

In Case No. 40-7514 it is alleged that the Activity unilaterally implemented its last offer on the amount of official time available to union stewards for representational purposes at a time when the same subject matter had been submitted by the parties to the Federal Services Impasses Panel and that forum had not had an opportunity to act on the impassed matter. The complainant in Case No. 40-7585 alleges that the Activity unilaterally implemented a record-keeping system in the Directorate of Distribution, without negotiating upon request, for the sole purpose of recording the use of official time by union stewards in the performance of their representational duties. It is asserted that the implementation was effected in spite of written notice by the Union that the subject matter was negotiable.

A hearing was held in Warner Robins, Georgia, on November 30 and December 1, 1976. All parties were represented by counsel and afforded full opportunity to be heard and to introduce relevant evidence and testimony on the issues involved. Briefs were submitted by counsel and have been duly considered.

Upon the entire record in this matter, including my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following:

Findings of Fact 1/

A. Background Facts

The Activity has world-wide responsibility for activities essential to the military mission of the United States Air Force. The Activity has three basic missions: (1) world-wide logistics manager for assigned aircraft and commodities; (2) repair center for aircraft and five distinct technologies; (3) storage center at both of the wholesale and retail levels for Air Force spare parts and systems. The Activity is the exclusive technology repair center for airborne electronics for the entire Air Force. This responsibility requires support for maintenance shop operations as well as for receiving, storing, issuing and transporting all assigned equipment and logistics for which it is responsible.

1/ The alleged violations are based on facts common to both complaints. Many of the essential facts have been jointly stipulated by the parties and are contained in the record as Joint Exhibit No. 1.

The Activity employs approximately 16,500 civilians as well as military personnel. The highest authority at the Logistics Center is the Commander -- Major General William R. Hayes. Organizationally the Activity is structured into a number of operational elements. The highest elements directly subordinate to the Commander are directorates. Each directorate is composed of subordinate elements designated, in descending order, as divisions, branches, sections, units, and line supervisors. Two of the largest directorates are the Directorate of Maintenance and the Directorate of Distribution. The former is concerned with aircraft maintenance responsibilities while the latter is responsible for the receipt, storage, and issuance of logistics on a world-wide basis. There are a number of huge complex structures located on the base, including maintenance hangers and warehousing facilities.

The Union has been the exclusive bargaining representative for the bargaining unit employees of the Activity since 1966. There have been a series of negotiated agreements in effect between the parties, but the 1973 agreement provides the starting point for consideration of the issues presented here. The Union structured itself organizationally to correspond with the organizational set-up of the Activity. The President of the Union is considered the counterpart to the Commander or his designee. Immediately subordinate to the union president is the executive vice president, who is also in charge of all of the stewards throughout the base. Each major directorate has a union vice president assigned to it as the counterpart of the director or the deputy director of that directorate. Each directorate also has a chief steward 2/ and divisional, branch, section, and unit stewards. In all, there are approximately 200 stewards and union officials servicing the employees of the various units.

2/ In some instances the vice president of a major directorate also functions as chief steward.

B. The 1973 Negotiated Agreement

In June 1973 the parties completed negotiations for and signed an agreement which was approved by a higher military authority, effective November 16, 1973. (Joint Exhibit No. 3). The agreement contained the following provision relating to union representation:

ARTICLE VIII

UNION REPRESENTATION

Section a: ...The Employer agrees to recognize a maximum of one steward to every 50 employees in the units. The Union agrees, in applying the provisions of this Section, to assure that each employee in the bargaining units has ready access to a Steward in his working area....

* * * * *

Section d: The primary responsibility of a steward is his assigned duty as a Government employee. A steward will be allowed a reasonable amount of time to carry out his steward duties commensurate with the provisions of this Agreement. The Union agrees that its officers and stewards will guard against the use of excessive time in performing duties considered appropriate by this Agreement.... (Emphasis supplied).

In June 1974, the parties executed Supplement I to the multi-unit agreement. However, this supplement did not touch upon the provisions relating to union representation. (Joint Exhibt No. 3).

C. The Problem on the Use of Official Time by Union Representatives

The record discloses that management and union representatives were involved in a long-standing dispute over what management considered to be excessive use of official time by union representatives in the performance of their representational duties. In 1973, the Deputy Director of the Directorate of Maintenance proposed to revise an operating instruction (MAOI 11-9) of that organization.

He sought to require issuance of administrative permits by supervisors to union representatives seeking to leave their duty stations for representational purposes. (Respondent Activity Exhibit No. 1). This was an effort to control the amount of official time used by union stewards in that directorate. The Union vigorously opposed this and indicated that a similar attempt to address the problem had been initiated by management in 1972. (Respondent Activity No. 2).

Testimony by management officials, ranging from first-line supervisors to directorate labor relations officers, 3/ indicate that the problem was a major concern throughout the entire Activity. The evidence shows that from 1973 through 1975, between 60 and 70 union stewards and representatives were away from their jobs and engaged in activities on behalf of the Union for periods ranging from 25% to 100% of their job time. Surveys conducted in the distribution and maintenance directorates indicate that supervisors were unable to control the use of official time by the union representatives because the negotiated agreement required a "reasonable time" for this purpose. There were no guidelines or specific instructions for the supervisors or the union representatives to follow in determining what amount of time was necessary in any given situation. There is undisputed testimony in the record that when supervisors sought to deny union stewards use of official time for an asserted representational purpose, the steward would then file a grievance against the supervisor based on a putative contract violation. Under the terms of the negotiated agreement, the agrieved steward was then entitled to representation by another union steward and a reasonable time to prepare the grievance for presentation. In addition the steward was entitled to a maximum of eight hours to prepare for a higher level appeal, if it were not satisfactorily resolved by the first-line supervisor. (Article VIII, Section d of the 1973 Agreeement). By adopting these tactics, union stewards, who were denied use of overtime by their supervisors, could effectively get the time not only to process their own purported grievance, but also to handle the matter for which they originally intended to leave their duty station. Moreover, the filing of a contract grievance would cause another union representative to leave his or her job assignment to perform a representational function.

3/ Each of the major directorates has a labor relations officer who provides guidance to the director or the deputy director of that directorate in labor-management problems and interpretations of the negotiated agreement. The directorate labor relations officers receive their guidance from the Labor Relations Officer of the Activity, who is the designee of the Commander in labor-management matters.

The problem of excessive use of official time by union representatives continued to plague management throughout the term of the agreement. The record shows that the use of official time by union representatives increased during 1974 and 1975. The official union view was that any amount of time required for representational matters was "reasonable" under the terms of the negotiated agreement. Another contributing factor in the representational demands on union stewards was the fact that the steward positions were under-staffed; even though there were approximatly 200 stewards assigned to the Activity. In some instances, a single steward would occupy steward positions for several organizatonal levels; e.g., a division steward would occupy a number of the steward positions within that division or a branch steward would serve as a branch, section, and/or unit steward within that given branch. This drastically increased the amount of time such a steward would be required to devote to representational matters.

In additon to the complaints of management that stewards were failing to perform their assigned government duties, management was confronted with a deterioration in the morale of the employees working in the units where the stewards were normally employed. The testimony indicates that because of the great amount of absences, the supervisors or other employees had to perform the job duties which were assigned to the stewards. According to the undisputed testimony of management officials, these employees resented having to carry this extra burden to enable the stewards to perform duties on behalf of the Union. Furthermore, the evidence indicates that the lengthy absences from the duty stations caused continuing friction between the supervisors and the stewards involved. In instances where the supervisors questioned the steward to determine the need for official time, the steward would refuse to divulge any information other than that it was a union matter. When this occurred, the supervisor was unable to make a judgment as to whether the use of the time was justified. If he refused the time, he was subjected to a contract grievance filed by the steward. The record discloses that as many as seven grievances were filed in an eight hour period against a single supervisor by the same steward. As noted, these grievances would entitle the steward to be represented by another steward, and they would both be afforded time to prepare the grievances for presentation at the first level and additional time to prepare an appeal to a higher authority. 4/ Under the terms of the negotiated agreement these grievances could be pursued up to the level of the Commander. The record shows, however, that in most instances the grievances were not pressed beyond the directorate level, and the stewards gained sufficient time to engage in representational functions as well as time to pursue the contract grievance.

In an effort to control the amount of time employees spent on matters other than officially assigned duties, the Activity issued a regulation on March 12, 1976, designated "Employee Control Policy". Included in the types of absences authorized were: (a) consulting with the civilian personnel office, EEO advisors, or union representatives; (b) grievance or appeal hearings; and (c) stewards performing steward duty authorized by the labor agreement. This policy provided for three methods of notification regarding the whereabouts of employees. The first was an informal method whereby verbal permission would be obtained from a supervisor. The second provided for a "sign-out board" on which the employee would note the information regarding his whereabouts and obtain permission from the supervisor before leaving. On return the employee would have to check in with the supervisor and erase the entry on the sign-out board. The third procedure was the use of an "administrative permit". The employee would have to request permission and receive a permit authorizing his absence from the area. Upon return to his work station he would give the permit back to the supervisor who would retain it for 30 days for record purposes. 5/ While this policy provided for documentation of the absence of an employee from the work area, it had virtually no effect on the control on the amount of time spent on representational activities. Thus, stewards continued to insist upon leaving their areas to handle matters in their steward capacity, and would file contract grievances if such permission were denied. The record discloses that the volume of contract grievances steadily increased during 1974 and 1975 and further that the union filed numerous unfair labor practice charges against the Activity based upon the controversy over the use of official time by stewards.

In April 1975, a joint fact finding team composed of a management and a union representative investigated the amount of time spent by three individuals identified by management as the most flagrant violators of excessive use of official time time for union activities. The results of this survey were issued on May 5, 1975 (Respondent Activity Exhibit No. 10). The investigation indicated that during a six month period, one of the stewards was engaged in representational duties for periods randing from 60 percent of his work time to 84 percent. Another steward engaged in representational duties during a similar period from a range of 88 percent to 90 percent of his official work time. The third individual, during the same period, was on representational duties from a low of 41 percent to a high of 72 percent of his work time.

When the results of the investigation were made known to the Union, the union president rejected its accuracy on the ground that the representational duties included time spent on agency grievance procedures and other legitimate excusals, which could not be attributed to their union responsibilities. The Union rejected management's claim that the union representatives were using an unreasonable amount of time contrary to the contract requirements.

As a countermeasure to the rising volume of charges of contract violations and unfair labor practice charges filed by the Union, the Activity filed charges of contract violations against seven different stewards in three of the directorates. (Respondent Activity No. 11). As noted, the union charges of contract violations were rarely taken beyond the directorate level, but their adjudication involved considerable amounts of work time on the part of both management and the union stewards. The parties finally decided to engage in a trade-off whereby management withdrew its charges against the stewards and the Union in turn withdrew a number of unfair labor practice charges filed against the Activity.

D. The Efforts to Renegotiate the Basic Collective Bargaining Agreement

On October 1974, the parties began negotiations on Supplement II of the 1973 agreement. Among other things, management submitted drastic revisions to Article VIII -- the use of official time for representational purposes. Management proposed that 5 percent of the work time in a four week period for representational purposes would not be considered as interfering with federal employment. Between 5 and 10 percent would require attention of the union president to make certain that the union steward involved did not neglect work duties. More than 10 percent would not be permitted. The Union took the position that the only standard to be applied for use of official time was "reasonable time," as contained in the current agreement. The parties engaged in extensive negotiations on various proposals and counterproposals, but the use of official time was considered an impassed item on July 1975. Although the parties did sign off on a Supplement II in May 1975, they did not include the modification on the use of official time.

In September 1975, the parties served notice of intent to renegotiate the entire basic agreement. They also agreed that all impassed matters from the prior negotiations would be negotiated along with new proposals. Both management and the labor organization submitted proposals on the amount of official duty time to be allowed for representational activities. Management's proposals ranged from no official time to a maximum of four hours per steward per pay period. The four hours per pay period were to be non-cumulative and non-transferable. After lengthy negotiations on the use of official time and many other proposals and counterproposals, the parties agreed that several issues including the use of official time has reached impasse. In an attempt to resolve the dispute they called on the services of mediators from the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service. The efforts of the mediators were unsuccessful, however, and the parties were deadlocked on several issues including the matter of the use of offical time. They agreed in a memorandum of understanding dated April 15, 1976, that they were hopelessly deadlocked and would cease negotiations in order to seek the services of the Federal Services Impasses Panel. (Joint Exhibit No. 4).

It should be noted that during the course of the negotiations which commenced in the fall of 1975, the parties mutually agreed to two extentions of the 1973 basic agreement and its supplements. The final extension terminated on April 16, 1976 -- the day after the parties agreed to submit the impassed items to the Panel.

In a memorandum of understanding dated April 21, 1976, the parties agreed to remove from the impassed items the Duration Article, and to negotiate that provision in order to arrive at a negotiated agreement. It was the intent of the understanding that if they could not agree on the Duration Article, it would also be submitted to the Impasses Panel along with the other items. However, the parties were able to agree on this provision and a new agreement was forwarded to higher authority of the Activity for review and approval. The negotiated agreement was approved without change and became effective as of May 24, 1976. The provision relating to the use of official time for representational purposes was not contained in the new agreement and remained at impasse.

Although the parties had a written understanding that all impassed items would be submitted to the Panel, the Activity informed the union president on April 30 that management could make the unilateral changes after having engaged in good faith negotiations which resulted in impasse, provided the Union was given notice and an opportunity to consult and confer regarding the impact of the changes on the unit employees. (Joint Exhibit No. 7). Management informed the Union that it proposed to unilaterally implement its last offer of four hours official time per pay period for each steward for representational duties. Management also stated that a "joint recordkeeping system between supervisors and employees will be established to insure accurate time-keeping and to prevent abuse of the system." 6/

6/ The other provision that management intended to unilaterally implement related to the hours of work of professional nurses. As this is not an issue in these consolidated cases, the matter will not be discussed herein.

In a letter dated May 7, 1976, the union president took issue with management's asserted right to unilaterally implement the last proposal on the use of official time. He declined to meet with management to consult over the implementaton. The Union stated that the parties had agreed to submit the impassed items to the Panel, and requested that management not implement its proposals until the Panel had an opportunity to act. (Joint Exhibit No. 8).

On May 12, 1976, the parties submitted their positions to the Impasses Panel. Their request for assistance was acknowledged by the Panel on May 18, 1976, and the parties were informed that a member of the Panel staff would be in touch with them "shortly". (Joint Exhibit No. 12).

On May 20, 1976, the Commander of the Activity informed the Union in writing that management intended to implement its last proposal regarding the use of official time. Management took the position that the Union had been offered an opportunity in advance to consult and confer regarding the impact of the implementation, "but declined to do so." (Joint Exhibit No. 14). On that same day, the Commander issued a directive to all subordinate elements advising them that management's last proposal on the use of official time for representational purposes was to become effective immediately. (Joint Exhibit No. 13). The directive stated that the implementation would be as follows:

> a. Up to four hours of official time per pay period may be granted to union stewards to perform authorized representational functions. Such time will not be cumulative from one pay period to another and cannot be transferred from one employee to another.
> b. A joint recordkeeping system between the supervisor and employees must be established to insure accurate accounting of official time used.
>
> c. Union stewards, including chief stewards, may request annual leave or leave without pay when the four hour maximum has been reached. Such request will be considered under existing criteria for granting annual leave or LWOP.

The directive also indicated that employees representing other employees under the agency grievance procedure would be authorized the time prescribed by that regulation.

On June 11, 1976 the Deputy Director of the Distribution Directorate sent a memo to Kendricks, Union Vice President for Distribution, informing him of the method by which that directorate planned to implement the Commander's policy on recordkeeping. (Joint Exhibit No. 20). Sometime prior to that date, the Labor Relations Officer of the directorate had several discussions with Kendricks on the subject of the recordkeeping proposal (these discussions were termed "briefings" by Kendricks, but were considered "consultation" by management). 7/ On June 28, the recordkeeping proposal for the Directorate of Distribution was officially put into effect by way of a memorandum. (Joint Exhibit No. 22). It was stated that a log book would be maintained by the supervisor and his counterpart steward. Each time a steward was required to leave his work area for representational duties, the absence would be entered into the log and initialed by both the steward and the supervisor. Supervisors were cautioned to insure that no more than four hours official time was used by a steward in one pay period. The memorandum noted that the procedure did not "obviate the requirements of the employee control policy instituted on March 12, 1976. This document was subsequently amended on July 2, 1976 to reflect a change requested by Kendricks. The change indicated that a single log book would be maintained by the immediate supervisor and the steward. (Joint Exhibit No. 23).

Although Kendricks made a recommendation regarding the recordkeeping procedures which was adopted by management, the Union took the official position that the entire subject matter of the recordkeeping was negotiable and should be applied activity-wide. Management disagreed and took the position that it could only be negotiated during the "open period" of the contract. Since this had expired and a new agreement was in effect, management was of the view that the Union only had the right to be "consulted" prior to the recordkeeping policy being implemented.

Although the impassed items were before the Federal Services Impasses Panel, the parties did not have a hearing. A representative from the Panel came to the Activity and met with the parties. After intensive negotiations under his supervison, the parties finally arrived at an agreement on the impassed items. Regarding the use of official time for representational duties, the parties agreed that a steward would be allowed up to a maximum of four hours of official duty time per pay period for performance of representational duties, with certain exceptions from that four hour limitation. As a result of these efforts, the parties jointly withdrew their request for assistance from the Panel on November 18, 1976. (Joint Exhibit 27).

Contentions of the Parties

The Union, in a well written brief, contends that the parties had mutually agreed to submit the impassed items to the Federal Services Impasses Panel and did so. It asserts that the subsequent unilateral action by the Activity regarding the impassed provision on the use of official time -- two weeks after the submission to the Panel -- violated the requirements of the Executive Order as the Activity failed to allow the processes of the Panel to run its course. Concerning the implementation of the recordkeeping procedures in the Directorate of Distribution, the Union contends that the Commander's policy had base-wide application. Therefore, it was subject to negotiation at the command level before implementation in any form by subordinate directorates.

The Respondent Activity submitted a lengthy but well researched and thorough brief. Essentially, however, the Activity argues that the negotiated agreement and its extensions had expired, and the parties had bargained to impasse. Therefore, management was free to implement its proposal on the limitation of the use of official time; provided it did not exceed the scope of the offer made during negotiations, and provided further that the Union was given notification in advance to enable it to consult and confer on the implementation. The Activity asserts that the alleged excessive use of official time by the union representatives constituted a overriding exigency which gave it the right to act, even though the matter was before the Panel. Regarding the procedures on recordkeeping in the Directorate of Distribution, the Activity contends that the terms of the agreement make it a "closed" contract, i.e., the parties can only negotiate during the anniversary date of the agreement, and at all other times are only required to engage in "consultation". On this theory, the Activity contends that the only requirement on the matter of recordkeeping is that the union representatives be informed in advance and provided an opportunity to consult with management on the proposal. After such consultation, management is free to implement its proposal while giving due regard to the input from the Union.

Concluding Findings

The basic issue in Case No. 40-7514, in my judgment, is whether the Activity was privileged to unilaterally implement the limitation on the use of official time for representational purposes after lengthy negotiations on the subject to the point impasse, after having submitted the issue to the Federal Services Impasses Panel, but prior to allowing that forum to act on the subject matter. The Activity cites a plethora of cases in the private sector supporting the proposition that an employer may unilaterally implement proposals made during negotiations when the parties have bargained to a genuine impasse, and the union has been informed of the intention to carry out such implementation. While court and National Labor Relation Board cases in the private sector are not controlling, the Assistant Secretary has looked upon such decisions for guidance in similiar situations in the public sector. However, I am not persuaded that these cases have application here, nor do they provide meaningful guidance in the instant cases.

In none of the cited cases dealing with the private sector is there any indication that the parties agreed to invoke third-party assistance in settling their disputes. Rather, the parties engaged in good faith negotations to impasse and then resorted to self-help in the form of unilateral implementation, lockout or strike. This is the distinguishing feature which causes me to reject these cases as meaningful indicators in resolving the issues here.

In the instant case the parties mutually agreed, in a signed understanding, to submit impassed issues to the Federal Services Impasses Panel for appropriate action; and did in fact follow through with this procedure. Although there is nothing in Section 17 of the Executive Order which mandates that parties take their impassed disputes to the Panel, the Assistant Secretary has held that once the services of the Panel are requested, it effectuates "the purposes of the Order to require that the parties must, in the absence of an overriding exigency, maintain the status quo and permit the processes of the Panel to run its course before a unilateral change in term or conditions of employment can be effectuated." U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Philadelphia District, A/SLMR No. 673. While the Activity attempts to distinguish the Corps of Engineers case, I find it to be completely apposite to the facts developed on the record here. Therefore, in the absence of a persuavise showing that the Activity was confronted with an "overriding exigency ", the unilateral implementation of the limitation on the use of official time for representational purposes, while the matter was before the Panel, is a violation of the Executive Order. To hold otherwise means that the Executive Order offers an empty method of settling impassed disputes. Parties would be free to invoke the services of the Panel and then blithly engage in unilateral conduct before the Panel had an opportunity to act. Rather than stabilize labor relations, this would result in increased disharmony. In my opinion, this was not the intent or the purpose of the framers of the Order.

The only justification for the unilateral conduct by the Activity here, based on the Corps of Engineers case, would be that it was confronted with an overriding exigency which required immediate action. In my view, the activity has not established a case of such an emergency nature. There can be no doubt that the problem was one of long-standing and management's concern was genuine and legitimate. Indeed, sound management practices required, even mandated, that corrective action be taken. But there was nothing to suggest that the situation, which had existed at least since 1970, required immediate changes in personnel policies and practices. Department of Interior, Bureau of Reclamation, Yuma Projects Office, Yuma, Arizona, A/SLMR No. 401. In proposing defined limitations during the 1974 and 1975 negotiations, management was taking positive and permissible actions to correct the problem within the spirit and intent of the Executive Order. There has been no showing on this record of any major change in circumstances at the Activity which had not prevailed since the problem first arose. The only thing that can be cited is its continued existence over the period of years. Therefore, management, having put into motion the processes of the Impasses Panel, must be considered to have acted precipitously in failing to allow that forum an opportunity to carry out its functions under the Executive Order.

Accordingly, I find that the Activity has failed to establish by a preponderance of the evidence that the situation regarding the excessive use of official time was of such an overriding and emergency nature that it warranted unilateral action, while the very matter was before the Impasses Panel. I further find that the conduct of the Activity in this regard violated the obligations imposed upon it by Section 19(a)(6) of the Executive Order. I also find and conclude that such conduct violated Section 19(a)(1) of the Executive Order as it interferred with, restrained, and coerced unit employees in their right to have their exclusive representative act for and represent their interest in matters concerning grievances, personnel policies and practices as assured by Section 10(e) of the Order. San Antonio Air Logistics Center, San Antonio Air Materiel Area (AFLC), Kelly Kelly Air Force Base, Texas, A/SLMR No. 540. However, I do not find that this conduct violates Section 19(a)(2) of the Order. There is nothing here which suggests that the conduct served to encourage or discourage membership in the Union by discrimination in regard to hire, tenure, promotion, or other condition of employment. Accordingly, this allegation of the complaint must be dismissed.

My conclusions in this regard are not affected by the Activity's reliance on the fact that the negotiated agreement and its extensions had expired. It has been held that "only these rights and privileges which are based solely on the existence of a written agreement -- e.g., checkoff privileges --" terminate with the expiration of a negotiated agreement. Internal Revenue Services, Ogden Service Center, Internal Revenue Services, et al, A/SLMR No. 806. The Assistant Secretary in the Internal Revenue case held that "other rights and privileges accorded to exclusive representatives continue in effect until such time as they are modified or eliminated pursuant to negotiations or change after a good faith bargaining impasse has been reached." 8/ Although the parties had reached impasse on the issues here, they had obligated themselves to use the services of the Impasses Panel. Thus, they were not free to engage in unilateral self-help action until the Panel's processes had been allowed to run its course.

Turning to the alleged violations relating to the recordkeeping procedures implemented in the Directorate of Distribution (Case NO. 40-7585), I find that this conduct did not violate the provisions of the Executive Order. The record discloses that the chief union representative for that directorate was notified of the proposed procedures by directorate-level management prior to its implementation, Moreover his input and suggestions were sought. Although the Union took the position that these discussions constituted a "briefing" and management considered them to be "consultation" under the newly effective negotiated agreement, the final recordkeeping procedures issued by management incorporated recommendations made by the union representative. While the official union position is that the recordkeeping procedures were appliable base-wide and required negotiation at the command level, it was only devised, discussed and implemented in the Directorate of Distribution.

Article III of the negotiated agreement sets forth instances in which the parties would engage in consultation and negotations. Section b of that Article provides:

> Any matter which affects the working conditions or personnel policies of the unit(s) which is within the discretion of the Employer and not included as a part of, or precluded by, the Agreement, and appropriate for consultation or negotiation, will not be changed by the Employer until the Union has been consulted. If the proposed change is in conflict with this Agreement, the Employer will give the Union adequate advance notice and the opportunity to negotiate.

Section e of that same Article contains the following langauage:

> The appropriate representative of the Employer shall consult with the appropriate Steward, Chief Steward, or other Union Official on proposed changes and practices, policies, procedures and working conditions within the discretion of the Employer which will affect employees in the bargaining units. It is agreed that both the Employer and the Union will consult at the appropriate decision-making level... Once consulted at that level, it shall be considered that the requirement to consult has been complied with....

Section 48 of the negotiated agreement defines certain terms used in the agreement, and the definition of consultation is as follows:

> (2) Consultation: The interchange of facts and opinions, verbal or written, to obtain the views of appropriate Union officials, prior to implementation of proposed personnel policies, practices and procedures relating to working conditions within the discretion of the Commander which are not specifically covered by the Labor Agreement. It is understood that after consultation and consideration of the views of the Union by the Employer, the concurrence of the Union is not necessary for implementation by the Employer, unless otherwise agreed in a particular article.

Without passing upon the question of whether the vice president of the Union and his management counterpart in the Directorate of Distribution had engaged in consultation within the meaning of the terms of the negotiated agreement, prior to the implementation of the recordkeeping procedures, it is evident that there is an arguable basis for management's position -- that consultation rather than negotiation was all that was required in this instance. At the very most, the issue between the parties on this aspect of the case involves differing and arguable interpretations of the negotiated agreement rather than an action which constitutes a clear unilateral breech of the agreement. 9/ I find, therefore, that the issue involving the recordkeeping procedures and their implementation in the Directorate of Distribution is essentially one of differing interpretations of the parties rights and obligations under the negotiated agreement and not a clear unilateral breech of that agreement. 10/ Accordingly, the allegations contained in Case No. 40-7585 relating to the implementation of the recordkeeping procedures in the Directorate of Distribution should be dismissed in their entirety.

Remedy

The Union urges as part of the appropriate relief that the parties be placed in status quo ante for the period commencing with the date of the unilateral imposition of the four hour limitation on use of official time until the agreement was reached through the services of the Impasses Panel. As noted herein, the parties finally resolved their differences with the assistance of the Panel, and executed an agreement relating to a limitation on the amount of official time for representational purposes. In view of this development, I find that a status quo ante remedy is not appropriate for the circumstances presented by this case. U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Philadelphia District, supra. Moreover, there is no probative evidence in the record which would support an adjustment of any time lost by union stewards during this period.

Having found that the Respondent Activity has engaged in conduct which violates Section 19(a)(1) and (6), I shall recommend that the Assistant Secretary adopt the following Recommended Order designed to effectuate the policies of Executive Order 11491, as amended.

RECOMMENDED ORDER

Pursuant to Section 6(b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, and Section 203.26(b) of the Regulations promulgated thereunder, the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations hereby Orders that Warner Robins Air Logistics Center, Robins Air Force Base, Warner Robins, Georgia, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

   (a) Unilaterally changing policies or regulations on matters which have been bargained to impasse during collective bargaining negotiations and which have been submitted to the Federal Services Impasses Panel, including limitations on the use of official time for representational purposes, until the processes of the Impasses Panel have been allowed to run their course.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights assured by Executive Order 11491, as amended.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and provisions of Executive Order 11491, as amended:

(a) Notify American Federation of Government Employees, Local 987, AFL-CIO, or any other exclusive representative, that management will not unilaterally implement matters which have been bargained to impasse during collective bargaining negotiations and which have been submitted to the Federal Services Impasses Panel, including limitations on the use of official time for representational purposes by union representatives, until the processes of the Impasses Panel have been allowed to run its course.

(b) Post at its facility at Warner Robins Air Logistic Center, Robins Air Force Base, Warner Robins, Georgia, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix" on forms to be furnished by the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Commanding Officer, Warner Robins Air Logistic Center, Robins Air Force Base, Warner Robins, Georgia, and shall be posted and maintained by him for sixty (60) consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices of employees are customarily posted. The Commanding Officer shall take reasonable steps to ensure that such notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to Section 203.27 of the Regulations notify the Assistant Secretary in writing within twenty (20) days from the date of this Order as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

NOTICE TO ALL EMPLOYEES

PURSUANT TO

A DECISION AND ORDER OF THE

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF LABOR FOR LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS

and in order to effectuate the policies of

EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, as amended

LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS IN THE FEDERAL SERVICE

We hereby notify our employees that:

WE WILL NOT unilaterally implement matters which have been bargained to impasse during collective bargaining negotiations with American Federation of Government Employees, Local 987, AFL-CIO, or any other exclusive representative, and submitted to the Federal Services Impasses Panel, including limitations on the use of official time by union representatives for representational purposes, until the processes of the Impasses Panel have been allowed to run its course.

SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

COMMUNITY SERVICES ADMINISTRATION
A/SLMR No. 913

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by the National Council of CSA Locals, AFGE, AFL-CIO (Complainant) alleging, in substance, that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(6) of the Order by unilaterally issuing reduction-in-force (RIF) regulations prior to final agreement with the Complainant.

The Complainant had initialed the agreed upon regulations, which its membership then declined to ratify pursuant to the Complainant's constitution. The Administrative Law Judge concluded that the Respondent was obligated to bargain, if necessary, to impasse concerning the contents of its proposed RIF regulations. He found that no impasse had been reached, but that only a tentative agreement had been reached subject to membership ratification. He concluded that the Complainant, under the circumstances herein, had a right to insist on ratification, and that it also had the right to request a resumption of bargaining when membership ratification failed. The Administrative Law Judge also found that no overriding exigency existed which would justify the unilateral implementation of the regulations. Accordingly, he concluded that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(6) of the Order by issuing its staff instruction prior to reaching agreement or impasse.

The Assistant Secretary adopted the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendations.

DECISION AND ORDER

On May 23, 1977, Administrative Law Judge Edwin S. Bernstein issued his Recommended Decision and Order in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had engaged in certain unfair labor practices and recommending that it cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative actions as set forth in the attached Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order. Thereafter, the Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief, and the Complainant filed an answering brief with respect to the Respondent's exceptions.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order and the entire record in the subject case, including the Respondent's exceptions and supporting brief and the Complainant's answering brief, I hereby adopt the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendations.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 6(b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, and Section 203.26(b) of the Regulations, the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations hereby orders that the Community Services Administration shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

Taking further reduction-in-force actions pursuant to the procedures set forth in Community Services Administration Staff Instruction 351-1.

2. Take the following affirmative actions in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Executive Order:

(a) Rescind Community Services Administration Staff Instruction 351-1 and, upon request, meet and confer with the National Council of CSA Locals, AFGE, AFL-CIO, regarding the institution of reduction-in-force procedures.

(b) Post at all of its facilities copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix" on forms to be furnished by the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Agency's Director and shall be posted and maintained by him for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. The Director shall take reasonable steps to insure that such notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to Section 203.27 of the Regulations, notify the Assistant Secretary in writing within 30 days from the date of this order as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

This proceeding was initiated upon the filing of a complaint by National Council of CSA Locals, AFGE, AFL-CIO ("the Union") against Community Services Administration ("the Agency") on June 16, 1976.

The complaint alleges that the Agency violated

Sections 19(a)(5) and (6) of Executive Order 11491, as amended ("the Executive Order") by unilaterally issuing reduction in force ("RIF") regulations prior to final agreement by the Union. 1/ The Regional Administrator for the Philadelphia Region issued a Notice of Hearing on October 28, 1976 with respect to alleged violations of Section 19(a)(6) of the Executive Order.

A hearing was held before me in Washington, D.C. on January 11, 1977. Both parties were present and were afforded a full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and to adduce relevant evidence. Briefs were filed by both parties.

Upon the entire record in this case and my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following findings of fact, conclusions of law, and recommendation.

Findings of Fact

There is no dispute about the facts. The Agency has approximately 1000 employees in its headquarters and 10 regional offices. The Union, which represents the Agency's employees has 11 locals - one at each office, administered by its national council.

As of October 13, 1975, the Agency was divested of its legal services functions as a result of legislation, and a reduction in force became necessary. The Agency then had no regulation governing reductions in force.

On December 14, 1975, Mr. Phillip R. Kete, the Union's president wrote to Mr. Alphonse Rodriguez, the Agency's Director of Administration, requesting negotiations between the Agency and Union on reduction in force procedures. The letter stated:

> "... we suggest that sufficient time be allowed in any timetable you may be developing for reorganizing or reducing in force to complete your obligation to

---

1/ By request of October 20, 1976 approved by the Assistant Regional Administrator on October 26, 1976, the Union withdrew its allegation of violation of Section 19(a)(5).

us."

In letters to Mr. Rodriguez on January 9 and 13, 1976, Mr. Kete renewed his request that negotiations begin.

The Agency sent a proposed staff instruction on the subject to the Union on January 27, 1976. The Union rejected this by letter of February 4, 1976. On March 8, 1976 the Agency submitted another proposed staff instruction and on March 26, 1976 the Union sent a counter-proposal to management.

The parties held negotiating meetings on at least five days between March 31 and April 16, 1976. During all sessions, the Agency's Director of Personnel, Mr. Robert W. Crittenden was its chief negotiator and Mr. Kete was the Union's chief negotiator.

At the first negotiating session, Mr. Kete stated that any agreement reached in the negotiations would be subject to ratification by the Union's members and that the Union could not enter into any agreement unless it was so ratified. Mr. Crittenden answered that the Agency "could not recognize a ratification process". The parties then began negotiations and the issue of Union's right to obtain ratification was not discussed again.

Negotiations were constructive. The negotiators reached agreement on all provisions by April 16, 1976. On that date, a clean draft was initialled by the chief negotiators. A "Memorandum of Understanding" indicating agreement was initialled by the chief negotiators but they did not sign at the memorandum's signature blocks. At the time, Mr. Crittenden asked Mr. Kete when the Union would sign the memorandum. Mr. Kete replied that he would sign it as soon as it was ratified by the membership.

Mr. Crittenden testified that he did not sign the memorandum on April 16, 1976 because he needed to brief the Agency's director, Mr. Samuel Martinez, on the agreement before signing. Mr. Crittenden briefed Mr. Martinez about the agreement late in the first week of May. On April 16, after the negotiators had completed initialling, Mr. Alphonse Rodriguez, Mr. Crittenden's direct supervisor, requested some minor changes. The Union agreed to these changes and the agreement was so modified.

By Tuesday, May 11, 1976, the Agency was ready to issue the proposed regulation and indicated this to the Union.

On April 16, 1976, the same day that the memorandum was initialled, Mr. Kete sent copies of the proposed regulation to the other national council officers and to the president of each local, asking that it be submitted to the local memberships for a vote on ratification. Mr. Kete asked the Agency if he could use the Agency's TWX Machine for this purpose. When the Agency refused permission, he used regular mail.

The Union's constitution provides that ratification shall be accomplished by approval of at least a majority of its locals having a majority of the Union's total membership. By May 5, 1976, 5 locals voted against ratification, 3 ratified, and 3 others indicated that if voted upon ratification would fail. The locals that opposed ratification circulated letters explaining their views. On May 6, 1976, Mr. Kete sent a three page, single-spaced memorandum to all locals setting forth arguments and a request that they reconsider and ratify the proposed regulation.

On May 7, 1976, Mr. Kete wrote to Mr. Martinez warning against any unilateral issuance of a reduction in force regulation. The letter stated:

> "I understand that personnel director Robert Crittenden intends to issue a staff instruction establishing policies for carrying out reductions in force, despite the fact that negotiations are in progress. You are aware no doubt, that such action would be an unfair labor practice and we would be forced to respond accordingly."

On May 11, 1976, Mr. Crittenden wrote to Mr. Kete stating that the reduction in force regulation would be published and made effective that day. Also on May 11, Mr. Crittenden replied to Mr. Kete's May 7 letter and Mr. Kete wrote to Mr. Martinez protesting the issuance of the regulation. On May 12, 1976, Mr. Kete wrote to Mr. Crittenden stating that the Union's membership rejected the proposed regulation and tentative agreement and requesting the resumption of negotiations.

The Agency issued its reduction in force regulation, CSA Staff Instruction 351-1, on May 14, 1976. The Union filed its complaint in this proceeding on June 16, 1976.

By letter to the parties of October 28, 1976, the Regional Administrator directed attention to the following issues:

> "1. Is the Union entitled, under the Order, to obtain membership ratification of an agreement concerning RIF regulations prior to the Activity's implementation of the agreement?
> "2. Did the Activity violate the Order by promulgating the RIF regulations prior to final agreement by the Union?

The Agency contended that it was urgent that the regulation be issued when it was because of concern for violation of Civil Service Commission regulations concerning illegal details. My findings with regard to the relevant facts, similarly undisputed, follow.

Pending enactment of a reduction in force regulation the Agency had its affected employees on an 120 day detail. That detail was extended for another 120 days which expired on June 8, 1976. Under Civil Service Commission regulations the Agency was required to complete its reduction in force by June 8, 1976. The reduction in force pursuant to the regulation issued on May 14, 1976 was not completed by June 8, 1976. On May 14, 1976, it was apparent to the Agency that a reduction in force pursuant to a regulation issued on that date could not have been completed by June 8, 1976. Mr. Crittenden stated that even though the Agency knew this, it felt that it should at least issue a regulation by June 8, 1976 to show that the Agency was "moving with all immediate speed".

The Agency admitted that during the years of 1973 through 1976 there were a number of other instances in which it was not able to comply with the Civil Service Commission regulations regarding details and there were quite a few "illegal details" by the Agency."

Mr. Kete stated that his conclusion the agreement should be ratified before being executed and finally agreed to was based on Article IX, Section 2 of the Union's constitution and the emotional nature of the subject of the regulation. 2/

Conclusions of Law

Section 11(a) of the Executive Order provides that "An Agency and a labor organization that has been accorded exclusive recognition ... shall ... confer ... with respect to matters affecting working conditions ..." In United States Department of Navy, Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, Great Lakes Naval Hospital, Illinois, A/SLMR No. 289, the Assistant Secretary held that while the decision to effectuate a RIF action is a matter about which there is no obligation to meet and confer, there is an obligation under the Executive Order to meet and confer about the method and procedures of carrying out the RIF action before carrying it out and that the activity's issuance of RIF notices without providing the Union with an opportunity to meet and confer on the subject violated Section 19(a)(6) of the Executive Order. This holding has been consistently adhered to: Iowa State Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service Office, Department of Agriculture, A/SLMR No. 453; Department of the Army, U.S. Army Electronics Command, Fort Monmouth, New Jersey, A/SLMR No. 679.

By issuing CSA Staff Instruction on May 14, 1976, the Agency violated Section 19(a)(6) of the Executive Order in that it failed to provide a sufficient opportunity for the Union to confer on the RIF regulation.

The Union was entitled to obtain ratification of the proposed RIF regulation before agreeing to it. The agreement regarding the regulation was a national contract and therefore ratification by the Union membership was required by Article IX, Section 2 of the Union's constitution.

2/ Article IX Section 2 reads:

> "Ratification of any local negotiated contracts or agreements shall be by a majority of the Local membership. Ratification of a National contract shall be by a minimum of both 50 percent of the Locals and 50 percent of the Union members. All members of a local are considered to have ratified the contract once that Local has so approved at a regular or special meeting".

In its dealings with the Agency, the Union at all times carefully preserved its right to obtain membership ratification. The document initialled on April 16 was not a binding agreement. It was a tentative agreement subject to Union ratification and subject to the approval by the Agency's director.

I do not agree with the Agency's contention that an impasse was reached. There was a tentative agreement, an attempt to obtain ratification, and a request to return to the bargaining table when ratification failed. In no way does this constitute an impasse.

The Agency stressed its need to act quickly. Throughout the parties' dealings the Union acted expeditiously; it was not the cause of any delays. It was the Union that urged commencing negotiations as early as December 1975. Despite the Agency's concern about time, it took approximately 3 weeks for its director to approve the proposed regulation. The reduction in force could not have been completed by the required June 8, 1976 date by the issuance of the regulation on May 14. Mr. Crittenden testified that, failing completion of the RIF by June 8, the regulation should have been issued by June 8. By that standard, the Agency could have delayed issuance of the regulation for another three weeks.

Finally, in view of the Agency's frequent resort to extended details contrary to Civil Service Regulations, the argument that it issued the regulation on May 14 because of its desire to avoid illegal details is unpersuasive, especially since the RIF could not be completed by June 8 and illegal details would be required in any event.

Thus, instead of issuing the RIF regulation, the Agency should have returned to the bargaining table when it learned that the Union's membership had failed to ratify the proposed agreement.

In the Union's post-hearing brief it urges, "The only logical remedy is that CSA Staff Instruction 351-1 be declared null and void and any personnel actions taken pursuant to it be rescinded. To not order this remedy would be to condone the violation and make a bargaining obligation under the Executive Order a nullity". Although this argument is persuasive, the Federal Labor Relations Council has recently held in Department of the Interior, Bureau of Reclamation, Yuma Projects Office, Yuma, Arizona that, "an unfair labor practice complaint may not be used as an alternate method for obtaining redress for the employees who properly have access to the appeals procedure". 3/ The Council further held that the Assistant Secretary could not direct reestablishment of competitive areas, reevaluation of layoffs that had been made, or reinstatement with back pay of any employee incorrectly laid off.

Recommendation

Having found that Respondent has engaged in conduct prohibited by Section 19(a)(6) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, I recommend that the Assistant Secretary adopt the following order designed to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Executive Order.

Recommended Order

Pursuant to Section 6(b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended and Section 203.26(b) of the Regulations promulgated thereunder, the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations hereby orders that the Community Services Administration shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Further reduction in force actions pursuant to CSA Staff Instruction 351-1.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining or coercing its employees in the exercise of rights assured by Executive Order 11491, as amended.

2. Take the following affirmative actions in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Executive Order:

(a) Rescind CSA Staff Instruction 351-1.

(b) Upon request meet, confer and negotiate with National Council of CSA Locals, AFGE, AFL-CIO regarding new reduction-in-force procedures.

(c) Post at all of its facilities copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix" on forms to be furnished by the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Agency's Director and shall be posted and maintained by him for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. The Director shall take reasonable steps to insure that such notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(d) Pursuant to Section 203.27 of the Regulations, notify the Assistant Secretary in writing within 30 days from the date of this order as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR
ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS
SUMMARY OF DECISION AND DIRECTION OF ELECTIONS
OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
NAVY TORPEDO STATION,
KEYPORT, WASHINGTON
A/SLMR No. 914

This case involved representation petitions filed by the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, Local 282, AFL-CIO, (IAM) and by the International Federation of Professional and Technical Engineers, Local 12, AFL-CIO, (IFPTE). The IAM sought an election in a unit consisting of all nonprofessional General Schedule (GS) employees of the Activity working at its Keyport and Bangor sites. The IFPTE sought an election in a unit consisting of, in effect, all GS professional employees and all nonprofessional technical employees of the Activity working at its Keyport and Bangor sites. The Activity took the position that the unit sought by the IAM was appropriate and that the unit sought by the IFPTE, insofar as it would include among its nonprofessional component only technical employees, was inappropriate, as such employees do not have a community of interest separate and distinct from other nonprofessional GS employees of the Activity. The Activity also indicated it would not oppose a separate unit consisting of all professional employees.

Under all of the circumstances, the Assistant Secretary concluded that the unit petitioned for by the IAM was appropriate under Section 10(b) of the Order as the claimed employees share a clear and identifiable community of interest. He found that all of the Activity's nonprofessional GS employees, including the technical employees sought by the IFPTE in its petitioned for unit, have essentially the same working conditions, experience, job contacts, occasionally share common supervision, and are covered by the same labor relations policies, personnel policies and procedures. Additionally, he found that the unit petitioned for by the IAM would promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. In this regard, he noted that the Civilian Personnel Department services all of the nonprofessional employees, including administering all of the Activity's personnel programs and policies, and that the inclusion of all unrepresented nonprofessional GS employees in one unit would prevent fragmentation of units at the Activity as such unit is, in effect, a residual unit of all unrepresented nonprofessional GS employees of the Activity.

With respect to the IFPTE's petitioned for unit of all GS professional employees and nonprofessional technical employees located at the Activity's Keyport and Bangor sites, the Assistant Secretary found that such unit was inappropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition. He noted that the claimed GS nonprofessional technical employees encompass only a part of the Activity's nonprofessional GS employees and that such employees do not share a clear and identifiable community of interest separate from other nonprofessional and nontechnical GS employees at the Activity inasmuch as they have essentially the same working conditions, are covered by the same personnel policies and procedures, and, occasionally, share common supervision.

However, the Assistant Secretary found that a separate unit of all professional employees, which was encompassed within the IFPTE's petitioned for unit, would be appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under the Order. He noted that a unit of professional employees would include all of the professional employees at the Activity's Keyport and Bangor sites who share a clear and identifiable community of interest. He also found that such a comprehensive unit of all professional employees would promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations and would tend to reduce the fragmentation of units at the Activity.

Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary directed that elections be conducted in the units found appropriate.

DECISION AND DIRECTION OF ELECTIONS

Upon petitions duly filed under Section 6 of Executive Order 11491, as amended, a consolidated hearing was held before Hearing Officer Daniel P. Krause. The Hearing Officer's rulings made at the hearing are free from prejudicial error and are hereby affirmed.

Upon the entire record in these cases, including a brief submitted by the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, Local 282, AFL-CIO, hereinafter called IAM, the Assistant Secretary finds:

1. The labor organizations involved claim to represent certain employees of the Activity.

2. In Case No. 71-4093(RO), the IAM seeks an election in a unit consisting of all General Schedule (GS) employees of the Activity working at its Keyport and Bangor sites, excluding professional employees, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, management officials, firemen, guards, and supervisors as defined in Executive Order 11491, as amended.

In Case No. 71-4155(RO), the International Federation of Professional and Technical Employees, Local 12, AFL-CIO, hereinafter called IFPTE, seeks an election in a unit consisting of, in effect, all GS professional employees and all nonprofessional technical employees of the Activity working at its Keyport and Bangor sites, excluding employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, management officials, firemen, guards, and supervisors as defined by the Order. Thus, the unit petitioned for by the IFPTE would include some of the nonprofessional GS employees petitioned for by the IAM.

The Activity takes the position that the unit sought by the IAM is appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition and that the proposed IFPTE unit, insofar as it would include among its nonprofessional component only technical employees, is inappropriate, as such employees do not have a community of interest separate and distinct from other nonprofessional GS employees of the Activity. The Activity indicated that it would not oppose a separate unit consisting of all professional employees. The IFPTE takes the position that its petitioned for unit is appropriate in that units of technical employees are currently recognized in the Federal sector. On the other hand, the IAM contends that the IFPTE's petitioned for unit is inappropriate inasmuch as it does not, in fact, encompass all of the nonprofessional technicians of the Activity. 1/

The Activity's mission is to provide material and technical support for assigned weapons systems, weapons or components; to proof, test and evaluate underwater weapons and components; to exercise design cognizance of underwater acoustic ranges and range equipment; and to perform additional tasks as directed by the Commander of the Naval Sea Command. It is comprised of some nine support departments and some eight production departments and attachments. The nine support departments consist of: Administration, Comptroller, Data Processing, Safety, Resources and Planning, Civilian Personnel, Industrial Support, Security, and Supply. The eight production departments and attachments consist of: Weapons, Weapons Quality Engineering Center, Quality Assurance, Proof and Test Evaluation, Indian Island/Bangor Detachment, Research and Engineering, Technical Operations, and NAVTORPSTA Detachment, Hawaii. 2/

1/ The parties stipulated that there were other job classifications at the Activity having the title of technician which were not included in the list of those positions considered to be "technical" by the IFPTE.

2/ The parties stipulated as there are no GS employees located at the Activity's Indian Island location and as the Activity's Hawaii Detachment is such a great distance from Keyport, the employees at these locations should be excluded from either of the petitioned for GS units.

The record reveals that there are approximately 628 nonsupervisory, nonprofessional GS employees and approximately 259 nonsupervisory, professional GS employees at the Activity's Keyport and Bangor sites. Of the 628 nonsupervisory GS employees petitioned for by the IAM, the IFPTE contends that approximately 269, in some 17 different job classifications, are technical employees. There are no employees in the petitioned for units covered by negotiated agreements or represented by an exclusively recognized labor organization. 3/

The IFPTE's petitioned for unit of technical and professional employees work throughout the various departments and divisions of the Activity to coordinate efforts in performing the functions necessary in accomplishing the Activity's mission. The record indicates that all of the Activity's GS employees interact with each other within their own branches and divisions as well as interacting with other GS employees in other branches and divisions in order to coordinate the work flows essential in accomplishing the Activity's projects.

Many of the Activity's technicians, including those not designated as "technical" employees by the IFPTE (see footnote one, above), work in the same areas and have the same working conditions as all of the other Activity's GS employees throughout the Activity and, in many instances, are supervised by the same supervisors. For example, computer technicians work closely with mathematicians, computer specialists and programmers, and systems analysts in other Activity divisions and branches; the industrial engineer technician works closely with management analysts and project and program engineers; the equipment specialist works closely with the GS supply employees and program analyst and coordinates work with a load coordination analyst; and the quality assurance specialist works with GS employees such as the auditors, equipment operators, clerks and computer specialist.

All of the Activity's GS employees are covered by the same personnel policies and placement plan, incentive programs and disciplinary actions. The record reveals also that all of the Activity's personnel programs and policies, including labor relations policies, are centrally administered by its Civilian Personnel Department.

3/ The record reveals that the following employees are included in units of exclusive recognition at the Activity, Keyport: the Bremerton Metal Trades Council represents all nonsupervisory trades and crafts (Wage Grade employees) except those in the Ordnance and Public Works Departments; the IAM represents all nonsupervisory trades and crafts in the Ordnance and Public Works Departments; Local 48, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, represents all nonsupervisory firefighters and guards in the Security Department; and Local 1630, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, represents all nonsupervisory employees in the NAVTORPSTA Detachment, Hawthorne, Nevada.

Under all of the circumstances herein, I find that the unit petitioned for by the IAM in Case No. 71-4093(RO) is appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under Section 10(b) of the Order as the claimed employees share a clear and identifiable community of interest. Thus, as noted above, the evidence establishes that the Activity's nonprofessional GS employees, including the technical employees claimed by the IFPTE, have essentially the same working conditions, experience, job contacts, occasionally share common supervision, and are covered by the same labor relations policies, personnel policies and procedures. Additionally, I find that such a unit will promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. With regard to effective dealings, the evidence establishes that the Civilian Personnel Department services all of the nonprofessional employees, including administering all of the Activity's personnel programs and policies. With respect to efficiency of agency operations, I find that the inclusion of all unrepresented nonprofessional GS employees in one unit will prevent the fragmentation of units at the Activity as such unit is, in effect, a residual unit of all unrepresented, nonprofessional GS employees of the Activity. Accordingly, I find that the unit petitioned for by the IAM in Case No. 71-4093(RO) is appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition.

Furthermore, I find that the IFPTE's petitioned for combined unit in Case No. 71-4155(RO) of all GS professional employees and nonprofessional technical employees at the Activity's Keyport and Bangor sites is inappropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition. In this regard, the record reveals that the claimed GS nonprofessional technical employees encompass only a part of the Activity's nonprofessional GS employees and that such employees do not share a clear and identifiable community of interest separate from other nonprofessional and nontechnical GS employees at the Activity inasmuch as they all essentially have the same working conditions, are covered by the same personnel policies and procedures, and, occasionally, share common supervision.

However, I find that a separate unit of all professional employees, which is encompassed within the IFPTE's petitioned for unit, would be appropriate for exclusive recognition under the Order. In this regard, the record reveals that a unit of professional employees would include all of the professional employees at the Activity's Keyport and Bangor sites who share a clear and identifiable community of interest. Furthermore, such a comprehensive unit of all professional employees will promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations and will tend to reduce the fragmentation of units at the Activity.

Under all of the above circumstances, I find that the following described units are appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition within the meaning of Section 10(b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended:

Unit A: All nonprofessional General Schedule employees of the Navy Torpedo Station, Keyport, working at the Keyport and Bangor sites, excluding employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, professional employees, management officials, firemen, guards, and supervisors as defined in Executive Order 11491, as amended.

Unit B: All professional employees of the Navy Torpedo Station, Keyport, working at the Keyport and Bangor sites, excluding employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, management officials, firemen, guards, and supervisors as defined in Executive Order 11491, as amended. 4/

Elections by secret ballot shall be conducted among employees in the units described above, as early as possible, but not later than 60 days from the date below. The appropriate Area Administrator shall supervise the elections, subject to the Assistant Secretary's Regulations. Eligible to vote are those in the described units who were employed during the payroll period immediately preceding the date below, including employees who did not work during that period because they were out ill or on vacation or furlough, including those in the military service who appear in person at the polls. Ineligible to vote are employees who have quit or were discharged for cause since the designated payroll period and who have not been rehired or reinstated before the election date.

Those eligible to vote in Unit A shall vote whether they wish to be represented for the purpose of exclusive recognition by the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, Local 282, AFL-CIO; by the International Federation of Professional and Technical Engineers,

4/ The record is unclear as to whether the IFPTE's showing of interest is adequate in the professional unit found appropriate in Case No. 71-4155(RO). Accordingly, before proceeding to an election in the subject case, the appropriate Area Administrator is directed to reevaluate whether or not the IFPTE has a 30 percent showing of interest among the Activity's professional employees. If it is determined that the IFPTE's showing is insufficient, then the petition in Case No. 71-4155(RO) should be dismissed.

Local 12, AFL-CIO; or by neither labor organization. 5/ Those eligible to vote in Unit B shall vote whether or not they wish to be represented for the purpose of exclusive recognition by the International Federation of Professional and Technical Engineers, Local 12, AFL-CIO.

Because the above Direction of Election with respect to Unit B is in a unit different than that which was sought by the IFPTE, I shall permit IFPTE to withdraw its petition if it does not desire to proceed to an election in the unit found appropriate upon notice to the appropriate Area Administrator within 10 days of the issuance of this decision. If the IFPTE desires to proceed to an election, because the unit found appropriate is substantially different than that originally petitioned for, I direct that the Activity, as soon as possible, shall post copies of a Notice of Unit Determination, which shall be furnished by the appropriate Area Administrator, in places where notices are normally posted affecting the employees in the unit found appropriate. Such notice shall conform in all respects to the requirements of Section 202.4(b) and (c) of the Assistant Secretary's Regulations. Further, any labor organization which seeks to intervene in this matter must do so in accordance with the requirements of Section 202.5 of the Assistant Secretary's Regulations. Any timely intervention will be granted solely for the purpose of appearing on the ballot among the employees in the unit found appropriate.

Francis X. Burkhardt, Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations

5/ The record is unclear as to whether the showing of interest of the IFPTE is adequate to treat the IFPTE as an intervenor in the nonprofessional unit found appropriate in Case No. 71-4093(RO). Accordingly, before proceeding to an election in the subject case, the appropriate Area Administrator is directed to evaluate whether or not the IFPTE has a 10 percent showing of interest among the nonprofessional employees so as to afford it intervenor status in the election in Case No. 71-4093(RO). If it is determined that the IFPTE's showing of interest is insufficient, it should not be placed on the ballot in said election.

SUMMARY OF DECISION AND DIRECTION OF ELECTION
OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

U.S. AGRICULTURAL RESEARCH SERVICE,
GEORGIA - SOUTH CAROLINA AREA
A/SLMR No. 915

This case arose as a result of the representation petition filed by the National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1924 (NFFE). The NFFE sought a unit of all of the Activity's nonprofessional employees, excluding employees in existing bargaining units in which either agreement or certification bars exist, as well as the standard exclusions. The Activity took the position that the sought unit is inappropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition, and that the only appropriate unit would be an Area Office-wide unit.

The Assistant Secretary found that the unit petitioned for by the NFFE was appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition. In this regard, he noted that the sought unit is, in effect, a residual unit of all unrepresented nonprofessional employees of the Activity, and that the employees in such unit have similar job classifications, skills, and duties, are subject to common personnel policies and practices, and enjoy common overall supervision and essentially uniform working conditions. Further, noting the delegation of labor relations authority to the Activity Director, the Assistant Secretary found that the sought unit would promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations, and such unit would prevent further fragmentation of the Activity's nonprofessional employees. Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary directed an election to be conducted among employees in the unit found appropriate.

DECISION AND DIRECTION OF ELECTION

Upon a petition duly filed under Section 6 of Executive Order 11491, as amended, a hearing was held before Hearing Officer Adam J. Conti. The Hearing Officer's rulings made at the hearing are free from prejudicial error and are hereby affirmed.

Upon the entire record in the case, including briefs filed by the Activity and the National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1924, hereinafter called NFFE, the Assistant Secretary finds:

1. The NFFE claims to represent certain employees of the Activity.

2. In its petition, the NFFE seeks an election in a unit consisting of all employees in the Georgia-South Carolina Area of the Agricultural Research Service, U.S. Department of Agriculture, excluding employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, management officials, professional employees, confidential employees, supervisors and employees in units under agreement and certification bars. The Activity takes the position that the petitioned for unit is not appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under the Order. It contends that only an area-wide unit is appropriate and that the petitioned for unit, which is a residual unit, would serve to continue the fragmentation of the Activity which now exists.

1/ The American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 987, hereinafter called AFGE, was permitted to appear at the hearing as a party in interest in view of the Activity's contention that only an area-wide unit would be appropriate and such a unit would include a facility for which the AFGE holds exclusive recognition.

The mission of the Agricultural Research Service (ARS), which was established in 1953 as a division of the Department of Agriculture, is to conduct basic, applied, and developmental research concerning animal and plant production, the use and improvement of soil, water and air, and the marketing, use, and effects of agricultural products. The ARS' operations are conducted at numerous field locations in the United States, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and in several foreign countries. Central offices for the Administrator of the ARS and his staff are maintained in the Washington, D.C., metropolitan area. These offices provide overall leadership and direction to the programs and activities assigned to the ARS. Field activities are conducted on a geographical basis through four Regional Offices, 20 Area Offices and seven major Research Centers.

The Activity herein is one of nine Area Offices in the Southern Region, whose headquarters is in New Orleans, Louisiana. Headquartered in Tifton, Georgia, the Activity is headed by an Area Director, whose staff consists of an Assistant Area Director, an Area Administrative Officer, and two secretaries. The Area Director exercises general supervision over the work and operation of over 30 different lines of research carried out at eight different locations. 2/ The Activity is further subdivided into laboratories headed by a Laboratory Director or Chief, and research units headed by a Research Leader. Laboratories exist only at those locations where there is a need for technical leadership and coordination of the efforts of several research units. The basic organizational component of the Activity is the research unit, and the Research Leader reports directly to the Area Director except when the research unit is under a Laboratory Director or Chief. The Research Leader is the immediate supervisor of employees in the unit and, where applicable, the Laboratory Director or Chief is the second level supervisor.

At the time of the hearing in this matter, four exclusively represented units existed within the Activity. In July 1970, NFFE Local 1758 was certified as the exclusive representative of a unit of all nonprofessional employees of the Stored-Products Insect Research and Development Laboratory, located in Savannah, Georgia. There is a negotiated agreement covering this unit which expired in July 1977. On January 20, 1976, AFGE Local 987 was certified as the exclusive representative of a unit of all nonprofessional employees of the Southeastern Fruit and Tree Nut Laboratory, Byron, Georgia, with the standard exclusions. In January 1970, NFFE Local 1764 was certified as the exclusive representative of the nonprofessional and professional employees of the Plant Introduction Station, Bamboo Farm, Savannah, Georgia. In a letter to the Hearing Officer, NFFE Local 1764 disclaimed interest in further representing these latter employees, and, at the hearing herein, the NFFE representative present stated that NFFE Local 1764 is, in fact, defunct. In July 1970, NFFE Local 1755 was certified as the exclusive representative of all nonprofessional Wage Grade employees of the Crops Research Division, Vegetable Breeding Laboratory, Charleston, South Carolina. At the hearing, a NFFE national representative, acting on behalf of NFFE Local 1755, agreed to include this unit in the petitioned for unit. The claimed unit includes, therefore, all nonprofessional employees of the Activity, except the nonprofessional employees in exclusively recognized units assigned to the Southeastern Fruit and Tree Nut Laboratory, Byron, Georgia, and the Stored-Products Insect Research and Development Laboratory, Savannah, Georgia.

In asserting its position with regard to the appropriateness of the claimed unit herein, the Activity argued that the existence of less than area-wide units should not be considered in reaching a determination in the instant matter. In this regard, the Activity pointed out that all of the units existing at the time the instant petition was filed were created prior to a 1972 reorganization which created the present organizational structure of the ARS and the Activity. With regard to the Byron, Georgia, unit for which the AFGE was certified in 1976, the Activity noted that this unit also existed prior to the reorganization, and that the 1976 certification resulted as a consequence of a successful challenge by the AFGE in the existing unit.

Essentially all employees of the Activity enjoy common personnel policies and practices administered by the Regional Personnel Office. In this regard, the evidence establishes that the competitive area for merit promotions GS-7 through GS-11 is regionwide; the competitive area for reductions-in-force involving research technicians GS-7 and above is area-wide, while that for other positions GS-7 and above is regionwide; the authority to establish or revise employees' tours of duty is vested in the Regional Deputy Administrator, but this authority can be delegated to the Area Director; the authority to approve irregular or unscheduled overtime is held by the Area Director; the Area Director is the lowest level for the approval of incentive awards; and the Area Director has the authority to approve travel, training, all formal details of employees lasting 30 days or more and all changes in postiion descriptions. While labor relations matters are handled by the Regional Personnel Office, the Area Director has been delegated final authority with regard to such matters. The record reveals also that the employees in the sought unit are classified either as technicians or as clericals, and, despite their geographic dispersion, perform their duties (technical and/or clerical) under generally similar conditions.

Based on the foregoing circumstances, I find that the area-wide unit sought is appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition. Thus, there was no evidence that the existing units have been rendered inappropriate by a reorganization. The employees in the sought unit include all of the remaining unrepresented, nonprofessional employees of the Activity and, therefore, constitute a residual unit of the Activity's nonprofessional employees. Further, all employees in the claimed unit enjoy common overall supervision, generally similar working conditions, have similar classifications, skills and duties, and are subject to common personnel policies and practices. Moreover, noting the delegation of authority to the Area Director in labor relations matters, and the fact that the claimed unit constitutes a comprehensive residual grouping of the Activity's nonprofessional employees which will prevent further fragmentation, I find that such unit will promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations.

Accordingly, I find that the following employees of the Activity constitute a unit appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under Executive Order 11491, as amended:

> All employees of the Georgia-South Carolina Area, Agricultural Research Service, U.S. Department of Agriculture, excluding nonprofessional employees of the Stored-Products Insect Research and Development Laboratory, Savannah, Georgia, and the Southeastern Fruit and Tree Nut Laboratory, Byron, Georgia, all professional employees, management officials, confidential employees, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity and supervisors as defined by the Order.

DIRECTION OF ELECTION

An election by secret ballot shall be conducted among employees in the unit found appropriate as early as possible, but not later than 60 days from the date below. The appropriate Area Administrator shall supervise the election, subject to the Assistant Secretary's Regulations. Eligible to vote are those in the unit who were employed during the payroll period immediately preceding the date below, including employees who did not work during that period because they were out ill or on vacation or on furlough, including those in the military services who appear in person at the polls. Ineligible to vote are employees who have quit or were discharged for cause since the designated payroll period and who have not been rehired or reinstated before the election date. Those eligible shall vote whether or not they desire to be represented for the purpose of exclusive recognition by the National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1924. 3/

3/ As the unit represented by the AFGE is not included in the unit for which an election has been directed herein, and as there was no other basis warranting the AFGE's intervention in this matter, I shall not place the AFGE on the ballot.

SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

GENERAL SERVICES ADMINISTRATION,
REGION 2
A/SLMR No. 916

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by the American Federation of Government Employees (AFL-CIO), District 2, Council of General Services Administration Locals (Complainant) alleging that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by unilaterally changing certain working conditions without meeting and conferring regarding the "change and/or procedures." The alleged change in working conditions involved the portion of time during work hours when employees of the Federal Archives and Records Center, Bayonne, New Jersey, were to furnish over-the-counter services to persons requesting access to records.

The Administrative Law Judge recommended that the complaint be dismissed. He found that the Respondent had changed the service hours to the public, but it had no obligation to negotiate with the Complainant regarding the decision, noting that the employees' hours of work were not affected. However, he noted that the effectuation of the decision did change working conditions for some employees. While concluding that the Respondent would be required to negotiate concerning the impact of such change, if requested, the Administrative Law Judge noted that after the change was made, the Complainant only requested that it be rescinded.

Noting particularly the absence of exceptions, the Assistant Secretary adopted the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendations and ordered that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety.

DECISION AND ORDER

On June 6, 1977, Administrative Law Judge Milton Kramer issued his Recommended Decision and Order in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had not engaged in the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint and recommending that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety. No exceptions were filed to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order and the entire record in the subject case, and noting particularly the absence of exceptions, I hereby adopt the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendations.

RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

Preliminary Statement

This case arises under Executive Order 11419 as amended. It was initiated by a complaint dated July 8, 1976 and filed July 13, 1976 alleging a violation of Sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Executive Order. The violation was alleged to consist of a Facility of the Respondent, the Federal Archives and Records Center in Bayonne, New Jersey, by memorandum of May 20, 1976, changing the hours it would furnish over-the-counter service to persons requesting access to records until 4:30 P.M. instead of the previous expiration time of 4:00 P.M., without conferring with the Complainant concerning the impact of such change. The Respondent filed a response to the complaint dated August 27, 1976 in which it denied that the memorandum of May 20 changed the over-the-counter hours of service but simply constituted a reaffirmation and reminder of the previously existing hours of such service.

On January 11, 1977 the Regional Administrator issued a Notice of Hearing to be held on January 27, 1977 in Bayonne, New Jersey. Hearings were held on January 27 and 28 in Bayonne. The Complainant was represented by the President of the Council of General Services Administration Locals, District 2 and the Respondent was represented by the Chief of its Employee Relations Branch. Both sides produced witnesses who were examined and cross-examined and both sides offered exhibits which were received in evidence. Both sides made closing arguments and the Respondent filed a timely brief on March 21, 1977.

FACTS

The Federal Archives and Records Center in Bayonne, New Jersey, is a Facility of the Respondent. It is one of sixteen records centers in the United States and one of ten federal archives. It stores and services federal records that are created in the States of New York and New Jersey. Its records are produced for study in the reading room by representatives of governmental agencies, researchers, students, and other members of the public. American Federation of Government Employees (AFGE) Local 3248, a component of the Complainant, represents a unit of the Facility's employees including those who service "patrons" who come to obtain and examine records.

Prior to locating in Bayonne the Facility was located in New York City. It started moving to Bayonne in January of 1974. It started furnishing service to customers in Bayonne in September 1974 and the move was completed early in 1975.

In New York City the official working hours were from 8:30 A.M. to 5:00 P.M. A sign in the lobby of the building in which the Facility was located advised the public that reference services were furnished in Room 302 from 9:00 A.M. to 4:00 P.M. That sign was put up by the Public Buildings Service of G.S.A. over the objection of the Director of the Facility. There was no such sign in the Center itself and services were actually furnished during the entire working hours.

The hours of duty in Bayonne were initially 8:15 A.M. to 4:45 P.M. The location of the Facility in Bayonne, one of the buildings in the Military Ocean Terminal, is not readily accessible by public transportation. At the request of the employees, to facilitate their transportation problems, the hours of duty were changed to 8:00 A.M. to 4:30 P.M. in October 1975 with the approval of the Regional Administrator. An issue of the Federal Register in November 1974 announced that the business hours of the Facility were 8:00 A.M. to 4:30 P.M. Monday through Friday, and 41 C.F.R. § 105-61.5101-7, under the heading "Location of Records and Hours of Use", states that the hours at the Facility are 8:00 A.M. to 4:30 P.M. Monday through Friday.

At some undeterminable time before May 20, 1976 some unascertainable person placed a sign in the room where patrons came to obtain over-the-counter service which stated that reference requests would not be serviced after 4:00 P.M. Such statement was largely academic because service business fell off sharply beginning about 3:00 P.M. and it was rarely that service was asked for after 4:00 P.M. and when it was asked for it was generally given. However, some of the employees who sometimes furnished over-the-counter service or responded to telephonic requests sometimes responded to requests for such service after 4:00 P.M. by telling the customer or caller to come back or call back the next day. Requests for over-the-counter service were made in writing on a printed form. When a request was made late in the day, or when it was made for a volume of material that appeared likely to take a long time to examine, a rubber stamp was placed on the request advising the patron that "the reference room closes at 4:00 P.M."

There was a sharp conflict in the testimony over how long the sign at the service counter stating that reference requests would not be serviced after 4:00 P.M. had been there. The testimony ranged from the sign having been there since service began at Bayonne to the testimony of the Director of the Facility, Thomas F. Greitz, that it could not have been there much before the week before May 20, 1976 when he first noticed it.

Greitz testified that he had been the Director since before the move to Bayonne; that it had always been his policy that service was to be furnished during all business hours; that the space in front of the service counter had been his office until December 1975 because of construction work in what was to be his office; that he would have seen such sign had it been there then and would have removed it (as he later did), and even after he moved into his regular office, which was near the service counter, he would have noticed it because he moved around a lot and was "nosey" about what was going on; that had he seen such sign he would have replaced it with a sign stating that service terminated at 4:30; and that some time during the week before May 20 he did see the 4:00 sign. He testified that he never authorized the cessation of service at 4:00 P.M. but that he authorized the use of the rubber stamp stating that the reference room closed at 4:00 P.M. as a "nudge" to encourage patrons to leave by 4:30 P.M.

Some time during the week preceding May 20, 1976 Greitz received a telephone call from one of his superiors in Washington complaining that he had called the Records Center at 4:20 P.M. and was told to call back the next day. Greitz' attention was called also to three other incidents that occurred the same week, in two of which a caller had arrived at the Records Center slightly before 4:00 P.M. and the other had arrived slightly after 4:00 P.M. and all three were told to come back the next day. Greitz testified that it was then that he discovered the 4:00 sign and replaced it with a sign of the same size and shape and bearing the same message except that it said that reference requests would not be serviced after 4:30 P.M. instead of 4:00 P.M. I conclude from all the testimony that someone in management authorized the 4:00 P.M. sign and had it placed at the counter at least some months before May 20 and that Greitz replaced it with the 4:30 sign because of the incidents of the week before May 20. I find also that management knew that some employees sometimes did not accept requests for service after 4:00 P.M. and permitted such conduct. With these exceptions I find the facts in accordance with Greitz' testimony.

On May 20, 1976 Greitz addressed a memorandum to five individuals two of whom regularly worked at the service counter two of whom were supervisors of employees who sometimes worked at the service counter, and the fifth was the President of Local 3248 who seldom worked at the service counter. The memorandum stated that there appeared to be some confusion concerning the official hours of duty; that the official hours of duty and hours of service were 8:00 A.M. to 4:30 P.M. that no one was to be turned away if he came before 4:30 P.M. or told to call the next day if he called before 4:30 P.M.; that if asked for service before 4:30 P.M. the service must be completed; that if it appeared that overtime might be involved it should be called to the attention of the Branch Chief who would determine if overtime was necessary and would obtain authorization of overtime from the Director; that only the Director had authority to determine that service requested before 4:30 P.M. should, because of the lateness of the time of the request, be given the next day; and it concluded with the suggestion that if any employees could not meet such requirements because of personal or transportation problems they should seek employment elsewhere.

A week later, on May 27, 1976, the President of Local 3248, Leroy Hampton, delivered a letter to the Director stating that the Director's May 20 memorandum implemented a change in policy affecting working conditions without conferring with the union concerning the change. It asserted that this was a violation of Executive Order 11491 and requested a meeting to try to solve the issue. Greitz advised Hampton that he would meet with the Union that afternoon. The Local President and Vice President met with Greitz that afternoon. Hampton asked that the memorandum of May 20 be rescinded. Greitz responded that he could not and would not rescind that memorandum and the Union representatives left.

The Facility had buzzers sounded at various times during the working day such as start of official hours, start and end of break periods, and the like. A schedule of sounding the buzzer issued on January 8, 1976 called for a buzzer at 4:20 P.M. to signal the start of wash up and change of clothing period 1/ and a schedule issued on November 17, 1976 (after the complaint in this case was filed) called for the buzzer for that purpose to be sounded at the same time, 4:20 P.M. 2/

One supervisor and several part-time employees regularly worked until 5:00 P.M. There is no evidence that since May 20, 1976 any employee lost his wash-up time because of the announced requirement that over-the-counter service was to be furnished by members of the unit until 4:30 P.M. or that any member of the unit worked overtime for that reason, and I find that no such incident occurred.

DISCUSSION AND CONCLUSION

It has been determined that the 8:00 A.M. to 4:00 P.M. sign for service over the counter was in the service room for some months before May 20, 1976, that management knew it, and that management knew that some employees sometimes told patrons asking for service over the counter or telephonically to come back or call back the next day if the service was asked for after 4:00 P.M. and permitted such conduct. The memorandum of May 20, 1976, prohibiting a refusal of service if the request was made before 4:30 P.M., thus did effectuate a change in working conditions for some employees in the unit. Since the official working hours were from 8:00 A.M. to 4:30 P.M., the Respondent was not under obligation to negotiate concerning whether such change should be made.

1/ Exh. C-3.
2/ Exh. R-8.

It was, however, under obligation to bargain, if requested, concerning the impact of such change. It did not negotiate before issuing the memorandum and replacing the 8:00 A.M. - 4:00 P.M. sign with the 8:00 A.M. - 4:30 P.M. sign. After May 20 it was not requested to negotiate concerning the impact of the change; it was simply requested to rescind the change and refused to do so.

However, in view of the pattern of patronage at the Facility, the possibility of adverse impact was quite slight. Patronage fell off sharply after 3:00 P.M. and rarely was service asked for after 4:00 P.M. The only possibly adverse impact from the change suggested by anyone was that an employee might lose his wash-up time or might be required to work overtime. The likelihood of that happening was further lessened by the presence of a supervisor and several part-time employees who worked until 5:00 P.M., and in fact it never occurred.

In these circumstances, if we assume that the Facility in abstract principle should have allowed some time, between the announcement of the new policy and its implementation, for discussion of possibly adverse impact, the possibility was too remote and theoretical (and never occurred) for the failure to do so to constitute an unfair labor practice under the Executive Order.

RECOMMENDED ORDER

The complaint should be dismissed.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER CLARIFYING UNIT
OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENED

OVERSEAS PRIVATE INVESTMENT CORPORATION
A/SLMR No. 917

This case involved a petition for clarification of unit filed by the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1534, AFL-CIO (AFGE) seeking clarification of the status of some 14 individuals in the exclusively recognized bargaining unit. The Activity contended that two of the employees were confidential employees and that the remaining employees at issue were supervisors within the meaning of Section 2(c) of the Order.

The Assistant Secretary found that the two employees asserted to be confidential were, in fact, not confidential employees. In addition, he made findings with respect to the supervisory status of the remainder of the employees whose status the AFGE sought to clarify, and he clarified the unit accordingly.

DECISION AND ORDER CLARIFYING UNIT

Upon a petition duly filed under Section 6 of Executive Order 11491, as amended, a hearing was held before Hearing Officer Ralph R. Smith. The Hearing Officer's rulings made at the hearing are free from prejudicial error and are hereby affirmed.

Upon the entire record in this case, including briefs submitted by the parties, the Assistant Secretary finds:

The Petitioner, American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1534, AFL-CIO, herein called AFGE, was certified on September 22, 1971, as the exclusive representative of a unit of all professional and non-professional employees of the Overseas Private Investment Corporation, herein called OPIC or Activity. In this proceeding, the AFGE seeks to clarify the status of the following 14 employees who the Activity contends should be excluded from the unit: Carolyn Boddie, Administrative Aid, Steno, GS-301-6; Jose Vasquez, Chauffeur, WG-5703-5; Mary Lloyd, Information Systems Assistant, GS-301-7; Michael Cooper, Financial Analyst, GS-1160-14; Henry Wolfe, Computer Specialist, GS-334-12; Ella Hawkins, Insurance Applications Officer, GS-301-10; Hilda Schudder, Administrative Officer, GS-341-12; Henry Ritter, Accountant (General), GS-510-12; and Attorney-Advisors, GS-905-13/14, Rufus Brown, Allen Keesee, Anthony Marra, Lorin Weinsenfeld, Marcia Wiss and Jay Stevens.

The AFGE contends that Boddie and Vasquez are not confidential employees as argued by the Activity and that Lloyd, Cooper, Wolfe, Hawkins, Scudder and Ritter are not supervisors within the meaning of Section 2(c) of the Order. Further, it asserts that the six Attorney-Advisors involved herein are not supervisors and/or employees engaged in Federal Personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity. 1/

The mission of the OPIC is to promote and facilitate the flow of private investment capital in the United States to friendly developing nations. The OPIC offers United States investors assistance in finding overseas investment opportunities, insurance to protect their investments, and loans and loan guarantees to help finance their projects. In addition to encouraging United States investors to make investments in developing nations, the OPIC plays an important role in U.S. foreign policy by stimulating economic and social progress in approximately 90 less developed countries. Organizationally the OPIC is divided into the following departments: Insurance, Financing, Treasurer, Corporate Planning, Public Affairs, General Counsel and the Office of the President.

With respect to the particular employees whose status is in dispute herein, I make the following findings and conclusions:

Carolyn Boddie, Administrative Aid, Steno, GS-301-6 and Jose Vasquez, Chauffeur, WG-5703-5

Carolyn Boddie works as the number three or "back up" secretary in the Office of the President of the OPIC where her work is primarily clerical in nature. Boddie handles incoming and outgoing mail, types everyday correspondence and, on occasion, routinely assists other secretaries in the President's Office. The evidence establishes that in connection with her job functions Boddie has never seen or typed proposals concerning any negotiated agreement with the AFGE, materials concerning employee grievances and promotions, adverse actions, or labor-management memoranda. While Boddie has attended senior management

1/ At the hearing, the parties stipulated that certain individuals covered by the petition, and separately listed in the attached Appendix, are confidential or supervisory employees, or management officials and, therefore, were excluded from the unit. There is no record evidence that the stipulations with respect to the employees listed in the Appendix were improper. It should be noted that such stipulations, in the context of a unit clarification petition, are viewed as motions to amend the petition to delete and, in effect, withdraw the petition as to the stipulated employees. Under these circumstances, I grant the motions to amend and, therefore, find it unnecessary to clarify the status of those stipulated employees listed in the Appendix. Cf. New Jersey Department of Defense, A/SLMR No. 121, and U.S. Department of Transportation, St. Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation, A/SLMR No. 839.

meetings on three occasions and may have occasional access to personnel or statistical records, the record reveals that her attendance at the meetings was for general orientation purposes only and that she does not act in a confidential capacity to a person who formulates and effectuates management policy in the field of labor relations.

With respect to Jose Vasquez, the evidence shows that he performs chauffeur duties for the President of the OPIC, its executive staff, and visiting foreign dignitaries, and serves beverages and lunch at senior staff meetings and receptions. In this capacity, he attends the above-named meetings for short periods of time to perform catering duties and does not act in a confidential capacity to a person who formulates and effectuates management policy in the field of labor relations.

Based on the foregoing circumstances, I find that Boddie and Vasquez are not confidential employees who should be excluded from the exclusively recognized unit. Thus, in my view, while these employees have attended senior level staff meetings, such meetings did not directly concern labor relations matters, and their attendance was not part of their designated duties. 2/ Accordingly, I shall include Carolyn Boddie, Administrative Aid, Steno, GS-301-6, and Jose Vasquez, Chauffeur, WG-5703-5, in the unit.

Mary Lloyd, Information Systems Assistant, GS-301-7

Mary Lloyd works under the general supervision of the Assistant to the Treasurer of the OPIC and has principal responsibility for word processing operations at the Activity. Most of the time, Lloyd works alongside one full-time and one half-time clerical assistant. All employees in the word processing unit, including Lloyd, perform computerized typing. Because of the volume and the routine nature of the keypunch typing used in word processing operations, Lloyd and her fellow employees perform their assignments on a first come, first serve basis and regularly check each other's work for accuracy.

Although Lloyd has authority to schedule overtime, the record reveals that the employees involved in word processing operations, by mutual agreement, have worked out procedures which best facilitate their own work, especially with respect to overtime. In this regard, overtime in the word processing unit is scheduled on a voluntary rotating basis, and Lloyd has frequently worked overtime in rotation, in addition to substituting for either of the clerical assistants who cannot work on weekends.

2/ With respect to Boddie's access to personnel or statistical records, it has been held previously that mere access to such records does not warrant exclusion as a confidential employee. Virginia National Guard Headquarters, 4th Battalion, 111th Artillery, A/SLMR No. 69.

While Lloyd is responsible for all day-to-day production work on word processing machinery and must be able to meet rigid deadlines, priorities and standards of work are set by her supervisor. The record reflects that Lloyd does not have the authority to hire, transfer or promote employees. Nor has Lloyd suspended, laid off, recalled, discharged, rewarded, disciplined employees or adjusted their grievances, or effectively recommended such action.

Based on the foregoing, as the record reveals that Lloyd does not exercise any supervisory authority requiring the use of independent judgement, or have the authority to effectively recommend such action, I find that she is not a supervisor within the meaning of Section 2(c) of the Order, and that she should be included in the unit.

Michael Cooper, Financial Analyst, GS-1160-14

Michael Cooper is one of three approving officers at the Activity who dispurse corporation funds and is directly answerable to the Deputy Treasurer of the OPIC. Cooper is also responsible for financial evaluations regarding the position of OPIC borrowers and works closely with the Deputy Treasurer in reviewing market rates, maturity dates, amounts of investments and corporation fees and revenues. The evidence shows that in his capacity as an approving officer for the OPIC, Cooper works with one half-time assistant who functions primarily as a cashier, receiving the majority of her work from the mailroom at the Activity and performing her cashier functions without Cooper's supervision.

The record reveals that although Cooper was instrumental in designing standardized forms which the half-time assistant uses in her work, he does not direct or assign work to the cashier and is seldom called upon to answer work related questions. The evidence further indicates that Cooper has not suspended, laid off, recalled, discharged, or disciplined employees, or adjusted their grievances, and does not have the authority to hire, transfer or promote employees. Nor does the evidence demonstrate that his recommendations with respect to personnel actions are effective or relied on. In this connection, while the cashier received a promotion, it was unrelated to work performed for Cooper and he did not approve the promotion. Cooper's own supervisor interviews potential candidates for cashier vacancies and merely asks his opinion on applicants while reserving approval authority for himself. Moreover, such evaluations as Cooper makes concerning his half-time assistant are made jointly with others and routine leave approval is made jointly with others.

Based on the foregoing circumstances, I find that Michael Cooper Financial Analyst, GS-1160-14, is not a supervisor within the meaning of Section 2(c) of the Order and should be included in the unit as he does not exercise supervisory authority requiring the use of independent judgement and does not effectively recommend such actions.

Henry Wolfe, Computer Specialist, GS-334-12

Henry Wolfe is employed as a Computer Specialist at the Activity under the direct supervision of the Assistant to the Treasurer of the OPIC. Wolfe's work is primarily concerned with the operation and maintainance of non-financial computer based systems at the Activity. His present work requires knowledge of IBM 360/370 systems and necessitates an understanding of information systems analysis. In addition to his computer specialist duties, Wolfe has been assigned responsibility for the operation and supervision of the OPIC's Central File and Record Storage facility.

The record reveals that Wolfe works with one programs record clerk whose job is routine in nature and includes logging and distributing files throughout the OPIC. Wolfe does not regularly review the work of the programs record clerk or make work assignments. The day-to-day duties of the clerk are unrelated to Wolfe's major responsibilty for non-financial computer operations. The record demonstrates that Wolfe does not hire, fire, transfer, suspend, lay off, recall, promote, discharge, reward, discipline or adjust employee grievances, or effective recommend such action. Although Wolfe has authorized leave and overtime for the programs record clerk, his granting of leave has been largely pro forma and for short periods of time only. With respect to the authority to grant overtime, the record reveals that Wolfe initiated overtime requests on three occasions and such requests were passed on for approval to higher authorities. Moreover, the overtime received by the programs record clerk appears to have been for the benefit of individ other than Wolfe, who have requested the clerk's assistance at such varie tasks as cleaning and xeroxing. 3/

In my view, the record shows that Wolfe does not exercise supervisor authority within the meaing of Section 2(c) of the Order that requires the use of independent judgement, or have the authority to effectively recommend any such action. Therefore, I shall include him within the unit.

Ella Hawkins, Insurance Applications Officer, GS-301-10

Ella Hawkins is the Insurance Applications Officer for the Insurance Department of the OPIC. She directs and controls operations relating to initial applications for investment insurance coverage. Her duties include counseling prospective investors in the processing of insurance and loan applications, and responding to telegrams, letters, telephonic and personal inquiries from investors, Congress, governmental agencies and foreign governments. Additionally, Hawkins has authority to examine and screen applications sent to the OPIC for coverage feasibility and to determine needed data and facts for potential corporation projects.

3/ Prior to his present position, and pursuant to a reorganization at th OPIC made effective March 1976, Wolfe was reclassified from a Compute Systems Administrator, GS-330-14, to a Computer Specialist, GS-334-12 In his former capacity, Wolfe supervised directly or through subordinates approximately nine employees and the parties' agreed at the hearing that in his role as a Computer Systems Administrator he was a supervisor within the meaning of the Order.

To assist Hawkins in the performance of her duties, Hawkins has been assigned an Applications Clerk (Typing), GS-301-6, who performs administrative and clerical duties and works under a system designed to expedite the handling of approximately 750 active OPIC files. The clerk performs her duties under the direction of Hawkins who is responsible for the correctness of her work. The evidence indicates that Hawkins has been instrumental in the transfer of two individuals to the position of Applications Clerk. In both instances, Hawkins initiated moves to effect the transfer of the individuals she recommended to her immediate supervisor for the position of Applications Clerk, and testimony shows that nominees for the position must be cleared and approved by Hawkins. Also, the evidence shows that Hawkins has the independent authority to certify step increases and has done so for the current Applications Clerk, and that she regularly supplies on-the-job training to new employees and has counseled Application Clerks on their use or abuse of sick leave.

Because Hawkins initiates and effectively recommends employee transfers and has independent authority to grant step increases and has done so, I find that she is a supervisor within the meaning of Section 2(c) of the Order and should be excluded from the unit.

Hilda Scudder, Administrative Officer, GS-341-12

Hilda Scudder serves as Administrative Officer with responsibility for providing management support services for approximately 130 OPIC personnel. Her responsibilities include space and property management, building maintenance, administration of parking spaces and physical security. She serves also as the focal point at the OPIC for the receipt, control and distribution of documents used in conjunction with insurance and investment projects, and provides advice to the OPIC staff concerning security classification procedures.

Additionally, Scudder has overall responsibility for the effectiveness of operations in the receptionist area of the Activity. Working for Scudder in this capacity is a receptionist who arranges security briefings for new employees, issues building keys, gives information to visitors and callers, and sees that proper security is maintained in the receptionist area.

The record demonstrates that Scudder has initiated and effectively recommended a meritorious performance award for the present OPIC receptionist. There is no evidence that her recommendation was independently reviewed or evaluated. Further, Scudder has effectuated a within grade increase for the same individual.

In addition to her responsibility for overseeing the work of the receptionist, the evidence establishes that Scudder independently and without review has admonished and counseled receptionists regarding personal phone calls, the appearance of the OPIC lobby, security procedures, plans for escorting visiting dignitaries, timetables and logging mail, loitering and action to take in the event of civil disturbances, and, on occasion, has given receptionists clerical assignments to complete.

Because, among other things, Scudder has effectively recommended performance awards and has effectuated within grade increases, I conclude that she is a supervisor within the meaning of Section 2(c) of the Order and, therefore, should be excluded from the unit.

Henry Ritter, Accountant (General), GS-510-12

Henry Ritter is an accountant in the Office of the Treasurer of the OPIC. He is directly responsible for the day-to-day operation of insurance activities performed in the Insurance Operations Unit of the Treasurer's Office. Ritter oversees all accounting matters and certain clerical personnel within the unit and maintains a working relationship with private industry in order to expedite the transfer of political risk insurance to the private sector. He further coordinates all data processing reports related to insurance operations. Assisting Ritter in the above-noted responsibilities, and more specifically in computer operations, are two part-time clerical employees who spend a majority of their time coding insurance applications.

The record reveals that when Ritter's supervisor, who has overall authority for the Insurance Operations Unit, is absent, he fills in and has done so for periods of up to ten weeks, and that Ritter was primarily responsible for transferring an employee into the Unit. The record reveals further that Ritter has provided substantial technical training to clerks performing computerized typing during their first four months on the job and that he effectively recommended a promotion for one of his clerical assistants.

Inasmuch as Ritter can effectively recommend promotions for employees under his direction and the transfer of employees, I find that he is a supervisor within the meaning of the Order and, therefore, he should be excluded from the unit.

Rufus Brown, Allen Keesee, Anthony Marra, Lorin Weinsenfeld, Marcia Wiss, Jay Stevens, Attorney-Advisors, GS-905-13/14

Attorney-Advisors Brown, Keesee, Marra, Weinsenfeld, Wiss and Stevens all work for the General Counsel of the OPIC. The record demonstrates that these attorney-advisors regularly interview and hire their own secretarial help. In this regard, the record reveals that after the positions are approved by the General Counsel the individual attorneys interview candidates and then inform the personnel office of their selection. Also, attorney-advisors can transfer secretarial employees and have, upon occasion, effectively recommended changes in the duty status of their own secretaries. Record testimony indicates that the subject attorney-advisors have the authority to recommend disciplinary action regarding their own secretarial help and have initiated such actions. They have the discretion to decide when overtime work is needed, and have frequently approved overtime for their own secretaries without prior approval from the General Counsel. The record shows further that attorney-advisors give special performance awards to their secretaries and that they approve annual and sick leave.

Inasmuch as the attorney-advisors herein effectively hire their own secretaries, can transfer and change the duty status of employees under their direction, independently decide when overtime work is needed and approve its use, and are primarily responsible in the granting of special performance awards for their secretaries, I conclude that they are supervisors within the meaning of Section 2(c) of the Order. Accordingly, I shall exclude them from the unit. 4/

PROFESSIONAL AIR TRAFFIC
CONTROLLERS ORGANIZATION,
MEBA, AFL-CIO, LOCAL 301,
AURORA, ILLINOIS
A/SLMR No. 918

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by an individual against the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization, MEBA, AFL-CIO, Local 301. Essentially the Complainant alleged that the Respondent violated Section 19(b)(1) of the Order by refusing to allow the Complainant and other employees of the Activity involved who were not members of the Respondent to participate in a poll on a proposal to change certain employees' work schedules.

The Administrative Law Judge concluded that the Respondent had not violated section 19(b)(1) of the Order when it conducted the poll. In this regard, the Administrative Law Judge noted that Section 10(e) guarantees to all unit employees the right to be fairly represented by an exclusive representative. He found that where, as here, the action of a labor organization is not shown to be arbitrary, discriminatory or in bad faith, it has broad latitude in fulfilling its representational obligations. Therefore, he recommended that the complaint be dismissed.

Noting particularly the absence of exceptions, the Assistant Secretary adopted the findings, conclusions and recommendation of the Administrative Law Judge and ordered that the complaint be dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER

On June 29, 1977, Administrative Law Judge Salvatore J. Arrigo issued his Recommended Decision in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had not engaged in the unfair labor practice alleged in the complaint and recommending that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety. No exceptions were filed with respect to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. RECOMMENDED DECISION

Preliminary Statement

This proceeding arises under the provisions of Executive Order 11491, as amended (hereafter referred to as the Order). Pursuant to the Regulations of the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations (hereafter referred to as the Assistant Secretary), a Notice of Hearing on Complaint issued on February 17, 1977 with reference to an alleged violation of Section 19(b)(1) of the Order. The complaint, filed by Ronald E. Wiest, an individual, alleged that the above captioned Respondent violated the Order when it refused to allow Mr. Wiest and other non-Union employees of the Federal Aviation Agency, Aurora, Illinois (hereafter referred to as the Facility) to participate in a vote on a proposal to change certain employees' work schedules.

At the hearing held on March 31, 1977 the parties were afforded full opportunity to adduce evidence and call, examine and cross-examine witnesses. Both parties argued orally at which time counsel for Respondent cited various cases in support of his position. The parties waived the right to file briefs.

Upon the entire record in this matter and from my evaluation of the evidence, I make the following:

Findings of Fact

The facts are not in dispute. At all material times since October 1972 Local 301, Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization has been the exclusive collective bargaining representative of various employees at the Facility including data system specialists. Prior to January 1977 the Facility employed approximately 23 data system specialists of which 16 were employed on a regular 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. shift in administrative tasks such as programming and testing. The remaining seven data system specialists worked operating computers in support of air traffic controllers. Since air traffic control was a 24 hour operation, data system support was required to be provided on a 24 hour basis. To meet this need the seven support or "operation" data system specialists worked on one of three eight hour shifts and rotated those shifts. Because of their work schedules these seven operation data system specialists earned additional compensation since premium pay was received for work on Sundays, holidays and work between the hours of 6 p.m. and 6 a.m.

Beginning around early October 1976 the Union representative servicing the data system specialists informally "checked" at coffee breaks and the like with various specialists regarding their feelings as to the operations work being performed completely by seven of the 23 specialists. Not all specialists are members of the Union and the representative's "checking", was done without regard to the employees' Union membership. On October 27, 1976 the Union representative polled specialists who were Union members as to whether they wished to continue with the current work schedules or whether they desired to have all specialists rotate into the operations work. The Complainant, an operations specialist, requested and was refused an opportunity to vote on the issue specifically because of his lack of Union membership. Indeed, Respondent acknowledges that all 5 non-Union employees were denied the privilege of voting on the matter precisely because of their lack of Union membership.

The vote tally was nine to seven in favor of all specialists rotating into operations work. The Union thereupon submitted to management a proposal to change shift hours of all specialists but management refused to agree to the proposal. Subsequently, the Union used the vehicle of a grievance on the inequality of opportunity to earn premium pay to again put the question before management and resolution of the grievance resulted in the desired change in work schedules. The change occurred on January 16, 1977 and affected Union members and non-members alike without discrimination based on Union membership. 1/ The new schedule was still in effect at the time of the hearing herein.

Discussion and Conclusions

Essentially at issue herein is whether the Union, in excluding non-members when taking the poll, breached its duty under Section 10(e) of the Order to represent "the interests of all employees in the unit without discrimination and without regard to labor organization membership." Complainant alleges that the Union's exclusion of non-members while polling members on a matter concerning working conditions was clearly discriminatory and therefore violative of the Order. The Union basically contends that voting on proposals to be negotiated with management, or a ratification vote taken after agreement has been reached between Union and management negotiators, is an internal Union affair which does not require affording non-members a voice in the matter.

While Section 10(e) of the Order recites a union's obligation or duty to fairly represent non-union and union employees alike, the parameters of that obligation have not yet been explicitly defined under existing case law. However, the proposition that a union, by virtue of its exclusive representative status, has a duty to fairly represent all employees in a collective bargaining unit regardless of union membership has been long held in numerous court cases which have arisen in the private sector. One of the earliest cases on this subject was Steele v. Louisville and Nashville R.R. Co., 323 U.S. 192 (1944), a suit to enjoin enforcement of agreements which discriminated against black railroad firemen in favor of white firemen. In that case, wherein black employees were excluded from union membership by the union's constitution and ritual, the Supreme Court held that under the Railway Labor Act a collective bargaining representative had the duty to exercise the power conferred upon it in a manner which would not discriminate unfairly against any of the group the union proported to represent. The Supreme Court reached a similar holding within regard to a union's duty of fair representation under the National Labor Relations Act in Wallace Corporation v. NLRB, 323 U.S. 255 (1944). The Supreme Court subsequently held that to establish a breach of duty of fair representation enforceable by the courts or the National Labor Relations Board it must be shown that the Union's action was arbitrary, discriminatory or in bad faith. 2/

Precisely how a union fulfills its duty of fair representation in situations involving non-members has been aptly described as "troublesome" by the National Labor Relations Board, 3/ especially since a union's right to exercise discretion over its internal affairs has also been widely recognized. In the Borg Warner case 4/ the Board held, with Supreme Court approval, that an employer violated the National Labor Relations Act by insisting, to the point of impasse, upon the inclusion of a clause in its contract with the union which would require that a strike ballot be taken by all union and non-union employees on the employer's last contract offer and the union would be bound thereby. In its decision the Board stated:

> "It appears self-evident that a representative system necessarily involves trusting the agent with discretion not subject to review by those it represents as to each exercise thereof, particularly at the instance of an outside party. It is the pattern traditionally followed in the labor movement in this country and the concept embodied in the Act. As the > Supreme Court stated, the Act, 'has been considered to absorb and give statutory approval to the philosophy of bargaining as worked out in the labor movement in the United States.' Under the practice of collective bargaining as thus developed, it is customary to leave the decision as to demands to be made upon the employer, the sanction to be resorted to in support of the demands, and the content of the contract ultimately entered into, up to the majority representative leaving to internal procedures of the union the extent to which these may be ratified by the membership of the union or employees generally. The legislative history of the Act as it was originally enacted makes it abundantly clear that Congress was fully aware of all the implications arising out of writing the majority rule principle into the Act, including the fact that those in the minority were not to have an effective voice in the collective-bargaining negotiations. Indeed, this view of the intendment of the Act is clearly supported by the Supreme Court's opinion in the Brooks case where it is stated that 'in placing a non-consenting minority under the bargaining responsibility of an agency selected by a majority of the workers, Congress has discarded the common law doctrine of agency'." (Footnotes omitted.)

A union's right under the National Labor Relations Act to control its internal affairs has similarly been recognized in numerous other cases. Thus, employers were found to have violated the requirements of that Act to negotiate with a union in good faith by insisting that a contract be ratified by a secret vote of employees 5/ and insisting upon a contract clause which required all unit employees, including non-union employees, be given the right to receive notice of union meetings and vote at such meetings and that no decision be made by the union on matters within the scope of collective bargaining except upon majority vote of all employees who voted at the meeting. 6/ Further, in North Coast Counties District Council of Carpenters, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, AFL-CIO, et al., 197 NLRB 905 (1972), the Board held that it was a legitimate exercise of union authority to disregard a contract ratification vote in which non-members participated and adhere to the results of a second vote in which non-members were excluded. In rejecting a Trail Examiner's conclusion that the union could not validly disqualify non-union employees from participating in an essential ratification vote, the Board stated:

> "We have long held that the method of voting on contract ratification is within the discretion of a labor organization. Here, dissatisfaction with the first vote arose within the Union itself when an employee questioned the propriety of the vote to all employees and Macknezie therefore called for the members' only vote. The Respondents had the choice, they chose to permit only members to vote on the issue of contract ratification and the results are binding on the Respondents...." (Footnotes omitted.)

The courts in considering employees' rights vis a vis the exclusive representative under the Railway Labor Act have reached the same conclusions. McMullins v. Kansas, Oklahoma Gulf Railway Co., 229 F.2d 50 (10th Cir. 1956), cert. denied 351 U.S. 918, was such a case. McMullins was an action for an injunction to prevent enforcement of an agreement between the certified bargaining agent and the employer which provided for compulsory retirement of locomotive engineers upon reaching the age of seventy. No formal notice of the proposed provision was given individually to the plaintiffs or to a second union, some of whose members were covered by the agreement. The provision was unanimiously approved at a regular meeting of the certified representative and the agreement was signed. Plaintiffs, inter alia, contended that the contract was invalid because of failure to provide notice to the second union or the affected individuals who brought the suit. The court sustained a lower court's judgment against the plaintiffs finding: "The bargaining agent is the representative of the craft and is not required to consult with the individual members or to give them notice of comtemplated contractual actions within the scope of its authority...." A similar holding was reached in Fogg v. Randolph, 244 F.Supp. 885 (S.D.N.Y. 1962)

I recognize that the matter at issue herein is not concerned with the rights of union members vis a vis the union as an organization. However, it is interesting to note that under the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act rights of union members are quite circumscribed in contract negotiation and ratification matters. 7/ Thus, in Confederated Independent Union, Local No. 1 v. Rockwell-Standard Company et al., 465 F.2d 1137 (3rd Cir. 1972) the court held that the LMRDA "does not require that a collective bargaining agreement be submitted to a local union or the union membership for authorization, negotiation or ratification, in the absence of an express requirement in the agreement, or in the constitution, bylaws or rules and regulations of the union." 8/ The court further stated that the statute "does not require submission of proposed agreements or any segments thereof to the membership; nor grant members the right to vote on negotiating, executing or approving contracts."

Section 19(b)(1) of the Order mandates that a labor organization shall not interfere with, restrain or coerce an employee in the exercise of his rights assured by the Order. One of an employee's rights under the Order is, as provided in Section 10(e), to have the exclusive bargaining agent represent his interest in matters concerning working conditions without discrimination for reasons of labor organization membership. Thus, under the Order a union has

7/ The Rules and Regulations of the Assistant Secretary governing labor-management relations in the Federal service in Part 204.1, Standards of Conduct, provides: "In applying the standards contained in this subpart the Assistant Secretary will be guided by the interpretation and policies followed by the Department of Labor in applying the provisions of the LMRDA and, where no such interpretation exists, he will be guided, as appropriate, by decisions of the courts."

8/ Citing Cleveland Orchestra Committee et al. v. Cleveland Federation of Musicians, Local No. 4, et al. 303 F.2d 229 (6th Cir. 1962).

the duty to fairly represent all members of the collective bargaining unit and discrimination against non-members breaches that duty. 9/ It can be argued therefore that excluding non-members when taking a poll as to what proposals a union will submit to management concerning working hours "discriminates", in the broad sense of the word, against non-members since union members have an input as to what may become a working condition and non-members do not. However, in the private sector such "discrimination" is not viewed in isolation. Rather, as seen from the above, a union's actions are weighed against the widely recognized right of a union to maintain control over its own internal affairs. This right includes affording a union broad latitude in fulfilling its representational obligations in negotiating and administering agreements on behalf of all unit employees in a manner it deems appropriate under the circumstances, so long as the union action is not shown to be arbitrary, discriminatory or in bad faith. Even though non-union unit employees may well have a substantial interest in how a particular union policy which directly or indirectly affects working conditions is shaped, that interest standing alone does not guarantee a non-member's participation in determining union policy. 10/ Thus, it does not appear that in the private sector labor laws have been so interpreted to give non-members the right, absent agreement by the union, to determine what the union's contract proposals will be, participate in contract ratification votes, or participate in strike votes.

Indeed, an argument might also be made that non-members even have a substantial interest in who will be the union officers since those officers deal with management on matters concerning all unit employees' working conditions. Nevertheless, I know of no case where a voice in these determinations has been given to a non-member.

9/ Cf. Veterans Administration Hospital, St. Louis, Missouri and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1715, A/SLMR No. 838 (May 11, 1977).

10/ However, see what is obviously dictum in Steele v. Louisville and Nashville R.R. Co., supra, wherein the court stated: "wherever necessary ... (to represent non-union or minority union members of the craft without hostile discrimination, fairly, impartially and in good faith,) ... the union is required to consider requests of non-union members of the craft and expressions of their views with respect to collective bargaining with the employer and to give to them notice of and opportunity for hearing upon its proposed action."

In the case herein the employee polling occurred in order to ascertain sentiment for a more equitable sharing of premium pay among all data systems specialists. The Union did not engage in the poll with a hostile motive towards non-members. The ultimate change in shifts worked to the benefit and detriment of various unit employees alike, without regard to Union membership. While the Union has a duty of fair representation under the Order, in my view union's in the Federal service should be afforded latitude similar to that given private sector unions while fulfilling their representational obligations. Accordingly, since the actions taken by Respondent herein were neither discriminatorily motivated nor discriminatory in effect and there is no showing of bad faith on the part of Respondent, I conclude that the Union's conduct herein did not violate the Order.

RECOMMENDATION

In view of the foregoing I recommend that the Complaint herein be dismissed.

PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY,
U.S. ARMY ELECTRONICS COMMAND, FORT MONMOUTH, NEW JERSEY
A/SLMR No. 919

On July 26, 1976, the Assistant Secretary issued his Decision and Order in A/SLMR No. 679, in which he found that the Respondent had violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by changing competitive areas for reduction-in-force (RIF) purposes without first meeting and conferring regarding its decision with the Complainant, the exclusive representative of two units of employees in the affected Headquarters and Installation Support Activity (HISA) competitive area.

On July 12, 1977, the Federal Labor Relations Council (Council) issued its Decision on Appeal in FLRC No. 76A-101 remanding the case to the Assistant Secretary for action consistent with its decision. The Council determined that an agency owes no obligation to negotiate with the exclusive representative(s) of employees who remain in the competitive area regarding the decision to remove other employees. However, the Council determined that an agency must notify the labor organization(s) representing employees who are to remain in the competitive area of the decision to remove other employees and, upon request, negotiate concerning the impact of such removal on those remaining employees.

Applying the rationale of the Council to the facts of the instant case, the Assistant Secretary found that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order based on its failure to notify the Complainant of the decision to remove employees not represented by the Complainant from the competitive area and to afford the Complainant an opportunity, upon request, to negotiate concerning the impact of such removal on any remaining employees in the bargaining units represented by the Complainant. Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary required the Respondent to cease and desist from the conduct found violative of the Order and to take certain affirmative actions.

SUPPLEMENTAL DECISION AND ORDER

On January 30, 1976, Administrative Law Judge Gordon J. Myatt issued his Recommended Decision and Order in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had engaged in certain unfair labor practices. In essence, the complaint in the instant case alleged that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Executive Order by changing competitive areas for reduction-in-force (RIF) purposes without first meeting and conferring with the Complainant, the exclusive representative of two units of employees in the affected Headquarters and Installation Support Activity (HISA) competitive area.

On July 26, 1976, in A/SLMR No. 679, the Assistant Secretary found that the Respondent was obligated to afford the Complainant the opportunity to meet and confer, to the extent consonant with law and regulations, concerning the decision to alter the HISA competitive area and that its failure to do so was violative of Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order. While noting that the decision to effectuate a RIF action is a matter upon which there is no obligation under the Order to meet and confer, the Assistant Secretary found that such reservation of decision making and action authority does not bar negotiations, to the extent consonant with law and regulations, concerning the procedures involved and the impact of the decision on the employees adversely affected. In this connection, the Assistant Secretary found that the establishment of competitive areas for the purpose of a RIF is itself a procedure utilized in the effectuation of a RIF decision.

On July 12, 1977, the Federal Labor Relations Council (Council) issued its Decision on Appeal in FLRC No. 76A-101 remanding the case to the Assistant Secretary for action consistent with its decision. The Council noted that the Assistant Secretary's finding of a violation of Section 19(a)(1) and (6) was based on the Respondent's failure to give the Complainant an opportunity to negotiate concerning the decision to remove from the competitive area employees not represented by the Complainant but instead represented by a different labor organization. In the Council's view, an agency proposing to remove a group of exclusively represented employees from one competitive area to another could not make such a change in the personnel policies and practices and matters affecting working conditions of those employees without providing to the labor organization(s) representating those employees adequate notice and an opportunity to request negotiations about the proposed change. However, in the Council's judgment, an agency owes no obligation to negotiate with the exclusive representative(s) of employees who remain in the competitive area regarding the decision to remove other employees. Rather, the agency must notify the labor organization(s) representing employees who are to remain in the competitive area of the decision to remove other employees and, upon request, negotiate concerning the impact of such removal on those remaining employees.

Upon consideration of the entire record in this matter, including the brief filed by the Respondent subsequent to the Council's decision, and applying the rationale of the Council to the facts of the instant case, I concur with the Administrative Law Judge's finding in his Recommended Decision and Order that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order based on its failure to notify the Complainant of the decision to remove employees not represented by the Complainant from the competitive area and to afford the Complainant the opportunity to negotiate, upon request, concerning the impact of such removal on any employees remaining in the bargaining units represented by the Complainant.

As the Respondent did not have an obligation to meet and confer with the Complainant regarding the decision to remove employees not represented by the Complainant from the competitive area, I do not find that a remedial order is warranted which would require that the Respondent's action be rescinded. Rather, I will require that the Respondent cease and desist from engaging in the future in the conduct found violative of the Order and require that it notify the Complainant and afford the latter an opportunity to bargain concerning the impact of the Respondent's decision on those remaining employees represented by the Complainant.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 6(b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, and Section 203.26(b) of the Regulations, the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations hereby orders that the U.S. Army Electronics Command, Fort Monmouth, New Jersey, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Changing the composition of the HISA competitive area -- also denoted as Competitive Area No. 4 -- without notifying Local 476, National Federation of Federal Employees, the exclusive representative of two units of employees remaining in the HISA competitive area, and affording such representative the opportunity to meet and confer, to the extent consonant with law and regulations, on the impact which the modification of the competitive area will have on the employees it represents.

(b) In any like or related manner, interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights assured by Executive Order 11491, as amended.

2. Take the following affirmative actions in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of Executive Order 11491, as amended:

(a) Notify Local 476, National Federation of Federal Employees, of any intended changes in the composition of the HISA competitive area and, upon request, meet and confer in good faith, to the extent consonant with law and regulations, on the impact any such changes will have on the employees in units exclusively represented by Local 476 remaining in the HISA competitive area.

(b) Post at its facility at the U.S. Army Electronics Command, Fort Monmouth, New Jersey, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix" on forms to be furnished by the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Commanding Officer and shall be posted and maintained by him for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. The Commanding Officer shall take reasonable steps to insure that such notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to Section 203.27 of the Regulations, notify the Assistant Secretary, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this order as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

DECISION ON APPEAL FROM ASSISTANT SECRETARY'S DECISION

Background of Case

This appeal arose from a decision and order of the Assistant Secretary based upon a complaint filed by Local 476, National Federation of Federal Employees (NFFE Local 476). The Assistant Secretary found, in the circumstances of the case, that the Department of the Army, U.S. Army Electronics Command, Fort Monmouth, New Jersey (ECOM) had violated section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order.[1/] The violation occurred when ECOM failed to afford NFFE Local 476, the exclusive representative of certain employees who were in a competitive area for reduction-in-force (RIF) purposes, the opportunity to meet and confer on the removal of certain other employees (not represented by NFFE Local 476) from that competitive area.

The factual background of this case, as found by the Assistant Secretary, is essentially uncontroverted and is as follows: ECOM is a subordinate command of the U.S. Army Materiel Command (AMC),[2/] a major command of the

1/ Section 19(a) of the Order provides in pertinent part:

Sec. 19. Unfair labor practices. (a) Agency management shall not—

(1) interfere with, restrain, or coerce an employee in the exercise of the rights assured by this Order;

. . . . . .

(6) refuse to consult, confer, or negotiate with a labor organization as required by this Order.

2/ The name of the Army Materiel Command has since been changed to the Army Materiel Development and Readiness Command (DARCOM).

Department of the Army headquartered in Washington, D.C. ECOM consists of a number of organizational elements, each of which constitutes a competitive area for RIF purposes for its civilian employees. The Headquarters and Installation Support Activity (HISA) is one such organizational element and is denominated in ECOM's table of organization as Competitive Area No. 4. Prior to June 7, 1974, there were 13 separate organizational subelements included in the HISA competitive area. NFFE Local 476 was the exclusive representative of the employees in two of the organizational subelements included in the HISA competitive area.3/ Each constituted a separate bargaining unit and each was covered by a collective bargaining agreement between ECOM and NFFE Local 476.4/

During the latter part of July and the first part of August 1972, AMC entered into an agreement entitled the Master Civilian Personnel Servicing Agreement, to become effective September 1, 1972, with the U.S. Army Strategic Communications Command (STRATCOM),5/ a major command of the Department of the Army headquartered in Ft. Huachuca, Arizona. Under that agreement, AMC would provide, upon request, civilian personnel services to STRATCOM for the latter's activities at the base level.6/ On August 8, 1973, the Commanding General of ECOM entered into a supplement to the Master Civilian Personnel Servicing Agreement with STRATCOM at Ft. Monmouth to provide civilian personnel service to the latter's activities located there.7/

3/ The two organizational subelements represented by NFFE Local 476 in two separate bargaining units were the Guard Force employees of the Internal Security Division and the employees of the Pictorial and Audio-Visual Branch of the Administrative Services Division.

4/ Employees in the Stations Supply and Stock Control Division, Equipment Management Division, Facilities Engineer Division, and Communications Electronics Division, all organizational subelements within the HISA competitive area, were principally represented by the American Federation of Government Employees, with the exception of a bargaining unit of employees in the Facilities Engineer Division who were represented by the International Association of Firefighters.

5/ The name of the Strategic Communications Command has since been changed to the U.S. Army Communications Command (USACC).

6/ The Master Civilian Personnel Servicing Agreement contained the following provision:

> Employees of the Service[d] Activity [STRATCOM] will be in a separate competitive area from employees of the servicing activity [AMC] unless a variation is justified and approved in advance by HQ, USASTRATCOM and HQ, USAMC and the variation is specified in individual supplements to this agreement.

7/ The supplemental agreement contained the following provision relating to reduction-in-force:

On June 7, 1974, the Commanding General of ECOM issued a command letter modifying the competitive areas for RIF purposes at ECOM by, among other things, removing from the HISA competitive area the Communications Command Agency (the STRATCOM activity at Ft. Monmouth)8/ and placing it in a separate competitive area designated Competitive Area No. 11.9/ The STRATCOM employees who were removed from the HISA competitive area and made a separate competitive area were represented by a different labor organization and not by NFFE Local 476. This modification was effectuated by ECOM without giving notice to or negotiating with any of the labor organizations (including NFFE Local 476) representing the employees in the various organizational subelements within the HISA competitive area. NFFE Local 476 thereafter filed an unfair labor practice complaint alleging, in substance, that ECOM violated section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order when it changed competitive areas for RIF purposes without first "consulting and conferring" with NFFE Local 476 as the exclusive representative of certain employees assigned to the affected competitive area.

The Assistant Secretary concluded, in pertinent part, that ECOM was obligated to afford NFFE Local 476, the exclusive representative of certain employees who remained in the HISA competitive area, the opportunity to meet and confer, to the extent consonant with law and regulations, concerning the decision to alter the HISA competitive area, and that its failure to do so was violative of section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order. The Assistant Secretary, finding a status quo ante remedy necessary under the circumstances, ordered ECOM to rescind its command

> For Reduction-in-Force purposes, Serviced Activity Employees located at Ft. Monmouth, New Jersey and Philadelphia, Pennsylvania will be considered under the same competitive area as the Headquarters and Installation Support Activity (ECOM) through 24 March 1974. Effective 25 March 1974, Serviced Activity employees will be considered under a separate competitive area, to be established, apart from other activities serviced by the Servicing Activity.

8/ The civilian employees in the Communications Command Agency (STRATCOM) operate the telephone system for ECOM. Their functions and job skills differ from those of the employees in the guard and audio-visual units exclusively represented by NFFE Local 476 within the HISA competitive area.

letter of June 7, 1974, modifying the HISA competitive area; to notify NFFE Local 476 of any intended changes in the composition of the HISA competitive area; and, upon request, to negotiate in good faith with NFFE Local 476, to the extent consonant with law and regulations, on the decision to effectuate such changes.

The Department of the Army (the agency), in conjunction with the Department of Defense, appealed the Assistant Secretary's decision and order to the Council. The Council accepted the agency's petition for review, concluding that a major policy issue is present, namely: whether the Assistant Secretary's finding of an obligation to meet and confer (negotiate) in the circumstances of this case is consistent with the purposes of the Order. The Council also granted the agency's request for a stay, having determined that the request met the criteria set forth in section 2411.47(e)(2) of its rules. Neither party filed a brief on the merits.

Opinion

The major policy issue for Council decision is whether the finding of an obligation to meet and confer (negotiate) in the circumstances of this case is consistent with the purposes of the Order. That is, the question presented is whether the Assistant Secretary's finding that ECOM was obligated to provide NFFE Local 476 the opportunity to negotiate, to the extent consistent with law and regulations, concerning the decision to remove certain employees (who were not represented by NFFE Local 476 and who, for that matter, were represented by a different labor organization) from the competitive area, is consistent with the purposes of the Order. For the reasons stated below, we conclude that the finding of such an obligation to negotiate in the circumstances of this case is inconsistent with the purposes of the Order.

Agency management is obligated to negotiate with a labor organization accorded exclusive recognition with respect to personnel policies and practices and matters affecting working conditions of employees in the bargaining unit.10/ Moreover, the Order requires, as a part of the 10/ It is undisputed that, in the circumstances of the case, the establishment of competitive areas for RIF purposes and the modifications of those competitive areas, such as the removal of employees as involved in this case, are negotiable. See in this regard Department of the Interior, Bureau of Reclamation, Yuma Projects Office, Yuma, Arizona, A/SLMR No. 401, FLRC No. 74A-52 (Sept. 17, 1976), Report No. 112. In discussing the obligation of an agency pending the resolution of representational issues which arise due to a reorganization, the Council ruled that "[w]here the agency, as a direct result of the reorganization and consistent with the necessary functioning of the agency, must make changes obligation to negotiate, adequate notice and an opportunity to negotiate prior to changing "established personnel policies and practices and matters affecting working conditions during the term of an existing agreement, unless the issues thus raised are controlled by current contractual commitments, or a clear and unmistakable waiver is present."11/ Thus, an agency proposing to remove a group of exclusively represented employees from one competitive area to another could not make such a change in the personnel policies and practices and matters affecting working conditions of those employees without providing to the labor organization representing those employees adequate notice and an opportunity to request negotiations about the proposed change.

While an agency's obligation to the labor organization representing employees who are proposed to be removed from a competitive area is clear, the issue in the instant case concerns the nature of the obligation owed the labor organization which represents employees who remain in the competitive area after it is decided to remove other employees from that competitive area. In this circumstance, since these employees remain in the competitive area, there is no obligation to negotiate with their exclusive representative(s) on the decision to remove other employees. Instead, there is an obligation to negotiate concerning the impact of that decision on the employees who remain in that competitive area. More particularly, the agency must notify the labor organization(s) representing employees who are to remain in the competitive area of the decision to remove other employees and, upon request, negotiate concerning the impact of such removal on those remaining employees.12/in otherwise negotiable personnel policies and practices and matters affecting working conditions, . . . the agency must notify the incumbent union or unions of those proposed changes, and, upon request, negotiate on those matters covered by section 11(a) of the Order." [Emphasis added.] Applying such principle to the fact situation before it (which involved a unilateral change in competitive areas for RIF purposes), the Council held that "it is clear that if [the exclusive representative of the employees who were unilaterally removed from the established competitive area] was not informed of the agency's proposed change in competitive areas, or if [the exclusive representative] was so informed but the agency, upon request, refused to bargain thereon with [the exclusive representative], the agency must be deemed to have violated its obligation to negotiate under the Order."

11/ Labor-Management Relations in the Federal Service (1975), at 41.

12/ Cf. Department of the Interior, Bureau of Reclamation, Yuma Projects Office, Yuma, Arizona, supra n. 9, at 12 of Council decision; Seattle Center Controller's Union and Federal Aviation Administration, 1 FLRC 349 [FLRC No. 71A-57 (May 9, 1973), Report No. 37.]

In this manner, the foregoing obligations reflect a careful balance among the respective interests of the agency which seeks to effectuate a change in an established competitive area, the different groups of employees within the competitive area who may be affected in varying degrees by such change (e.g., those employees who are removed as well as those who remain) and the labor organizations which represent them. Moreover, such obligations circumvent the practical difficulties which would arise if an agency were required, in these circumstances, to negotiate separately and independently with each labor organization exclusively representing employees within an established competitive area concerning the decision to effectuate a modification thereof, such as the removal of a group of employees represented by one such labor organization. That is, in such circumstances, the potential for negotiating inconsistent or conflicting agreements with different labor organizations on the one hand, or for reaching a series of impasses in negotiations with them on the other, is thus avoided.13/

In the instant case, the Assistant Secretary's finding of a violation of section 19(a)(1) and (6) was based on ECOM's failure to give NFFE Local 476 an opportunity to negotiate concerning the decision to remove from the competitive area employees not represented by NFFE Local 476 but instead represented by a different labor organization. As discussed above, the activity was under no obligation to afford NFFE Local 476 an opportunity to negotiate about the decision to so alter the competitive area. Accordingly, the finding of a violation of section 19(a)(1) and (6) based on such failure is inconsistent with the purposes of the Order and must be set aside.14/ However, a finding of a violation of section 19 (a)(1) and (6) and the according of an appropriate remedy, based on a 13/ In the Report and Recommendation of the Council on the amendment of Executive Order 11491, as amended, the Council noted that reorganization-related questions "can involve myriad combinations of variable factors," and therefore recommended that "each reorganization-related problem should be dealt with on a case-by-case basis within the particular factual context in which it has arisen." Consistent with this policy, the Council's decision in the instant case, which involves a reorganization-related problem, is limited to the particular circumstances of the case. Labor-Management Relations in the Federal Service (1975), at 50.

14/ In view of the Council's decision that the activity was under no obligation to afford NFFE Local 476 an opportunity to negotiate about the decision to remove certain employees not represented by NFFE Local 476 from the competitive area, but to negotiate, upon request, concerning the impact of such removal on any remaining employees in the bargaining units represented by NFFE Local 476, we find it unnecessary to pass upon the agency's contention that, at the time the competitive area was modified, a higher level agency regulation served as a bar to negotiations on the decision to effectuate the change.

failure to notify NFFE Local 476 of the decision to remove employees not represented by NFFE Local 476 from the competitive area and to afford NFFE Local 476 an opportunity, upon request, to negotiate concerning the impact of such removal on any remaining employees in the bargaining units represented by NFFE Local 476, would be consistent with the purposes of the Order.

Conclusion

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2411.18(b) of the Council's rules of procedure, we set aside the Assistant Secretary's decision and remand the case to him for action consistent with our decision herein.

By the Council.

GREATER PITTSBURGH AIRPORT, PITTSBURGH, PENNSYLVANIA
A/SLMR No. 920

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by an individual alleging that the Federal Aviation Administration, Air Traffic Control Tower, Greater Pittsburgh Airport, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, (Respondent) violated Section 19(a)(1) of the Order when an official of the Respondent questioned the Complainant concerning an informal grievance he had filed and indicated what consequences would ensue if the Complainant pursued the grievance.

The Complainant was advised in April 1976, that his work schedule was to be changed to enable him to take an instructor training course. Thereafter, the Complainant filed an informal grievance on the basis that the schedule change had not been made in accordance with a provision of the negotiated agreement in effect between the Respondent and the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization. Following the expiration of the formal grievance filing date and noting that no formal grievance had been filed, the Respondent met with the Complainant. During their meeting, the Respondent questioned the Complainant's motive for filing the informal grievance, indicated that it would be forced to take a strict interpretation of the particular provision of the negotiated agreement if the Complainant pursued the grievance, and asked what the reaction of the Complainant's co-workers would be if they learned that the Complainant's actions were responsible for the strict interpretation of the agreement.

The Administrative Law Judge found that the Respondent's conduct was violative of Section 19(a)(1) of the Order. In this regard, he noted that the Respondent's statements had the effect of interfering with, restraining, and coercing the Complainant in the exercise of rights assured by the Order, including the right to invoke the negotiated grievance machinery.

Noting particularly the absence of exceptions, the Assistant Secretary adopted the findings, conclusions and recommendations of the Administrative Law Judge and ordered that the Respondent cease and desist from the conduct found violative and that it take certain affirmative actions.

DECISION AND ORDER

On June 17, 1977, Administrative Law Judge Louis Scalzo issued his Report and Recommendation in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had engaged in certain unfair labor practices and recommending that it cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative actions as set forth in the attached Administrative Law Judge's Report and Recommendation. No exceptions were filed to the Administrative Law Judge's Report and Recommendation.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Report and Recommendation, and the entire record in this case, and noting particularly that no exceptions were filed, I hereby adopt the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendations.

In agreement with the Administrative Law Judge, I find that, under the particular circumstances herein, the statement made by an official of the Respondent to the Complainant following the latter's filing of an informal grievance had the effect of interfering with, restraining, or coercing the Complainant in the exercise of his rights assured by the Order, and that, therefore, the Respondent's conduct in this regard constituted a violation of Section 19(a)(1) of the Order. 1/

Pursuant to Section 6(b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, and Section 203.26(b) of the Regulations, the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations hereby orders that the Federal Aviation Administration, Air Traffic Control Tower, Greater Pittsburgh Airport, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, shall:

1/ See Department of Defense, Arkansas National Guard, A/SLMR No. 53, and Department of the Navy, Puget Sound Naval Shipyard, Bremerton, Washington, A/SLMR No. 582.

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Interrogating employees who invoke the negotiated grievance machinery concerning their motivation for filing grievances and indicating what actions will be taken if such grievances are pursued.

(b) In any like or related manner, interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of rights assured by Executive Order 11491, as amended.

2. Take the following affirmative actions in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of Executive Order 11491, as amended:

(a) Post at its facility at the Federal Aviation Administration, Air Traffic Control Tower, Greater Pittsburgh Airport, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix" on forms to be furnished by the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Chief of the Air Traffic Control Tower and shall be posted and maintained by him for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. The Chief shall take reasonable steps to insure that such notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(b) Pursuant to Section 203.27 of the Regulations, notify the Assistant Secretary, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this order as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION

Statement of the Case

This case arises under Executive Order 11491 as amended (hereinafter referred to as "the Order"). It was initiated by the filing of an unfair labor practice complaint on October 18, 1976, by Kenneth N. Patton, a qualified air traffic controller employed by the Respondent at the Greater Pittsburgh Airport. The Complainant alleges that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) of the Order, as a result of certain statements made to the Complainant on May 14, 1976 by James J. Hanten, Chief Controller, Greater Pittsburgh Airport. It was charged that the Complainant was told that a grievance which had been filed by the Complainant was precipitated by disappointment over non-selection for a supervisory position. It was further alleged that if the Complainant decided to pursue the grievance, the Respondent would discontinue an established practice of posting watch schedules ten or more weeks in advance, and would post such watch schedules only twenty to twenty-one days in advance. The Complainant contends that Mr. Hanten's statements restrained and coerced the Complainant with respect to the exercise of rights provided to the Complainant by the Executive Order, particularly the right to file grievances under the provisions of the agreement governing labor relations between the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) and the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization (PATCO).

Findings of Fact

The record reflects that the Complainant was informed on April 29, 1976, by Joseph G. Kucala, his supervisor, that the Complainant's previously posted work schedule or tour of duty would be changed, and that he would be required to attend an instructor training course designed to develop his capability as an air traffic controller instructor. The training assignment was posted as a change to the watch schedule in the middle to latter part of April 1976. The class was scheduled to begin in late May 1976. The change meant that the Complainant would have to work a day previously scheduled as a day off, and that his hours of work would be altered.

When informed of the watch schedule change, the Complainant informed Mr. Kucala that the change was violative of Article 33, Section 2 of the collective bargaining agreement executed by FAA and PATCO. 1/ The Complainant did not receive an immediate response to his informal grievance, and he requested Mr. Kucala to review the collective bargaining agreement. Mr. Kucala said that he would do so.

Although the basic watch schedule was posted a year in advance, it was a regular practice for the Respondent to post the assignment of work schedules to specific individuals at least ten weeks in advance. This practice was permitted by local conditions at the facility and was specifically authorized by Section 2 of Article 33. The Complainant

1/ This agreement was in affect at all times considered pertinent in this case. Article 33, Section 2 provides:

> Assignments to the watch schedule shall be posted at least fourteen (14) days in advance, or for a longer period where local conditions permit. The Employer recognizes that changes of individual assignments to the watch schedule are undesirable; therefore, the Employer agrees to make every reasonable effort to avoid such changes. When it is necessary to change an employee's posted shift assignment, the Employer shall use the following alternatives to the extent feasible prior to making the change:
>
> (a) overtime;
> (b) personnel on detail assignments;
> (c) personnel on permanent assignments that are required to maintain currency;
> (d) line supervisors or staff;
> (e) rescheduling of training.
> In the event the above alternatives are found not to be feasible the employee's posted shift assignment can be changed.

contended that the change in his assigned tour of duty for training purposes should not have been effected without first exhausting the reasonable alternatives reflected in Section 2 of Article 33. Specifically, he felt that the training could have been rescheduled so as to avoid changing his tour of duty.

As a result of the Complainant's objection, Mr. Kucala considered alternatives to watch schedule changes reflected in the collective bargaining agreement and concluded that these alternatives were not feasible. Mr. Kucala decided to insist on compliance. This decision was made following a May 3, 1976 conversation between Mr. Kucala and Mr. Hanten. They discussed the Complainant's grievance, and Mr. Hanten advised Mr. Kucala that the training had to be completed within a prescribed period, and that the scheduled class was the last to be given prior to the expiration of the period. Upon being apprised of Mr. Kucala's decision to insist on the change made, Mr. Hanten made a notation of the date for the purpose of calculating a ten-day period in which the Complainan would have to pursue the grievance formally to the next level following the anticipated first stage rejection of the grievance. 2/

Subsequently, on the same day Mr. Kucala met with the Complainant and Mr. Edwin M. Wintermyer, Vice President of the Local, and the Complainant's representative, regarding the grievance. After discussing the grievance with Mr. Kucala they were advised that the change in the Complainant's tour of duty would stand. The Complainant in turn apprised Mr. Kucala that a formal grievance would be filed.

2/ Article 7, Section 3 of the collective bargaining agreement provides for the filing of a formal grievance with the Facility Chief within ten calendar days following receipt of an answer from a supervisor. Section 7 of Article 7 provides for extensions of time in which to proceed with a grievance.

The Complainant then began to give consideration to his grievance, particularly from the standpoint of whether proceeding further would be advantageous to union members at the facility. Since the ten-day period in which to file a formal grievance expired on May 13, 1976, or ten days following Mr. Kucala's rejection, and since the Complainant did not pursue the matter further during this period of time, the right to process the grievance to the next level expired on May 13, 1976. 3/

On May 14, 1976, the day following the expiration of the ten-day period, Mr. Hanten asked Mr. Kucala about the disposition of the grievance and Mr. Kucala advised that he had heard nothing further and that he considered it abandoned. A discusssion then ensued about the Complainant, during which Mr. Kucala advised Mr. Hanten that the Complainant had acted out of character when he filed a grievance in response to a watch schedule change. They discussed a supervisory position which the Complainant had unsuccessfully sought just prior to the schedule change, and an observed change in the Complainant's attitude as reflected by the filing of the grievance. 4/ Mr. Kucala noted that the Complainant was still a strong candidate for promotional consideration. He inquired whether Mr. Hanten could do anything to motivate the Complainant to seek a supervisory position. Based upon Mr. Kucala's statements and Mr. Hanten's own reported concern about the Complainant's morale, it was agreed that Mr. Hanten would give the Complainant a "pep talk."

3/ There is no indication that an objection based on untimeliness was ever raised by the Respondent. Moreover, it will be seen from the evidence outlined that Mr. Hanten discussed the merits of the grievance with the Complainant on May 14, 1976 and attempted to dissuade him from filing a formal grievance.

4/ A team supervisor position for which the Complainant had been considered was filled by another employee in April of 1976.

Mr. Kucala telephoned the Complainant and made arrangements for the Complainant to see Mr. Hanten later that same day. He advised the Complainant that the discussion was purely personal in nature and that it would not pertain to Union business. It was established that the Complainant was then temporarily acting as the Union's Facility Representative as the officers of the Union were away attending a Union convention. The Complainant informed Mr. Kucala that if the meeting with Mr. Hanten related to Union business, the Complainant would not be prepared to meet with Mr. Hanten on such short notice.

Mr. Hanten did meet with the Complainant early in the afternoon on May 14, 1976. 5/ Mr. Hanten first advised that the conversation was personal and that he had not called him in as a Union representative. He inquired whether or not his non-selection for a supervisory position was the reason for his general attitude and depression. He also inquired of Mr. Patton whether his reason for filing a grievance was based upon unhappiness about not obtaining a promotion. The Complainant responded in the negative to those inquiries from Mr. Hanten. Mr. Hanten also initiated a discussion concerning the interpretation to be given Article 33. It was admitted that he did this because he considered it important to ascertain the position of employees at the installation on this issue. In this regard he admitted that he felt inclined to discuss or explain management's position concerning the construction to be given to Article 33 of the collective bargaining agreement. Mr. Hanten advised the Complainant that if he filed his grievance, Mr. Hanten would respond by strictly construing Article 33, Section 2 of the collective bargaining agreement, that he would abandon the local practice of scheduling watch assignments at least ten weeks in advance, and that he would instead, make such assignments no more than fourteen to twenty-one days in advance. Mr. Hanten also asked what the Complainant's fellow Union members would think of Complainant when it became known that Complainant bore responsibility for the unfavorable change in scheduling practice described by Mr. Hanten. Mr. Hanten freely admitted making the inquiries and statements outlined. Although it appeared that the ten-day period in which to file a formal grievance expired on May 13, 1976, or ten days after Mr. KuCala's rejection, the record clearly indicates that this period of limitation was not interposed by the Respondent. Moreover, the evidence indicates a real concern that the Complainant's grievance would be pursued further or that a similar grievance would be filed by the Complainant or others in the future.

5/ It should be noted that the Complainant recalls that the meeting occured on or about May 12, 1976.

At a June 17, 1976 meeting convened by Mr. Hanten to improve labor management relations, Mr. Hanten acknowledged the previously outlined elements of his May 14, 1976 conversation with the Complainant. 6/

Evidence adduced at the hearing clearly reflected that the Complainant as well as other Union members construed inquiries and statements made to the Complainant by Mr. Hanten on May 14, 1976, as indicating that one's promotion potential would be enhanced by refraining from initiating or filing grievances designed to develop a liberal interpretation of Section 2 of Article 33 of the collective bargaining agreement.

Discussion and Conclusions

The language of Section 19(a)(1) of the Order is designed to prevent employers from interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of rights guaranteed to them. Section 1(a) of the Order provides:

6/ The meeting was attended by Mr. Hanten; Mr. Robert Rothdeutsch, Assistant Chief Controller; Mr. Darrell L. Knopfel, President of the Local; Edwin M. Wintermeyer, Vice President of the Local; and David G. Benson, and Carl E. Vaughn, leaders at the facility.

> Section 1. Policy. (a) Each employee of the executive branch of the Federal Government has the right, freely and without fear of penalty or reprisal, to form, join, and assist a labor organization or to refrain from any such activity, and each employee shall be protected in the exercise of this right. Except as otherwise expressly provided in this Order, the right to assist a labor organization extends to participation in the management of the organization and acting for the organization in the capacity of an organization representative, including presentation of its views to officials of the executive branch, the Congress, or other appropriate authority. The head of each agency shall take the action required to assure that employees in the agency are apprised of their rights under this section, and that no interference, restraint, coercion, or discrimination is practiced within his agency to encourage or discourage membership in a labor organization.

The doctrine has become well entrenched in the private sector, that, absent some legitimate purpose, an employer must not interrogate his employees regarding their union activities.

In such instances, interrogation constitutes interference with the rights of employees to feel free in joining and assisting labor organizations. The Assistant Secretary has, in Vandenberg Air Force Base, 4329 Aerospace Support Group, A/SLMR No. 383, concluded that in the federal sector a supervisor's interrogation of employees with respect to their union activities may be violative of Section 19(a)(1) of the Order. See also Office of Economic Opportunity, Region V, Chicago, Illinois, A/SLMR No. 477; Internal Revenue Service, Wilmington, Delaware District, A/SLMR No. 516; Federal Energy Administration, Region IV Atlanta, Georgia, A/SLMR No. 541; Department of the Army, United States Army Transportation Center and Fort Eustis, Virginia, A/SLMR No. 681 (dictum); and Department of the Navy, Mare Island Naval Shipyard, A/SLMR No. 775

It is clear that the right to engage in union activities, would be seriously jeopardized if employees are interrogated about their motives for filing and initiating grievances, particularly if such questions are posed within the context of an employee career development interview.

The authorities cited are analogous to the factual situation presented in this case. Here it was clearly established through the testimony of Mr. Hanten that Mr. Hanten's questions were designed to impose his point of view regarding the interpretation to be given Article 33. The imposition of Mr. Hanten's point of view during (what was supposed to be) a career development interview, made Mr. Hanten's questions and comments particularly coercive.

The Complainant was assured by Mr. Kucala that Union business would not be discussed during the interview, and that the subject would be personal. Mr. Hanten testified that the sole purpose of the interview was to encourage the Complainant to bid on promotional opportunities as he was a valued employee. Nevertheless, despite these claimed altruistic motives. the record reflects a strong pattern of interest in the grievance initiated by the Complainant, and continued interest in the Union position regarding the issue posed in the Complainant's grievance. This interest was first expressed by Mr. Hanten and pursued by him during the interview. Furthermore, Mr. Hanten indicated by his statements that he wished to discern the Complainant's attitudes and then persuade him to adopt the position of management. It must be concluded that questioning and comments based upon such interest, in the atmosphere described, operated to interfere with, restrain, and coerce the Complainant in the exercise of rights provided by Section 1(a), as well as other provisions of the Order providing federal employees the right to pursue grievance procedures in collective bargaining agreements.

Recommendation

Having found that the Respondent has engaged in certain conduct which is violative of Section 19(a)(1) of the Order, I recommend that the Assistant Secretary adopt the following order designed to effectuate the purpose of Executive Order 11491.

Recommended order

Pursuant to Section 6(b) of Executive Order 11491 and Section 203.26(b) of the Regulations, the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor Management Relations hereby orders that the Federal Aviation Administration, Air Traffic Control Tower, Greater Pittsburgh Airport, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Utilizing personal career development interviews for the purpose of interrogating and questioning employees concerning their motives for initiating grievances, and for the purpose of attempting to discourage employees from initiating and filing grievances.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of rights assured by Executive Order 11491, as amended.

2. Take the following affirmative actions in order to effectuate the purposes and provisions of Executive Order 11491, as amended:

(a) Post at its facility at the Federal Aviation Administration Air Traffic Control Tower, Greater Pittsburgh Airport, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix" on forms to be furnished by the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by an appropriate management official and shall be posted in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Said official shall take reasonable steps to insure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(b) Pursuant to Section 203.27 of the Regulations, notify the Assistant Secretary, in writing, within twenty days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

SUMMARY OF SUPPLEMENTAL DECISION ON GRIEVABILITY
OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

COMMUNITY SERVICES ADMINISTRATION
A/SLMR No. 921

On November 10, 1976, the Assistant Secretary issued his Decision on Grievability in A/SLMR No. 749, in which he found, among other things, that the dispute in question was not grievable as the position involved in the dispute was a "policy" position within the meaning of Amendment 11 of the parties' negotiated agreement and was, therefore, excluded from the coverage of the negotiated agreement.

On August 17, 1977, the Federal Labor Relations Council (Council) issued its Decision on Appeal setting aside the Assistant Secretary's decision and remanding the case to him for reconsideration and decision consistent with the principles enumerated therein.

The Council noted, in this connection, in clarification of its decision in Department of the Navy, Naval Ammunition Depot, Crane, Indiana, FLRC No. 74A-19, that the language of its decision should not be construed to mean that the Assistant Secretary may interpret the substantive provisions of an agreement in resolving a grievability question as an arbitrator would in deciding the merits of a grievance. Rather, it was intended that he decide such a question, when the question was referred to him, just as an arbitrator would where the parties' bilaterally agree to refer such threshold issue to the arbitrator.

Therefore, the Council concluded that since the dispute was over whether the position in question was a "policy" position within the meaning of the parties' negotiated agreement and as the parties' negotiated grievance procedure encompassed grievances over the interpretation and application of the agreement, the dispute was over a matter within the scope of the negotiated grievance procedure which should have been referred to an arbitrator.

Based on the rationale contained in the Council's decision, the Assistant Secretary modified his finding in A/SLMR No. 749 and found the grievance was on a matter subject to the parties' negotiated grievance procedure.

SUPPLEMENTAL DECISION ON GRIEVABILITY

On February 20, 1976, Administrative Law Judge Samuel A. Chaitovitz issued his Recommended Decision on Grievability finding that the grievance involved was on a matter subject to the grievance procedure set forth in the parties' negotiated agreement. In reaching this conclusion, the Administrative Law Judge, among other things, rejected the Activity's contention that the dispute was not grievable as the position involved in the subject grievance, Employee Development Specialist, was excluded from the coverage of Amendment 11 of the parties' negotiated agreement as a "policy" position. 1/

On November 10, 1976, in A/SLMR No. 749, the Assistant Secretary found, among other things, that the position was involved in the formulation of Agency-wide training policy and, therefore, was specifically excluded from the coverage of Amendment 11 of the parties' negotiated agreement. Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary concluded that the subject grievance was not grievable under the negotiated grievance procedure.

On August 17, 1977, the Federal Labor Relations Council (Council) issued its Decision on Appeal in FLRC No. 76A-149 remanding the case to the Assistant Secretary for reconsideration and decision consistent with its decision. In remanding the case to the Assistant Secretary, the Council clarified the principles enumerated in its decision in Department of the Navy, Naval Ammunition Depot, Crane, Indiana, FLRC No. 74A-19. The Council held that:

1/ Amendment 11 of the parties' negotiated agreement states, in pertinent part:

> The Parties agree that all vacancies will be posted, and that all vacancies in the competitive service above the entry level will be filled with in-house candidates, where possible, with the exception of policy and supervisory positions or when there is an emergency which precludes use of the Merit Promotion system . . . .

> /its/ statement in Crane that the Assistant Secretary must decide whether or not a dispute is subject to the negotiated grievance procedure, "just as an arbitrator would if the question were referred to him," while perhaps ambiguous, was not intended and should not be construed to mean that the Assistant Secretary may interpret substantive provisions of an agreement in resolving a grievability or arbitrability question as an arbitrator would in deciding the merits of a grievance. Instead, the Council's statement was intended to indicate that the Assistant Secretary must decide a question of grievability or arbitrability under a negotiated grievance procedure when such question is referred to him, just as an arbitrator would be required to decide the question of grievability or arbitrability where the parties bilaterally agree to refer such threshold issue to the arbitrator pursuant to Section 13(d) of the Order.

In applying these principles to the instant case, the Council found the Assistant Secretary's determination to be inconsistent with its intended interpretation and application of Section 13(d) of the Order. Thus, the Council concluded that since the parties were in dispute over whether the position in question was a "policy" position within the meaning of Amendment 11 of the negotiated agreement, and as the parties' negotiated grievance procedure encompassed grievances over the interpretation and application of the agreement, the grievance was on a matter within the scope of the negotiated grievance procedure and should have been referred to an arbitrator.

Based upon the Council's Decision on Appeal, and the rationale contained therein, I shall modify the finding in A/SLMR No. 749 consonant therewith.

FINDING

IT IS HEREBY FOUND that the grievance in Case No. 22-5870(AP) is on a matter subject to the parties' negotiated grievance procedure.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 6(a)(5) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, and Section 205.12(a) of the Regulations, it is hereby ordered that the Community Services Administration shall notify the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations in writing within 30 days from the date of this order as to what steps have been taken to comply with the above finding.

DECISION ON APPEAL FROM
ASSISTANT SECRETARY DECISION

Background of Case

This appeal arose from a decision of the Assistant Secretary holding that a grievance was not on a matter subject to the parties' negotiated grievance procedure. The grievance, which was filed by the National Council of CSA Locals, AFGE, AFL-CIO (AFGE), alleged that the Community Services Administration (agency) failed to abide by its collective bargaining agreement with AFGE in filling a vacant position which was outside the collective bargaining unit. The agency took the position that the matter was not grievable under the negotiated grievance procedure and filed an Application for Decision on Grievability or Arbitrability.

The pertinent factual background of this case, as found by the Assistant Secretary, is as follows: AFGE represents a nationwide unit composed of all of the agency's non-supervisory General Schedule and Wage Grade employees, including professionals. Employees engaged in personnel work are excluded from the unit. In January 1975, the agency issued a Merit Promotion Announcement for the position of Employee Development Specialist in the Personnel Office of the agency. There were six applicants for the position. A certificate was sent to the selecting official containing the names of two "in-house" applicants, one of whom was in the bargaining unit, and two applicants from outside the agency. An outside applicant was selected for the position. AFGE then filed a grievance under the parties' negotiated grievance procedure,[1] contending that the agency did not adhere to Amendment 11 of the agreement in filling the vacancy. As set forth in the Assistant Secretary's decision, Amendment 11 of the printed agreement states, in pertinent part:

[1] According to the Assistant Secretary's decision, Article 16 of the agreement provides for a grievance procedure to resolve grievances over the "interpretation or application of this Agreement." Section 11 of Article 16 provides that if the union or the agency alleges nonadherence, improper interpretation, or failure to implement a provision of the agreement, the complaining party shall submit the complaint to the other party. This section further provides for meetings, and if the matter is not resolved, either party may refer the matter to arbitration.

> The Parties agree that all vacancies will be posted, and that all vacancies in the competitive service above the entry level will be filled with in-house candidates, where possible, with the exception of policy and supervisory positions or when there is an emergency which precludes use of the Merit Promotion system . . . .[2] [Footnote added.]

AFGE alleged that the position was neither policymaking nor supervisory and must therefore be filled, pursuant to Amendment 11, with an in-house candidate. The agency's response was a final written rejection of the grievance which set forth its reasons for such rejection[3] and which notified AFGE of its intent to file an application with the Assistant Secretary as to whether the matter in dispute may properly be grieved under the parties' negotiated agreement. Shortly thereafter, the agency filed its Application for Decision on Grievability or Arbitrability with the Assistant Secretary.

The Assistant Secretary first resolved the issue raised by the agency's contention that the Order precludes a negotiated agreement from covering procedures for the filling of any vacancies outside the bargaining unit, and that, since the position involved herein was outside the unit, a dispute over the filling of that position was not grievable. The Assistant Secretary rejected this contention, concluding that while agencies are not obligated to bargain over proposals concerning the procedures for filling positions outside the bargaining unit, they may, at their option, bargain over such proposals. In support of this conclusion, he cited

[2] During the preliminary stages of the grievance procedure, and before the Assistant Secretary, AFGE sought the application of a different version of Amendment 11 which it claimed had been "agreed to by the parties at negotiations . . . ." The Assistant Secretary found that the language appearing in the printed agreement was binding upon the parties for the purposes of the instant grievability dispute, since the evidence failed to establish "beyond reasonable controversy" that such language was not consistent with the actual agreement or intention of the parties. The Assistant Secretary's finding in this regard is not at issue herein.

[3] The agency contended, in this regard, that the position in question was not in the bargaining unit, and, therefore, it had followed agency regulations and the FPM in filling the position; that under another article of the agreement, non-agency applicants could be considered where there were not three highly qualified in-house applicants; and, that since the position was outside the unit and because the agency could not apply different considerations to in-unit applicants and out-of-unit applicants, it would apply its own uniform standards, not those set forth in the agreement.

Texas ANG Council of Locals, AFGE and State of Texas National Guard, FLRC No. 74A-71 (Mar. 3, 1976), Report No. 100. The Assistant Secretary went on to hold that "[i]n the instant case clearly the [agency] chose to bargain and reached an agreement with respect to a proposal which encompassed the filling of 'all vacancies in the competitive service above the entry level'" and "[t]herefore, unless the position in question is otherwise specifically precluded from coverage under Amendment 11, a question concerning the procedures for filling such position would be grievable despite the fact that the position was outside the bargaining unit." Finally, the Assistant Secretary found that since Amendment 11 excludes from coverage those positions defined as "policy" positions, and since the record established that the Employee Development Specialist position in question is involved in the formulation of agency-wide training policy, the position is specifically excluded from coverage under Amendment 11 as a "policy" position. Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary concluded that "the instant grievance over whether Amendment 11 was followed in filling the position in question is not grievable under the negotiated grievance procedure."

AFGE appealed the Assistant Secretary's decision to the Council. The Council accepted AFGE's petition for review, concluding that a major policy issue was raised as to the intended interpretation and application of section 13(d) of the Order (as previously considered by the Council in Department of the Navy, Naval Ammunition Depot, Crane, Indiana, Assistant Secretary Case No. 50-9667, FLRC No. 74A-19 (Feb. 7, 1975), Report No. 63) under the circumstances of the present case. AFGE and the agency filed briefs with the Council as provided in section 2411.16 of the Council's rules (5 CFR 2411.16).

As noted above, the Council concluded that the decision of the Assistant Secretary in this case raised a major policy issue as to the intended interpretation and application of section 13(d) of the Order (as previously considered by the Council in Crane, supra) under the circumstances of the present case. That is, the issue presented in this case concerns the extent of the Assistant Secretary's responsibility under section 13(d) of the Order (as considered by the Council in Crane) in deciding questions as to whether or not a grievance is on a matter subject to the grievance procedure in an existing agreement, or is subject to arbitration under that agreement, when such questions are referred to him for decision.

In Crane, a probationary employee grieved his termination under the provisions of a negotiated grievance procedure, claiming that such termination violated a provision of the agreement relating to "acceptable level of competence." The activity denied that the termination was grievable under the agreement, and the union then filed an application with the Assistant Secretary for a decision on grievability. Although a question was raised by the agency before the Assistant Secretary as to whether or not the grievance was on a matter for which a statutory appeal procedure exists, the Assistant Secretary made no finding in that regard. Furthermore, the Assistant Secretary made no determination as to whether the grievance therein was on a matter subject to the negotiated grievance procedure, but, instead, ruled that this question "should be resolved through the negotiated grievance procedure." On appeal, the Council concluded that: (1) where an issue is presented concerning the applicability of a statutory appeal procedure, the Assistant Secretary must decide that question; (2) where a dispute is referred to him as to whether a grievance is on a matter subject to a negotiated grievance procedure, the Assistant Secretary must decide such grievability dispute; and (3) in resolving the dispute referred to in (2), above, the Assistant Secretary must consider the relevant agreement provisions (including those provisions which describe the scope and coverage of the negotiated grievance procedure and any substantive provisions of the agreement which are being grieved) in light of related provisions of statute, the Order, and regulations, more particularly where special meaning is attached to words used in the relevant agreement provisions by such statute, regulation, or the Order and there is no indication that any other than the special meaning was intended by the parties. Accordingly, the Council set aside the Assistant Secretary's decision and remanded the case to him for reconsideration consistent with the foregoing principles.

The question before the Council is whether the Council's intended interpretation of section 13(d) of the Order as previously enunciated by the Council in Crane required the determination as to grievability made by the Assistant Secretary in the present case. For the reasons stated below, the Council is of the opinion that section 13(d) of the Order does not require the Assistant Secretary to interpret and apply such provision of the agreement, in the circumstances in the instant case, and, indeed, such action is inconsistent with section 13(d).

In the present case, a dispute was referred to the Assistant Secretary as to whether the agency's alleged failure to abide by its collective bargaining agreement with AFGE in filling a vacant position outside the collective bargaining unit was grievable under the negotiated grievance procedure contained in the agreement. Unlike Crane, no allegations were made herein that a statutory appeal procedure existed which would preclude the use of the negotiated grievance procedure. Furthermore, while the Assistant Secretary did make the required determination herein as to whether the grievance was on a matter subject to the negotiated grievance procedure,[4/] he then proceeded to interpret and apply Amendment 11 of the parties' agreement concluding that the position of Employee Development Specialist was a "policy" position and therefore was excluded from coverage of that provision. On the basis of his interpretation and application of Amendment 11, the Assistant Secretary concluded that the grievance over whether Amendment 11 was followed in filling the position in question was not grievable under the negotiated grievance procedure.

4/ In this regard, unlike Crane, there was also no allegation herein that the relevant agreement provisions contained words to which special meaning was attached by statute, regulation, or the Order. As the Council indicated in Crane, at some length, this was especially significant in that case since the negotiated provision which was alleged to have been violated dealt with a matter——"acceptable level of competence"——which was established specifically in statute and dealt with extensively in Civil Service Commission regulations and the Federal Personnel Manual.

In Crane, the Council stated, insofar as relevant herein, that in any dispute referred to the Assistant Secretary as to whether a grievance is on a matter subject to a negotiated grievance procedure:

> [T]he Assistant Secretary must decide whether the dispute is or is not subject to the negotiated grievance procedure, just as an arbitrator would if the question were referred to him. In making such a determination, the Assistant Secretary must consider relevant provisions of the Order, including section 13 and relevant provisions of the negotiated agreement, including those provisions which describe the scope and coverage of the negotiated grievance procedure, as well as any substantive provisions of the agreement which are being grieved. [Council decision at 4.]

This language in the Council's decision in Crane describes the Assistant Secretary's responsibilities under the Order in deciding whether a grievance is on a matter subject to a negotiated grievance procedure. In deciding whether a dispute is or is not subject to a particular negotiated grievance procedure, it is the responsibility of the Assistant Secretary to consider those "provisions which describe the scope and coverage of the negotiated grievance procedure," i.e., the general scope of such procedure as well as any specific exclusions contained therein. That is, he must decide, just as an arbitrator would decide at the outset in the Federal sector (or as an arbitrator or the Federal courts would in the private sector) whether the grievance involves a dispute which the parties intended to be resolved through their negotiated grievance procedure. The Assistant Secretary's consideration of "substantive provisions of the agreement being grieved" would be for the limited purpose of determining whether the grievance involves a claim which on its face is covered by the contract, i.e., involves a matter which arguably concerns the meaning or application of the substantive provision(s) being grieved and which the parties intended to be resolved under the negotiated grievance procedure.[5/] The Council's statement in Crane that the Assistant Secretary must decide whether or not a dispute is subject to the negotiated grievance procedure, "just as an arbitrator would if the question were referred to him," while perhaps ambiguous, was not intended and should not be construed to mean that the

5/ In making this determination in circumstances such as those presented in Crane, i.e., where the substantive provision contains terms to which a special meaning is attached by statute, regulation or the Order, the Assistant Secretary must consider those legal provisions in resolving the grievability or arbitrability dispute. See n. 4, supra.

Assistant Secretary may interpret the substantive provisions of an agreement in resolving a grievability or arbitrability question as an arbitrator would in deciding the merits of a grievance. Instead, the Council's statement was intended to indicate that the Assistant Secretary must decide a question of grievability or arbitrability under a negotiated grievance procedure when such question is referred to him, just as an arbitrator would be required to decide the question of grievability or arbitrability where the parties bilaterally agree to refer such threshold issue to the arbitrator pursuant to section 13(d) of the Order.[6/]

In applying these principles to the instant case, we find that the Assistant Secretary's determination that the grievance in this case was not subject to the negotiated grievance procedure is inconsistent with the 6/ The Council notes that the Assistant Secretary has previously recognized the foregoing distinction between the merits of a grievance and the grievability or arbitrability of a grievance under a negotiated agreement. See U.S. Department of Agriculture, Agricultural Research Service, Plum Island Animal Disease Center, Assistant Secretary Case No. 30-6026(GA), FLRC No. 76A-23 (July 8, 1976), Report No. 108. This description of the Assistant Secretary's responsibilities under section 13(d) is also in accord with the role of Federal courts in a suit under § 301 of the Labor-Management Relations Act (29 U.S.C. 185) to compel specific performance of an arbitration agreement. In such suits, judicial inquiry is narrowly restricted to the issues of whether the collective bargaining agreement between the parties contains an arbitration provision and to whether the labor dispute in question falls within its scope. Thus, in John Wiley and Sons v. Livingston, 376 U.S. 543 (1964), the Court stated:

> "Under our decisions, whether or not the company was bound to arbitrate, as well as what issues it must arbitrate, is a matter to be determined by the court on the basis of the contract entered into by the parties." Atkinson v. Sinclair Refining Co., 370 U.S. 238, 241 (1962). Accord, e.g., United Steelworkers v. Warrior and Gulf Navigation Co., 363 U.S. 574, 582 (1960).

As the Court likewise said in United Steelworkers of America v. American Manufacturing Co., 363 U.S. 564, 568 (1960):

> . . . It [the function of the court] is confined to ascertaining whether the party seeking arbitration is making a claim which on its face is governed by the contract. Whether the moving party is right or wrong is a question of contract interpretation for the arbitrator. . . . The courts, therefore, have no business weighing the merits of the grievance, considering whether there is equity in a particular claim, or determining whether there is particular language in the written instrument which will support the claim.

See also UAW v. General Electric Co., 474 F.2d 1172 (6th Cir. 1973) and Haig Berberian, Inc., v. Warehousemen, 535 F.2d 496 (9th Cir. 1976).

Council's intended interpretation and application of section 13(d) of the Order, as previously enunciated by the Council in Crane. In the present case, as the Assistant Secretary recognized, the parties were in a dispute as to whether the position of Employee Development Specialist was a "policy" position within the meaning of Amendment 11 of the negotiated agreement. The parties' negotiated grievance procedure encompassed grievances over the "interpretation or application of this Agreement." Since the question of whether the position of Employee Development Specialist was a "policy" position involved the interpretation and application of the agreement, the grievance was on a matter within the scope of the negotiated grievance procedure and, therefore, should have been referred to an arbitrator. The Assistant Secretary, by interpreting the substantive provisions of the agreement and deciding that the position of Employee Development Specialist was a "policy" position within the meaning of Amendment 11, in effect resolved the merits of the dispute, rather than considering Amendment 11 for the limited purpose of determining whether the grievance involved the interpretation or application of that substantive provision and thus, whether the grievance fell within the scope of the parties' negotiated grievance procedure.

Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, and pursuant to section 2411.18(b) of the Council's rules of procedure, we set aside the Assistant Secretary's decision in the instant case and remand the case to him for reconsideration and decision consistent with the principles enumerated above.

By the Council.

SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE
DEPENDENTS SCHOOLS, EUROPE
A/SLMR No. 922

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by Peter J. Migliaccio (Complainant) alleging, among other things, that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) of the Order by interfering with the right of the Complainant to represent an employee and by discriminating against the Complainant because of his union affiliation. The Respondent took the position that the Order does not grant an individual the right to be the personal representative of an employee and, further, that the Complainant was not prevented from acting as the personal representative of the employee in the discussion which was held. The Complainant, on the other hand, maintained that because of his affiliation with a union other than the certified exclusive representative of the employee, the Respondent prevented him from acting effectively as the personal representative of the employee.

The Administrative Law Judge concluded that the Respondent had not violated Section 19(a)(1) of the Order. In this regard, he noted that Section 7(d)(1) of the Order merely states those instances where employees may choose a personal representative other than their exclusive representative and does not confer any right upon employees to have a personal representative which is enforceable under Section 19 of the Order. Thus, in his view, as the Complainant had no right enforceable under the Order to represent the employee as her personal representative, the Respondent did not violate the Order by initially refusing to treat the Complainant as the employee's personal representative when the latter appeared at a meeting to confer with Respondent's Principal over a dispute between management and the employee.

Noting particularly the absence of exceptions, the Assistant Secretary adopted the findings, conclusions, and recommendation of the Administrative Law Judge and ordered that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety.

DECISION AND ORDER

On June 17, 1977, Administrative Law Judge William Naimark issued his Recommended Decision and Order in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had not engaged in the unfair labor practice alleged in the complaint and recommending that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety. No exceptions were filed to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order and the entire record in the subject case, and noting particularly the absence of exceptions, I hereby adopt the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions, and recommendation.

RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

Statement of the Case

Pursuant to a Notice of Hearing on Complaint issued on August 11, 1976 by the Regional Administrator for Labor-Management Services Administration of the U.S. Department of Labor, Philadelphia Region, a hearing was held in the above entitled case on November 9, 1976 at Sembach, Germany.

1/ The name of the employer appears as corrected at the hearing.

This proceeding was initiated under Executive Order 11491, as amended, (herein called the Order) by the filing of a complaint on February 10, 1976 by Peter J. Migliaccio, (herein called Complainant) against Department of Defense Dependents Schools, Europe, (herein called Respondent). It was alleged that Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (2) of the Order on or about November 14, 1976, 2/ by interfering with the right of Complainant to represent an employee, and by discriminating against Complainant because of his union affiliation. 3/ On March 5, 1976 Respondent filed a response to the complaint. It contended that no action was taken by management to interfere with Complainant's right to represent an employee personally; that any action taken by management had nothing to do with Complainant's union affiliation. Respondent denied the commission of any unfair labor practices.

Both parties were represented at the hearing, were afforded full opportunity to be heard, to adduce evidence, and to examine as well as cross-examine witnesses. Hereafter, Complainant filed a brief which has been duly considered.

Upon the entire record herein, from my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, and from all of the testimony and evidence adduce at the hearing, I make the following findings, conclusion and recommendations:

Findings of Fact

1. As part of its American School system, Respondent maintains an elementary and junior high school at Sembach, Germany. At all times material herein the Overseas Educational Association (OEA) was the collective bargaining representative of the teachers at the Sembach school.

2. On November 12, 1975, 4/ Trudi Cornish, a teacher at Sembach school, was removed from her class by Timothy J.

2/ The complaint was amended at the hearing to change the year to 1975.

3/ The 19(a)(2) allegation was not included in the Notice of Hearing as a litigable issue.

4/ All dates hereinafter mentioned are 1975 unless otherwise specified.

Kelley, principal at said school. Cornish was placed on AWOL for a day because she allegedly refused to permit her pupils, who were outside the building, to reenter the classroom or discuss the matter. 5/

3. On November 13 Complainant and Dr. Heidemarie Shurtleff, teacher, accompanied Cornish to superintendent Prince's office at the Sembach school. Since Prince was absent, they spoke to Marvin D. Kurtz, Elementary Coordinator for District III, who acted for Prince, as well as Mrs. Irene Richards. Complainant explained that Cornish had not been allowed to continue her teaching duties because she left some children outside for disciplinary reasons, and that Kelley brought in a substitute teacher. He stated that Kelley should be told to allow Cornish to return to the classroom and teach her group. Migliaccio mentioned he was there as Cornish's personal, not union, representative. Kurtz replied the problem was not within his jurisdiction, but he agreed to contact Kelley and advise him that Complainant and Cornish would visit the principal on the following day.

4. On November 14 Complainant and Cornish were at school en route to Kelley's office. The latter saw them and stated to Cornish he wanted to speak to her. Complainant attempted to introduce himself and Kelley said he knew Migliaccio was an OFT union official and that Migliaccio had no business being there. Complainant replied he was not there as a union representative or on union business. When Kelley stated he wanted to confer with Cornish, Migliaccio commented she has a right to representation, that he was her personal representative, and that she would talk only in his presence.

Complainant, Cornish and Kelley then went into the principal's office to discuss Cornish's problem. Kelley said it was an unfortunate incident since he knew Cornish was a very good teacher. He remarked that the matter seems settled inasmuch as she did come and discuss it. Complainant stated that while Cornish's problem was settled, he would take further action re discrimination against him.

5/ Cornish testified she had been suspended, and that she had been barred from teaching by Kelley on November 13. Kelley maintained that Cornish was not suspended but was requested to attend school on November 13 and see him before school started. In view of my ultimate conclusions herein, I do not find it necessary to determine whether Cornish was suspended and prevented from teaching on the aforementioned date.

5. At the close of the aforesaid meeting with the principal, Cornish returned to her classroom and resumed her duties as a teacher at the Sembach school.

Conclusions

It is contended by Complainant that Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) of the Order by interfering with his right to effectively represent Trudi Cornish on November 14, 1975 in her dispute, as a teacher, with the Sembach school, Migliaccio argues that since an employee is entitled to a personal representative under Section 7(d)(1) of the Order, any interference with that right must necessarily result in a violation of the rights of said representative. In support of such argument Complainant cites Internal Revenue Service, Cincinnati District, Cincinnati, Ohio, A/SLMR No. 705.

While there is little dispute as to the facts herein, Complainant's argument is predicated on a misconception as to the rights and obligations flowing from the Order. It is provided in Section 7(d)(1) of the Order that exclusive recognition of a labor organization does not prevent an employee from selecting his own representative in a grievance or appellate action, except when presenting a grievance under a negotiated procedure as provided in Section 13. However, contrary to Complainant's contention, Section 7(d)(1) does not confer any right upon employees, organizations or associations which are enforceable under Section 19 of the Order. It merely declares those instances where employees may choose a representative other than their exclusive representative in grievance or appellate action. Internal Revenue Services, Chicago District, A/SLMR No. 279; U.S. Department of the Army, Transportation Motor Pool, Fort Wainwright, Alaska, A/SLMR No. 278. Thus, Section 7(d)(1) is inapposite herein, and it will not serve as a basis for the alleged infringement of Complainant's rights, under 19 of the Order, as Trudi Cornish's personal representative.

Neither does the cited case, Internal Revenue Service, Cincinnati District, Cincinnati, Ohio, supra, offer much solace to the position taken by Complainant herein. That case dealt with the right of a union under Section 10 (e) of the Order to be represented at a formal discussion between management and a unit employee. Under that particular section employees have a protected right to assistance or representation by the exclusive representative when they are summoned to formal discussions concerning grievances and working conditions affecting unit employees. See U.S. Army Training Center, Engineer and Fort Leonard Wood, A/SLMR No. 787.

The Assistant Secretary has dealt with the particular issue involved herein in the case of 380th Combat Support Group, Plattsburgh Air Force Base, Plattsburgh, N.Y. A/SLMR No. 493. The Complainant therein sought to have a personal representative present during a discussion on her supervisory appraisal with Complainant's supervisor. The request was denied. It was held that since the designee was not a representative of the exclusive bargaining agent, no right existed under Section 10(e) of the Order to have such designee present at the discussion. Moreover, no right was conferred upon the individual employee under Section 7(d)(1), which is enforceable under Section 19, to have a personal representative appear on her behalf.

It would follow, based on the foregoing cases, that Complainant herein has no right to represent Trudi Cornish, as her personal representative, which is enforceable under Section 19 of the Order. Accordingly, I conclude that Respondent did not violate Section 19(a)(1) thereof by its conduct in initially refusing to talk to Complainant on November 14 when the latter appeared at the Sembach school to confer with the principal, Timothy Kelley, re the dispute between management and Trudi Cornish. 6/

Upon the basis of the foregoing findings and conclusions, I recommend that the complaint herein be dismissed in its entirety.

6/ In view of my conclusion that no enforceable right under the Order is conferred upon Complainant herein, I find it unnecessary to determine whether Respondent did, in fact, confer with Migliaccio on November 14, 1975 and discuss Trudi Cornish's problem with him as her representative.

SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

DEFENSE SUPPLY AGENCY, DEFENSE CONTRACT
ADMINISTRATION SERVICES
REGION, LOS ANGELES
A/SLMR No. 923

This consolidated proceeding involved two unfair labor practice complaints filed by Mark Dana Tremayne (Complainant). The first complaint alleged that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) of the Order when it denied the Complainant representation by his exclusive representative at a meeting called by the Respondent at which he was entitled to such representation. The second complaint alleged that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) of the Order by promising the Complainant a promotion if he dropped a grievance.

The Administrative Law Judge recommended that both complaints be dismissed. With regard to the first complaint, the Administrative Law Judge found that, under the circumstances, the Complainant had a right to have his exclusive representative present at the meeting. However, he found the violative conduct to be de minimis and cured by a subsequent meeting held within a short period of time at which the exclusive representative was present. With regard to the second complaint, the Administrative Law Judge found that no promise was made to the Complainant.

Noting particularly the absence of exceptions in either case, the Assistant Secretary adopted the findings, conclusions and recommendations of the Administrative Law Judge and ordered that the complaints be dismissed in their entirety.

DECISION AND ORDER

On July 22, 1977, Administrative Law Judge Gordon J. Myatt issued his Recommended Decision and Order in the above-entitled proceeding. In Case No. 72-5931(CA), he found that the Respondent had engaged in certain unfair labor practices, but recommended that the complaint be dismissed in that case because the conduct found violative of the Order was de minimis and cured by subsequent conduct. In Case No. 72-5932(CA), he found that the Respondent had not engaged in the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint and recommended that the complaint in that case be dismissed in its entirety. No exceptions were filed to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order and the entire record in these cases, and noting particularly that no exceptions were filed, I hereby adopt the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendations. 1/

RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

Statement of the Case

On February 23, 1976, a complaint and an amended complaint were filed in Case No. 72-5931 by Mark D. Tremayne (hereinafter called the Complainant) against Defense Supply Agency, Defense Contract Administration Services Region, Los Angeles (hereinafter called the Activity or Respondent Activity, interchangebly). The complaint and amended complaint alleged that Complainant's supervisor and another management official interfered with, threatened and coerced the Complainant in the exercise of rights assured by the Executive Order by their conduct at a meeting with the employee, and by refusing to grant his request for union representation during the meeting.

On the same date a complaint and an amended complaint were filed in Case No. 72-5932 by the Complainant against the Activity. The complaint and amended complaint in this case alleged the Complainant was coerced, threatened, pressured, and cajoled into withdrawing a pending grievance against his supervisor. It is asserted that the Complainant was promised a promotion to a higher grade by management, if the grievance were withdrawn.

The original complaint in Case No. 72-5931 alleged violations of Sections 19(a)(1), (2) and (4) of the Executive Order, as amended. The amended complaint, based on the same conduct, alleged that the Activity violated only Section 19(a)(1) of the Order. Similarly, the original complaint in Case No. 72-5932 alleged violations of Sections 19(a)(1) and (2), but the amended complaint regarding this conduct only asserted a violation of 19(a)(1). [1]

The Regional Administrator for Labor-Management Services Administration for the San Francisco Region issued a Notice of Hearing on Complaint in both cases on August 12, 1976. On the same date he issued an Order consolidating the cases for purposes of hearing.

1. At the hearing, Complainant stated that 19(a)(1) was the only section of the Executive Order claimed to have been violated by the Activity.

The consolidated cases were originally scheduled for hearing on September 21 and 22, 1976. The cases were subsequently rescheduled for hearing on October 18, 1976, and finally set for hearing on November 3, 1976, based on a purported joint request of the parties.[2]

A hearing was held in Los Angeles, California, on November 3 and 4, 1976. In addition to representing himself, Complainant was also represented by an official of the Local Union of American Federation of Government Employees. The Respondent Activity was represented by counsel. All parties were afforded full opportunity to be heard and to introduce material and relevant evidence and testimony on the issues involved. Briefs were submitted by the parties and have been duly considered.

Upon the entire record in this case, including my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following:

Findings of Fact

A. The Alleged Misconduct in Case No. 72-5931

The Complainant is a GS-11 contract price analyst employed in the Financial Services Branch, Contract Administration Division of the Defense Contract Administration Services District, Los Angeles. The Defense Contract Administration Services District is a subordinate organization of the Respondent Activity. On Septmber 26, 1975, the Complainant filed a written statement of an intent to file an unfair labor practice charge against the Respondent Activity with the commanding officer, Brigadier General Michael E. DeArmond, USAF. The intended unfair labor practice charge related to a purported incident that had occurred the day before involving the Complainant, his supervisor and a union representative. Upon receipt of the Complainant's notice of intent to file a charge, General DeArmond called in Dempsey W. Jenkins, the labor relations representative for the Activity. He informed Jenkins that the notice of intent did not state enough facts to enable them to evaluate the conduct complained of by the Complainant. He instructed Jenkins to get in touch with the Complainant to get a more complete statement of the facts.

2. At the hearing, Complainant stated that he had not joined in the request for rescheduling from October 18, 1976. It is noted, however, that the Complainant's objection was not voiced until the date of the hearing, and the Complainant was not prejudiced in any way by the subsequent rescheduling of the cases. Accordingly, Complainant's objection was untimely and, in any event, was moot.

Jenkins contacted George Smooke, Complainant's first-line supervisor, to arrange a meeting with the Complainant in Smooke's office. Complainant was out to lunch at the time, and Jenkins went to Smooke's office to wait for him. In arranging the meeting, Jenkins informed Smooke that he wanted to discuss a matter with the Complainant involving "a correspondence" between the General and the Complainant.

The testimony regarding the sequence of events immediately preceding and during the meeting between Jenkins and the Complainant is in wide conflict. The Complainant testified that when he returned to his office after lunch, he was informed by a secretary that Smooke wanted to see him in his office. The Complainant stated that when he went into Smooke's office, he saw Jenkins there waiting for him and objected to meeting with the management officials. He further testified that Jenkins told him to sit down when he inquired about the purpose of the meeting. Tremayne stated that he then asked to have his union representative present during the course of the meeting, and Jenkins replied that it was "garbage." According to Tremayne, Jenkins stated that he represented the commanding general, and he wanted to settle the unfair labor practice charge which the Complainant had filed 45 minutes previously. Because he was doubtful of Jenkins' motives, the Complainant stated that he wanted to call the General's office to verify that Jenkins had authority to discuss the unfair labor practice charge with him. The Complainant testified that Jenkins refused to allow this and again said it was "garbage." The Complainant testified that Jenkins raised his voice and made threatening gestures in his direction, and insisted that he was there to settle the unfair labor practice charge. While the discussion was going on, according to the Complainant, Smooke "laughed," and the Complainant objected to Smooke's presence. The Complainant testified that Jenkins then asked Smooke to leave the office.

The Complainant further testified that during the discussion Jenkins was "pounding" the table and "waving" his arms. The Complainant stated that Jenkins made "lunges" in his direction and was emphasizing his point with "wild hand gestures." The Complainant stated that Jenkins told him he was "being insubordinate for not cooperating with him as the General's representative in order to settle the unfair labor practice charge." According to the Complainant, the meeting ended with Jenkins leaving the office, and they never discussed the substance of the purported unfair labor practice charge.

Jenkins and Smooke gave a different version of the events. Jenkins testified that he went to Smooke's office to wait for the Complainant to return from lunch. When the Complainant returned to his desk, Smooke asked him to come into the office and the Complainant hesitated and said, "I'm not going in there with the two of you." Smooke then told the Complainant, as his supervisor he was asking him to come into the office. According to Jenkins, the Complainant replied, "You have to remind me that you are my supervisor," and then entered the office.

Jenkins stated that the Complainant sat at a conference table across from him and Smooke sat at his desk. When Jenkins stated that he was instructed by the General to get more facts on the intended unfair labor practice charge, the Complainant questioned his authority and stated he wanted his union representative present during the discussion. Jenkins explained again that the meeting was merely investigatory to get more facts for the General, and was not for the purpose of discussing the merits of the intended unfair labor practice charge. The Complainant then stated that he wanted to call the General to verify Jenkins' authority, and accused Jenkins of "intimidating" him. At this point Smooke coughed, and the Complainant accused him of laughing. Hoping to relieve some of the tension, Jenkins asked Smooke if he would mind leaving the office. After Smooke left, Jenkins again sought to get facts from the Complainant. The Complainant then accused Jenkins of "threatening" him. In the course of his conversation with the Complainant, Jenkins called him "Mr. Tremayne." The Complainant then accused him of being snobbish. Jenkins at that point called the Complainant by his first name, and the Complainant countered with a statement, "don't get familiar with me." Jenkins testified that he was baffled, and at this point threw his hands up in the air. When he did so, the Complainant accused him of getting ready to strike him. Finally Jenkins decided that nothing would be gained, and he left the office. Jenkins also denied that he ever told the Complainant that he was insubordinate because he had no direct authority over the Complainant.

Smooke's testimony was essentially the same as the testimony of Jenkins. He stated he never knew the purpose of the meeting, only that Jenkins informed him that he wanted to discuss something with the Plaintiff regarding what he had written to the General. When Smooke asked the Complainant to come into his office, the Complainant stated that he wanted his union representative present. Smooke testified that after he introduced Jenkins to the Complainant, that the Complainant asserted that he was being "threatened." Smooke denied that there was any table pounding during the discussion and that he merely sat at his desk observing. Smooke stated that at one point he coughed, and the Complainant claimed he was laughing at him. This was when Jenkins asked him if he would mind leaving the office, and he did so.

There was one other witness who testified regarding part of the conversation prior to the Complainant entering Smooke's office. Ollie Banks, a secretary in the office, testified that she was instructed by Smooke to tell the Complainant to come into his office when he returned from lunch. When the Complainant returned, Smooke's door was open and he stepped out and asked the Complainant to come in. According to Banks, the Complainant stated, "I am not going in there with the two of you." When Smooke stated that he was his supervisor and asked him to come in, the Complainant replied, "thank you sir, you won't let me forget that you are my supervisor", and went into the office. Banks stated that she did not hear any of the conversation while the parties were in the office.

Jenkins testified that when he returned to the General's office, he informed the General that he had never encountered a situation like that in all of his years of dealing with people at the Activity. He informed the General that it was "weird." The General instructed Smooke to get in touch with the vice-president of the Union and to arrange another meeting as soon as possible. Smooke stated that he contacted Charles Wells, then a vice-president of the Union, and arranged to meet with him and the Complainant at 3 p.m. that same day in a conference room in the building where Smooke's office was located.[3] Jenkins stated that when he met with the Complainant and the union representative, the Complainant became very agitated and upset again. The union official calmed him down and they began to discuss the facts contained in the intended unfair labor practice charge. Jenkins testified that the meeting lasted until 4:15 p.m., which was beyond the normal quitting time.

3. The Complainant denied that there was ever a second meeting that day with Jenkins. Smooke testified that he was aware that Jenkins had scheduled a meeting later that afternoon with the Complainant.

Concluding Findings

In order to address the ultimate issue presented by this case, it is necessary to first resolve the conflict in the differing versions of the meeting in Smooke's office. Although the Complainant testified in a positive manner and was quite descriptive in his account of the events, I find that throughout the hearing he was prone to over-dramatize. Furthermore, he was suspicious of every act and statement made during the course of the hearing itself. This was true regardless of the source responsible. For example, at one point during the proceeding he became offended at what he felt were derisive smiles by spectators in the courtroom. My observation of his conduct and attitude throughout the trial cause me to conclude that his version of the incident is far less accurate and reliable than the versions given by the other witnesses. Moreover, the Complainant seemed eager to attach malicious motives to seemingly innocent conduct. For these reasons, I credit the testimony of Jenkins and Smooke regarding the events that occurred on September 26, 1976.

Having determined that the events occurred as described by the Respondent Activity's witnesses, the sole issue here is whether the Complainant was unlawfully denied the right to have his union representative present during the meeting in Smooke's office. The Activity argues that the meeting was purely investigatory to gather facts regarding the intended unfair labor practice charge. Therefore, it was an informal meeting and the Complainant was not entitled to union representation. In addition, the Activity argues that if the Complainant were entitled to union representation, the meeting was terminated, due to his unusual conduct, before any discussion on the subject matter was accomplished. Thus, according to the Activity's argument, there was no violation of any rights assured the Complainant by the Executive Order.

In my judgment, the Respondent Activity's construction of the rights and obligations under the Executive Order is much too narrow and restrictive. The Complainant filed an intent to file an unfair labor practice charge, citing certain conduct on the part of his supervisor which he interpreted as interfering with his right to confer with and contact his union representative. Regardless of whether the intended charge was meritorious, it had impact beyond the individual concerns of the Complainant. Section 10(e) of the Executive Order imposes a duty upon a labor organization having exclusive recognition to represent the interests of all employees in the bargaining unit, and affords it the right to be present at formal discussions between management and employees concerning grievances, personnel policies and practices, and other matters affecting working conditions. Employees have a concomitant right to have their exclusive representative act for and represent their interests in matters set forth in Section 10(e) of the Order.[4] San Antonio Air Logistics, San Antonio Air Materiel Area (AFLC), Kelly Air Force Base, Texas, A/SLMR No. 540.

Respondent's assertion that the Complainant was not entitled to be represented by the Union because the meeting was merely for the purpose of gathering facts (investigatory) must be rejected. The rights assured the Complainant under the Executive Order cannot be so easily compartmentalized and neatly divided into segments so that representation by the labor organization can be foreclosed at one point and honored at another. Once the intent to file an unfair labor practice charge was lodged with management, the Activity was put on notice that the Union must be afforded an opportunity to be present during any discussion with the Complainant regarding the charge--this is especially true when the Complainant requests such representation. Indeed, hindsight establishes that had this procedure been followed, the bizarre incident which gave rise to this case would never have occurred. Such precautionary measures should be observed by agency management in order to preserve the integrity of the rights assured employees and labor organizations by the Executive Order.

4. Section 10(e) provides as follows:

> (e) When a labor organization has been accorded exclusive recognition, it is the exclusive representative of employees in the unit and is entitled to act for and to negotiate agreements covering all employees in the unit. It is responsible for representing the interests of all employees in the unit without discrimination and without regard to labor organization membership. The labor organization shall be given the opportunity to be represented at formal discussions between management and employees or employee representatives concerning grievances, personnel policies and practices, or other matters affecting general working conditions of employees in the unit.

Were the facts to end here, I would have no difficulty in finding that the Respondent Activity violated Section 19(a)(1) of the Executive Order. However, the record discloses there was a subsequent meeting several hours later between Jenkins and the Complainant at which an official of the Union was present. In my judgment, this meeting, occurring within a short space of time after the unlawful conduct, cured any prior violation of the rights assured the Complainant under the Executive Order. Indeed, the most that can be said was that the prior violative conduct was de minimis and, as such, does not warrant the finding of a violation. Vandenberg Air Force Base, 4392nd Aerospace Support Group, Vandenberg Air Force Base, California, FLRC No. 74A-77 (August 8, 1975).

Accordingly, I find that a violation of the Executive Order, did occur, but was cured by the subsequent conduct on the part of the Respondent Activity. For this reason, I find that the complaint herein should be dismissed in its entirety.

B. The Alleged Unlawful Conduct in Case No. 72-5932

Preliminarily it should be noted that O'Leary, Complainant's co-representative at the beginning of the hearing, was not present at the presentation of the facts in Case No. 72-5932. This evidence was taken the second day of the consolidated hearing. Although Complainant asked for a continuance because of O'Leary's absence, this request was denied. Neither the Complainant nor O'Leary mentioned the possibility of the latter's unavailability during the hearing on the preceding day. Furthermore, both were aware that they considered O'Leary to be a necessary witness on Complainant's behalf, and had sufficient advance notice that the case would proceed on the date scheduled.

The facts in this particular case are somewhat confusing because of the manner in which they were presented. Basically the Complainant asserts that he failed to process a grievance because he was promised a promotion if the matter were dropped. This promise is alleged to have been made by Colonel Harold Echols, Commanding Officer of the Los Angeles Procurement District. The testimony in support of the complaint was given by the Complainant and two union representatives. Sifting through the somewhat disoriented testimony from these witnesses as well as the testimony from witnesses for the Respondent Activity, the following facts are found to have occurred during the times material to the complaint.

The Complainant apparently had a number of complaints and grievances about the way he felt he was being treated by management at the Respondent Activity. Some of these complaints resulted in the filing of formal grievances and unfair labor practice charges, and some did not. The central thrust of all of them, however, was that the Complainant felt he was entitled to a promotion to GS-12, and management was frustrating his chances for a promotion at every conceivable turn. One of the Complainant's grievances involved a GS-12 position available at a TRW plant which he claimed was reclassified to a GS-11--presumably to prevent his applying for the job since he would not accept a lateral transfer. The testimony indicates that sometime in May or June 1975, this position was again classified as a GS-12 and the Complainant was an active candidate for the job.

Another complaint related to the position classification of the Complainant's present job. A desk audit had been conducted and the job was rated a GS-11 position on the basis of the work involved. The Complainant felt his duties had not been classified high enough and that the position warranted a grade of GS-12. He appealed the position classification to David O. K. Lee, the Civilian Personnel Officer of the Respondent Activity. Lee informed the Complainant that if an investigation established that he had been rated unfairly, he (Lee) would recommend to Colonel Echols that the rating be adjusted upward. After an investigation in which the Complainant was allowed to present evidence he thought supported his claim of higher level work, the original classification was found to be accurate. This result was considered grossly unfair by the Complainant, and viewed as further evidence of management's vendetta against him.

Another complaint involved Complainant's job performance rating. The Complainant felt that his performance rating was not sufficiently high enough to qualify him as a candidate for promotion. He also felt that his performance rating did not properly reflect the quality of his work. He insisted that his rating should be upgraded, and pressed this issue personally and through union officials with higher level management.

In addition, the testimony indicates that the Complainant felt that his supervisor, Smooke, had unfairly influenced some of his work. The Complainant had submitted a cost analysis report and Smooke changed portions of it. The Complainant felt that the report was deficient because of the changes and complained to Smooke about the matter. Smooke instructed him to sign off on the document, and the Complainant did so under strong protest.

Finally, the testimony discloses that the Complainant felt he was being harassed by Smooke. It was asserted that the harassment became more prevalent after the Complainant joined the Union, although Smooke, when questioned by a union representative regarding the purported harassment, denied even knowing that the Complainant was a member of the Union. It was this latter grievance which was apparently the underlying basis for the complaint in this case.

The testimony indicates that the Complainant informed Paul Yampolsky of his belief that he was being harassed by Smooke. Yampolsky was substituting at the time as Complainant's union representative because the regular representative, Margaret Bywater, was on leave due to an accident. Yampolsky approached Smooke on June 25, 1975, regarding the matter and stated he wanted to discuss a "potential" grievance which was affecting the Complainant. Smooke denied the harassment and denied knowing that the Complainant was a member of the Union. Yampolsky testified that he did not consider this discussion to be the first step in the negotiated grievance procedure wherein the matter is taken up with the immediate supervisor of the employee involved. Rather, he felt he was heading off a potential grievance by taking the matter up with Smooke informally. The Complainant, on the other hand, considered this conversation between his union representative and Smooke to be in conformity with the first step of the negotiated grievance procedure.

Prior to the harassment complaint, the Complainant had pressed to get a promotion and had taken the matter up directly with Colonel Echols several times. On one occasion, Echols promised to see if management couldn't combine two positions which were vacant in the Complainant's section and create a GS-12 position which Complainant would fill. However, the Civilian Personnel Office informed Echols that this could not be done as the Respondent Activity would then lose both slots and would not have them available for staffing at a subsequent time. Because of this staffing problem, Echols abandoned the idea of combining the positions in order to upgrade the Complainant.

The first week in July 1975, Complainant was notified that his position classification appeal had been denied. On July 16, he took the matter up with Lee. He also complained about his performance rating, and he discussed the downgrading of the position at TRW; which he asserted had been promised him by Echols.

That same afternoon the Complainant was told by Bernard Schmitt, his branch chief, to come into Echols' office. Echols told the Complainant in Schmitt's presence that the TRW job had been reclassified to a GS-12 and the Complainant would be interviewed by the selecting official for the position. The Complainant testified that Echols stated, "In all likelihood you will get it." He further testified that Echols said, "You will get it. You will be a temporary in the position." According to the Complainant, when he questioned why he would be a temporary, Echols said it was because of his attitude. Echols stated he was suspicious and suggested that he see a psychiatrist. The Complainant then questioned Echols' qualification to make such a judgment about him. The Complainant testified that on the basis of his conversation in Echols' office, he did not pursue the grievance against Smooke. He also testified that he had been told by Yampolsky that he would get the TRW job in 30 days.

Both Echols and Schmitt testified regarding the conversation in the former's office. Echols, who had since retired from the military, stated that when he called the Complainant in, he told him he would get "a fair shot at the promotion, but that as Commanding Officer he could not promote him." Echols stated that promotions could only proceed on the basis of the merit promotion plan, and he could only make certain that all of the Civil Service Commission requirements were followed. He testified that he told the Complainant that he was on the list for the TRW promotion and that he had to take his chances along with other candidates. He stated that the supervisor was the selecting official who would pick the successful applicant after an interview. Both Schmitt and Echols denied that Echols ever promised the TRW position to the Complainant.

On July 23, 1975, Smooke asked the Complainant to be available for a meeting that afternoon. He informed the Complainant that the meeting involved a reprimand he intended to put in the Complainant's personnel record. Because the Complainant felt this would jeopardize his chances of getting the promotion to the TRW job, he contacted O'Leary, the union president. O'Leary promised to look into the matter and get back to him. The following day O'Leary informed the Complainant that he had discussed the matter with Echols, and the reprimand would be postponed indefinitely so as not to interfere with the TRW interview.

The following week the Complainant was interviewed by the selecting official at TRW. When he sought to discuss his work experience, according to the Complainant, he was informed it was not necessary. He testified that the selecting official stated he knew all about the Complainant from Smooke because he (Smooke) had been on loan to that office for a six-month period some time earlier. The Complainant was subsequently notified that he had not been selected for the TRW position.

On July 31, Smooke called the Complainant into his office. Vandergrif, Deputy of the Contract Administration Division, was present. Smooke reprimanded the Complainant for giving files to union representatives. The reprimand was placed in the Complainant's personnel record. Subsequently, the reprimand was removed by management.

The Complainant continued to press for a promotion through his union representatives. A delegation of the union representatives consisting of O'Leary and Yampolsky met with Echols regarding the Complaint. O'Leary complained that the job performance reports did not properly reflect the quality of the Complainant's work, and that he had to be upgraded in order to receive a promotion. Echols informed the union representatives that the Complainant would be considered for a promotion if he were qualified. Echols testified he told the union representatives that he had attempted to help the Complainant by consolidating two jobs in his section, but could not accomplish this because of the staffing problems and the work load. He also stated that he had attempted to get the Complainant a position at TRW, but the supervisor who had the selecting authority would not select him. He stated that in so doing he had a reprimand deferred in order not to interfere with the Complainant's chances for getting the job. He stated that every time the Complainant went for an interview, "he shot himself in the foot." O'Leary stated that the Complainant had a number of grievances which he would file against the Respondent Activity. Echols testified that he told O'Leary that the Complainant shouldn't file a grievance on the performance reports because he could not win it. He further stated that it would damage his position among the people who would ultimately have to select him for a promotion. He testified that he told O'Leary that if he were going to file a grievance, he should do so "in an area where he had a locked-in situation and could win the case." Echols told O'Leary that if he wanted to do Mark Tremayne a favor, he shouldn't file a grievance that Tremayne could not win.

Concluding Findings

It is evident from the above that the Complainant had a deep and abiding belief that management was engaged in a conspiracy to deny him a promotion. This belief was so strong that it caused him to find promises in statements where none were made or intended, to perceive threats where none existed, and to generally be suspicious of all actions on the part of management.

The Complainant contends that he dropped his grievance against Smooke--one of many grievances and complaints--because Echols had promised him a promotion to the TRW position. As noted in the findings in the preceding case, I find the Complainant's testimony to be unreliable and colored by his intense desire to show that management was frustrating his opportunity for a promotion.

The credible account given by Echols shows that he made every effort to help the Complainant receive a promotion. He attempted to combine two positions in order to upgrade the Complainant, but found that this was not administratively possible. He had a reprimand deferred because of the possible adverse effect it would have on the Complainant's opportunity to get the TRW position. He advised the Complainant's union representative to urge the Complainant not to file frivolous grievances or grievances which he had no chance of winning. This advice was not given to further management's interests but rather, was intended to prevent the Complainant from acquiring a reputation which would cause him to alienate selecting officials when promotion opportunities were available. In spite of this favorable attitude on the part of top-level management, the Complainant continued to be his own worst enemy and, in the words of Echols, "shot himself in the foot" at every opportunity.

I credit the testimony of Echols and Schmitt concerning the conversation on July 16, 1975, regarding the TRW position. I find that Echols never implied or suggested that the Complainant would get the job if he dropped the grievance against Smooke. On the contrary, I find that Echols told him he would be interviewed as a candidate for the position, but the ultimate decision was up to the selecting official. I further find that Echols never told any union official that the Complainant would be promoted if he dropped the Smooke grievance. In my judgment, this is nothing more than an erroneous interpretation the Claimant chose to place upon Echols' comments when he failed to be selected for the job.

Accordingly, I find that the Complainant has failed to establish on this record, by a preponderance of the evidence, that management induced him to drop his grievance on the promise of a promotion. Therefore, I shall recommend that the complaint in this case be dismissed in its entirety.

RECOMMENDED ORDER

Pursuant to Section 6(b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, and Section 203.26(b) of the Regulations promulgated thereunder, the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations hereby orders that the complaint in Case Nos. 72-5931 and 72-5932 be dismissed in their entirety.

October 13, 1977

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR
ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS
SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

SECRETARY OF THE NAVY,
DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
PENTAGON
A/SLMR No. 924

This case involved a complaint by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO (Complainant) alleging that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, by instituting a new policy on contracting out certain services without notice to the Complainant or opportunity to consult, in violation of the Complainant's national consultation rights granted by Section 9(b) of the Executive Order.

The Administrative Law Judge concluded that the Respondent interfered with the Complainant's national consultation rights guaranteed by Section 9(b) and thereby violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) by failing to notify the Complainant of the proposed new policy which he determined was a substantive change in personnel policy. He also concluded that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) because the Respondent's altered policy on contracting out constituted a unilateral change in existing personnel policies without notice precluding any opportunity for consultation pursuant to Section 9(b) of the Order; further, that the Respondent's refusal to consult after the Complainant learned of the new policy also violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) because Section 9(b) requires consultation on personnel policy matters. The Administrative Law Judge found it unnecessary to pass on whether these acts constituted independent Section 19(a)(1) violations. The Administrative Law Judge recommended, among other things, that in lieu of posting, a copy of a remedial notice be sent to each addressee of the revised policy, and that the Respondent be required to restore the status quo ante.

The Assistant Secretary noted that, in his view, Section 9(b) of the Order grants three distinct rights, two of which were at issue in this case, to labor organizations which have been accorded national consultation rights. The first is the right to be notified by the agency of proposed substantive changes in personnel policies affecting unit employees, and to have an opportunity to comment thereon. The second, which is not at issue here, is the right of the organization to suggest changes in the agency's personnel policies and to have its views carefully considered. The third is the right of the organization to consult in person, upon request, with agency management on personnel policy matters and to present its views thereon in writing.

As to the first right established by Section 9(b), the Assistant Secretary found that the institution of the new contracting out policy constituted a substantive change in personnel policy. He held, therefore, that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by its failure to notify the Complainant of its proposed substantive change in contracting out policy, thereby depriving the Complainant of its right under Section 9(b) to comment on the proposed change.

The Assistant Secretary also found that the Respondent's failure to notify the Complainant of the new policy violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order since it deprived the Complainant of its right to consult in person with appropriate officials and to present its views thereon in writing by reason of the fact that it did not know of the new policy. Moreover, the Assistant Secretary noted that the Respondent's refusal to consult on the impact and implementation of the new policy, after the Complainant learned of it, constituted an additional failure to meet its Section 9(b) obligations in violation of Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order.

Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary ordered the Respondent to cease and desist from its conduct found violative of the Order. Contrary to the recommendation of the Administrative Law Judge, however, the Assistant Secretary determined that it would be inappropriate to order a return to the status quo ante, because, by implication, this would require abrogation of any commitments made under the new policy to contract out, providing potential disruption of the Respondent's operations. The Assistant Secretary also ordered that remedial notices be posted at all units where the Complainant is the exclusive representative.

DECISION AND ORDER

On November 3, 1976, Administrative Law Judge William B. Devaney issued his Recommended Decision and Order in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had engaged in certain unfair labor practices and recommending that it cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative actions as set forth in the attached Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order. Thereafter, the Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief 1/ with respect to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order and the entire record in this case, including the exceptions and supporting brief filed by the Respondent, I hereby adopt the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendations, to the extent consistent herewith.

1/In its brief accompanying exceptions to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order, the Respondent moved to amend the record and documents so that references to the Respondent's Office of Civilian Manpower Management (OCMM) would reflect the new organizational title, Office of Civilian Personnel. The motion is granted.

This case raises questions concerning the definition of rights granted to a labor organization which has been accorded national consultation rights. The facts are not in dispute. The Complainant was granted national consultation rights by the Respondent in 1971. At about the same time, the Respondent implemented a policy on contracting out, referred to hereafter as the 1971 policy or the "old" policy. 2/ In June 1975, the Respondent issued a new instruction regarding contracting out. 3/ This new instruction was re-adopted in November 1975, and gave rise to this dispute.

The Complainant learned for the first time about the new policy, which essentially was one of accelerating contracting out of certain named services, through a newspaper article on January 13, 1976. It requested and received copies of the new policy. The chairman of the Complainant's National Consultation Rights Committee then sought consultation. The request was denied and the instant unfair labor practice complaint followed.

In my view, Section 9(b) of the Order 4/ establishes three distinct rights for labor organizations which have been accorded national consultation rights. The first requires that the labor organization be notified by an agency of proposed substantive changes in personnel policies affecting unit employees, and that the agency provide an opportunity for the organization to comment thereon. The second, which is not at issue here, is the right of the organization to suggest changes in the agency's personnel policies and to have its views carefully considered. The third is the organization's right to consult in person, upon request, with agency management on personnel policy matters and to present its views thereon in writing.

As indicated at footnote 4 above, Section 9(b) limits the third enumerated right by the proviso: "An agency is not required to consult with a labor organization on any matter on which it would not be required to meet and

2/ The 1971 policy is set out in the attached Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order beginning at p. 2 thereof.

3/ The 1975 policy, Instruction 6A and 6B, is set out in the attached Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order beginning at p. 5 thereof.

4/ Section 9(b) provides:

When a labor organization has been accorded national consultation rights, the agency, through appropriate officials, shall notify representatives of the organization of proposed substantive changes in personnel policies that affect employees it represents and provide an opportunity for the organization to comment on the proposed changes. The labor organization may suggest changes in the agency's personnel policies and have its views carefully considered. It may consult in person at reasonable times, on request, with appropriate officials on personnel policy matters, and at all times present its views thereon in writing. An agency is not required to consult with a labor organization on any matter on which it would not be required to meet and confer if the organization were entitled to exclusive recognition.

confer if the organization were entitled to exclusive recognition." This limitation, however, does not, in my view, affect the right of an organization possessing national consultation rights to comment, as distinguished from consult, upon substantive changes in personnel policies proposed either by the agency or by the organization. To read the restriction more broadly would deprive national consultation rights of any practical significance, since they would amount to no more than duplication of the collective bargaining rights of subordinate organizations enjoying exclusive recognition. A broad reading of the proviso thus would destroy a major purpose of national consultation rights, which is to permit a labor organization to submit its views on matters affecting the working conditions of members at the national level--the only level at which it may be possible to influence the personnel policy itself, as distinguished from the procedures employed in its implementation and the impact, which are proper subjects for local collective bargaining. See Tidewater Virginia Federal Employees Metal Trades Council and Naval Public Works Center, Norfolk, Virginia, FLRC No. 71A-56. In recognition of this function of national consultation rights, the Federal Labor Relations Council has defined "substantive personnel policy" specifically as including policy which "is formulated within the discretionary authority of the issuing organization. . ."

It is uncontroverted that the Respondent did not notify the Complainant of Instruction 6A and 6B prior to its issuance, and that, therefore, no opportunity was provided for the Complainant to comment thereon. Therefore, if Instruction 6A and 6B constituted a substantive change in personnel policy it follows that the Respondent violated its national consultation rights obligations and thereby violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by its failure to give notice to the Complainant, which was thereby precluded from having a reasonable opportunity to comment on the proposed change. As discussed above, the right to notice and an opportunity to comment is not, in my view, limited to those matters concerning which an agency is required to meet and confer.

Section 2412.1 of the Federal Labor Relations Council's Rules and Regulations defines a substantive change in personnel policy as "a change in the established rights of employees or labor organizations or the conditions relating to such rights." The Respondent argues that, as there is no "established right" to retain one's job in the Federal sector, a change in the conditions under which a job will be either continued or contracted out is not a change in "established rights of employees." This argument is not persuasive. It is not material that the Executive Order itself does not accord to employees the right to retain their jobs. Section 9(b) of the Order and the Council's Regulations cannot be read as referring only to those rights established by Executive Order, since they contemplated the possibility of change in such substantive rights. If the rights are fixed by the Executive Order they are beyond the power of the agency to change. Moreover, although there is no unqualified right to continue Federal employment, there are existing statutes and Civil Service rules and regulations which accord employees many rights with regard to retaining their jobs. Any proposal which may result in displacement of employees by elimination of their jobs effects a fundamental substantive change in personnel policy. It would, in my view, be untenable to conclude that national consultation rights encompass such matters as transfers of personnel, but not the far more basic problems created by a potential large scale loss of employment.

Nor does there seem to be any ambiguity in the first part of Section 9(b). The duty to notify and offer opportunity to comment before effecting a substantive change in personnel policy is clear. Consequently, I find that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by its failure to notify the Complainant of its proposed substantive change in contracting out policy, thereby depriving the Complainant of its right under Section 9(b) of the Order to comment on the proposed change.

The obligation to consult, however, which, as indicated above, is the third distinct right conferred by Section 9(b), is qualified by the proviso that "an agency is not required to consult with a labor organization on any matter on which it would not be required to meet and confer if the organization were entitled to exclusive recognition." To determine whether the Respondent was obligated to consult with the Complainant, it must thus be determined whether the matter at issue was one over which the Respondent would be required to meet and confer if the Complainant were entitled to exclusive recognition. Although the actual decision of the agency to contract out has been held to be a reserved right of management, and therefore not negotiable, as indicated above, a labor organization may negotiate over the implementation and impact of the contracting out decision.

Therefore, the Complainant, which has been accorded national consultation rights, had a right to be consulted with on the impact and manner of implementation of the new contracting out policy involved herein. It follows that the failure by the Respondent to afford to the Complainant notice of the new policy violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order because it deprived the Complainant of its right to consult on the matter in person with appropriate officials, and to present its views thereon in writing by reason of the fact that it did not know of the existence of the new policy. Moreover, the Respondent refused to consult upon the Complainant's request after the latter learned of the changed policy. In this regard, although the Respondent was not obligated to consult about the policy itself, it was obligated to consult about procedures implementing its policy, and the impact thereof, and its refusal to do so pursuant to the Complainant's request constitutes, in my view, an additional failure to meet its Section 9(b) obligations in violation of Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order.

REMEDY

Having found that the Respondent has engaged in certain conduct prohibited by Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of Executive Order 11491, as amended,

I shall order that the Respondent cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative actions, as set forth below, designed to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Order.

In his proposed remedy, the Administrative Law Judge recommended a return to the status quo ante by cancellation of the instruction establishing the new contracting out policy and reinstatement of the 1971 policy. In my view, such a remedial order is not warranted in the particular circumstances of this case. Rescission of the new policy by implication would require abrogation of any contractual commitments already made to contract out. In my opinion, the potential disruption of the Respondent's operations that would be created by such an order outweighs the need for a status quo ante remedy in this matter. Rather, a remedial order requiring the Respondent to cease and desist from implementing the new policy in the future without affording to the Complainant the opportunity to comment on proposed substantive changes in personnel policies and to consult about the impact and implementation thereof constitutes, in my view, a satisfactory remedy with respect to the unfair labor practices found herein and I shall so order.

The Administrative Law Judge also determined that posting of a notice, a normal remedy in cases involving a refusal to bargain, would not be appropriate in this case and recommended instead that a copy of the notice be mailed to each addressee of the 1975 policy instructions and to the Complainant. I find no reason why the normal posting remedy is not appropriate herein, and I shall order that the Respondent post notices at all locations where the Complainant is the exclusive representative.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 6(b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, and Section 203.26(b) of the Regulations, the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations hereby orders that the Secretary of the Navy, Department of the Navy, Pentagon, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Failing and refusing to notify the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, pursuant to its national consultation rights under the Order, of proposed substantive changes in personnel policies that affect employees it represents, and provide it with an opportunity to comment on proposed substantive changes in personnel policies that affect employees it represents.

(b) Failing to provide an opportunity for the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, to consult in person and to present its views in writing on personnel policy matters.

(c) Refusing to consult with the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, upon request, on personnel policy matters.

(d) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights assured by Executive Order 11491, as amended.

2. Take the following affirmative actions in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of Executive Order 11491, as amended:

(a) Upon request, consult with the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, pursuant to its national consultation rights under the Order and to the extent consonant with law and regulations, concerning the procedures used in implementing the agency's new contracting out policy and the impact of the change in policy on the adversely affected employees.

(b) Post at units of all Department of the Navy facilities and installations where the Complainant is the exclusive representative copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix" on forms to be furnished by the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations. Upon receipt of such forms they shall be signed by the Secretary of the Navy and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. The Commanding Officer of each facility or installation shall take reasonable steps to insure that such notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to Section 203.27 of the Regulations, notify the Assistant Secretary, in writing, within 30 days from the date of the order as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

Statement of the Case

This case arises under Executive Order 11491, as amended (hereinafter also referred to as the "Order") and concerns "national consultation rights" under Section 9(b) of the Order.

This case was initiated by a charge filed on, or about, January 23, 1976, and a complaint filed on April 9, 1976 (Ass't. Sec. Exh. 1-b) which alleged a violation of Sections 19(a)(1), (5) and (6) of the Order. On June 1, 1976, the Regional Administrator, Mr. Kenneth L. Evans, issued a Notice of Hearing on the alleged violations of Section 19(a)(1) and (6) 1/ pursuant to which a hearing was held before the undersigned on June 30, 1976, in Washington, D.C.

All parties were represented by able counsel, were afforded full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witnesses and to introduce evidence bearing on the issues involved and excellent briefs have been timely filed by the parties which have been carefully considered. Upon the basis of the entire record, I make the following findings of fact, conclusions and recommendations:

Findings of Fact

1. Complainant was granted national consultation rights by Respondent, Department of the Navy (DoN), by letter dated July 1, 1971 (Jt. Exh. 2).

2. On August 30, 1967, the Bureau of the Budget (BoB) issued Circular No. A-76 Revised (Jt. Exh. 1) which established "Policies for acquiring commercial or industrial products and services for Government use". This Circular replaced BoB Circular A-76 issued March 3, 1966, and paragraph 5e provided, in part, as follows:

> "e. Procurement of the product or service from a commercial source will result in higher cost to the Government. A Government commercial activity may be authorized if a comparative cost analysis ... indicates that the Government can provide or is providing a product or service at a cost lower than if the product or service were obtained from commercial sources.
>
> "... Government commercial activities should not be started or continued for reasons involving comparative costs unless savings are sufficient to justify the assumption of these and similar risks and uncertainties." [removal of property from tax rolls, loss of tax revenue, diversion of management attention from the Government's primary program objectives, obsolescence of plant and equipment, etc.] (Jt. Exh. 1).

1/ The 19(a)(5) allegations are not, therefore, before me.

Paragraph 7 c. (3) provided, as follows:

> "(3) An activity should be continued for reasons of comparative costs only if a comparative cost analysis indicates that savings resulting from continuation of the activity are at least sufficient to outweight the disadvantages of Government commercial and industrial activities. No specific standard or guideline is prescribed for deciding whether savings are sufficient to justify continuation of an existing Government commercial activity and each activity should be evaluated on the basis of the applicable circumstances." (Jt. Exh. 1)

Paragraph 7b (3), which dealt with "new starts" provided, in part, as follows:

> "(3) ... While no precise standard is prescribed in view of these varying circumstances a 'new start' ordinarily should not be approved unless costs of a Government activity will be at least 10 percent less than costs of obtaining the product or service from commercial sources. It is emphasized that 10 percent is not intended to be a fixed figure." (Jt. Exh. 1)

3. In July, 1971, the Department of Defense (DoD) issued DoD Directive 4100.15 and DoD Inst. 4100.33 which adopted and implemented Circular No. A-76 (Jt. Exh. 4). Section IV B of Directive 4100.15 provided, in part, as follows:

> "B. In conformance with this principle, the Department of Defense will depend upon both private and Government commercial or industrial sources for the provision of products and services, with the objective of meeting its military readiness requirements > with maximum cost effectiveness, as follows:

>
> "1. DoD commercial or industrial activities may be continued in operation or initiated as 'new starts' only when a clear determination is made that one or more of the following circumstances exists:
>
> * * * *
>
> "e. Procurement of the product or service from a commercial source will result in higher total cost to the Government." (Jt. Exh. 4)

DoD Inst. 4100.33, IV B5. provided, in part, as follows:

> "5. Procurement of the product or service from a commercial source will result in a higher total cost to the Government.
>
> "a. Utilization of this criterion as justification for continuing, or initiating a new start, of a DoD commercial or industrial activity is authorized only if a comparative cost analysis ... indicates that the product or service can be provided from in-house services at an over-all total cost to the Government which is less than from a private commercial source ...
>
> "b. In reaching determinations under this criterion, the disadvantages, risks and uncertainties of starting or continuing a DoD commercial or industrial activity ... must be carefully considered and the amount of the cost savings to be achieved by in-house operation must be sufficient to justify those disadvantages, risks and uncertainties. ..." (Jt. Exh. 4)

4. DoN adopted and implemented the DoD policy by SECNAVINST 4860.44A (October 27, 1971), OPNAV Inst 4860.6 (November 30, 1971) (Jt. Exh. 7); and SECNAVINST 4860.44B (April 4, 1975) (Jt. Exh. 4).

5. DoN issued OPNAV Instruction 4860.6A on June 24, 1975, which cancelled OPNAVINST 4860.6 of November 30, 1971, and provided, in part, as follows:

"3. Discussion. Based on continuing studies which indicate the cost effectiveness of contract accomplishment of base support services, the Assistant Secretary of Defense ... recently requested the military services to energetically implement the DOD Commercial or Industrial (C/I) Activities Program. In response to this direction, the Assistant Secretary of the Navy ... established goals for contractor performance of custodial, refuse cellection, and guard services which, based on past Navy assessment, have a strong probability of being more economically accomplished by contract. Primary reliance for these functions will be on contract performance unless contract services cannot be obtained, would be significantly more costly, or extraordinary conditions preclude contract consideration. The FY 75-76 goals for the contract accomplishment of the three support services are shown below:

CODE	FUNCTION	FY-75 - FY-76 CONTRACT SUPPORT GOALS
S709	Custodial Services	at least 70%
S712	Refuse Collection and Disposal Services	at least 60%
S724	Guard Services	at least 30%

* * * *
(Emphasis supplied)

"4. Applicability. This instruction applies generally to all commercial or industrial support services and specifically to the above C/I functions when they are performed in-house, wholly or partially, at naval shore activities within the United States, Puerto Rico, Canal Zone, and Guam. ...

* * * *

"6. Action

"a. The Chief of Naval Material shall take the necessary action to implement reference (a) and manage and direct the operation of the Commercial or Industrial Activities Program within the Navy.

"b. Addresses shall take the necessary action to implement the requirements contained in this instruction assuring that:

"(1) The goals established in paragraph 3 are fulfilled within their commands prior to the close of FY-76.

"(2) Comprehensive assessments are made of each function specified above ... Unless excepted, functional conversions to contract shall be accomplished at the earliest possible date.

. . ." (Jt. Exh. 5).

6. DoN issued OPNAV Instruction 4860.6B on November 28, 1975, which cancelled OPNAVINST 4860.6A of June 24, 1975 (Jt. Exh. 6); however, the provisions of OPNAVINST 4860.6A, as set forth above, were re-adopted without change by OPNAVINST 4860.6B (Jt. Exh. 6).

7. Complainant, on January 13, 1976, first heard of the acceleration of contracting out of custodial, refuse collection, and guard services in an article published in the Federal Times, on January 12, 1976, and on January 15, 1976, Respondent supplied Complainant with copies of OPIVAV INSTRUCTIONS 4860.6A and 4860.6B (hereinafter referred to as Instruction 6A or Instruction 6B). Respondent concedes that there had been no consultation.

8. After Mr. L.T. Leavitt, Chairman of Complainant's National Consultation Rights Committee, received Instructions 6A and 6B, he called Mr. D.F. Black, head of Respondent's Labor Relations and Policy and Standards Branch, Office of Civilian Manpower Management, which is responsible for Respondent's National Consultation Rights program, and Mr. Black informed Mr. Leavitt that this was not a matter for national consultation discussions.

9. Complainant had not, previous to January, 1976, sought to discuss Respondent's contracting out policy at the national level. 2/

POSITION OF THE PARTIES

COMPLAINANT'S POSITION. The Complainant states that Respondent's secret establishment and implementation of new contracting-out policies which significantly affect functions performed by employees represented by it violated Respondent's duties under Section 9(b) of the Order and Respondent thereby violated Section 19(a)(6) of the Order by its refusal to consult and confer with Complainant as required by the Order. The Complaint also alleges a violation of 19(a)(1) of the Order.

In its brief Complainant emphasizes that it does not, and did not, seek to negotiate over contracting-out, which it concedes is a non-negotiable, reserved management right under Section 12(b)(5) of the Order. Rather, that Complainant seeks merely to preserve, define, and enforce its national consultation rights in the face of a substantive change in Respondent's contracting-out program as evidenced by Instruction 6A and Instruction 6B.

Quite succinctly, Complainant's position is that, as it has been accorded national consultation rights by Respondent, Section 9(b) of the Order imposes a duty on Respondent to notify it of proposed substantive changes in personnel policies that affect employees it represents and provide an opportunity for Complainant to comment on the proposed changes; and, in addition, Complainant may consult on personnel policy matters; that Instruction A, issued June 24, 1975, and Instruction B, issued November 28, 1975, brought about substantive changes in personnel policies that affected employees Complainant represent; that Respondent failed and refused to notify it of the proposed changes; failed and refused to provide any opportunity for Complainant to comment on the proposed changes; and failed and refused upon request to consult on said personnel policy matters in violation of 19(a)(6) and (1) of the Order

2/ Respondent, at pages 4-5 of its Brief, has set forth in considerable detail the "innocent telephone call" from which the present dispute developed. In view of the admission that there was no prior consultation, or even prior notice to Respondent, of Instruction 6A or 6B, if there were an obligation to advise and consult, there was a violation no matter how the disclosure of the failure to consult came about and such background is immaterial to determination of the duty to consult, if any, under Section 9 of the Executive Order. So, too, is Mr. Black's personal unawareness of the existence of Instruction 6A and 6B. The obligation to consult is Respondent's and its RESPONDENT'S POSITION. Respondent contends First, that its contracting out program is not a "substantive personnel policy" within the meaning of Section 9(b) of the Order and, accordingly, was not, and is not, an appropriate subject for discussion under the "national consultation" provisions of the Order.

Second, that as Section 9(b) provides, in part, that "an agency is not required to consult with a labor organization on any matter which it would not be required to meet and confer if the organization were entitled to exclusive recognition" and since "contracting out" is, as Complainant concedes, a reserved management right, there was no duty to consult on its contracting out policy but only on impact and/or implementation and that no implementation had occurred when this case arose, a fortiori, Respondent had no obligation to consult until some action was taken to implement the established goal.

Third, that consultation under Section 9(b) of the Order is a more limited concept than an exclusive representative's rights to negotiate under Section 11 of the Order and that the proper focus of inquiry under Section 9(b) is predecisional rather than post-decisional, provided that a new or changed substantive personnel policy is involved.

CONCLUSIONS

I. Section 9(b)

Section 9(b) of the Order provides:

> "(b) When a labor organization has been accorded national consultation rights, the agency, through appropriate officials, shall notify representatives of the organization of proposed substantive changes in personnel policies that affect obligation is not affected by the fact that its agent designated to represent it in national consultations was not advised of a matter requiring such consultation, assuming, of course, that there was a duty to consult.

employees it represents and provide an opportunity for the organization to comment on the proposed changes. The labor organization may suggest changes in the agency's personnel policies and have its views carefully considered. It may consult in person at reasonable times, on request, with appropriate officials on personnel policy matters, and at all times present its views thereon in writing. An agency is not required to consult with a labor organization on any matter on which it would not be required to meet and confer if the organization were entitled to exclusive recognition."

The Regulations further spell out the obligation to consult, in part, as follows:

5 C.F.R. §2412.3 Obligation to consult.

"(a) When a labor organization has been accorded national consultation rights, the agency or the primary national subdivision which has granted those rights shall ... furnish ... the labor organization:

(1) Reasonable notice of proposed new substantive personnel policies and of proposed substantive changes in personnel policies which affect the employees it represents under exclusive recognition;

(2) Opportunity to comment on such proposals;

(3) Opportunity to suggest changes in personnel policies that are of interest to employees it represents under exclusive recognition and to have its suggestions receive careful consideration;

(4) Opportunity to confer in person upon request ... on personnel policy matters; and

(5) Opportunity to submit its views in writing on personnel policy matters at any time.

(b) An agency ... is not required to consult ... on any matter on which it would not be required to meet and confer if the organization were entitled to exclusive recognition.

(c) National consultation rights do not include the right to negotiate. (Emphasis supplied.

Complainant's contention, both in its complaint and in its brief, that Section 9(b) rights include the right to "negotiate" is without basis, is contrary to the quite specific language of 5 C.F.R. §2412(c), as well as the history of Section 9(b) of the Order, and is rejected.

From the standpoint of new substantive personnel policies or of proposed substantive changes in personnel policies, the obvious intent of Section 9(b) is that consultation be pre-decisional. To achieve this, the agency is required to give reasonable notice of such proposed changes. But, certainly, an agency cannot disregard its mandatory obligation under Section 9(b) to provide reasonable notice and then avoid its obligation to consult by making the change and contending that its only obligation to consult was pre-decisional. Moreover, as to existing personnel policy, Section 9(b) assures the right of consultation by the submission of views in writing at any time and to confer in person at reasonable times.

The obligation of an agency to notify the labor organization under Section 9(b) is limited to "substantive changes in personnel policies" which is defined by the Regulations as follows:

"Substantive personnel policy means a standard or rule which (a) creates and defines rights of employees or labor organizations, including conditions relating to such rights; (b) sets a definite course or method of action to guide and determine procedures and decisions of subordinate organizational units on a personnel or labor relations matter; and (c) is formulated within the discretionary authority of the issuing organization and is not merely a restatement of a course or method of action prescribed by higher authority.

> "Substantive change in personnel policy means a change in the established rights of employees or labor organizations or the conditions relating to such rights." (5 C.F.R. §2412.1).

BoB Circular No. A-76 (1971), adopted and implemented by DoD Directive 4100.15 and DoD Inst. 4100.33 (1971), SECNAV inst. 4860.44 A (1971), OPNAV INST. 4860.6 (1971) and SECNAV INST 4860.44 B (1975), admittedly established a policy favoring the contracting out of support services where appropriate and one critical factor was cost. It is quite true that DoD Directive 4100.15, Paragraph Iv B.1. e provided.

> "e. Procurement of the product or or service from a commercial source will result in higher total cost to the Government." (Emphasis supplied.)

It is also quite true that OPNAV INSTRUCTION 4860.6A (June 24, 1975) and, 6B (November 28, 1975) each provided, inter alia,

> "Primary reliance for these functions will be on contract performance unless contract services ... would be significantly more costly ..." (Emphasis supplied.)

Complainant asserts that the change in language from "higher total cost" to "significantly more costly", alone, was a substantive change of policy; Respondent, on the other hand, asserts that there was no change in policy. If this were the only change made by Instructions 6A and 6B it might be debatable whether there was a change in policy, notwithstanding the obvious surface appearance of a change in emphasis, inasmuch as DoD INST. 4100.33, for example, made it plain that the over-all "total cost" required careful consideration of the disadvantages, risks and uncertainties of a DoD commercial or industrial activity and that "the amount of the cost savings to be achieved by in-house operation must be sufficient to justify those disadvantages, risks and uncertainties" and/or, as stated in BoB Circular No. A-76, "whether savings are sufficient to justify continuation of an existing Government commercial activity", so that, certainly, it would be arguable that the language of Instructions 6A and 6B in this respect reflected only a difference in syntax.

But the broader issue in this case is whether Instructions 6A and 6B represented a change in policy and the determination of this issue does not turn merely on the shift in emphasis from "higher total cost" to "significantly more costly", but rather, on the totality of Instructions 6A and 6B. Instructions 6A and 6B stated, in effect, that: a) based on past Navy assessments, contract performance of custodial, refuse collection, and guard services have a strong probability of being more economical than in-house performance of these services; b) primary reliance for these functions will be on contract service unless contract services cannot be obtained, would be significantly more costly, or extraordinary conditions preclude contract consideration; and c) goals for accomplishment of the three support services (custodial at least 70%, refuse at least 60% and guard at least 30%) in fiscal years 1975-76 were set. Instructions 6A and 6B left no doubt that accomplishment of these goals was directive for they provided, in part, that "Addresses shall take the necessary action ... assuring that ... the goals established ... are fulfilled within their commands prior to the close of FY-76." (Emphasis supplied.)

In totality, it is clear that Instructions 6A and 6B did reflect a change in policy for achievement of contract accomplishment from a policy of favoring contracting out, even if the gloss unless "significantly more costly" represented no change in policy, to a policy of primary reliance on contract for refuse, janitorial and guard service, and a directive minimum percentage conversion for each of these services to be achieved prior to the close of the 1976 fiscal year. Of course, all commercial or industrial support services were to be assessed and the DoD Commercial or Industrial Activities Program was to be implemented but without specific, and directive, goals except for refuse, janitorial and guard services.

Assuming that Instructions 6A and 6B reflected a change in contracting out policy, was this a substantive change in personnel policy? Notwithstanding Respondent's strong assertion to the contrary, I conclude that it plainly was as the terms are defined in the Regulations. Instructions 6A and 6B set forth a standard or rule which (a) created and defined rights of employees and/or labor organization, including conditions relating to such rights (e.g., employment by the Navy in the performance of refuse collection, janitorial or guard service); (b) set a definite course or method of action to guide and determine procedures and decisions of subordinate organizational units on a personnel or labor relations matter; and (c) was formulated within the discretionary authority of the issuing authority, the Department of the Navy, and was not merely a restatement of a course or method of action prescribed by higher authority, as neither BoB Circular No. A-76 nor DoD Directives or Instructions had established directive minimum goals and timetables; had even singled out janitorial, guard or refuse collection services for expedited attention; or had placed the same standard on cost effectiveness comparisons. Care must be taken that the term "personnel action" is not distorted, for it seems apparent that Section 9(b) of the Order was not intended to subject policy decisions to its terms unless they clearly are personnel policies as defined in the Regulations. That is, while most, if not virtually all, management policy decisions, directly or indirectly, affect employees, Section 9(b) encompasses only policy which, inter alia, "creates and defines rights of employees ... including conditions relating to such rights". Not only do Instructions 6A and 6B meet the tests set forth in the Regulations, but numerous decisions of the Council and the Assistant Secretary have recognized that decisions to contract out work directly affect employee rights from which it must be inferred that contracting out policy is, necessarily, substantive personnel policy within the meaning of Section 9(b) of the Order and 5 C.F.R. 2412.1. Cf. Immigration and Nationalization Service, FLRC No. 70A-10 (April 15, 1971); Plumb Island Animal Disease Laboratory, FLRC No. 71A-11 (July 9, 1971); Griffiss Air Force Base, FLRC No. 71A-30 (April 19, 1973); Norton Air Force Base, A/SLMR No. 261 (1973); U.S. Department of Interior, Bureau of Indian Affairs, A/SLMR No. 341 (1974); New Mexico Air National Guard, A/SLMR No. 362 (1974); Army and Air Force Exchange Service, Pacific Exchange System, Hawaii Regional Exchange, A/SLMR No. 451 (1974).

II. Consultation under Section 9(b)

National consultation rights do not include the right to negotiate and an agency is not required to consult on any matter on which it would not be required to meet and confer if the organization were entitled to exclusive recognition. It is from the latter limitation that Respondent argues that, as the decision on contracting out was a reserved right of management under Section 12(b)(5) of the Order, there is no obligation to consult about the decision but only as to impact and implementation and, because there had been no implementation when this case arose, there was no obligation to consult.

Respondent's interpretation would emasculate national consultation rights and I find, upon careful reflection,no warrant for such interpretation either in logic or in the history of the development of the present language of Section 9(b) of the Order or in the Regulations promulgated pursuant thereto.

The reserved rights of management under Section 12(b) of the Order directly and specifically include matters of personnel policy, e.g., "to hire, promote, transfer, assign, and retain ... to suspend, demote, discharge, or take other disciplinary action ... to relieve employees from duties because of lack of work ...", etc. If Respondent's position were correct then, indeed, Section 9(b) created illusionary rights. Nor is it appropriate to equate consultation to specific impact. To the contrary, national consultation at the agency level relates to policy not to specific applications of that policy. By the same token, however, a new, or changed, personnel policy has immediate impact by virtue of its very existence even though no employee has yet been hired, or fired, or laid off, etc., pursuant to the new, or changed, personnel policy. While the right of agency managemnt to establish personnel policy pursuant to 12(b) is fully insured, Section 9(b) nevertheless assures an organization the right to discuss the new or changed personnel policy and it really is immaterial whether such consultation is considered as impact and implementation, inasmuch as Section 9(b) assures the right to consult about existing personnel policy matters without limitation. The significant difference is that Section 9(b) imposes on the agency a duty to notify the organization of proposed substantive changes in personnel policies and a duty to provide an opportunity for the organization to comment on the proposed changes.

A logical construction of Section 9(b) vis-a-vis reserved management rights would be that the agency is required to give notice of propoosed changes and the organization's right is, simply, to comment on the proposed changes at that stage. In this sense, the right to comment before issuance of the proposed change would not be consultation, i.e., "consult" would be a right to consult in person. While logical and entirely consistent with the intent and purpose of Section 9(b) of the Order, it is recognized that the Regulations, as noted hereinafter, include under the obligation to consult all of the rights set forth in Section 9(b), including the opportunity to comment. Respondent, obviously aware of the flaw in the logic of such argument, asserts that there is no right to consult in any manner, including comment on such proposals, because the last sentence of Section 9(b) provides that the agency is not required to consult on any matter on which it would not be required to negotiate with an exclusive representative.

Accepting Respondent's logic proves very little since Section 9(b) assures the organization the right to consult in person at reasonable times, on request, on personnel matters, and at all times to present its views thereon in writing. Accordingly, for reasons set forth more fully hereinafter, I conclude that the last sentence of Section 9(b) does no more than insure the right of the agency to determine personnel policy in accordance with the reserved rights of management under the Order and that Section 9(b) does require and permit consultation about the policy.

A recurring frustration to unions in the federal sector is the necessary, but nonetheless troublesom, issuance of a policy determination by higher authority pursuant to the Order and the inevitable bar to discussion of the policy itself, notwithstanding the right to negotiate on impact and implementation. See, e.g., Aerospace Guidance and Metrology Center, Newark Air Force Station, Newark, Ohio, A/SLMR No. 677 (1976). One purpose of Section 9(b) of the Order was to provide a means for discussion of personnel policy at the agency level. While the last sentence of Section 9(b) removes from the obligation to consult consultation as to decision itself, when the decision is pursuant to a reserved management right, to the same extent that the same decision would be removed from the obligation to negotiate if the labor organization were entitled to exclusive recognition; nevertheless, Section 9(b) requires that the agency notify the labor organization accorded national consultation rights of proposed substantive changes in personnel policies and imposes an obligation on the agency to consult upon request with the organization concerning that personnel policy. In short, the purpose of Section 9(b) was, and is, to provide a means for labor organizations, at some level, to discuss agency personnel policy matters. As Judge Chaitovitz noted, in Department of Navy, Military Sealift and National Maritime Union of America, Case No. 22-5395(NCR) (1975), aft'd A/SLMR No. 576 (1975),

> "It is clear that NCR, as viewed in both the Order and FLRC's Regulations, is a procedure that was set up in order to permit a labor organization ... to consult and have some opportunity for input with respect to changes in personnel policies on a national level, in those situations where the labor organization would not otherwise have such an opportunity."

Section 9(b) provides, inter alia, that a labor organization may suggest changes in the agencies' personnel policies and have its views carefully considered; that a labor organization may confer in person, on request, at reasonable times on personnel policy matters; and that it may presents its views in writing at all times.

Respondent's syllogism must be rejected for various reasons. First, the obligation of an agency to notify the organization of proposed substantive changes in personnel policies is an absolute obligation independent of the right to consult. Second, the limitation on the obligation to consult, as set forth in the last sentence of Section 9(b), is, simply, that there was no obligation to consult on the decision itself; however, as in the case of an organization entitled to exclusive recogniation, there was at least the right to consult, after reasonable notice, on the affect of such decision. Indeed, the right of a labor organization under Section 9(b) to consult on personnel policy matters is far broader than merely impact or implementation. Section 9(b) plainly contemplates notice by the agency to the organization of purposed substantive changes in personnel policies and the opportunity for the organization to comment thereon. Even though the Regulations include under "Obligation to consult" the various rights and obligations of Section 9(b), including (1) Reasonable notice; (2) Opportunity to comment; (3) Opportunity to suggest changes; (4) Opportunity to confer in person; (5) Opportunity to submit its views in writing at any time (5 C.F.R. §2412.3(a)) and the last sentence of Section 9(b) of the Order and Section 2412.3(b) of the Regulations provide that an agency is not required to consult on any matter on which it would not be required to meet and confer if the organization were entitled to exclusive recognition, I am persuaded that the agency is, nevertheless, required to give the organization notice of proposed new substantive personnel policies and of proposed substantive changes in personnel policies and to provide an opportunity for the organization to comment thereon, with full recognition that the agency is not required to consult on its decision to promulgate new personnel policies or on its decision to change existing personnel policies. In addition, Section 9(b) assures organizations the right, upon request, to consult in person on any personnel policy matter at reasonable times and to present its views thereon in writing at any time. In other words, in this case, even if Respondent had given Complainant notice of its proposed Instruction 6A, and subsequently of proposed Instruction 6B, and, at that point in time, the respective Instruction had become Respondent's policy, nevertheless, Section 9(b) granted Complainant the right to consult about existing personnel policies whether or not it had any right to consult prior to the creation of that policy. Third, the issuance of Instructions 6A and 6B created immediate impact and each Instruction provided for its implementation. The Instruction, directed, inter alia, that addresses "shall take the necessary action to implement the requirements contained in this instruction assuring that ... the goals established ... are fullfilled within their commands prior to the close of FY-76." The fact that no specific in-house service had, at that point, been contracted out cannot alter the immediate impact of the Instructions on all addresses, including the Chief of Naval Material who was directed to take all necessary action to manage and direct the operation of the Commercial and Industrial Activities Program within the Navy. Not only does Section 9(b) create a right to consult on personnel policy which is broader than merely impact and implementation, but even if the right to consult were limited to the corresponding right of an exclusive representative, Complainant had at least the right to consult about impact and implementation of Instructions 6A and 6B as a Navy personnel policy.

Respondent failed and refused to give Complainant notice as required by Section 9(b) of the Order of proposed substantive changes in personnel policies with respect to contracting out, as set forth in Instruction 6A prior to its issuance on June 24, 1975, and as set forth in Instruction 6B prior to its issuance on November 28, 1975. Each Instruction was effective upon issuance and directive in nature. Respondent's unilateral change of existing personnel policies without notice to Complainant precluded any opportunity for consultation pursuant to Section 9(b) of the Order and Respondent thereby violated Section 19(a)(6) of the Order. United States Department of Navy, Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, Great Lakes Naval Hospital, Illinois, A/SLMR No. 289 (1973); Department of the Army, Headquarters United States Army Armament Command, Rock Island Arsenal, Rock Island, Illinois, A/SLMR No. 527 (1975); U.S. Army Electronics Command, Fort Monmouth, New Jersey, A/SLMR No. 653 (1976); Southeast Exchange Region of the Army and Air Force Exchange Service, Rosewood Warehouse, Columbia South Carolina, A/SLMR No. 656 (1976).

Complainant first learned of the existence of Instructions 6A and 6B in January, 1976, (Instruction 6B had cancelled Instruction 6A; however the provisions of Instruction 6A, as here material, were re-adopted without change by Instruction 6B) and promptly requested consultation which Respondent refused because Respondent asserted that Instruction 6B was not a matter for national consultation discussions. For the reasons set forth above, notwithstanding that the change in contracting out policy was a reserved right of management, Respondent was required by Section 9(b) of the Order to consult in person at reasonable times, on request, with Complainant on personnel matters and by its refusal to consult upon request Respondent further violated Section 19(a)(6).

Respondent's failure and refusal to notify Complainant of proposed substantive changes in personnel policies, as required by Section 9(b) of the Order, its unilateral change of established personnel policies, by its issuance and implementation of Instructions 6A and 6B, and its refusal to consult upon request constituted violations of Section 19(a)(6) and, derivatively, also violated Section 19(a)(1). Army and Air Force Exchange Service, Pacific Exchange System, Hawaii Regional Exchange, A/SLMR No. 454 (1974). It is further recognized that, as the Assistant Secretary stated,

> "... a violation of any of these foregoing subsections of Section 19(a) [19(a)(2), (3), (4), (5), and/or (6)] necessarily tends to interfere with, restrain, or coerce employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Order and, thereby, also is a violation of Section 19(a)(1)."

Whether Respondent's conduct also constituted an independent violation of Section 19(a)(1) need not be determined as it is clear that, in any event, its conduct in violation of Section 19(a)(6) derivatively violated Section 19(a)(1) of the Order.

REMEDY

To effectuate the purposes and policies of the Order it is necessary to restore the status quo ante as it existed before Respondent's unilateral issuance of Instruction 6A in violation of the Order. The more difficult question is whether posting, which is established normal procedure in cases of a refusal to bargain with an exclusive representative, is appropriate in this case which involves a refusal to consult as required by Section 9(b) of the Order. I have concluded that posting, in this case, would not be an appropriate remedy. In lieu of posting, I shall recommend that a copy of the notice signed by the Secretary of the Navy be sent to each addressee of Instruction 6A and/or Instruction 6B and to Complainant.

RECOMMENDATIONS

Having found that Respondent, Secretary of the Navy, Department of the Navy, engaged in conduct which was in violation of Sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Executive Order, I recommend that the Assistant Secretary adopt the following order designed to effectuate the policies of Executive Order 11491, as amended:

RECOMMENDED ORDER

Pursuant to Section 6(b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, and Section 203.26(b) of the Regulations, 29 C.F.R. §203.26(b), the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations hereby orders that the Secretary of the Navy, Department of the Navy, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Failing and refusing to notify American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, pursuant to Section 9(b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, of proposed substantive changes in personnel policies that effect employees it represents.

(b) Failing and refusing to provide an opportunity for American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, to comment on proposal substantive changes in personnel policies that affect employees it represents.

(c) Refusing to consult with American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, upon request, at reasonable times on personnel policy matters.

(d) In any like or related manner, interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of rights assured by Executive Order 11491, as amended.

2. Take the following affirmative actions in order to effectuate the purposes and provisions of Executive Order 11491, as amended:

(a) Restore the status quo ante with regard to the Department of the Navy's policy governing contracting out of support services that existed immediately prior to the issuance of OPNAV INSTRUCTION 4860.6A on, or about, June 24, 1975, by

i) cancelling, withdrawing, and rescinding OPNAV INSTRUCTION 4860.6B, issued on or about, November 28, 1975, which Instruction had cancelled OPNAV INSTRUCTION 4860.6A, issued June 24, 1975, and all orders, Instructions, or Directives which may have been issued pursuant to Instruction 4860.6B.

ii) Reinstate SECNAVINST 4860.44 A (issued October 27, 1971), and/or OPNAV INST 4860.6 (issued November 30, 1971), and/or SECNAVINST 4860.44 B (issued April 4, 1975).

b) Mail a copy of the attached notice, signed by the Secretary of the Navy, to each addresse of OPNAV INSTRUCTION 4860.6B and, if the distribution were different, to each addresse of OPNAV INSTRUCTION 4860.6A.

c) Mail a copy of the attached notice, signed by the Secretary of the Navy, to American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO.

d) Pursuant to Section 203.27 of the Regulations, notify the Assistant Secretary, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR
ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS
SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT,
MILWAUKEE AREA OFFICE,
MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN
A/SLMR No. 925

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by Mary Lou Hinchey alleging that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (2) of the Order by the action of its Area Director in basing, in part, his approval of the Complainant's ranking on a list of employees eligible for promotion on the fact that she wrote a letter to the Wisconsin Congressional delegation.

The Administrative Law Judge concluded that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) of the Order when it relied, in part, upon Hinchey's letter in determining that Hinchey lacked the judgment necessary to be ranked for promotion above other eligible employees. In reaching his conclusion, the Administrative Law Judge noted that the fact that the Respondent did not know Hinchey had signed the letter in her capacity as union steward was not important, since it is evident that other employees or union officers would be hesitant to exercise Section 1(a) rights in the future as a result of the Respondent's reaction to the letter. Moreover, he found that since the "unlawful" activity played a part in the promotional standing of Hinchey, such activity also violated Section 19(a)(2) of the Order.

The Assistant Secretary noted that Section 1(a) of the Order assures to employees the right to act in the capacity of a representative of a labor organization, including the right to present the views of their labor organization to the Congress. Hinchey, a union steward, had been authorized to do so by the union membership. The Assistant Secretary agreed with the Administrative Law Judge that the Respondent's treatment of Hinchey in this matter based, in part, upon activity which was protected under the Order, violated Section 19(a)(1) because such treatment would tend to interfere with her rights and the rights of her fellow employees, who could reasonably infer that they would suffer a similar fate if they engaged in the same type of protected activity as had been engaged in by Hinchey as a representative of a labor organization.

In regard to the Section 19(a)(2) allegation, the Assistant Secretary noted, however, that in order to sustain such a finding, generally there must be a specific showing that a discriminatory act was motivated by anti-union considerations. He found that in the instant case, although it has been shown that the Respondent discriminated against Hinchey because she wrote to Congress, it was not established that the Respondent knew that she wrote to Congress in her capacity as a union representative. Nevertheless, he found that where, as here, agency management engages in conduct which is inherently destructive of a basic right guaranteed to employees under the Order, proof of specific knowledge of the union activity involved is not necessary to sustain a finding that such conduct is violative of Section 19(a)(2) of the Order. Under the particular circumstances of this case, therefore, he found that by affecting Hinchey's chances for promotion because she wrote a letter to Congress in her capacity as a union representative, the Respondent discriminated against her in a manner that was inherently destructive of a basic right assured by Section 1(a) of the Order in violation of Section 19(a)(2) of the Order.

Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary ordered that the Respondent cease and desist from the conduct found violative of the Order and that it take certain affirmative actions.

DECISION AND ORDER

On May 20, 1977, Administrative Law Judge Burton S. Sternburg issued his Recommended Decision and Order in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had engaged in certain unfair labor practices and recommending that it cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative actions as set forth in the attached Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order. Thereafter, the Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief with respect to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order and the entire record in the subject case, including the exceptions and supporting brief filed by the Respondent, I hereby adopt the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendations, as modified herein.

The Administrative Law Judge concluded that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) of the Order when it relied, in part, upon Complainant Hinchey's letter to the Wisconsin Congressional delegation concerning a proposed reduction-in-force in determining that Hinchey lacked the judgment necessary to be ranked for promotion above other eligible employees. In reaching his conclusion, the Administrative Law Judge noted that the fact that the Respondent did not know Hinchey had signed the letter in her capacity as union steward was not important, since it is evident that other employees or union officers would be hesitant to exercise Section 1(a) rights in the future as a result of the Respondent's reaction to the letter. Moreover, he found that since the "unlawful" activity played a part in the promotional standing of Hinchey, such activity also violated Section 19(a)(2) of the Order.

Section 1(a) of the Order assures to employees the right to act in the capacity of a representative of a labor organization, including the right to present the views of their labor organization to the Congress. Hinchey, a union steward, had been authorized to do so by the union membership. I agree with the Administrative Law Judge that the Respondent's treatment of Hinchey in this matter based, in part, upon activity which was protected under the Order, violated Section 19(a)(1) because such treatment would tend to interfere with her rights and the rights of her fellow employees, who could reasonably infer that they would suffer a similar fate if they engaged in the same type of protected activity as had been engaged in by Hinchey as a representative of a labor organization.

In order to sustain a finding of a Section 19(a)(2) violation of the Order, however, generally there must be a specific showing that a discriminatory act was motivated by anti-union considerations. In the instant case, although it has been shown that the Respondent discriminated against Hinchey because she wrote to Congress, it has not been established that the Respondent knew that she wrote to Congress in her capacity as a union representative. Nevertheless, I find that where, as here, agency management engages in conduct which is inherently destructive of a basic right guaranteed to employees under the Order, proof of specific knowledge of the union activity involved is not necessary to sustain a finding that such conduct is violative of Section 19(a)(2) of the Order. Under the particular circumstances of this case, therefore, I find that by affecting Hinchey's chances for promotion because she wrote a letter to Congress in her capacity as a union representative, the Respondent discriminated against her in a manner that was inherently destructive of a basic right assured by Section 1(a) of the Order in violation of Section 19(a)(2) of the Order.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 6(b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, and Section 203.26(b) of the Regulations, the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations hereby orders that the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, Milwaukee Area Office, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

   (a) Adversely rating or criticizing Mary Lou Hinchey, or any other employee, because they have written letters on behalf of a labor organization to members of the Congress of the United States of America.

(b) In any like or related manner, interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Executive Order.

2. Take the following affirmative actions in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Order:

(a) Reappraise Mary Lou Hinchey's work performance as of August 1976, without any consideration or reliance on her union activities, including letters written on behalf of a labor organization to members of the Congress of the United States of America. In the event that such new appraisal results in Hinchey receiving a higher promotional rating than that accorded to the eight individuals promoted pursuant to the August 1976, priority register, then forthwith, to the extent consonant with applicable law and regulations, promote Mary Lou Hinchey to a GS-12 and make her whole for any loss of back wages.

(b) Post in the Milwaukee Area Office of the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix" on forms to be furnished by the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Area Director, Milwaukee Area Office, Department of Housing and Urban Development and shall be posted and maintained by the Area Director for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. The Area Director shall take reasonable steps to insure that such notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to Section 203.27 of the Regulations, notify the Assistant Secretary, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this order as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

DECISION AND ORDER

Statement of the Case

Pursuant to an amended complaint first filed on November 9, 1976, under Executive Order 11491, as amended, by Mary Lou Hinchey, an individual, against the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, Milwaukee Area Office, (hereinafter called the Respondent or Activity), a Notice of Hearing on Complaint was issued by the Acting Regional Administrator for the Chicago, Illinois Region on December 29, 1976.

The complaint alleges that the Respondent violated Sections 19(a)(1) and (2) of the Executive Order by virtue of its actions in denying union steward Mary Lou Hinchey a promotion to a GS-12 because of her union activities.

A hearing was held in the captioned matter on March 8, 1977, in Milwaukee, Wisconsin. All parties were afforded full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and to introduce evidence bearing on the issues involved herein. 1/

Upon the basis of the entire record, including my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following findings of fact, conclusions and recommendations.

Findings of Fact

Miss Hinchey, the alleged discriminatee herein, who was hired by Respondent in 1972, is currently a GS-11, Housing Management Office - - Housing Management Representative (counseling) Series 301. In such capacity she, among other things, supervises, recruits, evaluates and trains eight certified counseling agencies in the State of Wisconsin. Additionally, Miss Hinchey performs mortgagee reviews to see that the mortgagees are in compliance with the Respondent's regulations and requirements of the "235 contract authority".

During the course of her employment with Respondent, Miss Hinchey, in addition to being recommended by her immediate supervisor Mr. Samuel Clemons for promotion to a GS-12, 2/ received two special achievement awards of $250 each for her

---

1/ At the opening of the hearing, Respondent, citing Section 19(d), moved to dismiss the complaint on the ground that the issues involved "may properly be raised under" an established appeals procedure. Inasmuch as the established appeals procedure cited by Respondent deals with "classification appeals" and makes no provision for litigation concerning denial of promotions based on union activity or other discriminatory considerations, I find that Section 19(d) of the Order is not applicable and hereby deny Respondent's Motion to Dismiss.

2/ Mr. Clemons had recommended Miss Hinchey for promotion to a GS-12 in December of 1975 and August of 1976.

outstanding and highly professional work. The awards, which are identified in the record as complainant's exhibits 2 and 3, are highly complimentary of Miss Hinchey and note that Miss Hinchey's outstanding work performance has been recognized by the Assistant Secretary, Community Counseling Agencies and the Central Office.

Miss Hinchey has been the sole union steward since October 1974 when a contract was signed between the Respondent and Local 3411, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO. In such capacity Miss Hinchey has advised fellow employees as to what action to take with respect to their particular complaints, requested staff meetings with Area Director Kane for purposes discussing rumors of a reduction in force and has written Wisconsin senators and congressman soliciting their help in "averting a declared RIF". The latter letters dated April 15, 1976, were signed by Miss Hinchey in her capacity as "Steward AFGE Local 3411" Area Director Kane acknowledges congressional contacts concerning the April 15, 1976 letters, but denies knowledge that Miss Hinchey had written the letters in her capacity as union steward. According to Mr. Kane, he has never seen copies of the April 15, 1976 letters.

On or about August 1, 1976, the Milwaukee area office of the Respondent was requested by the Assistant Regional Administrator for Administration located in Chicago, Illinois to compile a "list of eligible employees who could be promoted without any kind of major restructuring of position subject, of course, to classification, and to submit them". The Milwaukee area office was also instructed to "rank order" the employees which it determined were eligible for promotion. Area Director Kane assigned the task of compiling the list of eligibles and rank ordering same to his deputy Mr. Steve Brown. Mr. Brown determined that there were 11 employees, including Miss Hinchey, in the Milwaukee office eligible for promotion. Thereafter, based upon his own personal knowledge of the eligibles' job performance, the eligibles' supervisor's comments or recommendation about job performance and knowledge of the eligibles' "working relationships within the office", Mr. Brown ranked the 11 eligibles for promotion to higher GS positions. Miss Hinchey was ranked 11 out of 11 primarily because in the past her congressional correspondence written on behalf of the Agency was considered by Mr. Brown to be of a "demeaning" tone. According to Mr. Brown, Miss Hinchey's professional letters indicated a lack of judgment on her part. Subsequently, Mr. Brown submitted his recommendations for final approval to Mr. Kane without further oral comment.

Mr. Kane reviewed the rankings made by Mr. Brown and approved them without any change. Thereafter, on August 16, 1976, Mr. Kane submitted a memorandum to the Director of the Administrative Division wherein he recommended all 11 employees for promotion. Subsequently, the area office was informed that they would have to limit their promotion submission to 10 promotional points. 3/ The limitation of 10 promotional points allowed only the first eight ranked employees to be promoted. Miss Hinchey, being ranked number 11, was of course not promoted.

As noted above, Miss Hinchey was recommended by her immediate supervisor for promotion to a GS-12 in the early part of August 1976. Upon returning from school or vacation, the record is not clear on this point, during the middle of August 1976, Miss Hinchey inquired about the status of her promotion. She was advised that her promotion had not gone through. She immediately contacted Mr. McNeely, the EEO counselor and requested him to determine what were the standards and criteria for promotion. Mr. McNeely checked the matter out with Mr. Kane and subsequently informed Miss Hinchey that the standards for promotion were time in grade, performance and value of the employee to the agency. Inasmuch as Mr. McNeely could not define or explain the standard "value of the employee to the agency", Miss Hinchey asked Mr. McNeely to set up an appointment for her with Mr. Kane.

On August 30, 1976, Miss Hinchey met with Mr. Kane and Mr. McNeely. During the course of the meeting Mr. Kane offered a general explanation of "value of the employee to the agency". In this context he brought up the subject of Miss Hinchey's April 15, 1976 letter to the Wisconsin congressional delegation requesting aid in the matter of the rumored RIF. According to Mr. Kane the letter reflected poor judgment and constituted a minus factor under the standard "value of an employee to the agency". Mr. Kane felt that the letter was uncalled for and an attempt to interfere with Agency management. According to Mr. Kane this was particularly true in view of the fact that the Agency had held a prior meeting with the employees for purposes of discussing and explaining the rumored RIF.

Subsequent to August 1976, the Milwaukee area office was accorded enough additional promotion points to advance the remaining three employees on the August 1976 list of eligibles. However, as of the time of the hearing Miss Hinchey had not been promoted to a GS-12 since her position was then currently the subject of a classification audit. According to the Respondent, if Miss Hinchey's position falls within a GS-12 classification, she will be promoted immediately. 4/

Discussion and Conclusions

Section 1(a) of the Executive Order guarantees each employee the right to, freely and without fear of penalty or reprisal, join and assist a labor organization. The right to assist a labor organization "extends to participation in the management of the organization and acting for the organization in the capacity of an organization representative, including the presentation of its views to officials of the executive branch, the Congress, or other appropriate authority". Abridgement of the aforementioned rights with respect to "hiring, tenure, promotion . . ." is violative of Sections 19(a)(1) and (2) of the Order. Department of the Army, U.S. Army Infantry Center, Civilian Personnel Office, Fort Benning, Georgia, A/SLMR No. 515.

In the instant case, Miss Hinchey has been an active union steward for several years. During such period Miss Hinchey in her capacity as union steward, among other things, wrote a letter to the Wisconsin Congressional delegation wherein she, on behalf of the Union, solicited the delegation's help in the matter of a rumored RIF. Subsequently, Mr. Kane

4/ Respondent in its post-hearing brief notes that the Civil Service Commission has determined, following a desk audit, that the journeyman grade level for Miss Hinchey's position should be a GS-11. In support of this allegation Respondent has submitted a copy of a letter dated April 4, 1977 from the Civil Service Commission. In response to an Order to Show Cause by the undersigned Administrative Law Judge why the April 4, 1977 letter should not be made part of the record evidence since it has a bearing on any possible [footnote continued on next page] received a congressional inquiry concerning Miss Hinchey's letter and became irritated since he felt that the Activity had in the past adequately discussed and explained the matter of the RIF to the employees. Thereafter, Mr. Kane, admittedly, relied upon Miss Hinchey's action in writing to the congressional delegation about the RIF as a partial ground to support his conclusion that she lacked the requisite judgment necessary to be ranked for promotion above the 10 other eligibles.

The fact that Mr. Kane was not aware of the capacity in which Miss Hinchey signed the letter to the congressional delegation is of no import, since it is the effect of his action and not the intent which is the final test. Accordingly, since it is evident that other employees or union officers will be hesitant in the future to exercise the rights accorded them by Section 1(a), it follows that Mr. Kane's action constituted coercion and restraint within the meaning of Section 19(a)(1) of the Order. Moreover, since the unlawful activity played a part in the promotional standing of Miss Hinchey, such activity was also violative of Section 19(a)(2).

In view of the foregoing, in addition to recommending that Respondent cease and desist from such unlawful activity in the future, it will also be recommended that Respondent be ordered to reappraise Miss Hinchey without any reliance on her union activity and reconsider such new appraisal against the appraisals of the ten other employees appearing on the August 1976 priority register. Should such new appraisal and comparison result in Miss Hinchey achieving a promotional rating or standard higher that the standings or ratings accorded the eight employees who were promoted subsequent to the drafting of the August 1976 priority register, Miss Hinchey shall to the extent permitted by law and Civil Service regulations be immediately promoted to a GS-12 and made whole for any loss of back pay. Recommended Order

Pursuant to Section 6(b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, and Section 203.25(a) of the Regulations, the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations hereby orders that the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, Milwaukee Area Office, Milwaukee, Wisconsin shall:

(1) Cease and desist from:

> Adversely rating or criticizing Mary Lou Hinchey, or any other employee, or otherwise interferring with, restraining, or coercing Mary Lou Hinchey, or any other employee, because any such employee has written letters on behalf of a labor organization to members of the Congress of the United States of America.

(2) Take the following affirmative actions in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Order

(a) Reappraise Mary Lou Hinchey's work performance as of August 1976 without any consideration or reliance on her union activities, including letters written on behalf of a labor organization to members of the Congress of the United States of America. In the event that such new appraisal results in Miss Hinchey receiving a higher promotional rating than that accorded to the eight individuals promoted pursuant to the August 1976 priority register, then forthwith to the extent consonant with applicable law and Civil Service regulations promote Mary Lou Hinchey to a GS-12 and make her whole for any loss of back wages.

(b) Post in the Milwaukee Area Office, of the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix" on forms to be furnished by the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed

SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY,
U.S. CUSTOMS SERVICE, REGION VII,
LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA
A/SLMR No. 926

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by the National Treasury Employees Union (NTEU) alleging that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by denying a unit employee her right to be represented by her exclusive representative at a formal discussion, and by denying the NTEU the right to be represented at the same formal discussion. The NTEU asserted that the meeting in question, a classification audit concerning a grievance, was a formal discussion within the meaning of Section 10(e) of the Order. The Respondent contended that the meeting was not a formal discussion.

In agreement with the Administrative Law Judge, the Assistant Secretary concluded that, in the circumstances herein, the meeting involved was an integral part of the grievance process and, thus, constituted a formal discussion within the meaning of Section 10(e). Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary found that the failure of the Respondent to afford the NTEU an opportunity to be represented at such meeting and the failure of the Respondent to afford the unit employee an opportunity to be represented by her exclusive representative constituted a violation of Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order. Under these circumstances, he ordered the Respondent to cease and desist from the conduct found violative of the Order and that it take certain affirmative actions.

DECISION AND ORDER

On July 5, 1977, Administrative Law Judge Randolph D. Mason issued his Recommended Decision and Order in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had engaged in certain unfair labor practices and recommending that it cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative actions as set forth in the attached Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order. Thereafter, the Respondent filed exceptions with respect to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order and the entire record in the subject case, including the Respondent's exceptions, I hereby adopt the findings, conclusions, and recommendations of the Administrative Law Judge.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 6(b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, and Section 203.26(b) of the Regulations, the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations hereby orders that the U.S. Customs Service, Region VII, Los Angeles, California, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Conducting formal discussions between management and unit employees, or their representatives, concerning grievances, without affording the National Treasury Employees Union, the employees' exclusive representative, the opportunity to be represented at such discussions.

(b) Interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Order by failing to afford the National Treasury Employees Union the opportunity to be represented at formal discussions between management and employees, or employee representatives, concerning grievances.

(c) Refusing the request made by Alice Kutscher, or any other employee in the bargaining unit, to be represented by a representative of the National Treasury Employees Union, the employees' exclusive representative, at any formal discussions between management and Alice Kutscher, or any other employee in the bargaining unit, concerning grievances.

(d) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights assured by Executive Order 11491, as amended.

2. Take the following affirmative actions in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Executive Order:

(a) Notify the National Treasury Employees Union of, and afford it the opportunity to be represented at, formal discussions between management and unit employees, or their representatives, concerning grievances.

(b) Post at its facility at the U.S. Customs Service, Region VII, Los Angeles, California, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix" on forms to be furnished by the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations. RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

Preliminary Statement

This proceeding heard in Los Angeles, California, on April 26, 1977, arises under Executive Order 11491, as amended. Pursuant to the regulations of the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations (hereinafter called the Assistant Secretary), a Notice of Hearing on Complaint was issued on December 13, 1976, with reference to alleged violations of sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order. Although originally scheduled for February 8, 1977, on January 19, 1977, the hearing was rescheduled for April 26, 1977, pursuant to an order issued by the Regional Administrator.

On August 5, 1976, the complaint in the instant case was filed by the National Treasury Employees Union (hereinafter the "Union"). The complaint alleged that the U. S. Customs Service, Region VII (hereinafter the "respondent") engaged in violations of sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Executive Order. The issues presented for decision are as follows:

(1) Whether the respondent violated sections 19(a)(1) and (6) by refusing to give the Union the opportunity to be represented at a meeting on May 20, 1976? This issue requires a determination of whether the meeting constituted a "formal discussion" within the meaning of section 10(e) of the Order; and,

(2) Whether the respondent violated section 19(a)(1) by denying an employee's request for assistance by the exclusive representative at the above meeting?

At the hearing, all parties were represented by counsel and afforded full opportunity to be heard, adduce evidence, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and argue orally. Thereafter, both parties filed excellent briefs which have been duly considered. Upon the entire record in this case, from my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, and from all of the testimony and evidence adduced at the hearing, I make the following findings, conclusions, and recommendations.

Findings of Fact

On April 28, 1976, the Union submitted a fourth-step grievance appeal to the Regional Commissioner of the U. S. Customs Service in Los Angeles, California, on behalf of various bargaining unit employees. This appeal was signed by Sigrid Helgren, who was the chief shop steward. One of these employees was Alice Kutscher, a GS-5 Manifest Clerk working in the cargo section of the respondent at the Los Angeles International Airport. It was the Union's position that Kutscher should have received a temporary promotion and retroactive pay for work done at a higher grade level. The Union relied upon section 1 of Article 10 of the negotiated agreement, which states, in part, as follows:

> The Employer agrees that an employee who is assigned to a position of higher grade for thirty (30) calendar days or more will be temporarily promoted and receive the rate of pay for the position to which he is temporarily promoted.

Kutscher contended that she had been assigned to the position of GS-6 Customs Entry Aid, and that she had performed the duties of that position in excess of 30 calendar days. Under the circumstances, she felt that she was entitled to a temporary promotion under the above-quoted provision of the agreement.

On May 12, 1976, Alice Kutscher attended a meeting with various representatives from management and the Union to discuss the fourth-step grievance. During the course of this meeting, Peggy Schoeny, who was Chief of the Position Classification and Management Branch of the Personnel Management Division, asked Kutscher to describe some of the duties of a GS-6 Customs Entry Aid. Management was not convinced that Kutscher had been performing this higher graded work. It was decided at this meeting that a resolution of the grievance could not be made until it was determined whether she had actually performed the required duties and had sufficient knowledge of the GS-6 position. The Union stated that one of its representatives would attend the later meeting.

Subsequently, George Candish, the Director of the Personnel Management Division directed Peggy Schoeny to hold a meeting with Kutscher to obtain the desired information. Schoeny scheduled this meeting for May 20, 1976.

Prior to the meeting on May 20, 1976, Kutscher called her Union representative, Sigrid Helgren, and asked her to represent her at the meeting with Schoeny. Helgren agreed and arrived in time for the meeting. Before the meeting started, Kutscher told Schoeny that she wanted Helgren to represent her. Helgren also told Schoeny that she wanted to attend the meeting. Schoeny refused to hold the meeting while Helgren was present because Candish had told her that no Union representative would be allowed to attend. After Helgren left, Schoeny held the meeting with Kutscher. No other people were present during this discussion.

This meeting lasted about one and a half hours. During the course of the meeting, Schoeny asked Kutscher to describe in detail the duties that she had performed in the GS-6 position. Kutscher also showed Schoeny various records, files, and notations that she had made while performing these duties. She also showed Schoeny a log indicating the dates that she performed these duties. Throughout the entire meeting, Schoeny took notes and verified Kutscher's knowledge of the position by referring to the official position description.

The following day, Schoeny made a formal written report to Candish, who was her immediate supervisor. In the report she briefly described her meeting with Kutscher and concluded that Kutscher must have been assigned to the GS-6 position in view of her extensive knowledge of its duties. Subsequently, Candish determined that Kutscher should receive the temporary promotion because he believed she had met the following requirements: (1) that she had actually performed the duties of a GS-6 Customs Entry Aid, and (2) that she had been assigned to the position for at least 30 calendar days.

Conclusions of Law

The first issue for consideration is whether the respondent violated section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by failing to afford the complainant Union an opportunity to be represented at the May 20, 1976, meeting between employee Kutscher and Schoeny. The latter was Chief of the Position Classification and Management Branch of the Personnel Management Division. The essential question to be resolved is whether this meeting constituted a formal discussion concerning a grievance within the meaning of section 10(e) of the Order. That section provides, in pertinent part, as follows:

> When a labor organization has been accorded exclusive recognition, it is the exclusive representative of > employees in the unit and is entitled to act for and to negotiate agreements covering all employees in the unit .... The labor organization shall be given the opportunity to be represented at formal discussions between management and employees or employee representatives concerning grievances, ...

The respondent contends that the meeting in question was merely an informal "desk audit" that was unrelated to the pending grievance. I disagree. The meeting was an integral part of the grievance process. In her grievance, Kutscher was requesting additional pay for work performed at a higher grade level. Management was not convinced that she had performed this work. One of the main reasons why the May 20 meeting was held was to determine whether she had, in fact, performed such work. At this meeting, the employee effectively proved her case and was subsequently given the relief requested. Since the meeting had a direct effect upon the disposition of the pending grievance, it necessarily constituted a discussion "concerning" a grievance within the meaning of section 10(e) of the Order. United States Air Force, McClellan Air Force Base, California, A/SLMR No. 830; Internal Revenue Service, Cincinnati District, Cincinnati, Ohio, A/SLMR No. 705.

Furthermore, I must conclude that the meeting constituted a "formal discussion" within the meaning of section 10(e). The meeting was an integral part of a formal, fourth-step grievance proceeding. Supervisor Schoeny asked Kutscher detailed questions regarding the duties that she had performed in the higher graded position. Schoeny took notes during the meeting and subsequently submitted a formal report to the Director of the respondent's Personnel Management Division. The latter individual made the ultimate determination as to the disposition of the grievance.

I must conclude that by failing to afford the complainant an opportunity to be represented at the May 20, 1976, meeting, the respondent violated section 19(a)(6) of the Order. United States Air Force, McClellan Air Force Base, California, A/SLMR No. 830; U. S. Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Pittsburgh District, Pittsburgh,Pennsylvania, A/SLMR No. 498. In addition, I find that the failure to allow the Union to be represented at this meeting had a restraining influence upon unit employees and had a concomitant coercive effect upon their rights assured by the Executive Order. Such conduct is a violation of section 19(a)(1) of the Order. Internal Revenue Service, Cincinnati District, Cincinnati, Ohio, A/SLMR No. 705.

The final issue presented for decision is whether the respondent violated section 19(a)(1) of the Order by refusing to allow employee Kutscher to be represented by the exclusive representative at the May 20, 1976, meeting. The Federal Labor Relations Council has held that an employee in a unit of exclusive recognition has a protected right under the last sentence of section 10(e) to the assistance or representation by the exclusive representative, upon the request of the employee, when he is summoned to a formal discussion with management concerning a grievance. Statement on Major Policy Issue, FLRC No. 75P-2 (December 2, 1976), Report No. 116. Respondent takes the position that Kutscher did not tell Schoeny of her desire to be represented by chief steward Sigrid Helgren. Schoeny testified that she did not recall Kutscher making such a request. However, I believe Kutscher's testimony that she did make her desire for representation known to Schoeny prior to the meeting. I must conclude that respondent violated section 19(a)(1) of the Order by denying Kutscher representation by her designated Union representative at the May 20, 1976, meeting.

RECOMMENDATION

Upon the basis of the foregoing findings of fact and conclusions of law and pursuant to section 6 (b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, and section 203.26(b) of the Rules and Regulations, I recommend that the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations adopt the following Order designed to effectuate the policies of Executive Order 11491, as amended.

RECOMMENDED ORDER

Pursuant to section 6(b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, and section 203.26(b) of the Rules and Regulations, the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations hereby orders that the Department of the Treasury, U. S. Customs Service, Region VII, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Conducting formal discussions between management and unit employees or their representatives, concerning grievances, personnel policies and practices, or other matters affecting general working conditions of employees in the unit without affording the National Treasury Employees Union, the employees' exclusive representative, the opportunity to be represented at such discussions.

(b) Interferring with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Order by failing to afford the National Treasury Employees Union the opportunity to be represented at formal discussions between management and employees or employee representatives concerning grievances, personnel policies and practices, or other matters affecting general working conditions of employees in the unit.

(c) Refusing the request made by Alice Kutscher, or any other employee in the bargaining unit, to be represented by a representative of the National Treasury Employees Union, the employees' exclusive representative, at any formal discussions between management and Alice Kutscher, or any other employee in the bargaining unit, concerning grievances, personnel policies and practices, or other matters affecting general working conditions of employees in the unit.

(d) In any like or related matter interferring with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights assured by Executive Order 11491, as amended.

2. Take the following affirmative actions in order to effectuate the purposes and provisions of the Executive Order.

(a) Notify the National Treasury Employees Union of, and afford it the opportunity to be represented at, formal discussions between management and unit employees, or their representatives, concerning grievances, personnel policies and practices, or other matters affecting general working conditions of employees in the unit.

(b) Post at its facility at the U. S. Customs Service, Region VII, Los Angeles, California, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix" on forms to be furnished by the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Regional Commissioner, U. S. Customs Service, Los Angeles, California, and they shall be posted for sixty (60) consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. The Regional Commissioner shall take reasonable steps to insure that such notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to section 203.27 of the Regulations, notify the Assistant Secretary in writing within twenty days from the date of this order as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATION,
FEDERAL AVIATION ADMINISTRATION,
O'HARE AIRWAY FACILITY SECTOR,
CHICAGO, ILLINOIS
A/SLMR No. 927

This case involved a petition filed by Professional Airways Systems Specialists (PASS) seeking an election in a unit described as all General Schedule and Wage Grade employees assigned to the Airway Facility Sector, O'Hare Airport, excluding all professional employees, clerk-stenographer, GS-0312, secretary, GS-0318, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, management officials and supervisors as defined in Executive Order 11491, as amended. The Activity contended that the unit sought by the PASS is inappropriate as the employees do not share a community of interest separate and distinct from other Agency employees, and that such a unit would lead to fragmentation and would not promote effective dealings or efficiency of Agency operations.

The Assistant Secretary found that the claimed unit is appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under the Order. In this regard, he noted that the claimed unit constitutes, in effect, a residual region-wide unit of all unrepresented nonprofessional employees of the Activity, and that such employees share a common mission, common overall supervision, generally similar job classification and duties, and enjoy uniform personnel policies and practices and labor relations policies. He also found that such unit would promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations, noting the long bargaining history in the petitioned for unit, and a recent experience of successful negotiations involving other sector-wide units.

Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary ordered an election in the unit found appropriate.

DECISION AND DIRECTION OF ELECTION

Upon a petition duly filed under Section 6 of Executive Order 11491, as amended, a hearing was held before Hearing Officer Timothy McGough. The Hearing Officer's rulings made at the hearing are free from prejudicial error and are hereby affirmed.

Upon the entire record in this case, 1/ including briefs submitted by the Activity and the Professional Airways Systems Specialists, herein referred to as PASS, the Assistant Secretary finds:

1/ The Regional Administrator referred to the Assistant Secretary the issue of the timeliness of a request to intervene filed by the Federal Aviation Science and Technology Association/National Association of Government Employees, hereinafter called FASTA/NAGE. The record reveals that the Notice of Petition in this matter was posted by the Activity on March 18, 1977. On March 22, 1977, the FASTA/NAGE sent a letter to the Washington, D.C. Area Office of the Labor-Management Services Administration (LMSA) indicating its desire to intervene in the subject petition. As the LMSA Chicago Area Office was the Office having jurisdiction over the processing of the petition, the FASTA/NAGE thereafter submitted its intervention request to that Office, which request was received on April 4, 1977.

Section 202.5(c) of the Assistant Secretary's Regulations provides, in effect, that no labor organization may participate to any extent in any pending representation proceeding unless within ten days after the initial posting of the Notice of Petition it has notified the appropriate Area Administrator, in writing, of its desire to intervene accompanied by its prescribed showing of interest. Under the circumstances herein, I find that the FASTA/NAGE's request to intervene was untimely. Thus, its letter to the Washington, D.C.

1. The labor organization involved claims to represent certain employees of the Activity.

2. In its petition, the PASS seeks an election in a unit consisting of all General Schedule and Wage Grade employees assigned to the Airway Facility Sector, O'Hare Airport, excluding all professional employees, clerk-stenographer, GS-0312, secretary, GS-0318, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, management officials and supervisors as defined in Executive Order 11491, as amended. The Activity contends that the unit sought is inappropriate as the employees in the unit do not share a community of interest separate and distinct from other Agency employees. Further, it asserts that such unit would lead to fragmentation and would not promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. The PASS, on the other hand, maintains that the claimed unit is appropriate as there are a number of similar exclusively represented units throughout the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) and that the unit sought herein has been a viable unit since 1970. In this regard, it contends that the claimed unit would not result in fragmentation or reduce effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations.

The mission of the FAA is to provide a safe and expeditious flow of aircraft in the national airspace system. To achieve its mission, the FAA has been organized into five major operating divisions, among which is the Airway Facilities Division. In addition, the FAA is further organized into a Headquarters, located in Washington, D.C., and twelve geographically defined regions, among which is the Great Lakes Region. Each FAA region is headed by a Regional Director and is divided into the five major operating divisions, each headed by a chief who reports to his Regional Director. The mission of the Airway Facilities Division in the Great Lakes Region is to install and maintain the equipment and facilities of the FAA within the Region. To achieve this mission, the Division is composed of six branches: the Facilities Equipment Branch, the Maintenance Program Branch, the Communication Branch, the Environment Support Engineering Branch, the Automation Engineering Branch, and the Radar Engineering Branch. The Division also contains 21 sectors, of which the Activity is one, each headed by a Sector Manager, who is responsible to the Division Chief.

The history of bargaining within the Airway Facilities Division of the FAA reveals that there are sector-wide units, in some instances less than sector-wide units, and region-wide units. On December 18, 1975, the Assistant Secretary issued a Decision and Direction of Elections in Federal Aviation Administration and Federal Aviation Administration, Eastern Region, A/SLMR No. 600, finding that either a region-wide, a nation-wide, or a sector-wide unit of Airway Facilities Division employees may be appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under the Order. 2/ With respect to the petitioned for unit herein, the record reveals that on July 14, 1970, the National Association of Broadcast Employees and Technicians, Local 401, AFL-CIO was certified as the exclusive representative. Thereafter, On December 16, 1975, pursuant to a Consent Election Agreement, the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Local 781, (Teamsters) was certified as the exclusive representative of the employees in the same unit. Subsequently, on October 26, 1976, as a result of the rejection by the membership of a negotiated agreement between the Activity and the Teamsters, the Teamsters disclaimed any interest in further representing the employees in the unit. 3/ The PASS filed the instant petition on March 4, 1977.

1/ Area Office was not submitted to the appropriate Area Adminstrator and its subsequent request for intervention, submitted to the appropriate LMSA Area Office specified on the Notice of Petition, was not received until after the prescribed ten-day posting period. Accordingly, I shall deny the FASTA/NAGE's request to intervene in this matter.

The record reveals that the claimed unit is composed of approximately 60 employees, the majority of whom are classified as Electronic Technicians, GS-0856 series. These employees are responsible for the installation and maintenance of all airspace system facilities within the geographic boundaries of the Activity. The qualifications for such employees are established on a nation-wide basis by the FAA, and all employees engaged in such functions must be certified based on these standardized qualifications. Further, the technical handbooks utilized by such employees have been developed nationally to provide uniformity in the maintenance of equipment nationally. As a result, the job skills and duties of the employees in the sought unit are substantially similar to those of similarly classified employees in the other sectors within the Region, as well as in other FAA Regions throughout the country.

Because of the existence of a large number of employees performing similar duties with similar skills that are easily transportable, there is a substantial amount of transfer of employees from one location to another. However, the record discloses little or no interchange or job related contact between employees in the claimed unit and other employees of the Division.

The record reflects that, consistent with the FAA policy of delegating authority with respect to personnel and labor relations matters to the lowest possible level, the authority for such matters has been delegated to the Regional Director, subject to FAA and Civil Service

2/ At the time of the filing of the petitions which resulted in the Decision and Direction of Elections in A/SLMR No. 600, the employees in the claimed unit herein were included in an exclusively recognized unit which was subject to an agreement bar. Therefore, the employees in the claimed unit were expressly excluded from the units found appropriate therein.

3/ I have been administratively advised that at the time of the filing of the instant petition the employees in the claimed unit were the only unrepresented Division employees within the Region.

guidelines. The area of consideration for promotions involving technicians is frequently determined by the number of qualified applicants available. Thus, while the area of consideration may be confined to an individual sector, it appears to be more frequently region-wide or nation-wide in scope. The area of consideration for reductions-in-force is generally region-wide, although it may be larger in the case of a large scale reduction.

With regard to the Agency's experience in bargaining in less than region-wide units, although the Activity argues that difficulty has been experienced in negotiating agreements with exclusive representatives in certain less than region-wide units, the record reveals that successful negotiations for new agreements have recently been concluded in three sector-wide units located in Minnesota without the participation of the Agency labor relations staff, and with minimal participation by the regional staff. Further, the record discloses that as recently as October 1976, the Activity and the Teamsters successfully negotiated an agreement covering the claimed unit, and there is no evidence to establish that since that time there has been a significant alteration in agency operations. 4/

Based on all the foregoing circumstances, I find that the unit sought herein constitutes a comprehensive grouping of employees who share a clear and identifiable community of interest. Thus, as noted above, all employees of the Activity share in a common mission, common overall supervision, generally similar job classifications and duties, and enjoy uniform personnel policies and practices and labor relations policies. In addition, the claimed unit constitutes, in effect, a residual region-wide unit of all unrepresented nonprofessional employees of the Activity. I find also that such unit will promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. Thus, as noted above, there has been a long bargaining history in the petitioned for unit, and a recent experience of successful and fruitful negotiations involving sector-wide units elsewhere.

Accordingly, I find that the following unit is appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under Section 10 of Executive Order 11491, as amended:

> All General Schedule and Wage Grade employees assigned to the Airway Facility Sector, O'Hare Airport, excluding all professional employees, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, employees classified clerk stenographer, GS-0312 and secretary, GS-0318, management officials and supervisors as defined in Executive Order 11491, as amended.

4/ As indicated above, the abortion of the negotiated agreement between the Activity and the Teamsters was not attributable to any change in the scope of the bargaining unit, effective dealings, or efficiency of agency operations. Rather, the membership rejected the agreement.

DIRECTION OF ELECTION

An election by secret ballot shall be conducted among the employees in the unit found appropriate as soon as possible but not later than 60 days from the date below. The appropriate Area Administrator shall supervise the election, subject to the Assistant Secretary's Regulations. Eligible to vote are those in the unit who were employed during the payroll period immediately preceding the date below including employees who did not work during that period because they were out ill or on vacation or on furlough, including those in the military service who appear in person at the polls. Ineligible to vote are employees who quit or who were discharged for cause since the designated payroll period and who have not been rehired or reinstated before the election date. Those eligible shall vote whether or not they wish to be represented for the purpose of exclusive recognition by the Professional Airways Systems Specialists.

A/SLMR No. 928

On October 31, 1975, the Assistant Secretary issued his Decision and Direction of Election in A/SLMR No. 575, finding, in essence, that the claimed unit, consisting of all professional and nonprofessional employees at the Regional Office, General Services Administration, Region 4, was appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under the Order. On February 15, 1977, the Federal Labor Relations Council (Council), before determining whether to accept or deny the Activity's petition for review, remanded the subject case to the Assistant Secretary for reconsideration and clarification in the light of the principles enunicated in its consolidated DCASR decision.

Upon a review of the record in this case, and in the light of the principles enunicated by the Council in its consolidated DCASR decision, the Assistant Secretary remanded the matter to the appropriate Regional Administrator for the purpose of securing additional evidence. In this regard, he suggested certain factors regarding "effective dealings" and "efficiency of agency operations" which should be fully developed.

SUPPLEMENTAL DECISION AND REMAND

On October 31, 1975, the Assistant Secretary issued his Decision and Direction of Election in the above captioned case in A/SLMR No. 575, finding, in essence, that the claimed unit, consisting of all professional and nonprofessional employees at the Regional Office, General Services Administration, Region 4, was appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under the Order. 1/ Thereafter, on February 15, 1977, the Federal Labor Relations Council (Council), before determining whether to accept or deny the Activity's petition for review in the instant case, remanded the subject case to the Assistant Secretary for reconsideration and clarification in the light of the principles it enunciated in its consolidated decision in Defense Supply Agency, Defense Contract Administration Services Region (DCASR), San Francisco, California, Defense Contract Administration Services District (DCASD), Salt Lake City, Utah, FLRC No. 75A-14; Defense Supply Agency, Defense Contract Administration Services Region, San Francisco, FLRC No. 75A-128; and Defense Supply Agency, Defense Contract Administration Services Region (DCASR), San Francisco, Defense Contract Administration Services District (DCASD), Seattle, Washington, FLRC No. 76A-4.

In view of the principles enunciated by the Council in its consolidated DCASR decision, cited above, I find that the record herein does not provide an adequate basis upon which to make the affirmative determinations regarding "effective dealings" and "efficiency of agency operations"

1/ I have been administratively advised that, pursuant to the Decision and Direction of Election in A/SLMR No. 575, a Certification of Representative was issued to the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2067, AFL-CIO, for the nonprofessional employee unit, and a Certification of Results of Election was issued with regard to the professional employee unit.

as required by the Council. 2/ Therefore, I shall remand the subject case to the appropriate Regional Administrator for the purpose of reopening the record to secure additional evidence. In this regard, it is noted that the Council held that the Assistant Secretary may not rely on the absence of specific countervailing evidence, but bears the responsibility to develop as complete a record as possible with regard to each of the three criteria set forth in Section 10(b) of the Order. Accordingly, evidence should be developed concerning, but not limted to, the following factors:

1. The past collective bargaining experience of the Activity and Agency.

2. The locus and scope of authority of the responsible personnel office administering personnel policies with regard to employees in the claimed unit.

3. The limitations, if any, on the negotiation of matters of critical concern to employees in the claimed unit, and how these concerns differ from other employees of the Activity and Agency.

4. The availability of personnel with expertise in labor relations matters at the level of the claimed unit in comparision to that of a more comprehensive unit.

5. The level at which labor relations policy is set in the Activity and Agency, and the effectuation of agency training in the implementation of negotiated agreements and grievance procedures covering employees in bargaining units as compared with the claimed unit and/or a more comprehensive unit.

6. Benefits to be derived from a unit structure which bears a relationship to the operational and organizational structure of the Agency.

7. Impact of the claimed unit on agency operations in terms of cost, productivity and use of resources, as compared to the impact of a more comprehensive unit.

ORDER

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the subject case be, and it hereby is, remanded to the appropriate Regional Administrator for appropriate action consistent herewith.

Honorable Bernard E. DeLury
Assistant Secretary of Labor

Washington, D.C. 20210

Re: General Services Administration, Regional Office, Region 4, A/SLMR No. 575, FLRC No. 76A-64

Dear Mr. DeLury:

Your attention is called to the petition for review filed with the Council by the agency in the above-entitled case. Copies of the case papers are enclosed herewith.

On December 30, 1976, the Council issued its consolidated decision in Defense Supply Agency, Defense Contract Administration Services Region (DCASR), San Francisco, California, Defense Contract Administration Services District (DCASD), Salt Lake City, Utah, A/SLMR No. 461, FLRC No. 75A-14; Defense Supply Agency, Defense Contract Administration Services Region, San Francisco, A/SLMR No. 559, FLRC No. 75A-128; and Defense Supply Agency, Defense Contract Administration Services Region (DCASR), San Francisco, Defense Contract Administration Services District (DCASD), Seattle, Washington, A/SLMR No. 564, FLRC No. 76A-4, setting aside and remanding the decisions of the Assistant Secretary in those cases. In its consolidated decision herein referred to as the consolidated DCASR decision, the Council set forth and further explicated the responsibilities of the Assistant Secretary which flow from section 10(b) of the Order and, in so doing, further emphasized the dual objectives of preventing further fragmentation of bargaining units as well as reducing existing fragmentation (at page 9):

> Before the Assistant Secretary may find that a proposed unit is appropriate for purposes of exclusive recognition under the Order, he must make an affirmative determination that the proposed unit satisfies equally each of the three criteria contained in section 10(b). That is, he must consider equally the evidence going to each of the three criteria and, as required by section 10(b), find appropriate only units which not only ensure a clear and identifiable community of interest but also promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. In making the affirmative determination that a proposed bargaining unit satisfies each of the three criteria, the Assistant Secretary must first develop as complete a record as possible, soliciting evidence from the parties as necessary, and then ground his decision upon a careful, thorough analysis of subsidiary factors or evidentiary considerations which provide a sharp degree of definition and precision to each of the three criteria. Finally, and most importantly, the Assistant Secretary must make the necessary affirmative determinations that a unit clearly, convincingly and equally satisfies each of the 10(b) criteria in recognition of and in a manner fully consistent with the purposes of the Order, including the dual objectives of preventing further fragmentation of bargaining units as well as reducing existing fragmentation, thereby promoting a more comprehensive bargaining unit structure.

Moreover, with respect to the Assistant Secretary's finding in A/SLMR No. 559 that the agency's views as to promoting effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations were "at most, speculative and conjectural," the Council held that such a finding "was inappropriate and a misconception of the nature of these criteria," noting that "[t]he speculative and conjectural nature of a contention, in these circumstances, does not in and of itself render the contention without merit," and finding that the contentions of the agency in that case were valid considerations to be weighed in determining whether the proposed unit would promote efficiency of agency operations. Further, with respect to A/SLMR No. 564, the Council held that "the Assistant Secretary may not rely upon 'the absence of any specific countervailing evidence . . . as to a lack of effective dealings and efficiency of operations' in other existing bargaining units to make an affirmative finding regarding these criteria in a proposed unit." In both cases, the Council concluded that the Assistant Secretary failed to meet his responsibilities under the Order with respect to the criteria of "effective dealings" and "efficiency of agency operations."

The Assistant Secretary decided the instant case, relying in part on his prior decisions in A/SLMR Nos. 559 and 564, which were set aside and remanded in the Council's consolidated DCASR decision. Likewise, the present case was resolved by the Assistant Secretary without the benefit of the detailed explication of the Assistant Secretary's responsibilities under section 10(b) of the Order as set forth in the DCASR decision.

Under these circumstances, the Council has decided to request clarification of the instant decision by you in the light of the consolidated DCASR decision before the Council determines whether to accept or deny the instant petition for review. Following the issuance of such clarification, the parties are granted thirty (30) days from the date of service thereof to file supplemental submissions with the Council, and twenty (20) days from the dates of service of such supplemental submissions to file respective responses thereto.

Pending the issuance of your decision as clarified, and the supplemental submissions and responses by the parties, the Council shall hold in abeyance its decision on acceptance or denial of the present appeal. Likewise, a decision on the agency's request for a stay of the Order in this case is held in abeyance, and, in accordance with section 2411.47(d) of the Council's rules, such order shall continue to be temporarily stayed.

By the Council.

Sincerely,

Henry B. Frazier III

Re: Department of State, Passport Office, Chicago Passport Agency, Chicago, Illinois, A/SLMR No. 697, FLRC No. 76A-147

Dear Mr. Warshaw:

Your attention is called to the petition for review filed with the Council by the agency in the above-entitled case. Copies of the case papers are enclosed herewith.

On December 30, 1976, the Council issued its consolidated decision in Defense Supply Agency, Defense Contract Administration Services Region (DCASR), San Francisco, California, Defense Contract Administration Services District (DCASD), Salt Lake City, Utah, A/SLMR No. 461, FLRC No. 75A-14; Defense Supply Agency, Defense Contract Administration Services Region, San Francisco, A/SLMR No. 559, FLRC No. 75A-128; and Defense Supply Agency, Defense Contract Administration Services Region (DCASR), San Francisco, Defense Contract Administration Services District (DCASD), Seattle, Washington, A/SLMR No. 564, FLRC No. 76A-4, setting aside and remanding the decisions of the Assistant Secretary in those cases. In its consolidated decision herein referred to as the consolidated DCASR decision, the Council set forth and further explicated the responsibilities of the Assistant Secretary which flow from section 10(b) of the Order and, in so doing, further emphasized the dual objectives of preventing further fragmentation of bargaining units as well as reducing existing fragmentation (at 9):

> Before the Assistant Secretary may find that a proposed unit is appropriate for purposes of exclusive recognition under the Order, he must make an affirmative determination that the proposed unit satisfies equally each of the three criteria contained in section 10(b). That is, he must consider equally the evidence going to each of the three criteria and, as required by section 10(b), find appropriate only units which not only ensure a clear and identifiable community of interest but also promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. In making the affirmative determination that a proposed bargaining unit satisfies each of the three criteria, the Assistant Secretary must first develop as complete a record as possible, soliciting evidence from the parties as necessary, and then ground his decision upon a careful, thorough analysis of subsidiary factors or evidentiary considerations which provide a sharp degree of definition and precision to each of the three criteria. Finally, and most importantly, the Assistant Secretary must make the necessary affirmative determinations that a unit clearly, convincingly and equally satisfies each of the 10(b) criteria in recognition of and in a manner fully consistent with the purposes of the Order, including the dual objectives of preventing further fragmentation of bargaining units as well as reducing existing fragmentation, thereby promoting a more comprehensive bargaining unit structure.

Moreover, with respect to A/SLMR No. 461, the Council held that "as to the contentions and supporting evidence which were put forward by the activity regarding [effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations], the Assistant Secretary failed to give such contentions and evidence full and careful consideration." Further, with respect to the Assistant Secretary's finding in A/SLMR No. 559 that the agency's views as to promoting effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations were "at most, speculative and conjectural," the Council held that such a finding "was inappropriate and a misconception of the nature of these criteria," noting that "[t]he speculative and conjectural nature of a contention, in these circumstances, does not in and of itself render the contention without merit," and finding that the contentions of the agency in that case were valid considerations to be weighed in determining whether the proposed unit would promote efficiency of agency operations. Finally, with respect to A/SLMR No. 564, the Council held that "the Assistant Secretary may not rely upon 'the absence of any specific countervailing evidence . . . as to a lack of effective dealings and efficiency of operations' in other existing bargaining units to make an affirmative finding regarding these criteria in a proposed unit." In each case, the Council concluded that the Assistant Secretary failed to meet his responsibilities under the Order with respect to the criteria of "effective dealings" and "efficiency of agency operations."

The Assistant Secretary decided the instant case relying, at least in part, on the basis of certain reasoning which the Council rejected in its consolidated DCASR decision as noted above, and without the benefit of the detailed explication of the Assistant Secretary's responsibilities under section 10(b) of the Order as set forth therein. Under these circumstances, the Council has decided to request clarification of the instant decision by you in the light of the consolidated DCASR decision before the Council determines whether to accept or deny the instant petition for review. Following the issuance of such clarification, the parties are granted thirty (30) days from the date of service thereof to file supplemental submissions with the Council, and twenty (20) days from the dates of service of such supplemental submissions to file respective responses thereto.

Pending the issuance of your decision as clarified, and the supplemental submissions and responses by the parties, the Council shall hold in abeyance its decision on acceptance or denial of the present appeal. Likewise, a decision on the agency's request for a stay of the Order in this case is held in abeyance, and, in accordance with section 2411.47(d) of the Council's rules, such order shall continue to be temporarily stayed.

By the Council.

Sincerely,

Harold D. Kessler

SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATION,
FEDERAL AVIATION ADMINISTRATION,
WESTERN REGION
A/SLMR No. 930

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by the National Association of Air Traffic Specialists (Complainant) alleging that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by refusing to recognize the Complainant's Western Regional Director at the Respondent's Stockton, California, facility when she attempted to file a grievance as the Complainant's representative. The Respondent took the position that under the parties' negotiated agreement the only union representatives who have the authority to institute formal grievance proceedings on behalf of employees are the Facility Representative or the Assistant Facility Representative.

The Administrative Law Judge concluded that the Respondent had not violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order. He found that the issue presented concerned a differing and arguable interpretation of the negotiated agreement, as distinguished from an action which would constitute a clear, unilateral breach of the negotiated agreement and, as such, should not be deemed to be violative of the Order. Accordingly, he recommended that the complaint be dismissed.

Noting particularly the absence of exceptions, the Assistant Secretary adopted the findings, conclusions and recommendation of the Administrative Law Judge, and ordered that the complaint be dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER

On June 9, 1977, Administrative Law Judge James J. Butler issued his Recommended Decision and Order in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had not engaged in the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint and recommending that the complaint be dismissed. No exceptions were filed to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order and the entire record in the subject case, and noting particularly that no exceptions were filed, I hereby adopt the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions, and recommendation.

ORDER

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the complaint in Case No. 70-5520(CA) be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

Statement of the Case

This case arises under Executive Order 11491, as amended. It was initiated by a complaint dated November 10, 1976. The complaint charged a violation of Sections 19(a)(1) and 19(a)(6) of the Executive Order on the basis of Respondent's alleged refusal to "recognize the Union Director, Ms. Dorothy Anderson at the Stockton Facility" when she attempted to file a grievance on behalf of an employee on May 19, 1976. The complaint was signed by Dorothy Anderson who identified herself on the title line as "National Secretary (Former Director)." Ms. Anderson is also referred to elsewhere in the record as the Union's "Regional Director." As will be seen, Ms. Anderson's exact representative capacity on behalf of the Union and its individual members in formal grievance procedures contemplated by the negotiated agreement between the Union and the agency is determinative of the issue presented by the complaint. It should be noted at the outset, however, that the contention of the complaint does not bear upon any grievance matter, but upon the failure of the Respondent to recognize Ms. Anderson in some representative capacity in the initiation of formal grievance procedures on behalf of a member of the Union employed at the Stockton Flight Service Station. It should also be noted that Mr. Edward L. Harris, Chief of the Stockton Flight Service Station, does not dispute Ms. Anderson's contention that he refused to entertain the formal grievance of May 19, 1976, which Ms. Anderson signed and served as a representative of the Union. (Ms. Anderson at first insisted that the employee involved had also signed the grievance instrument; but when confronted with the original document, quickly changed her mind.) It is Mr. Harris' position, however, that his refusal to entertain the grievance was based upon the uncontroverted fact that Ms. Anderson, whatever her official capacity might be, was not the "Facility Representative" or the "Assistant Facility Representative," and as Mr. Harris contends, it was either one of these two Union representatives who, pursuant to the express terms of the agreement in effect between the Union and the agency, enjoyed the exclusive authority to institute formal grievance proceedings on behalf of employees of the facility in question. It should also be expressly noted that Respondent has not taken the position at any time that an employee of the agency may not institute formal grievance proceedings in his or her own behalf. Thus, the sole issue presented in the instant proceeding is a dispute involving differing interpretations of the parties' negotiated agreement insofar as it pertains to Ms. Anderson's designated authority to represent the Union in dealing with FAA officials at the facility level.

Discussion, Findings and Conclusions

First, although it is a practice which should be avoided if at all possible, I deem it necessary to take official notice of the material adjudicative fact that at all times in question here, Ms. Dorothy Anderson was the duly designated Regional Representative of the Union in the particular FAA region wherein the facility involved in this matter was situated. This fact may be logically inferred from other facts in issue in the record and does not appear to be subject to reasonable dispute. Further, as this decision rests on official notice of a material fact which does not clearly appear from the evidence in the record, both parties are entitled, on timely request made within ten (10) days from the date hereof, to an opportunity to show to the contrary. 5 U.S.C. § 556(e) and 29 CFR 203.16(l).

The pertinent parts of the negotiated agreement between the parties are set out in Article 2, Sections 5, 6 and 7. They stipulate as follows:

> Section 5. The Parties agree that the Union may designate one Regional Representative and an alternate to function in his absense in each FAA region. The Union shall furnish the name and address of the Regional Representative on a current basis to the FAA Regional Director. The Parties agree that the Union may designate one principal Facility Representative and an alternate to function in his absense in each facility. The Regional Representative shall furnish the name of the principal Facility Representative on a current basis to the Facility Chief.
>
> Section 6. At those locations where there is a FAA Area Manager, the Union may designate a Facility Representative to be the Area Representative in dealing with the area office.

> Section 7. The Union representatives specified in the above Sections of the Article are the only individuals authorized to represent the Union in dealing with FAA officials at the respective levels specified in this Article. Exceptions to this Section may be mutually arranged at these respective levels, or higher.

It is plainly seen that Ms. Anderson was fully authorized to represent the Union in dealing with FAA officials and, in particular with Mr. Harris, at the regional level. Whether this authority at the regional level required Mr. Harris to recognize Ms. Anderson at the lesser level of the facility, as she seems to contend, or, in the alternative, whether Mr. Harris properly refused to entertain the formal grievance matter presented by Ms. Anderson in a representative capacity simply because the agreement between the parties provides that only a Facility Representative or his alternate may deal in a representative capacity with FAA officials at the "respective" level of a facility, as Respondent contends, are questions I need not reach in view of the nature of the allegations contained in the complaint. The mere fact that parties to a collective bargaining agreement legitimately entertain and urge conflicting interpretations of some of its controlling provisions will not, in itself, support a charge of an unfair labor practice by one party against the other. The positions of the parties to this dispute involving the meaning of the above set out sections of the written agreement between them are both fairly arguable. This is so even though the language of the applicable provision might readily suggest but a single interpretation to a more objective mind. "In this regard, the Assistant Secretary has held previously that alleged violations of a negotiated agreement which concern differing and arguable interpretations of such agreement, as distinguished from alleged actions which would constitute clear, unilateral breaches of the agreement, are not deemed to be violative of the (Executive) Order." Aerospace Guidance and Metrology Center, Newark Air Force Station, A/SLMR No. 677.

Recommended Decision and Order

For the reasons set forth above, I have concluded that Respondent's conduct complained of did not constitute a clear, unilateral breach of the negotiated agreement in effect between the parties hereto and recommend that the instant complaint be dismissed.

PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

VETERANS ADMINISTRATION,
VETERANS ADMINISTRATION HOSPITAL,
BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS
A/SLMR No. 931

This case involved an Application for Decision on Grievability-Arbitrability filed by the Veterans Administration, Veterans Administration Hospital, Boston, Massachusetts (Applicant). The Applicant contends that the grievance filed by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2143 (AFGE), concerning the selection of a first line supervisor, is not arbitrable under the parties' negotiated agreement. In response, the AFGE contends that the grievance, which concerns the application of the Applicant's Merit Promotion Policy in the selection of a first line supervisor, is subject to the negotiated grievance and arbitration procedure.

The Administrative Law Judge found that the issue raised by the grievance was grievable and arbitrable under the parties' negotiated agreement.

Noting particularly the absence of exceptions, the Assistant Secretary adopted the findings, conclusions and recommendation of the Administrative Law Judge and ordered the Applicant to take appropriate action to implement his finding.

DECISION ON GRIEVABILITY-ARBITRABILITY

On July 20, 1977, Administrative Law Judge Peter McC. Giesey issued his Recommended Decision and Order in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the grievance herein was grievable and arbitrable under the parties' negotiated agreement. No exceptions were filed to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order and the entire record in the subject case, and noting particularly the absence of exceptions, I hereby adopt the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendation. Thus, I find that the issue raised by the grievance herein concerns the application of the Applicant's Merit Promotion Policy, which matter is arbitrable under the parties' negotiated agreement.

FINDING

IT IS HEREBY FOUND that the grievance in Case No. 31-10003(AP) is subject to the arbitration procedure set forth in the parties' negotiated agreement.

1/ In his Recommended Decision and Order, the Administrative Law Judge inadvertently designated as the Applicant the labor organization herein, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2143. This inadvertent error is hereby corrected.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 6(a)(5) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, and Section 205.12(a) of the Regulations, it is hereby ordered that the Veterans Administration, Veterans Administration Hospital, Boston, Massachusetts, shall notify the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations in writing within 30 days from the date of this order as to what steps have been taken to comply with the above finding.

RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

This is a proceeding on application for determination of arbitrability filed pursuant to section 13(d) of Executive Order 11491, as amended (hereafter, "the Order") and the provisions of section 205 of the Regulations (40 Fed. Reg. 89 (1975).

A hearing was held in Boston, Massachusetts, on January 25, 1977. Briefly, the record shows the following circumstances.

Statement of the Case

In December, 1975, V.A. Hospital posted an announcement for the position of "Boiler Plant Operator Foreman". The names of three persons were referred to the Chief Engineer for consideration, and in January, 1976, one of these persons was selected. One of the three persons considered but not selected filed a grievance. The grievance was processed through the first three steps of the grievance procedure set forth in the collective bargaining agreement between the Union and V.A. Hospital.

After the third step rejection of the grievance, the Union requested arbitration in accordance with the collective bargaining agreement. At that time, V.A. Hospital disputed the grievability and arbitrability of the grievance under the agreement. The Union filed an application for decision on grievability or arbitrability.

The former chief of personnel of the V.A. Hospital acted as principal negotiator for management at negotiations which led to the effective collective bargaining agreement. He testified that he could not recall any discussion, during negotiations, of the grievability of promotion actions from unit positions to first line supervisory positions. 1/

1/ The pertinent portion of the collective bargaining agreement as contracted reads as follows:

ARTICLE XXVIII

NEGOTIATED GRIEVANCE PROCEDURE

Section 1. The purpose of this Article is to provide for a mutually acceptable method for the prompt and equitable settlement of grievances.

Section 2. A grievance is defined as an employee's "feelings of dissatisfaction with some aspect of employment or with a management decision affecting the employees covered by this contract". Union grievance is defined as a "grievance involving administrative decisions or policies affecting bargaining unit employees" (as differentiated from a specific supervisory action). (Continued)

This procedure will be the exclusive procedure for resolving grievances of employees in the Unit on matters involving:

a. The interpretation, application, or violation of this contract.

b. Disciplinary actions taken by station officials, application of agency policy or regulations or station Merit Promotion Policy.

Those matters covered by the VA Grievance Procedure as specified in Federal Personnel Manual, MP-5, Part I, Chapter 771, Section C, dated September 17, 1974.

In addition to those matters subject to statutory appeal procedures, the following are excluded from this grievance procedure:

(1) The content of published agency policy.

(2) Nonselection of promotion from a group of properly ranked and certified candidates in accordance with the station Merit Promotion Plan.

(3) An action terminating a tempory promotion within a maximum period of two years and returning the employee to the job classification and grade from which he was temporarily promoted.

(4) Nonadoption of a suggestion or disapproval of quality salary increase, performance award, or other kind of honorary or discretionary award.

(5) A preliminary warning or notice of a specific action, which if effected would be covered under the Grievance System (e.g. a notice of proposed reprimand), or would be excluded from coverage of this Section (e.g. an adverse warning of an unsatisfactory performance rating) However, a general (Continued)

The Hospital's personnel officer testified that, shortly after his arrival in Boston in April, 1976, the grievance at issue here was brought to his attention. He stated that, after reviewing the file, he "yelled for help" to the central office and was advised to dispute the grievability and arbitrability of the grievance. He did so.

The Union's assistant director of the contracts department testified that because of a history of difficulties in connection with questions of grievability and arbitrability - mainly delay in determination, - he instructed all local union presidents, district national vice presidents and national representatives concerning a "policy" intended to include in each negotiated collective bargaining agreement a requirement that management raise any question concerning grievability or arbitrability before the third step of the grievance procedure. He also testified that although he did not participate in the negotiation of the agreement between the Union and V.A. Hospital, he had occasion to advise the chief negotiator of that policy warning that some (unspecified) disciplinary action may be taken if certain deficiencies are not corrected would be covered.

(6) Separation during probationary period. However, management will advise the Union prior to notice of separation and will meet with the Union and employee upon request.

Section 3. Management agrees to request an agency decision on the grievability or arbitrability of a grievance prior to the consultation meeting with the Union representative at Step 3. A rejection of a grievance on the grounds that it is not a matter subject to this grievance proceudre or is not subject to arbitration shall be served upon the Union in writing and if alleged to be subject to statutory appeal procedures, shall state that it is the final rejection of the matter for the purpose of requesting a decision from the Assistant Secretary of Labor.

All disputes of grievability or arbitrability shall be referred to the Assistant Secretary of Labor.

on "at least three or four different contracts ... including the contract in question." 2/

A national representative of the Union, assigned to the Union's New England district testified that he served as the Union's chief negotiator in dealings with V.A. Hospital. He stated that in negotiating section 3 of Article XXVIII, the Union's underlying policy and purpose was fully explained to the management representative. He further testified that "the issue of ... threshold supervisory positions was not discussed" in the negotiation of Article XV, 3/ but that, while negotiating Article XXVIII (grievances) "the subject of threshold supervisory positions was discussed ... we said, certainly, that any action that affected unit employees first line supervisory positions would be covered under the grievance procedure." He further explained;

> ... we recognized at the [bargaining] table that the Union had no jurisdiction beyond the non-supervisory personnel, we were not discussing ... promotion action from one supervisory position to [an]other. We were discussing ... first line supervisory positions as they affect unit employees.

He testified that management representatives "raised the question and once the question was raised there was no further argument from management after we got through with our explanation as [to how the] actions affect[ed] unit employees."

Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law

All witnesses were credible. There were no contradictions concerning matters of substance. The only question of fact presented is whether the parties agreed to include within the negotiated grievance procedure grievances filed by members of the bargaining unit whose grievance is based upon their non-

2/ The contract includes a provision reflecting the policy. N.1, supra, sec. 3.

3/ Article XV concerns promotions, evaluations, detailing to positions of higher grade, reassignment and the employee's rights under the V.A.'s merit promotion program. No specific reference is made to promotion to, or evaluation for supervisory positions.

selection for first line supervisory positions. Because neither the wording of the collective bargaining agreement 4/ nor the Federal Labor Relations Council's interpretation of the Order precludes such inclusion, 5/ this record leaves no room to question the grievability and arbitrability of the grievance in question.

Thus, the Union's negotiator credibly testified to the parties having discussed the matter and having the basis for its inclusion explained without objection by management spokesmen. The fact that management's chief negotiator cannot recall the discussion does not detract from this uncontroverted evidence. Moreover, though neither probative nor corroborative, the fact that management neglected to raise the question concerning arbitrability until the third step of the grievance procedure was completed is consistent with the conclusion that management agreed until its agent's conversation with a third party (personnel at the central office) that the matter was within the grievable and arbitrable matters contemplated when Article XXVIII of the collective bargaining agreement was consumated. Had it a contrary view before the time the issue was raised, it was obligated by the terms of section 3 of the "Negotiated Grievance Procedure" in the contract to raise the question "prior to the consultation meeting with the Union representative at step 3."

It is perhaps unnecessary to point out that I am unwilling to believe that, because the TANG decision (n. 5, supra) had not been decided when this contract was negotiated, management's agents refrained from disputing the grievability of the subject matter of this case in the belief that Union negotiators would be misled into believing that they had obtained a contractual agreement on a matter which would later be determined to be non-negotiable. Such techniques have no place in good faith bargaining, and there is nothing on this record to indicate that the parties have ever dealt with one another in other than good faith.

5/ Texas ANG Council of Locals, AFGE and State of Texas National Guard, FLRC No. 74A-71, p. 4;

> ... the Agency may, at its option, bargain over the proposal but it is not obligated to do so under the Order.

Accordingly, I recommend that the Assistant Secretary determine that the application has merit and that this matter is grievable and should now be submitted to arbitration in accordance with the terms of the collective bargaining agreement.

SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

DEFENSE LOGISTICS AGENCY,
DEFENSE CONTRACT ADMINISTRATION
SERVICES REGION, CLEVELAND
A/SLMR No. 932

This case arose as the result of an RA petition filed by the Defense Logistics Agency, Defense Contract Administration Services Region, Cleveland, Ohio, in which it was contended by the Activity that due to the July 31, 1976, reorganization which disestablished its local Toledo office, the unit of all nonsupervisory General Schedule employees represented by the National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 142 (NFFE) was no longer appropriate. The NFFE contended that the reorganization was merely a "paper change" and that the unit as certified was still viable and extant.

The Assistant Secretary found that the July 31, 1976, reorganization, which abolished the Defense Contract Administration Services Office in Toledo (DCASO Toledo) effected a substantial change in both the scope and character of the exclusively recognized unit, the former DCASO Toledo, and, in effect, rendered such unit inappropriate. Thus, he concluded that the Activity was under no obligation to recognize the NFFE as the exclusive representative of the employees in such unit. The Assistant Secretary based his finding on the fact that the employees of the disestablished DCASO Toledo had been assigned to two separate Defense Contract Services Administration Management Areas (DCASMAs) where they are under separate personnel policies and practices, separate secondary supervision and have no job contacts with employees of other DCASMAs.

Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary ordered that the petition be dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER

Upon a petition duly filed under Section 6 of Executive Order 11491, as amended, a hearing was held before Hearing Officer Carolyn Hawkins. The Hearing Officer's rulings made at the hearing are free from prejudicial error and are hereby affirmed.

Upon the entire record in this case, including a brief filed by the National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 142, herein called NFFE, 1/ the Assistant Secretary finds:

On December 15, 1970, the NFFE was certified as the exclusive representative of a unit of all nonsupervisory General Schedule employees of the Defense Contract Administration Service Office, Toledo, Ohio, (DCASO Toledo). The Activity herein, the Defense Contract Administration Services Region (DCASR) Cleveland, filed the subject RA petition contending that due to a reorganization on July 13, 1976, the unit represented by the NFFE was no longer appropriate.

DCASR Cleveland is one of nine regions of the Defense Logistics Agency, formerly the Defense Supply Agency. Each region provides contract administration services and support for the Department of Defense as well as other Federal agencies. Prior to the July 31, 1976, reorganization, each region had a three-tiered organizational structure headed by a regional office (DCASR) with district offices (DCASDs), the secondary level, and supervising local offices, DCASOs, the third level. As a result of the reorganization, the local offices, DCASOs, were abolished and many of their functions were transferred to the former DCASDs which were designated as Defense Contract Administration Services Management Areas (DCASMAs). The DCASMAs now perform the basic mission functions of the region in their respective areas.

As a result of the disestablishment of DCASOs, there was a significant reduction in the number of Activity employees within the former DCASO Toledo area, from 89 to 39. Geographic boundaries were shifted so that the DCASO Toledo area was divided approximately evenly between two new DCASMAs located in Cleveland and Detroit. The Activity asserts that the net effect of the disestablishment of the DCASOs in Columbus, Toledo and Akron has been to cause such a substantial change in the character and scope of each of the bargaining units at those locations so as to warrant a finding that all former Akron, Toledo and Columbus DCASO employees, as well as all other DCASR Cleveland elements in North Central and Northeast Ohio, should now be represented by a single labor organization. The Activity also argues that since, under the reorganization, a substantial portion of former DCASO Toledo employees are now assigned to DCASMA Detroit, and since a single organization presently represents employees in DCASMAs located in Grand Rapids and Detroit, it would be appropriate to have the same labor organization represent the employees in the Toledo area as well.

The NFFE, on the other hand, contends that the reorganization, which led to the disestablishment of the DCASO Toledo and the dividing of its personnel between the DCASMA Cleveland and DCASMA Detroit, was merely a "paper change," and that the unit as certified is still extant and viable. According to the NFFE, the 39 employees who remain in the former DCASO Toledo area remain in the same location, perform the same duties, and are under the same immediate supervision as before the reorganization.

The record reveals that as a result of the reorganization, personnel and managerial authority over the former DCASO Toledo were delegated to DCASMA Cleveland and DCASMA Detroit. The reduction in the number of DCASO Toledo employees occurred when 14 positions were abolished. Twenty-three employees were separated and numerous employees were transferred to other areas. Of the original DCASO Toledo workforce, 34 persons were transferred to DCASMA Detroit and 16 were transferred to DCASMA Cleveland. And of the 39 employees still within what was the former DCASO Toledo area are 27 employees in Toledo performing quality control functions who are now assigned to the Toledo Operational Branch of the Quality Assurance Division, DCASMA Detroit, and 12 employees in Mansfield, Ohio, who are now assigned to the Mansfield Branch of DCASMA Cleveland's Quality Assurance Division.

The evidence establishes that those employees who remain in the former DCASO Toledo area have remained at the same physical location, under the same immediate supervision, and continue to perform the same functions as prior to the reorganization. However, the record also discloses that there has been no job contact subsequent to the reorganization between employees of the former Toledo area now belonging to DCASMA Detroit and those in the Mansfield area now assigned to DCASMA Cleveland. Further, as a result of the reorganization, personnel decisions formerly made at the DCASO level are now being made by the Region and the new DCASMAs.

In view of the foregoing, and noting particularly that the employees of the disestablished DCASO Toledo have been assigned to two separate DCASMAs of the Activity where they are subject to separate personnel policies and practices, separate secondary supervision, and have no job contacts with employees of other DCASMAs, I find that the July 31, 1976, reorganization of the Cleveland DCASR, which abolished the DCASO Toledo, effected a substantial change in both the scope and character of the exclusively recognized unit and thus rendered such unit inappropriate. Furthermore, the former unit recognition does not comport with the current organizational structure of the Region, and, in my view, no longer promotes effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. Consequently, I find that the Activity is under no obligation to recognize the NFFE as the exclusive representative of the employees in such unit. 2/

Accordingly, and noting that the evidence herein was considered insufficient to establish that the employees who transferred to DCASMAs Cleveland and Detroit constituted an accretion to the existing units in such DCASMAs, I shall order the petition herein be dismissed. 3/

ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS
SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

ROCKY MOUNTAIN ARSENAL,
DENVER, COLORADO
A/SLMR No. 933

This proceeding arose upon the filing of an amended unfair labor practice complaint filed by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2197 (Complainant) alleging, in substance, that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by conducting a meeting with unit employees without notifying the Complainant in advance.

The Administrative Law Judge recommended that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety. He concluded that the disputed meeting was not a "formal discussion" within the meaning of Section 10(e) of the Order because the Respondent made no effort to bargain or negotiate with unit employees on any of the matters discussed at the meeting, nor did it make any offers, proposals, or suggestions as to what course of action the employees should pursue. Further, he found no evidence to support a finding that the Respondent's conduct resulted in interference, restraint, or coercion of unit employees.

The Assistant Secretary found that the meeting in question concerned a discussion between agency management and unit employees with respect to the procedures to implement the agreement between the Respondent and the Complainant regarding the voluntary reassignment of employees, clearly a matter having impact on the general working conditions of employees in the unit. Consequently, the Assistant Secretary found that the contested meeting constituted a formal discussion within the meaning of Section 10(e). However, as the evidence further established that the Complainant was represented at the meeting by its president and its shop steward, the Assistant Secretary concluded that the Section 10(e) requirement that an exclusive representative have the opportunity to be represented at formal discussions was fulfilled. Under these circumstances, he found that the Respondent's conduct herein was not violative of Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order.

Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary concurred in the recommendation of the Administrative Law Judge and ordered that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety.

DECISION AND ORDER

On July 15, 1977, Administrative Law Judge John D. Henson issued his Recommended Decision and Order in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had not engaged in the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint and recommending that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety. 1/

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order and the entire record in the subject case, I hereby adopt the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendation, as modified herein.

In recommending dismissal of the complaint herein, the Administrative Law Judge determined, among other things, that a meeting held by the Respondent with unit employees on March 17, 1976, was not a "formal discussion" within the meaning of Section 10(e) of the Order. I disagree. Thus, the contested meeting concerned a discussion between agency management and unit employees with respect to the procedures to implement the parties' agreement for the voluntary reassignment of employees, clearly a matter having impact on the general working conditions of employees in the unit. 2/ Consequently, I find that the March 17, 1976, meeting constituted a formal discussion within the meaning of Section 10(e). However, as the evidence further establishes that the Complainant was represented at the meeting by its president and its shop steward, I conclude that the Section 10(e) requirement that an exclusive representative have the opportunity to be represented at formal discussions was fulfilled. Under these circumstances, I find that the Respondent's conduct herein was not violative of Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order and shall order that the instant complaint be dismissed.

RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

Statement of the Case

Pursuant to an amended complaint filed on February 2, 1977, under Executive Order 11491, as amended, by American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2197, hereinafter called the Complainant, against the Rocky Mountain Arsenal, Department of the Army, Denver, Colorado, hereinafter called the Respondent, a notice of hearing on complaint was issued by the Regional Administrator for the Kansas City Region on February 17, 1977.

The Complainant alleges that the Respondent violated section 19 (a)(1) and (6) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, by meeting with unit employees without notifying the Complainant in advance of said meeting, thereby denying Complainant the opportunity to request negotiations on the subject matter of said meeting.

A hearing was held in the captioned matter on May 3, 1977, in Denver, Colorado. All parties were afforded full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and to introduce evidence bearing on the issues involved herein.

Upon the entire record, including my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, the exhibits and other relevant evidence adduced at the hearing, I make the following findings of fact, conclusions and recommendations.

Findings of Fact

1. In the early part of February 1976, Respondent detailed approximately 20 employees of its Denver facility to a new division within the facility and referred to as the "honest John" project which was then under construction but nearing completion. It was stipulated that Respondent may detail, i.e., to select and dispatch for a particular duty, unit employees for a period of 120 days pending formal reassignment procedures. The immediate detailing of personnel was made at that time in order to implement a familiarization and training program prior to commencing actual operational procedures.

2. On February 23, 1976, Respondent and Complainant met to discuss the formal reassignment. Under existing Civilian Personnel Regulations, an employee may voluntarily consent to a reassignment. Whenever the employee fails to consent to reassignment, the employee must be given an advance notice setting forth the reasons for the proposed reassignment and the reasons why he was selected, and giving him an opportunity to reply.1/ It was agreed by Respondent and Complainant at the February 23, 1976, meeting that unit employees shall first be given the opportunity to either consent to the reassignment or proceed under the involuntary procedure of the regulations.

3. In order to implement and document the agreement for voluntary reassignment, the personnel office of Respondent issued and distributed U. S. Civil Service Commission Standard Form 52, which is entitled Request For Personnel Action, with the request that those employees consenting to the reassignment sign the Form 52 and return it to the personnel office.

4. After receipt of the Forms 52 and prior to March 17, 1976, there was much concern among the employees as to how to execute the voluntary reassignment and the implications involved.

5. On March 17, 1976, Carl Loven, plant manager, informed the employees that it was necessary to respond to the personnel office concerning their decision to sign or not to sign the Form 52. Two or three of the employees requested permission to go to the personnel office to seek information concerning the Civilian Personnel Regulations aspects of signing. Permission was granted and a canvas of the remaining employees disclosed that about all the employees wanted to seek information from the personnel office before making their decision.

6. Carl Loven decided that it would disrupt plant operations for all employees to leave the job site and, as an alternative, made arrangements for Connie Martin of the personnel office to come to the job site during the lunch period to answer questions of employees "regarding the Administrative implications of these personnel regulations" (T. 74).

7. Carl Loven informed Mr. Crane, union steward, of the meeting with Connie Martin and attempted to locate Gilbert Espinoza, President of Local Union 2197. Mr. Espinoza was away from the job site on union business but was later informed of the meeting by Carl Loven at about 11:00 a.m. Mr. Espinoza voiced no objection to the meeting when informed by Carl Loven.

8. At approximately 1:00 p.m., Connie Martin arrived at the plant and was met by Mr. Espinoza who informed her that he objected to the meeting.

1/ See Civilian Personnel Regulation 300, Chapter 335.

9. The discussion at the meeting was opened by Carl Loven who informed the employees that Connie Martin was there to answer any questions concerning the reassignment action. Mr. Crane and Mrs. Espinoza were present. Connie Martin answered numerous questions of employees concerning the procedure to implement the agreement for a voluntary reassignment. She also advised the employees of the applicable regulations for involuntary reassignment.

Discussion and Conclusion

Complainant takes the position that the meeting of March 17, 1976, between Connie Martin of the personnel office of Respondent and unit employees amounted to an attempt by Respondent to bypass Complainant as exclusive representative and to negotiate directly with unit employees. It relies on the decision in Department of the Navy, Naval Air Station, Fallon, Nevada, A/SLMR No. 587, FLRC No. 74A80 (November 26, 1975).

The Decision in that case does not have the broad sweep given to it by Complainant's interpretation.

The obligation of Respondent with regard to the participation of Complainant in meetings or discussions with unit employees are set out in section 10(e) of the Order. That section provides that the labor organization shall be given the opportunity to be represented at formal discussion between management and employees or employee representative concerning grievances, personnel policies and practices, or other matters affecting general working conditions of employees in the unit.

The language of section 10(e) is clear that it is not the intent of the Order to grant to an exclusive representative a right to be represented in every discussion between agency management and employees. Rather, such a right exists only when the discussions are determined to be formal discussions and concern grievances, personnel policies and practices, or other matters affecting the general working conditions of unit employees.2/

2/ See National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA), Washington, D. C. and Lyndon B. Johnson Space Center (NASA) Houston, Texas and American Federation of Government Employees, Local Union 2284, AFL-CIO, A/SLMR No. 457, FLRC No. 74A-95 (September 26, 1975)

It is clear from the record in the instant case that there had been discussions between Complainant and Respondent as to whether or not the reassignment could be made on a voluntary basis. That issue was resolved at the February 23, 1976, meeting or at least is not objected to by Complainant (T. 8 and 32). Only the individual employee could make the voluntary decision. It is equally apparent that the employees, including Mr. Espinoza, Local President and Mr. Crane, Local Steward, were seeking information before making that decision. They individually chose to avail themselves of information from the personnel office and so expressed themselves to Carl Loven, plant manager. Carl Loven concluded that the information could best be supplied by Connie Martin of the personnel office making herself available at the job site.

The record further reflects and I so find that Carl Loven or Connie Martin made no effort to bargain or negotiate on any of the issues involved in the reassignment nor did they make any offers, proposals or suggestions as to what course of action the employees should pursue.

I therefore conclude that the meeting of March 17, 1976, was not a "formal discussion" within the meaning of section 10(e) of the Order.

Having concluded that the meeting of March 17, 1976, was not a "formal discussion" within the meaning of section 10(e) and considering the entire record, I find no evidence to support a finding that the conduct of Respondent resulted in interference with, restraint, or coercion of unit employees in the exercise of their rights under section 19(a)(1) of the Order.

I further fail to find any evidence in the record to support a finding that Respondent refused to consult, confer, or negotiate with Complainant as required by section 19(a)(6) of the Order.

Recommendation

Having found that Respondent has not engaged in conduct violative of section 19(a)(1) and (6) of Executive Order 11491, I recommend that the complaint herein be dismissed in its entirety.

ELECTRONICS ENGINEERING DIVISION, PACIFIC MARINE CENTER,
NATIONAL OCEAN SURVEY,
NATIONAL OCEANIC AND ATMOSPHERIC ADMINISTRATION,
U.S. DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
SEATTLE, WASHINGTON
A/SLMR No. 934

This case arose as the result of a petition filed by the National Weather Service Employees Organization, Branch 4-29, MEBA, AFL-CIO (NWSEO) seeking an election in a unit of all employees of the Activity, one of the four land-based Divisions of the Pacific Marine Center (PMC). The Radio Officers Union contended that the General Schedule (GS) Electronics Technicians, who make up the bulk of the employees of the Activity, accreted to its pre-existing unit of Electronics Technicians aboard the vessels of the PMC when the Activity was established in 1973, that it has represented the GS Electronics Technicians since that time, and that there are insufficient reasons for severing the GS Electronics Technicians from the unit which it currently represents. The Activity was neutral with respect to the question of whether the GS Electronics Technicians accreted to the pre-existing Radio Officers Union unit. It contended, however, that should the Assistant Secretary find that the GS Electronics Technicians did not accrete to the pre-existing unit, the unit petitioned for by the NWSEO was an appropriate unit.

Under all the circumstances, the Assistant Secretary found that the GS Electronics Technicians who rotate aboard the ships of the PMC are an integral part of the PMC Electronics Technician unit exclusively represented by the Radio Officers Union as, since the establishment of the rotating GS Electronics Technicians' program, the employees of the Activity assigned to that program have been administratively and functionally integrated into the Radio Officers Union's existing unit of PMC Electronics Technician employees and share a clear and identifiable community of interest with such employees. Having found that the bulk of the employees sought in this matter by the NWSEO had accreted to the existing Radio Officers Union unit at the PMC, the Assistant Secretary noted that the NWSEO's petition was, thus, tantamount to a request for severance of the subject employees from the existing exclusively recognized unit. The Assistant Secretary concluded that there were no unusual circumstances in the instant case warranting a severance of the rotating GS Electronics Technicians from the unit represented by the Radio Officers Union. Accordingly, he ordered that the NWSEO's petition be dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER

Upon a petition duly filed under Section 6 of Executive Order 11491, as amended, a hearing was held before Hearing Officer John Scanlon. The Hearing Officer's rulings made at the hearing are free from prejudicial error and are hereby affirmed.

Upon the entire record in this case, including briefs filed by the Activity and the Party-in-Interest, Radio Officers Union, AFL-CIO, the Assistant Secretary finds:

1. The labor organizations involved claim to represent certain employees of the Activity.

2. The Petitioner, National Weather Service Employees Organization, Branch 4-29, MEBA, AFL-CIO, hereinafter called NWSEO, seeks an election in a unit of all employees of the Activity, including regular part-time employees and temporary full-time and part-time employees with a reasonable expectation of continuing employment, excluding professionals, management officials, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, guards, supervisors, and units subject to agreement bars. 3/ In the alternative, the NWSEO indicates its willingness to represent a unit limited to the Electronics Technicians employed by the Activity. The NWSEO contends that the employees in the unit sought have a community of interest separate and distinct from other employees of the Pacific Marine Center (PMC) and that such a unit would promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations.

The Radio Officers Union takes the position that the General Schedule (GS) Electronics Technicians, who make up the bulk of the employees of the Activity, accreted to its pre-existing unit of Electronics Technicians aboard the vessels of the PMC when the Activity was established in 1973, that it has represented the GS Electronics Technicians since that time, and that there are insufficient reasons presented for severing the GS Electronics Technicians from the unit which it currently represents.

The Activity is neutral with respect to the question of whether the GS Electronics Technicians accreted to the existing Radio Officers Union unit. It contends, however, that should the Assistant Secretary find that the GS Electronics Technicians did not accrete to such unit, the unit petitioned for by the NWSEO is an appropriate unit.

The PMC is one of two such centers operated by the National Ocean Survey (NOS). Its mission is to direct the operation of oceangoing survey ships, maintain a base for the ships, and operate shore facilities for the processing of various types of data. It is headed by a Director, who reports directly to the Director, NOS. The PMC has four land-based Divisions: Operations, Marine Engineering, Processing, and Electronics Engineering, the Activity herein. In addition, there are 13 ships assigned to the PMC. The Activity is responsible for the maintenance, installation and repair of the electronics equipment at the PMC and on board its ships. There are approximately 80 eligible employees working at the land-based operations of the PMC.

On March 7, 1969, the Director, PMC, granted exclusive recognition to the Radio Officers Union for a unit of all Electronics Technicians and Radio Operators aboard the vessels under his jurisdiction. A negotiated agreement between the Radio Officers Union and the Coast and Geodetic Survey, the predecessor agency of the NOS, became effective on July 21, 1970. This agreement covered, in part, employees in Electronics Technician and Communication Technician positions on the vessels under the jurisdiction of the Director, PMC. 4/ There were two subsequent negotiated agreements covering the same employees, entered into on August 5, 1971, and August 4, 1972. The August 4, 1972, agreement, by its terms, terminated on June 15, 1973, and was then extended for 90 days by the agreement of the parties. On May 8, 1977, the NOS and the Radio Officers Union entered into a new agreement covering, in part, employees on vessels under the jurisdiction of the Director, PMC, who are assigned to Electronics Technician positions. 5/

In August 1973, officials of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA), the parent agency of the NOS, met with the national president of the Radio Officers Union for the purpose of outlining an Electronics Support Program which NOS intended to implement. The program would gradually replace the Wage Marine Electronics Technicians working at that time aboard the NOS vessels with GS Electronics Technicians. The latter would rotate between sea duty aboard the NOS vessels and shore duty at the NOS Centers. The PMC began implementing this program in December 1973. Wage Marine employees are not subject to the Civil Service requirements of the Federal competitive service. The record reveals that all of the civilian employees aboard NOS vessels were Wage Marine personnel until the establishment of the rotation program.

At the time of the hearing, the Activity herein, which was created to implement the Electronics Support Program, consisted of 31 full-time nonsupervisory employees. This included 26 GS Electronics Technicians, a Clerk-Typist, a Program Support Assistant, a Wage Grade Laborer and a Wage Grade Instrument Repairman. Of the 26 GS Electronics Technicians, 19 participate in the rotation program. Thus, they spend alternating 60-day periods assigned first to a ship and then to the PMC. However, they are assigned to sea duty only during the field season of the PMC's vessels, which averages nine months a year. At all other times, they are assigned to the Activity. At the time of the hearing, there were also 19 Wage Marine Electronics Technicians who were assigned to their vessels for the full field season. While on shore, the GS Electronics Technicians are supervised by an Engineer who reports directly to the Chief of the Activity. While at sea, both the Wage Marine and the GS Electronics Technicians are part of the Engineering Department aboard the ship on which they are sailing, and they are supervised by a department head, who is the senior GS or Wage Marine Electronics Technician on board, who, in turn, reports to the ship's commander. The department head makes all task assignments while aboard ship. The qualifications of the Wage Marine and the GS Electronics Technicians are similar and there is no distinction in the work they perform or the equipment they maintain while at sea.

4/ The agreement also covered a similar unit represented by the Radio Officers Union at the Atlantic Marine Center.

5/ The International Association of Machinists, Hope Lodge 79, AFL-CIO, represents the employees of the Processing Division of the PMC. Other shipboard employees of the PMC are represented by various maritime unions. The remaining employees of the PMC are unrepresented.

Since the inception of the Electronics Support Program, three Wage Marine Electronics Technicians have converted to GS status and one GS Electronics Technician converted to Wage Marine status. While the Activity's supervisors are responsible for granting sick leave, shore leave, and annual leave for the GS Electronics Technicians, even while they are at sea, such decisions are made for all practical purposes by the vessel's commander.

Under all the foregoing circumstances, I find that the GS Electronics Technicians who rotate aboard the ships of the PMC are an integral part of the PMC Electronics Technicians unit exclusively represented by the Radio Officers Union. Thus, since the establishment of the rotating GS Electronics Technician program, the employees of the Activity assigned to that program have been administratively and functionally integrated into the Radio Officers Union's existing unit of PMC Electronics Technicians employees and share a clear and identifiable community of interest with such employees. In this regard, the evidence establishes that the rotating GS Electronics Technicians have similar job skills, and for a substantial portion of their working time, similar functions, supervision, and working conditions with respect to the employees in the existing unit. All of the employees involved share similar personnel policies and practices established by NOAA's Area Personnel Office and the Director, PMC, and there have been employee transfers between the GS and Wage Marine Electronics Technician categories. Moreover, the inclusion of the rotating GS Electronics Technicians into the unit represented by the Radio Officers Union, under the circumstances outlined above, will, in my view, promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations and reduce unit fragmentation.

As the bulk of the employees sought herein by the NWSEO have accreted to the existing Radio Officers Union unit at the PMC, the NWSEO's petition is tantamount to a request for severance of the subject employees from the existing exclusively recognized unit. In this regard, it has been held previously that, absent unusual circumstances, severance from an established more comprehensive unit will not be permitted. I find that no unusual circumstances in the instant case exist warranting severance of the rotating GS Electronics Technicians from the existing unit represented by the Radio Officers Union. 6/ The record indicates that the Radio

Officers Union has, since the inception of the rotating GS Electronics Technicians' program, considered these employees to be part of its exclusively recognized unit at the PMC. There is no evidence that the Radio Officers Union has failed to represent GS Electronics Technician employees or that it has treated them in a manner inconsistent with its representation of other unit employees. Accordingly, I shall order that the NWSEO's petition be dismissed. 7/

SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

DEPARTMENT OF THE AIR FORCE,
4392nd AEROSPACE SUPPORT GROUP,
VANDENBERG AFB, CALIFORNIA
A/SLMR No. 935

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by the National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1001 (NFFE) alleging that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by unilaterally changing the negotiated agreement regarding procedures the NFFE's president was to use for obtaining official time for representational activities in a manner which constituted a clear, unilateral breach of the agreement. It was also alleged that the Respondent violated the Order by changing past practice regarding the securing of official time, and that the changed procedures interfered with, restrained and coerced the NFFE's president, an independent violation of Section 19(a)(1).

The Administrative Law Judge recommended that the complaint be dismissed. He found that the procedures for obtaining official time were arguably within the meaning of the negotiated agreement, and that absent evidence of a flagrant and deliberate breach, the proper forum for resolution of the issue is the negotiated grievance procedure. The Administrative Law Judge also found that the negotiated agreement superseded any past practice that may have been established regarding the securing of official time for representational activities, and that the Respondent acted with due diligence in attempting to gain the NFFE president's compliance with the negotiated agreement. The Administrative Law Judge also concluded that the NFFE failed to sustain its burden of proving any independent 19(a)(1) violations, including the allegation that its president was treated differently from its other officers and stewards.

The Assistant Secretary adopted the recommendations of the Administrative Law Judge and ordered that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety.

DECISION AND ORDER

On June 16, 1977, Administrative Law Judge Randolph D. Mason issued his Recommended Decision and Order in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had not engaged in the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint and recommending that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety. Thereafter, the Complainant filed exceptions and a supporting brief with respect to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order and the Respondent filed a response to the Complainant's exceptions. 1/

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order and the entire record in the subject case, including the Complainant's exceptions and a supporting brief and the Respondent's response thereto, I hereby adopt the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendations.

1/ The Respondent filed a Motion to Quash and Dismiss the exceptions submitted by Marie Brogan on behalf of the Complainant based, in part, on its contention that NFFE Local 1001 has been in trusteeship since May 1, 1977, and its locally elected officers, including Brogan, have been displaced. In the absence of a disclaimer by any representative of NFFE Local 1001 that Brogan had standing to file exceptions on its behalf, the Respondent's Motion is hereby denied.

RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

Preliminary Statement

This proceeding heard in Santa Maria, California, on February 10, 1977, arises under Executive Order 11491, as amended. Pursuant to the Regulations of the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations (hereinafter called the Assistant Secretary), a Notice of Hearing on Complaint was issued on December 7, 1976, with reference to alleged violations of section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order. Although originally scheduled for January 5, 1977, the hearing was rescheduled for February 10, 1977, pursuant to an order issued by the Regional Administrator.

On December 23, 1975, the complaint in the instant case was filed by Marie C. Brogan, President of the National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1001 (hereinafter the "Union"). The complaint alleged that the 4392nd Aerospace Support Group, Vandenberg Air Force Base, California (hereinafter the "respondent") engaged in a number of violations within the ambit of section 19(a)(1), (2) and (6) of the Executive Order. The issues properly presented for decision are whether certain actions by respondent prior to the filing on October 31, 1975, of the pre-complaint charge violated the Order by (1) unilaterally modifying the terms of the collective bargaining agreement regarding the procedure to be taken by a Union officer for obtaining official time for union-related duties, (2) by changing the Union president's past practice with respect to the securing of official time, and (3) by interfering with or restraining the Union president in the exercise of a right assured her under the Order. Issues not raised at the hearing or on brief are deemed abandoned.

The complaint also alleges certain violations of the Order arising out of events that occurred subsequent to the filing of the pre-complaint charge on October 31, 1975, but prior to the filing of the complaint on December 23, 1975. These allegations were dismissed by the Regional Administrator on the ground that they were not filed timely in accordance with the requirements of § 203.2 of the Regulations of the Assistant Secretary. That section of the Regulations provides that the complaint must be limited to the matters raised in the pre-complaint charge. In view of the fact that the events occurring between October 31 and December 23, 1975, were not raised in a charge, the Assistant Secretary upheld the dismissal of the allegations pertaining to these events. Therefore, these untimely allegations will not be considered in the instant proceeding.

At the hearing, all parties were represented by counsel and afforded full opportunity to be heard, adduce evidence, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and argue orally. Thereafter, both parties filed briefs which have been duly considered. Upon the entire record in this case, from my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, and from all of the testimony and evidence adduced at the hearing, I make the following findings, conclusions and recommendations.

Findings of Fact

At all times material herein, the Union has been the exclusive collective bargaining representative of certain employees of the respondent. In January of 1975 the parties executed an agreement which became effective on June 12, 1975, when it was approved.

Article IX of the agreement sets forth the grievance and arbitration procedure and provides in pertinent part as follows:

> Section 2. Definitions. For the purpose of the Agreement, a grievance is defined as a request for relief in a matter of concern arising over the interpretation, application or implementation of this Agreement .... This procedure shall be the exclusive procedure to be utilized in adjusting such grievances.

Section 9 of the above article sets forth a three-step grievance procedure. Section 10 provides that unresolved grievances may be submitted to arbitration.

Article XXXV of the agreement provides as follows:

> OFFICIAL TIME
> Section 1. The parties agree that generally, labor relations activities are matters of mutual concern to the Employer and the Union. Accordingly, the parties agree that they will endeavor to fully > communicate with, and inform each other so that matters of form, or technicalities will not cause administrative leave or official time to be denied, under the provisions of this and other articles which pertain to official time.

>
> Section 2. Employees acting for the Union will be excused from duty without charge to leave or loss of pay in order to perform duties as Union representatives. Such excuse from duty shall not extend to the conduct of internal Union business, and is subject to any limitations which have been negotiated in other articles of this agreement and subject to appropriate regulations.
>
> Section 3. Stewards, when desiring to leave their work areas to transact appropriate Union business during working hours, shall first obtain authority from their immediate supervisors. Authority to leave the work area will then be granted promptly in the absence of compelling circumstances. Before leaving for another area, the officer or steward will verify that the person or group with whom the business is to be transacted is available. This availability shall be determined by the steward by calling the supervisor or supervisors of the employee or employees. Upon entering a shop or work area under the cognizance of a supervisor other than his own, an officer or steward shall contact the supervisor and advise him of his presence and the name of the employee or employees to be contacted. Cognizant supervisors shall promptly make such employees available to the Union representative in the absence of compelling circumstances to the contrary without requiring detailed explanation of the Union business to be conducted.

> Section 4. Upon return to the work area, the Union representative will report to the supervisor the amount of time used and the amount of time shall be recorded.

Article XXXVII provides that in the temporary absence of an assigned steward and a chief steward because of reasons such as taking leave or temporary additional duty away from the activity, a Union officer may serve as the substitute steward. This article also states in part that "Union officials must have sufficient freedom of movement and availability to fulfill their obligations to the employees in the Unit."

At all times relevant hereto, Marie Brogan was president of Local 1001 of the National Federation of Federal Employees. Brogan was chairman of the Union's negotiating team with regard to the above-mentioned agreement. During 1975, Brogan was an employee of the respondent and was assigned to the Construction Management Section. Her immediate supervisor was John S. McComb, who was chief of that section.

Subsequent to June 12, 1975, the effective date of the agreement, Brogan purportedly spent 100 percent of her time on union-related activities. At all times during 1975 subsequent to the agreement, she performed little, if any, construction management work and rarely spoke to McComb.

During 1975, when the employees in McComb's section found it necessary to leave the office on construction management business, they would write certain information on a blackboard located in the office prior to leaving. In this regard the employee would indicate his name, his destination, the telephone number at which he could be reached, his time of departure and an estimated time of return. Between June 12 and October, 1975, Brogan used the above "sign-out board" procedure about 25 to 30 percent of the time for her union activities. However, she usually did not keep McComb informed of her whereabouts.

McComb did not become aware of Article XXXV of the negotiated agreement until September of 1975. As set forth above, Article XXXV relates to the procedures for the granting of administrative leave or official time for representational activities by employees acting for the Union.

On September 26, 1975, James A. Hunt, a labor relations specialist in the respondent's Civilian Personnel Office, issued a memorandum addressed to "Supervisors of Union Representatives" relating to the implementation of the official time provisions of the agreement. A copy of this memorandum was sent to Mr. Rodgers, McComb's supervisor; McComb did not receive or read a copy of this memorandum until March of 1976. The memorandum "suggested" that Union representatives should make verbal requests for official time to perform union-related tasks as far in advance as possible. It also suggested that the Union representative identify the specific nature of the activity in enough detail to allow the supervisor to validate the authorization of official time.

Soon after September 26, 1975, Brogan received a copy of the Hunt memorandum and apparently alleged in a pre-complaint charge filed on October 8, 1975, that the memorandum violated the Executive Order. In November of 1975, Brogan filed an unfair labor practice complaint (Case No. 72-5710(CA)) with respect to the Hunt memorandum. On April 13, 1976, the Regional Administrator dismissed that complaint and stated as follows:

> It does not appear that further proceedings are warranted inasmuch as a reasonable basis for the complaint has not been established. The suggested guidelines issued by Mr. Hunt regarding the granting of official time to union representatives is considered to be intermanagement correspondence and there is no indication that the guidelines were meant to be used to bypass the exclusive representative since Mr. Hunt requested to meet with you in this regard. Moreover, it would appear that resolution of this dispute should be made through the negotiated grievance procedure since it involves varying interpretations of the agreement. See Assistant Secretary Rule No. 49.

Immediately prior to October 2, 1975, McComb's supervisor, Mr. Rodgers, told McComb that he had received a number of complaints regarding Brogan from other supervisors. He told McComb that the supervisors were bothered by Brogan's visits to their sections without prior notification and by her "chatting" about non-union matters with the employees during duty time.

During October of 1975, McComb became very concerned that Brogan was failing to abide by the provisions of Article XXXV of the agreement relating to the procedure for obtaining official time for union-related duties. He felt that Article XXXV required the Union president to request permission for the use of official time for union business. He also interpreted Article XXXV as requiring Brogan to "fully communicate" with him on these occasions in order that he would be in a position to determine whether official time should be granted. During October of 1975, McComb advised Brogan of his interpretation of the official time provisions of the agreement and asked her to comply with these provisions. 1/

In spite of these requests by McComb, Brogan refused to comply. McComb's notes reflect that during the month of October, Brogan left the office on several occasions without indicating to anyone where she was going. At the end of the month, Brogan did not come into the office at all on three separate days and did not leave word as to her whereabouts.

Subsequently, on October 29, 1975, McComb issued the following memorandum to Brogan:

> 1. Since the approval of the base wide contract in June of 1975 I have discussed with you the contract provisions for release from duty station and use of official time for union related business. In spite of the discussions you continue to be away from your duty station for prolonged periods of time without making prior arrangements for release and without

1/ Since McComb was responsible for maintaining Brogan's time cards reflecting official time granted (in addition to other types of leave), he felt that it was particularly important that official time be granted only in those circumstances contemplated by the negotiated agreement.

> providing adequate information needed to make determinations on the granting of official time.
> 2. Accordingly as of 3 November 1975 the following will apply:
>
> a. Release from Duty Station:
>
> Any absence from your duty station during normal duty hours without prior approval from me will be treated as absence without leave. As you know this is unpaid time and could lead to disciplinary action.
>
> b. Allowance of Official Duty Time:
>
> Official duty time will be allowed in accordance with the policies and procedures set forth in Article XXXV of the contract.
>
> Official duty time will be allowed for prior approved absence only when you provide enough information to me to enable me to make a valid determination as to what is appropriate.
>
> 3. All arrangements for release from duty station or use of official time must be made with me personally. In my absence Mr. Courtney is your supervisor and will be your point of contact. Should both Mr. Courtney and I be unavailable you may make arrangements with Mr. Rodgers, Chief, Engineering and Construction Branch.

It was McComb's own idea to write the above memorandum. As previously stated, he had never received the Hunt memorandum dated September 26, 1975. The ideas contained in McComb's memorandum reflect his own interpretation of the agreement. Prior to issuing his memorandum, however, McComb "coordinated" the memorandum with the chief of his organization and several of the respondent's technical advisors specializing in labor law and labor relations. All of these individuals concurred in McComb's interpretation of the contract and considered the memorandum appropriate under the circumstances.

The procedures required by McComb for obtaining official time for union-related business were essentially the same as those employed by other supervisors at Vandenberg with respect to employees who were Union representatives. All of these employees were required to ask permission of their supervisors for the use of official time and give sufficient information in order that the supervisors could determine whether the request for official time should be granted. In addition to following the above procedure, one of the Union's vice presidents kept a log with his supervisor reflecting the dates, hours, and purpose of his Union activities.

Immediately after receiving McComb's memorandum, on October 31, 1975, Brogan filed the pre-complaint charge in the instant case.

For the next few weeks, Brogan ignored McComb's memorandum and continued to leave her office without requesting permission for the use of official time. As a result of these actions, Brogan was charged with absence without leave (AWOL) on a number of occasions. On December 16, 1975, a meeting was held between the Union and management at which the question of requesting permission for the use of official time by Union representatives was discussed. Although it appears that the parties at this meeting agreed that the negotiated agreement required Brogan to request such permission, no final agreement was reached in view of the "heated discussion" and controversy regarding other issues. In this regard, the parties could not agree as to the amount of information and detail that a Union representative would be required to give to his supervisor for him to determine whether official time was warranted. It appears that some time during November or December of 1975 McComb decided that it was necessary for Brogan to reveal the name of the grievant in order for him to make his determination. Brogan refused to give the grievant's name because she felt that it constituted an invasion of his privacy.

Conclusions of Law

The first issue presented for decision is whether certain actions taken by the respondent constituted a unilateral modification of the negotiated agreement in violation of section 19(a)(6) of the Executive Order. The Union alleges that the following actions violated the Order in this regard: (1) the requirement that the Union president, Marie Brogan, obtain permission from her supervisor prior to leaving her office on official time for union-related duties; (2) the requirement that she give her supervisor "enough information" to determine whether official time should be granted; and (3) the statement to Brogan that any absence from her office without prior approval from her supervisor would be treated as absence without leave.

In Watervliet Arsenal, U. S. Army Armament Command, Watervliet, New York, A/SLMR No. 726, the Assistant Secretary held that if the negotiated agreement is susceptible to varying interpretations, then any alleged breach of the agreement should be resolved through the grievance-arbitration procedures set forth in the agreement. On the other hand, it was also held that a flagrant and patent breach of an agreement may rise to the seriousness of a unilateral change in the contract and constitute an unfair labor practice. The Assistant Secretary has recently held that a breach of contract will not violate the Order unless it is "flagrant and deliberate." Social Security Administration, Great Lakes Program Center, Chicago, Illinois, A/SLMR No. 804.

The Union first complains that McComb's requirement that Brogan ask his permission for the use of official time for union-related duties constituted a clear, unilateral breach of Article XXXV of the agreement. I disagree with the Union and find that the contract can reasonably be interpreted to require that permission be requested. In this regard, section 2 of Article XXXV states that employees acting for the Union will be "excused" from duty in order to perform duties as Union representatives. One of the dictionary definitions of the word "excuse" is "to give (someone) permission to leave." The American Heritage Dictionary, (1976). Likewise, the words "administrative leave" in section 1 reasonably comprehend the requirement of permission.

In addition, the Union alleges that McComb's requirement that Brogan give him "enough information" for him to determine whether official time should be granted was a contractual breach rising to the level of a unilateral modification of the agreement. Again, I find that McComb's construction of the agreement was not unreasonable. Section 1 of Article XXXV states in part as follows:

> Accordingly the parties agree that they will endeavor to fully communicate with and inform each other so that matters of form, or technicalities will not cause administrative leave or official time to be denied .... (Emphasis supplied)

McComb testified that he felt that Brogan was not complying with the terms of this Article because she was not fully communicating with him. Certainly one interpretation of the above-quoted sentence would allow McComb to deny Brogan official time unless she endeavored to "fully communicate" with him. In addition, section 2 states that the "excuse from duty shall not extend to the conduct of internal union business ...." Therefore, it is arguable that McComb would need "enough information" to determine whether the activities in which Brogan wished to engage constituted appropriate Union business.2/

Finally, the Union alleges that McComb unilaterally modified the contract when he told Brogan that she would be charged AWOL if she failed to ask his permission for the use of official time for union-related duties. The Union relies on section 2 of Article XXXV which states that employees acting for the Union will be excused from duty "without charge to leave or loss of pay" in order to perform duties as Union representatives. However, the following sentence of that section indicates that excuse from duty will not extend to the conduct of internal Union business. Therefore, it would be reasonable to assume that

2/ It appears that subsequent to the pre-complaint charge, McComb decided that, when a grievance was involved, Brogan should tell him the name of the grievant. Even assuming arguendo that this requirement had been imposed prior to the charge, it would not have constituted a flagrant and deliberate breach of the contract. Since section 3 of Article XXXV clearly required the Union representative to tell the grievant's supervisor the name of the grievant it would not be unreasonable for McComb to expect the name to be given to him for his purposes also in view of the "full communication" clause.

an employee who insists on conducting internal Union business during duty hours would be required to be on annual leave, leave without pay, or AWOL. In addition, section 1 of this Article could reasonably be interpreted to allow the denial of administrative leave or official time unless the Union representative "fully communicated" with his supervisor. If the employee left his office under these circumstances, it would seem reasonable to charge him with leave or AWOL.

In conclusion, there is no evidence of record of a flagrant and deliberate breach of the negotiated agreement by respondent, and it cannot be said that respondent violated the Order by unilaterally changing the terms of the agreement. The proper forum for resolving this issue lies within the grievance machinery of the parties' negotiated agreement rather than through the unfair labor practice procedures. Social Security Administration, Great Lakes Program Center, Chicago, Illinois, A/SLMR No. 804.

The Union also contends that McComb's memorandum of October 29, 1975, unilaterally changed one of Brogan's working conditions in violation of sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Executive Order. Between June 12, 1975 and the end of October of 1975, Brogan did not request permission to leave her office when she wished to engage in union-related activities. However, about 25 to 30 percent of the time she would indicate on a blackboard in the office the building to which she was going, a telephone at which she could be reached, and, in some instances, a word such as "grievance" to indicate the general purpose of her trip. It was not until September of 1975 that McComb became aware of the provisions regarding the use of official time which had become effective on June 12, 1975. He did not feel that Brogan was complying with the terms of the agreement. As previously stated, he sincerely felt that the agreement required that Brogan ask his permission for the use of official time for union-related duties and that it required her to provide him with sufficient information to enable him to determine whether or not official time was warranted on each occasion. He spoke with her several times during the month of October for the purpose of getting her to comply with the terms of the contract. However, Brogan refused to comply with his requests. Finally, on October 29, 1975, McComb issued his memorandum to Brogan directing her to comply with his requests.

The negotiated agreement of June 12, 1975, superseded any former practice Brogan may have used regarding the securing of official time for her representational activities. Veterans Administration Center, Bath, New York, A/SLMR No. 335. The new language contained in Article XXXV was dispositive as to Brogan's rights in this regard. McComb acted with due diligence in attempting to gain Brogan's compliance with the contract soon after he became aware of the relevant provisions. McComb's insistence upon compliance with the negotiated agreement did not constitute a unilateral change in a "past practice." The so-called "practice" was utilized by Brogan no more than 30 percent of the time and, in addition, it was stopped by McComb before it had matured into an established policy and practice. Internal Revenue Service, Philadelphia Service Center, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, A/SLMR No. 771.

The next issue for decision is whether Brogan was treated differently from other Union officials or otherwise discriminated against by virtue of McComb's actions prior to the filing of the pre-complaint charge on October 31, 1975. With respect to the procedures imposed by McComb for obtaining official time for Union business, the Union has failed to sustain its burden of proving that Brogan was treated differently from the other Union officers and stewards. The evidence presented establishes that the other Union representatives were also required to ask permission for official time for representational activities; moreover, they were required to give their supervisors "enough information" to enable the supervisors to determine whether official time was warranted. The complainant argues that nothing was said to the other Union representatives regarding the possibility of AWOL charges. However, it is clear that AWOL was not mentioned to these individuals because they complied with their supervisors' procedures. On the other hand, Brogan repeatedly refused to ask McComb's permission for official time after he had requested her to do so.

The Union also alleges that McComb's actions were taken for the sole purpose of harassing the Union president and that he was merely carrying out the instructions of a group of the respondent's officials whose primary motivation was to harass Brogan. Although I recognize that Marie Brogan sincerely feels that this is true, I cannot reach this conclusion based upon the evidence adduced at the hearing. I believe McComb's testimony that he was essentially acting on his own. McComb was not trying to harass Brogan; his actions were motivated by a desire to obtain her compliance with the agreement. I conclude that the complainant has failed to sustain its burden of proof with respect to any violation of section 19(a)(1) of the Order.3/

Finally, it is necessary to dispose of a written motion to dismiss filed by the respondent at the outset of the hearing. The first contention is that the basic issues of the instant case have previously been litigated in Case No. 72-5710(CA). The only allegation in that case which even remotely relates to the instant case concerned Hunt's memorandum of September 26, 1975. In view of the fact that McComb did not see that memorandum until long after the complaint in the instant case had been filed, and in light of the additional issues contained herein, the motion must be overruled on that ground. The only other ground asserted in the motion to dismiss is that "the question presented here is solely one of contract interpretation, and therefore, the only appropriate disposition of the case must be under the grievance procedure of the parties' negotiated agreement." As I indicated in my conclusions with respect to the first issue presented for decision, I agree that a question of contract interpretation is involved; however, that was not the sole issue in the case. Therefore, respondent's motion must be overruled on both grounds.

Recommendation

In view of the foregoing Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law, I hereby recommend to the Assistant Secretary that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR
ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS
SUMMARY OF DECISION AND DIRECTION OF ELECTION
OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

BILLETING FUND OF CHARLESTON
AIR FORCE BASE, SOUTH CAROLINA
A/SLMR No. 936

This case arose as a result of a petition filed by an individual seeking the decertification of the Intervenor, International Brotherhood of Firemen and Oilers, AFL-CIO, Local 41 (IBFO) as the exclusive representative in a unit of nonappropriated fund activity employees of the Activity. The IBFO took the position that the decertification petition was untimely filed. The Regional Administrator sent the matter to hearing solely on the issue of the timeliness of the petition.

In September 1976, the Labor-Management Services Administration (LMSA), in response to the Petitioner's inquiry on behalf of herself and other employees concerning how to decertify the IBFO as their exclusive representative, informed the Petitioner that this was a matter for the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) rather than for the LMSA. The LMSA forwarded the Petitioner's letter and copy of its reply to the NLRB. Thereafter, the NLRB wrote the Petitioner explaining the requirements for filing a timely decertification petition under its procedures and forwarding NLRB decertification petition forms to the Petitioner. Relying on the information and instructions supplied by the NLRB, the Petitioner filed the decertification petition with the NLRB in the open period of the parties' negotiated agreement. The NLRB thereafter notified the Petitioner that the LMSA had jurisdiction over the matter and subsequently the NLRB approved the Petitioner's withdrawal request. Shortly thereafter, but subsequent to the open period of the parties' negotiated agreement, the Petitioner filed the subject decertification with the LMSA.

Under all of the particular circumstances of this case, the Assistant Secretary concluded that the Petitioner's decertification petition should be treated as timely filed. He found it evident that but for the mistaken directions given the Petitioner, the subject petition would have been timely filed under Executive Order 11491, as amended, with the LMSA, and that it would be unfair to penalize the Petitioner for acting in good faith on the erroneous advice of agents of the LMSA. Therefore, pursuant to the provisions of Section 206.9 of the Assistant Secretary's Regulations, he found the petition to be timely filed and ordered an election in the unit found appropriate.

DECISION AND DIRECTION OF ELECTION

Upon a petition duly filed under Section 6 of Executive Order 11491, as amended, a hearing was held before Hearing Officer Renee B. Rux. The Hearing Officer's rulings made at the hearing are free from prejudicial error and are hereby affirmed.

Upon the entire record in this case, the Assistant Secretary finds:

The Petitioner, Christenia Aiken, an employee of the Activity, seeks the decertification of the Intervenor, International Brotherhood of Firemen and Oilers, AFL-CIO, Local 41, hereinafter called IBFO, as the exclusive representative of certain employees of the Activity.

As none of the parties questioned the appropriateness of the unit, the Regional Administrator sent the matter to hearing solely on the issue of the timeliness of the subject petition. 1/ In this regard, the

1/ See Department of Transportation, Federal Aviation Administration, Airway Facilities Sector, Fort Worth, Texas, 2 A/SLMR 613, A/SLMR No. 230.

IBFO contends that the petition was untimely as it was not filed within the valid challenge period provided for in Section 202.3(c) of the Assistant Secretary's Regulations. 2/

The record indicates that the IBFO was recognized as the exclusive representative of the employees in the unit in September 1969. On June 13, 1973, the Activity and the IBFO executed a negotiated agreement of two years duration, effective from the date of its approval by Headquarters, United States Air Force. The agreement, which was automatically renewable for two year periods, was approved by Headquarters on July 9, 1973. It was amended July 8, 1975, and under the new agreement the open period for filing a timely petition under Section 202.3(c) of the Assistant Secretary's Regulations became April 9 through May 8, 1977.

On September 29, 1976, the Atlanta Area Office of the Labor-Management Services Administration (LMSA) advised the Petitioner, in response to her earlier inquiry concerning her and other employees desire to decertify the IBFO as their exclusive representative, that there were procedures for decertifying an exclusive representative, but that it was a matter for the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) rather than for the LMSA. LMSA forwarded its September 29 letter and the inquiry from the Petitioner to the NLRB.

On October 8, 1976, the NLRB wrote the Petitioner, referring to the letter it had received from the LMSA, explaining the requirements for filing a timely decertification petition under NLRB procedures and enclosing NLRB decertification petition forms. The letter raised no questions concerning NLRB jurisdiction over the potential decertification petition. Relying on the information supplied by the NLRB and the instructions contained in the NLRB's letter of October 8, the Petitioner waited until the open period in the negotiated agreement and on April 14, 1977, filed a timely decertification petition with the NLRB. Thereafter, by letter of April 26, 1977, to the Petitioner, the NLRB confirmed an earlier telephone conversation with the Petitioner which explained that the LMSA office in Atlanta, Georgia, had jurisdiction over the matter, and enclosed a withdrawal request. The subsequent withdrawal request was approved by the NLRB on May 4, 1977. On June 2, 1977, a date which was after the open period in the negotiated agreement between the IBFO and the Activity, the Petitioner filed the subject decertification petition with the LMSA.

2/ Section 202.3(c) states, in pertinent part:

> When an agreement covering a claimed unit has been signed and dated by the activity and the incumbent exclusive representative, a petition for exclusive recognition or other election petition will be considered timely when filed... not more than ninety (90) days and not less than sixty (60) days prior to the terminal date of an agreement having a term of three (3) years or less from the date it was signed and dated by the activity and the incumbent exclusive representative; ...

Under the particular circumstances of this case, I shall treat the Petitioner's decertification petition of June 2, 1977, as timely filed. Thus, only after the Petitioner was incorrectly informed by the LMSA that the NLRB had jurisdiction in the matter, and after following the instructions and directions of the NLRB, which were apparently based on the erroneous jurisdictional conclusions of the LMSA, did the Petitioner first learn that, in fact, she had been improperly informed about where and how to file her decertification petition. Noting that her petition was timely filed with the NLRB in accordance with its instructions, it is evident that but for the mistaken directions given the Petitioner, her decertification petition would have been timely filed under Executive Order 11491, as amended, with the LMSA. In my view, it would be unfair to penalize the Petitioner for acting in good faith on the erroneous advice of agents of the LMSA. 3/ Accordingly, pursuant to the provisions of Section 206.9 of the Assistant Secretary's Regulations 4/, I shall treat the Petitioner's decertification petition of June 2, 1977, as timely filed and I shall direct an election in the following unit which I find appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under Executive Order 11491, as amended:

> All nonappropriated fund employees of the Billeting Fund of Charleston Air Force Base, South Carolina, excluding all professional employees, off-duty military personnel, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, management officials, and supervisors as defined in the Order.

DIRECTION OF ELECTION

An election by secret ballot shall be conducted among employees in the unit found appropriate as early as possible, but not later than 60 days from the date below. The appropriate Area Administrator shall supervise the election subject to the Assistant Secretary's Regulations.

3/ Cf. Department of the Navy, Naval Air Station, Corpus Christi, Texas, 2 A/SLMR 219, A/SLMR No. 150.

4/ Section 206.9 of the Assistant Secretary's Regulations states:

> (a) The regulations in this chapter may be construed liberally to effectuate the purposes and provisions of the order.
>

SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY,
U.S. CUSTOMS SERVICE,
ST. THOMAS, VIRGIN ISLANDS
A/SLMR No. 937

The subject case involved a representation petition filed by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3514 (AFGE) seeking a unit consisting essentially of all employees of the U.S. Customs Service, Virgin Islands. These employees are encompassed within a more comprehensive unit which is currently represented on an exclusive basis by the National Treasury Employees Union (NTEU).

The Activity and the NTEU contended that the existing negotiated agreement constituted a bar to the instant petition. They argued that the petition was untimely as it had not been filed during the "open" period pursuant to the Assistant Secretary's Regulations but, instead, had been filed during the period when the existing negotiated agreement had been extended. They also contended that the severance sought by the AFGE would be inappropriate because it would disturb an established and effective bargaining relationship. The NTEU further asserted that its National and Regional offices never failed to provide representation to the petitioned for employees when it was requested. The AFGE, on the other hand, contended that the instant petition was timely filed, and that the sought unit is appropriate because the NTEU has failed to provide full and fair representation to the sought employees.

The Assistant Secretary noted that when the NTEU notified the Activity of its intent to modify the existing agreement through negotiations, such notice had the effect of terminating the agreement on its anniversary date for bar purposes. Further, the agreement of the parties to extend the existing negotiated agreement for an indefinite duration, in the Assistant Secretary's view, did not constitute a final, fixed term agreement which would bar a petition otherwise timely filed. Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary found the instant petition was timely filed.

However, the Assistant Secretary further found the claimed unit was inappropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under the Order. In this regard, the instant petition sought to sever a portion of an already existing, more comprehensive bargaining unit. The Assistant Secretary noted that the absence of local union representatives, standing alone, does not, in his view, establish an absence of full and fair representation. Accordingly, noting that the record established that the sought employees received full and fair representation when it was requested, and in the absence of evidence of unusual circumstances, the Assistant Secretary ordered the petition dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER

Upon a petition duly filed under Section 6 of Executive Order 11491, as amended, a hearing was held before Hearing Officer Mario Paoli. The Hearing Officer's rulings made at the hearing are free from prejudicial error and are hereby affirmed. 1/

Upon the entire record in this case, including briefs filed by the Petitioner, the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3514, hereinafter called AFGE, and the Intervenor, the National Treasury Employees Union, hereinafter called NTEU, the Assistant Secretary finds:

1. The labor organizations involved claim to represent certain employees of the Activity.

2. The AFGE seeks an election in a unit consisting of: "All employees employed at the U.S. Customs Service in the U.S. Virgin Islands, excluding professional employees, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, management officials, and supervisors as defined in the Order." The petitioned for unit is encompassed within an existing Region-wide unit which currently is represented on an exclusive basis by the NTEU. 2/ A negotiated agreement was signed and dated by the Activity and the National Customs Service Association, hereinafter called NCSA, on May 9, 1973, and became effective on July 2, 1973, upon the approval of the Commissioner of Customs. The agreement was to remain in effect for three years from the date of approval and was subject to automatic renewal for an additional three year term unless either party gave written notice of its desire to terminate or modify the agreement as required by Article XII of the agreement. 3/

The mission of the U.S. Customs Service is enforcing customs laws and other related laws of the United States. The U.S. Customs Service is organized into a National Office located in Washington, D.C., and nine Regions. Each of the Regions, with the exception of Region II, is further subdivided into Districts, Ports, and Stations. Region IV, headquartered in Miami, Florida, is headed by a Regional Commissioner and encompasses seven Districts, among which is the Activity. Each District is under the supervision of a District Director. The Virgin Islands District (Activity) is composed of three islands, St. Thomas, on which the District Office is located, St. Croix, and St. John, with duty Stations located throughout the three islands.

The collective bargaining history of the U.S. Customs Service indicates that eight of its nine Regions are exclusively represented by the NTEU on a Region-wide basis. In Region IV, the NTEU is the exclusive representative in six of the seven Districts with the employees in the Puerto Rico District represented by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2577.

1/ At the hearing, the Hearing Officer sustained objections to certain evidence proffered by the Petitioner. Thereafter, the Petitioner made an offer of proof on the record. Since the evidence proffered by the Petitioner would not affect my disposition of the subject petition, I find it unnecessary to pass on the propriety of the Hearing Officer's ruling.

2/ On December 16, 1975, an Amendment of Certification was issued by the Regional Administrator changing the designation of the exclusive representative from the National Customs Service Association to the National Treasury Employees Union.

3/ Article XII (2) provides:

> This agreement shall remain in full force and effect for the three (3) year period following its effective date and shall be automatically extended for three (3) year periods thereafter, unless between the ninetieth (90th) and sixtieth (60th) day prior to the agreement's extension date, either party hereto shall notify the other, in writing, of intention to terminate or modify this agreement. Upon such giving of notice of intention to terminate, the agreement shall terminate upon its anniversary date. Upon such giving of notice of intention to modify this agreement, negotiations between Management and Association concerning a new agreement shall commence no later than thirty (30) calendar days prior to its anniversary date and this agreement shall remain in full force and effect until the new agreement is executed by the parties, duly approved, and effective, . . .

The Activity and the NTEU contend that the existing negotiated agreement constitutes a bar to the instant petition. They argue that the subject petition is untimely as it was not filed during the "open" period provided for in Section 202.3(c)(2) of the Assistant Secretary's Regulations 4/ but, instead, was filed during a period when the existing negotiated agreement had been extended due to a timely filed notice of intent to modify said agreement as provided for in Article XII of the agreement. They also contend that if the claimed unit was found to be appropriate the existing bargaining unit would be fragmented and that an established and effective bargaining relationship would be disrupted. The NTEU further contends that its National and Regional Offices never failed to provide representation to the petitioned for employees when requested.

The AFGE, on the other hand, contends that the instant petition was timely filed because Article XII provides no fixed term for the extension of the agreement, and, therefore, a petition for exclusive recognition would be blocked for an indefinite period. The AFGE also asserts that the NTEU failed to provide full and fair representation to the petitioned for employees when it became the exclusive representative since it did not designate local union representatives to replace the incumbent NCSA branch officers who resigned.

The record reveals that, in accordance with Article XII of the existing negotiated agreement, the NTEU notified the Activity on April 2, 1976, of its intent to modify the agreement, which was due to expire on July 2, 1976. On May 17, 1976, the NTEU forwarded its bargaining demands to the Activity, and on July 9, 1976, negotiations commenced between the parties. The instant petition was filed on July 29, 1976.

The record also reveals that the NCSA branch officers resigned on September 30, 1975, in response to a request from the membership. Since that time, there have been no local NCSA or NTEU representatives at the Activity. However, the record further indicates that the NTEU's National Office assisted an employee in the claimed unit in obtaining a promotion and in receiving payment for a health insurance claim. Another employee in the claimed unit received counseling assistance from the NTEU's National Office concerning a disciplinary matter. There is no record evidence indicating that the NTEU has failed or refused to represent any of the petitioned for employees regarding matters affecting their terms and conditions of employment.

4/ Section 202.3(c)(2) provides that:

> When an agreement covering a claimed unit has been signed and dated by the activity and the incumbent exclusive representative, a petition for exclusive recognition or other election petition will be considered timely when filed as follows: . . . (2) Not more than ninety (90) days and not less than sixty (60) days prior to the expiration of the initial three (3) year period of an agreement having a term of more than three (3) years from the date it was signed and dated by the activity and the incumbent exclusive representative; . . .

Based on all the above circumstances, I find the instant petition to be timely filed. Thus, it has been held previously that where, as here, a negotiated agreement provides for automatic renewal unless one of the parties requests renegotiation, a party's request to renegotiate serves to terminate such negotiated agreement for bar purposes. Further, where the parties agree to an extension of the negotiated agreement to serve merely as an interim arrangement during a period of further negotiations, such an arrangement does not constitute a final, fixed term agreement, and may not operate as a bar to a petition otherwise timely filed. 5/ Under these circumstances, I find that when, on April 2, 1976, the NTEU notified the Activity of its intent to modify the existing agreement through negotiations, such notice had the effect of terminating the existing agreement for bar purposes on July 2, 1976. The further agreement of the parties to extend the existing negotiated agreement for an indefinite duration then does not, in my view, constitute a final, fixed term agreement which can serve to bar a petition. Accordingly, the instant petition was timely filed since it was filed after the expiration date of the parties' negotiated agreement.

However, I further find the claimed unit to be inappropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under the Order. The Assistant Secretary has held previously that, absent unusual circumstances, where the evidence shows that an established, effective, and fair collective bargaining relationship has existed, severance of a group of employees from an existing, more comprehensive unit will not promote the purposes and policies of the Order. 6/ In the instant case, the evidence establishes that the NTEU has provided full and fair representation to the petitioned for employees. There is no evidence that the NTEU has failed or refused to represent the petitioned for employees or that it has treated them in a disparate manner. Although the record indicates that there have been no local representatives in the Virgin Islands since the NTEU became the exclusive representative, in my view, the absence of local union representatives, standing alone, is not sufficient evidence to establish that the NTEU failed to represent the petitioned for employees in a fair and effective manner.

Accordingly, and in the absence of unusual circumstances, I find that the unit sought by the AFGE is inappropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition, and I shall dismiss the petition.

ORDER

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the petition in Case No. 37-01717(RO) be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY, GREAT LAKES NAVAL BASE,

GREAT LAKES, ILLINOIS
A/SLMR No. 938

This case involved a petition filed by Local 2326, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO (AFGE) seeking an election in a unit described as all Wage Grade employees of the Activity. The Intervenor, Local R7-51, National Association of Government Employees (NAGE) and the Activity contended that the petition was filed untimely under Section 202.3(d) of the Assistant Secretary's Regulations. The matter was transferred to the Assistant Secretary by order of Regional Administrator for Labor-Management Services pursuant to Section 206.5(a) of the Assistant Secretary's Regulations.

The NAGE was certified as the exclusive representative of the sought unit on June 26, 1973, and the parties executed a negotiated agreement covering the bargaining unit on March 11, 1974. The negotiated agreement, by its terms, had a duration of three years from the date of approval by higher authority, which approval was given on April 4, 1974.

On January 28, 1977, the AFGE filed a petition in Case No. 50-15414(RO) seeking an election in the same unit sought herein. Thereafter, on March 22, 1977, the AFGE's request for withdrawal of its petition in Case No. 50-15414(RO) was approved. The instant petition was filed by the AFGE on April 4, 1977.

The Assistant Secretary concluded that the instant petition was filed untimely. In reaching this conclusion, he noted that the AFGE withdrew its petition in Case No. 50-15414(RO) within the 60 day "insulated" period, and that the Activity and incumbent NAGE were entitled to a 90 day period from the date of approval of such withdrawal, free from rival claim, within which to negotiate a new agreement. As the instant petition was filed within this 90 day period, it was found to have been untimely filed.

Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary ordered that the instant petition be dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER

This matter is before the Assistant Secretary pursuant to Regional Administrator for Labor-Management Services R. C. DeMarco's Order Transferring Case to the Assistant Secretary pursuant to Section 206.5(a) of the Assistant Secretary's Regulations.

Upon consideration of the entire record in the subject case, including the findings of the investigation, accompanying exhibits, and briefs filed by the Activity and Local R7-51, National Association of Government Employees, hereinafter referred to as NAGE, the Assistant Secretary finds:

1. The labor organizations involved claim to represent certain employees of the Activity.

2. On April 4, 1977, Local 2326, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, hereinafter referred to as AFGE, filed a petition seeking certification as the exclusive representative of a unit described as: "All Wage Grade employees of the Department of Navy, Public Works Center, Great Lakes, Illinois, excluding all management officials, General Schedule employees, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, supervisors, and confidential employees as defined by Executive Order 11491, as amended." The NAGE and the Activity contend that the petition is untimely under the provisions of Section 202.3(d) of the Assistant Secretary's Regulations.

The undisputed facts are as follows:

On June 26, 1973, the NAGE was certified as the exclusive representative for the bargaining unit which is the subject of the instant petition. On March 11, 1974, the Activity and the NAGE executed a negotiated agreement which, by its terms, provided for a duration of three years from the date of its approval by higher authority. On April 4, 1974, this agreement was approved by the Department of the Navy's Office of Civilian Manpower Management.

On January 28, 1977, in Case No. 50-15414(RO), the AFGE filed a petition seeking an election in the same unit sought herein. On March 3, 1977, the Chicago Area Office of the Labor-Management Services Administration solicited withdrawal of the petition based on its view that the petition was filed untimely. 1/ On March 17, 1977, the AFGE requested withdrawal of its petition in Case No. 50-15414(RO), which was approved by the Area Administrator on March 22, 1977. As noted above, the AFGE filed the instant petition on April 4, 1977.

The Activity and the NAGE argue that the subject petition should be dismissed as untimely filed, despite the fact that it was filed subsequent to the termination of their negotiated agreement. In this regard, they contend that by reason of the AFGE's petition in Case No. 50-15414(RO), they were deprived of their "insulated" period within which to negotiate and consummate a new agreement free from rival claim, and, thus, under the provisions of Section 202.3(d) of the Assistant Secretary's Regulations, they were entitled to a period of 90 days from the date of the approval of the AFGE's withdrawal of its petition free from rival claim. 2/ I agree.

1/ As indicated above, the negotiated agreement between the Activity and the NAGE provided for a duration in excess of three years from the date of execution by the parties. Section 202.3(c) of the Assistant Secretary's Regulations provides that a petition for exclusive recognition or other election petition will be considered timely when filed -- "(2) Not more than ninety (90) days and not less than sixty (60) days prior to the expiration of the initial three (3) year period of an agreement having a term of more than three (3) years from the date it was signed and dated by the activity and the incumbent exclusive representative; . . ." Thus, with regard to the negotiated agreement involved herein, the initial three year bar period ran from the date of its execution by the Activity and the NAGE on March 11, 1974, until March 10, 1977, and the 60-90 day "open" period within which to file a timely petition for an election was from December 10, 1976, to January 9, 1977. See Naval Air Station, Willow Grove, Pennsylvania, A/SLMR No. 772. Hence, the AFGE's petition of January 28, 1977, was, in fact, filed untimely.

2/ Section 202.3(d) of the Assistant Secretary's Regulations provides:

When there is an agreement signed and dated by the activity and the incumbent exclusive representative having a term not exceeding three (3) years from the date it was signed, and a petition has

The underlying purpose of Section 202.3(c) of the Assistant Secretary's Regulations is to balance the right of employees in an exclusively represented unit to vote whether or not they desire to continue such exclusive representation with the purposes and policies of the Order to foster labor peace and the stability of exclusive representation. Hence, the Assistant Secretary's Regulations provide that a negotiated agreement between an activity and an incumbent exclusive representative would "bar" any petition for an election for a period of no more than three years from the date of its execution by the parties, irrespective of the agreed-upon duration of such agreement. Further, the Regulations provide for an "open" period within the "bar" period of such an agreement in which a petition for an election may be filed timely. The "open" period has been established as 60-90 days prior to the termination of the "bar" period in order to provide an "insulated" period of 60 days prior to the termination of the bar period during which the incumbent exclusive representative and the activity can negotiate a new agreement free from rival claim.

Where, as here, a petition for an election is filed and subsequently dismissed or withdrawn during the "insulated" period, or thereafter, the activity and the incumbent exclusive representative have been effectively deprived of the full "insulated" period within which to negotiate a new agreement. Section 202.3(d) of the Regulations was promulgated to rectify such a contingency by providing an additional "insulated" period to the activity and the incumbent exclusive representative within which to negotiate a new agreement. In the instant matter, as the AFGE's petition in Case No. 50-15414(RO) was filed during the "insulated" period of the negotiated agreement between the Activity and the NAGE, and withdrawn thereafter, the Activity and the NAGE were entitled, under Section 202.3(d) of the Regulations, to a 90 day period from March 22, 1977, the date of approval of the AFGE's withdrawal request, free from rival claim, to negotiate a new agreement. 3/ As the AFGE's petition herein was filed during this 90 day "insulated" period, it was untimely filed. Accordingly, I shall order that it be dismissed. 4/

2/ been filed challenging the representation status of the incumbent exclusive representative and the petition is subsequently withdrawn or dismissed less than sixty (60) days prior to the terminal date of that agreement, or any time thereafter, the activity and incumbent exclusive representative shall be afforded a ninety (90) day period from the date the withdrawal is approved or the petition is dismissed free from rival claim within which to consummate an agreement. . ."

3/ Cf. Denver Airways Facilities Hub Sector FAA, Rocky Mountain Region, DOT, Aurora, Colorado, A/SLMR No. 535.

4/ As the Activity and the NAGE were deprived, by the filing of the instant petition, of an "insulated" period within which to negotate a new agreement, under the provisions of Section 202.3(d) of the Regulations they shall be afforded an additional period of 90 days from the date of this decision, free from rival claim, within which to negotiate a new agreement.

SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,

A/SLMR No. 939

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3313 (Complainant) alleging that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, by changing parking and building entry procedures over the 1976 Bicentennial weekend, and refusing to discuss the impact of these changes with the Complainant. The Respondent took the position that it was under no obligation to meet and confer with the Complainant because the changes had no "material impact on personnel policies, practices and general working conditions" as defined in Section 11(a), and the matter was an "internal security practice" within the scope of Section 11(b).

The Administrative Law Judge recommended that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety. He concluded that the matter was an "internal security practice" within the meaning of Section 11(b), and that the Complainant never requested bargaining.

The Assistant Secretary, noting particularly the absence of exceptions, adopted the findings, conclusions and recommendation of the Administrative Law Judge, and ordered that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety.

RECOMMENDED DECISION

This is an unfair labor practice proceeding in which a formal hearing of record was held pursuant to Executive Order 11491 as amended (hereinafter referred to as the Order) and 29 C.F.R. Part 203.

Respondent is charged with violating Section 19(a)(1) of the Order by unilaterally changing parking and building entry procedures over the July 4th, 1976 weekend. Upon all the evidence adduced, my observation of the witnesses, and my judgment of their credibility, I make the Findings of Fact and reach the Conclusions of Law set forth below.

FINDINGS OF FACT

1. Complainant is the exclusive representative of certain collective bargaining units composed of non-supervisory, general schedule professional and non-professional employees of the Office of the Secretary of Transportation, Headquarters, Washington, D.C.

2. Employees represented by Complainant work in the following divisions or elements of the Department of Transportation: Office of the Secretary, Materials Transportation Bureau, Urban Mass Transportation Administration, Coast Guard, and National Highway Traffic Safety Administration.

3. Employees represented by Complainant are located in each of three buildings: DOT-HQ or Nassif Building; FOB-10A Building; and TRPT or Trans Point Building at Buzzard Point.

4. Each of the three buildings contains garage space for which parking permits are issued to employees pursuant to published departmental rules.

5. Normally, employees who do not have parking permits are allowed to park their cars in the garage facilities after hours and on weekends upon presentation of Government identification without a parking permit, thus facilitating their earning overtime.

6. Normally, employees are allowed to bring family members into the office areas of the buildings during working hours and on weekends as well.

7. Shortly before the weekend of Saturday, July 3, 1976, through Monday, July 5, 1976, Mr. Frank Stanton, Respondent's Director of Investigations and Security, was advised by the Federal Protective Service of the General Services Administration of the need for tightening security in nearby Government facilities because of anticipated demonstrations and possible violence during the Bicentennial celebrations.

8. At a meeting on Thursday, July 1st, the Federal Protective Services requested Mr. Stanton, as well as representatives of other agencies, to have the buildings closed over the weekend to all persons except those to be designated on a written list of people to be admitted.

9. Following that meeting, Mr. Stanton conferred with the Assistant Secretary of Transportation for Administration and the Director of Administrative Services. He also ascertained that no over-time work was required over the weekend in any of the bargaining units concerned.

10. Because of the necessity of making the buildings accessible, however, to a considerable number of employees who might be called for emergency duty in the event of an airplane crash or hi-jacking over the weekend, it was determined not to prepare a list of persons entitled to enter, but to tighten security by allowing parking by permit at the Nassif Building only and by limiting access to any of the buildings solely to employees holding Government identification cards.

11. On Thursday, July 1st, Respondent caused to be published in a special edition of "Southwest Seventh", a bulletin distributed in the Department of Transportation Headquarters Buildings, the following notice:

> DOT GARAGE OPERATION OVER JULY 4TH WEEKEND
>
> On Saturday, Sunday, and Monday, July 3, 4, and 5, the Nassif Building garage will be open continuously. The FOB-10A and Trans Point Building garages will be closed. Admission to the Nassif Building garage will be by parking permit for either the Nasiff Building, FOB-10A, or Trans Point Building garages. Admission by DOT identification card will not be permitted for this period.

12. On Friday, July 2nd, Respondent caused to be published in a special edition of the same bulletin the following notice:

> JULY 4TH WEEKEND ACCESS TO DOT BUILDINGS (OFFICE SPACE)
>
> The General Services Administration (GSA) has imposed a Government-wide security requirement during 3, 4 and 5 July 1976, which limits entry into all Government office space to Government employees, who present official identification cards.
>
> GAS Federal Protective Officers have been instructed not to admit anyone but Government employees, thus excluding families or other groups desiring to enter Government work space on a single identification card.

The previously issued requirement for access to the garage space by parking permit remains unchanged.

13. Both of the actions above referred to were determined and announced without prior notice to or consultation with any representative of the Complainant Union.

14. No request for consultation with respect to either action or its impact upon employees was made by Complainant or any of its officers or representatives prior to the transmittal of an unfair labor practice charge dated August 4, 1976.

15. No proof was offered that the request of any employee for a temporary parking permit for the weekend in question was denied, or that any employee was refused entry to either the garage space or the office space over such weekend.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

The stated ground for this unfair labor practice complaint is the failure of Respondent to consult with Complainant as to the impact on employees of Respondent's unilateral change in working conditions during non-working hours. The real "gripe", however, is that for a period of two days (Monday, July 5, being an official holiday, was excluded under the extant rules for parking), some employees may have been denied the dubious privilege of parking their cars on a weekend in Respondent's garages, and their children may have been deprived of their inherent right to use the Respondent's toilet facilities after prolonged abstinence due to watching the Bicentennial celebration. More pragmatic than facetious is the assumption that formal remedial action is thought to be necessary to forestall the imminent threat of a similar tragic occurrence during Tricentennial observances in the year 2076.

It is elementary, of course, that a privilege once granted can, if continued, ripen into an inalienable right. So we may assume that the practice of permitting employees to park in the garage space on weekends without a permit while working over-time became a working condition. It is extremely doubtful, however, that parking on weekends for purposes of unorganized recreation or personal convenience and bringing family members into office space can be reasonably construed to be "matters affecting working conditions" with respect to which the agency is required to meet and confer pursuant to Section 11(a) of the Order.

Moreover, any obligation to confer regarding the impact of the change on employees in the units represented by Complainant is negated by the exemption in Section 11(b) for matters which relate to internal security practices. Also, the short time available for initiating the change deprived Complainant of an adequate opportunity to request prior consultation and no doubt contributed to Respondent's failure to notify any Union official prior to distribution of the announcement. The purported discriminatory effect of permitting certain officials of the Department to enter the Nassif building via private elevator is clearly outside the scope of this proceeding.

What we have then is an offense which, in my view, is not cognizable under the Order. Yet it is an affront to sensibilities and pride which, in the development and preservation of sound labor relations, might have been avoided, despite the time pressure, by a courtesy telephone call before the announcement appeared. Under the circumstances, a suitable recognition of mutual obligations, short of a formal unfair labor practice remedy, might be in order. The apparent inability of the parties to resolve their contretemps without official administrative intervention suggests a reciprocal rigidity that precludes successful negotiation. In the words of the Federal Labor Relations Council:

> "Cooperative labor relations are not established or maintained when a labor organization or the management of an agency establishes as its first priority ... the vindication of its position in an unfair labor practice proceeding." Vandenberg Air Force Base, 4392d Aerospace Support Group, Vandenberg Air Force Base, California, FLRC No. 74A-77, Report No. 79, at p. 7.

In view of the recommended disposition on the merits, I find it unnecessary to discuss Respondent's argument as to Complainant's alleged lack of standing by reason of the circumstance that as a union local it is without national consultation rights. Additionally, I fail to see any Fourth Amendment question in this case and decline to pass upon it, but note for the record that a constitutional issue was timely raised by Complainant.

RECOMMENDATION

In view of the foregoing Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law, I recommend to the Assistant Secretary that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety.

SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

VETERANS ADMINISTRATION HOSPITAL,
SHERIDAN, WYOMING
A/SLMR No. 940

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1219, AFL-CIO (AFGE) alleging that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by unilaterally discontinuing a past practice, i.e., the purchase of impact-resistant eyeglasses for certain employees.

The Assistant Secretary adopted the Administrative Law Judge's recommended dismissal of the complaint. In this regard, the Administrative Law Judge noted that the Respondent's past practice of purchasing impact-resistant glasses for certain of its employees who wore glasses and who worked with psychiatic patients dated back to a period when impact-resistant glasses were not readily available. However, the Administrative Law Judge noted as of 1972 the Food and Drug Administration required that all glasses sold in the United States be impact-resistant. Thus, the Administrative Law Judge concluded that the eyeglasses in question no longer constituted "special equipment" within the meaning of 5 U.S.C. § 7903 under which the Respondent received its authority to use appropriated funds for the purchase of such equipment. Therefore, he concluded that the Respondent's decision to discontinue purchasing what are now defined as "standard eyeglasses" was necessary in view of the applicable law.

Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary ordered that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety.

DECISION AND ORDER

On August 2, 1977, Administrative Law Judge Randolph D. Mason issued his Recommended Decision and Order in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had not engaged in the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint and recommending that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety. Thereafter, the Complainant filed exceptions and a supporting brief with respect to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order and the entire record in the subject case, including the Complainant's exceptions and supporting brief, I hereby adopt the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendations. 1/

RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

Preliminary Statement

This proceeding was heard in Sheridan, Wyoming, on May 24 and 25, 1977, and arises under Executive Order 11491, as amended. Pursuant to the Regulations of the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations (hereinafter called the Assistant Secretary), a Notice of Hearing on Complaint was issued on April 8, 1977. This case was initiated by a complaint filed on August 23, 1976, by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1219 (hereinafter the "Union"). The complaint alleged that the Veterans Administration Hospital at Sheridan, Wyoming, (hereinafter the "respondent") violated sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by refusing to negotiate with the Union regarding its decision to discontinue purchasing impact-resistant eyeglasses for certain employees.

At the hearing, all parties were represented and were afforded full opportunity to be heard, adduce evidence, examine and cross-examine witnesses, and argue orally. Thereafter, both parties filed briefs which have been duly considered. Upon the entire record in this case, from my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, and from all of the testimony and evidence adduced at the hearing, I make the following findings, conclusions, and recommendations.

Findings of Fact

At all times relevant to this proceeding, the Union was the exclusive representative of various nonprofessional employees at the Veterans Administration Hospital, Sheridan, Wyoming. The negotiated agreement between the Union and the respondent pertaining to the period in question is dated February 14, 1974.

For many years prior to 1976, respondent purchased impact-resistant eyeglasses for employees working with mentally ill patients at the hospital. Since most glasses available to the public prior to 1972 were made with ordinary crown glass lenses which were more easily shattered, respondent considered the impact-resistant glasses as special equipment for the protection of its personnel. It was on this ground that the respondent justified the purchase of these glasses with public funds.

In 1972, however, the Food and Drug Administration held that in order "(t)o protect the public more adequately from potential eye injury, eyeglasses and sunglasses must be fitted with impact-resistant lenses ..." 21 C.F.R. § 3.84 (effective February 2, 1972). On February 10, 1972, the Veterans Administration Central Office in Washington, D. C., advised the respondent by telegram of the new FDA regulation. The telegram further stated:

> ... However, if station management determines that an employee requires safety glasses, purchase is authorized as a protective item under VAPR 8-74.106. Safety glasses will meet the requirements of Federal Specification GGG-G-513B.

The above-mentioned Federal Specification required that the lenses meet the standards established by the American National Standards Institute (ANSI) for occupational eye protection. Lenses meeting ANSI requirements are capable of withstanding a much greater impact than lenses which only satisfy the 1972 FDA requirements.

For reasons undisclosed by the record, the respondent ignored the above telegram from its Central Office, and continued to purchase impact-resistant eyeglasses for certain of its employees even though these glasses were required for the general public. It was not until October of 1975, that respondent appeared to question its authority to purchase these glasses. On October 14, 1975, the Hospital Director wrote the following memorandum to all employees regarding "Employee Safety Glasses":

> 1. The practice of providing glasses to employees coming in contact with mentally ill patients goes back a number of years to a time when glasses with heat-strengthened lenses were not routinely available. The 1972 FDA ruling requiring that all eyeglasses sold be made of plastic, impact-resistant glass, or laminated glass, subsequently changed the picture. All glasses sold including those we purchased on VA contract, now conform to FDA requirements.
> 2. By teletype of February 10, 1972, VACO states that safety glasses authorized for purchase under this authority (VAPR 8-74.106) are to meet the requirements of Federal Specification GGG-G-513B. This specification covers industrial goggles and lenses.

3. Our current practice of buying so-called safety glasses for employees therefore becomes questionable particularly since they are no longer any different from those sold by opticians to the general public and since they cannot be classified as industrial type safety glasses.

4. The purchase of impact-resistant eyeglasses will be discontinued as all glasses sold meet this standard by the 1972 FDA ruling. Provision is made for reimbursement to an employee for glasses damaged or destroyed by a patient.

Prior to issuing this, management showed the Union president a rough draft of the above memorandum and noted that he had "no problem" with it. However, on October 21, 1975, the Union filed a pre-complaint charge alleging a violation of section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Executive Order. Subsequently, on December 1, 1975, the Hospital Director rescinded the above-quoted memorandum.

In February of 1976, respondent provided the Union with a copy of a proposed Hospital Memorandum entitled "Protective Eye Equipment." The purpose of the memorandum was to establish a policy and procedure by which appropriate protective eye equipment would be provided. Under this proposal, the past practice of purchasing standard impact-resistant eyeglasses would have been discontinued and respondent would only purchase glasses meeting the more rigid ANSI requirements. Furthermore, such glasses would only be purchased when an "above average hazard existed; moreover, the need for safety glasses would be determined on an individual basis." On March 8, 1976, Floyd E. Burrows, the Union's president, informed the Hospital Director by memorandum that the Union did not approve of any change in respondent's past practice of providing impact-resistant eyeglasses to employees who work with mentally disturbed patients. Burrows further stated that the proposed change in working conditions would have an adverse economic impact upon the employees and that the issue should be negotiated.

On March 16, 1976, Frederic E. Wessel, the new Hospital Director, wrote a memorandum to Burrows in which he reminded Burrows of the Veterans Administration procurement regulation (VAPR 8-74.106) describing respondent's authority to purchase protective equipment. The regulation is entitled "Protective Items" and states, in part, as follows:

> The purchase and maintenance from available appropriations, of special clothing and equipment for the protection of personnel in the performance of their assigned tasks is authorized by [5 U.S.C. § 7903].

Wessel also reviewed the change in circumstances brought about by the 1972 FDA standards and stated as follows:

> The management of this VA Hospital will continue to provide authorized protective eye equipment to all employees where need of such equipment is established. VA Regulations provide for the purchase of protective items; eyeglasses of standard impact-resistant lenses do not meet this criteria. [The proposed] hospital memorandum will cause the discontinuance of the purchase of eyeglasses of standard impact-resistant lenses.

Wessel concluded by inviting the Union to discuss the impact of the proposed hospital memorandum.

On March 29, 1976, a labor-management meeting was held to discuss this issue. The Union was represented by Burrows and Wayne Doyle; respondent was represented by the Hospital Director, the Assistant Director, and a personnel officer. At this meeting the difference between "safety glasses" and standard impact-resistant glasses was discussed. The Union took the position that the discontinuance of the purchase of standard impact-resistant glasses should be negotiated. Management told the Union at this meeting that the purchase of these glasses was unlawful because they could no longer be considered true "safety glasses." Burrows further asked the Hospital Director to request guidelines from OSHA for safety glasses.

On April 5, 1976, Wessel wrote a memorandum to the Occupational Safety and Health Administration requesting "criteria for provision of eye protective equipment" for the employees in question. On April 27, 1976, the Director of the Office of Federal Agency Safety Programs, U. S. Department of Labor, replied to Wessel's letter. He referred Wessel to the OSHA standards for employees in the private sector set forth in 29 C.F.R. § 1910.133. That section requires employers to supply safety glasses meeting ANSI standards. However, he was unable to provide any specific guidelines applicable to respondent's Federal employees. He concluded by referring Wessel to the VA's occupational safety and health "designee" in Washington, D. C. On May 19, 1976, Wessel wrote a memorandum to this designee in which he set forth management's position and requested information regarding the appropriate criteria for eye protective equipment. Wessel received a reply dated June 28, 1976, which concurred with his opinion that the purchase of impact-resistant eyeglasses should be discontinued.

By memorandum of July 15, 1976, Wessel informed Burrows that he had decided to discontinue the purchase of impact-resistant eyeglasses for the employees. He also provided Burrows with a copy of the June 28, 1976, letter from the VA Central Office. He further stated as follows:

> You also mentioned [in your March 8, 1976, memorandum] that the practice of providing eyeglasses for a period of years is a drastic change in working conditions "via the economic route." Fringe benefits for Federal employees are established by the United States Government and nowhere has it stated that Federal employees who work with psychiatric patients are entitled to free eyeglasses.

On July 21, 1976, Burrows demanded that the matter be negotiated pursuant to the rules set forth in the parties' negotiated agreement.

By memorandum dated July 29, 1976, Wessel again informed Burrows that respondent did not have the authority to purchase standard impact-resistant glasses because they were not "truly safety glasses." He then stated:

> ... Therefore, our decision to discontinue the purchase of impact-resistant glasses is not negotiable.
>
> As you know we have met with you to discuss the impact of this decision. At those times your comments have been restricted to the decision itself. We are willing to meet with you again to further discuss the impact and method of implementation of this decision. Please notify the Chief, Personnel Service by August 10, 1976, if you desire to meet and confer over the impact and method of implementation of this decision.

The Union filed a pre-complaint charge dated August 4, 1976. Wessel responded to this charge by letter of August 12, 1976, in which he made it clear that his decision to discontinue the purchase of impact-resistant glasses was final and was not negotiable. He reasoned that "(s)ince the use of impact-resistant lenses is now the norm for all eyeglasses, there is no longer any authority to purchase this type of eyeglass as a special safety item."1/

On August 23, 1976, the Union filed its complaint against the respondent alleging violations of the Order by virtue of respondent's refusal to negotiate "the matter of continuing to supply the glasses to the employees as in the past."

On September 3, 1976, the Hospital Director issued "Hospital Memorandum No. A-25" stating his position with respect to protective eye equipment. This memorandum was essentially the same as the Hospital Memorandum which had been proposed in February of 1976.2/

Conclusions of Law

The issue presented for decision is whether respondent violated section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Executive Order by refusing to negotiate with the Union prior to discontinuing the practice of purchasing standard impact-resistant eyeglasses for certain employees. Section 11(a) requires the parties to meet and confer with respect to personnel policies and practices and matters affecting working conditions "so far as may be appropriate under applicable laws and regulations."3/ Thus, the agency's decision to

1/ Wessel acknowledged that a proposal to negotiate on the purchase of "true safety glasses" could be negotiable; however, the Union was only interested in negotiating with respect to the discontinuance of the purchase of standard impact-resistant glasses.

2/ The September 3 memorandum was, in effect, merely a formal announcement of the final decision that had been made prior to the filing of the complaint. In view of this finding, respondent's motion to dismiss the complaint as premature is denied. Furthermore, assuming arguendo that the complaint was premature, it should be noted that respondent did not raise this objection until the day of the hearing. Since the complaint could easily have been amended if the alleged procedural deficiency had been raised earlier, it would be patently unfair to dismiss the complaint on this ground.

3/ Section 11(a) qualifies the applicable regulations as those "for which a compelling need exists under criteria discontinue the purchase of these eyeglasses would not be negotiable if the purchase of these glasses was not authorized by law. If this was true, only the impact of the decision upon the employees, and the method of implementation, would be negotiable.

The respondent's authority to purchase safety glasses or other protective eye equipment derives from 5 U.S.C. § 7903 (1970).[4] That section is entitled "Protective Clothing and Equipment" and states, in part, as follows:

> Appropriations available for the procurement of supplies and material or equipment are available for the purchase and maintenance of special clothing and equipment for the protection of personnel in the performance of their assigned tasks.

I must conclude that the eyeglasses discontinued by respondent in 1976 did not constitute "special equipment" for the protection of respondent's personnel. Those glasses were the same as all glasses being sold to the general public at that time. Respondent discontinued the purchase of the glasses because they merely satisfied the Food and Drug Administration's standards for impact resistance applicable to all eyeglasses and could not therefore be considered special safety glasses. Since the glasses could not be considered "special equipment" within the meaning of 5 U.S.C. § 7903 (1970), respondent did not possess the requisite authority to purchase them with public funds.

Further support for the above conclusion is found in decisions of the Comptroller General, which are binding on the Government agencies.[5] It has been held that when a federal employee reasonably might be expected to furnish equipment as a part of the official equipment of his position, appropriated funds are not available for the purchase thereof. 32 Comp. Gen. 229 (1952) (and decisions cited therein). Clearly, all federal employees who require corrective lenses are expected to furnish their own eyeglasses.

3/ (continued) established by the Federal Labor Relations Council and which are issued at the agency headquarters level or at the level of a primary national subdivision...." The ultimate conclusion in the instant case does not rest upon any VA regulation.

4/ It is clear that the VA's annual appropriation for the year 1976 did not specifically provide for the purchase of standard eyeglasses for employees.

5/ See Comptroller General Decision B-161038, July 25, 1967; 31 U.S.C. §§ 44 and 74; and 32 Comp. Gen. 229, at 231 (1952).

Therefore, respondent's decision to discontinue purchasing standard eyeglasses for its employees was necessary in view of the applicable law. The Executive Order does not contemplate negotiations with respect to a decision of this nature.

Under the circumstances, it was only necessary for the respondent to give the exclusive representative a reasonable opportunity to meet and confer concerning the impact and implementation of its decision. Respondent complied with this requirement but complainant did not request consultation or bargaining on these matters. Since there was ample opportunity for complainant to request such bargaining or consultation prior to implementation of the decision, and complainant never requested such bargaining or consultation, I conclude that respondent did not refuse to consult, confer, or negotiate with respect to the impact of its decision. RECOMMENDATION

Having found that respondent has not engaged in certain conduct prohibited by section 19(a)(1) and (6) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, I recommend that the complaint herein be dismissed in its entirety.

SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER CLARIFYING UNIT
OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

DEFENSE CONTRACT ADMINISTRATION
SERVICES REGION, ATLANTA, GEORGIA
A/SLMR No. 941

This case involved a petition for clarification of unit (CU) filed by the Defense Contract Administration Services Region, Atlanta, Georgia, (Activity) which, in effect, sought a determination by the Assistant Secretary as to the impact of a December 3, 1976, reorganization on certain units represented by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1858 (AFGE Local 1858) and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3024 (AFGE Local 3024).

The Activity took the position that as a result of the reorganization, the unit represented by AFGE Local 1858 no longer remained appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under the Order and that the employees formerly represented by AFGE Local 1858 accreted into the unit represented by AFGE Local 3024. The Activity took the further position that the unit represented by AFGE Local 3024 remained, subsequent to the reorganization, appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under the Order. On the other hand, AFGE Local 1858 took the position that its unit remained, after the reorganization, viable and appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under the Order.

Prior to the reorganization, the Activity was composed of a number of Defense Contract Administration Services Districts (DCASDs) and Defense Contract Administration Services Offices (DCASOs). DCASD Birmingham, Alabama, had attached to it four DCASOs located at New Orleans, Louisiana; Huntsville, Alabama; Hayes (Birmingham, Alabama); and Hayes (Dothan, Alabama). AFGE Local 1858 represented all nonprofessional employees assigned to DCASO Huntsville, and AFGE Local 3024 represented all other nonprofessional employees in DCASD Birmingham, including employees assigned to DCASOs at New Orleans, Birmingham, and Dothan. As a result of the reorganization in December 1976, DCASO Huntsville was disestablished, DCASOs Hayes (Birmingham) and Hayes (Dothan) became Defense Contract Administration Services Plant Representative Offices (DCASPROs), and DCASD Birmingham and DCASO New Orleans became Defense Contract Administration Services Management Areas (DCASMAs).

The Assistant Secretary found that the employees of the former DCASO Huntsville had become organizationally and operationally integrated with the employees of DCASMA Birmingham, and, as a consequence, the unit represented by AFGE Local 1858 no longer remained appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under the Order. He also found that the employees remaining in Huntsville accreted to the bargaining unit represented by AFGE Local 3024 and that this unit, subsequent to the reorganization, remained appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under the Order.

Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary ordered that the unit be clarified consistent with his findings.

DECISION AND ORDER CLARIFYING UNIT

Upon a petition duly filed under Section 6 of Executive Order 11491, as amended, a hearing was held before Hearing Officer Robert F. Woodland, Jr. The Hearing Officer's rulings made at the hearing are free from prejudicial error and are hereby affirmed.

Upon the entire record in this case, including a brief filed by the Activity/Petitioner, 1/ the Assistant Secretary finds:

The Defense Contract Administration Services Region, Atlanta, Georgia, herein called the Activity, filed the subject petition seeking a determination by the Assistant Secretary as to the effect of a reorganization of December 3, 1976,on the exclusively recognized bargaining units located at Huntsville, Alabama, 2/ and Birmingham, Alabama. 3/ The Activity and AFGE Local 3024 contend that, as a result of the December 3, 1976, reorganization, the unit represented by AFGE Local 1858 is no longer appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under the Order and that employees currently assigned to Huntsville have accreted into the unit represented by AFGE Local 3024. In essence, the Activity takes the position that the unit represented by AFGE Local 3024 should be clarified to reflect certain changes in its organization resulting from the reorganization. Thus, it asserts that the unit represented by AFGE Local 3024 should include all nonprofessional employees assigned to the Defense Contract Administration Services Management Areas (DCASMAs) located at Birmingham, Alabama, and New Orleans, Louisiana, as well as employees assigned to the Defense Contract Administration Services Plant Representative Offices (DCASPROs) at Birmingham, Alabama and Dothan, Alabama. On the other hand, AFGE Local 1858 contends that its unit continues, after the reorganization, as a viable and appropriate unit for the purpose of exclusive recognition under the Order.

The Activity is 1 of 9 regions of the Defense Logistics Agency, formerly known as the Defense Supply Agency. Headquartered in Marietta, Georgia, it provides contract administration services in support of the Department of Defense and other Federal agencies and is headed by a Regional Commander, a military officer. Reporting to the Commander, and located at the headquarters, are several offices and directorates which are responsible for planning and monitoring all regional operations. The offices are concerned primarily with matters regarding planning and management, command support, civilian personnel administration, and legal counsel. The directorates oversee matters regarding systems and financial management, contract administration, production, quality assurance, industrial security, and contractor employment compliance. In addition, the Activity is organizationally composed of operations offices located throughout the geographic area under its jurisdiction. These offices are responsible for the achievement of the Activity's mission within the geographic area of their respective responsibilities.

Prior to the reorganization of December 3, 1976, the Activity was composed of three Defense Contract Administration Services Districts (DCASDs), among which was DCASD Birmingham, Alabama. Further, the DCASDs were organizationally composed of Defense Contract Administration Services Offices (DCASOs) which reported to the Activity through the DCASD.

1/ The brief filed by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1858, herein called AFGE Local 1858, was submitted untimely and has not been considered.

2/ AFGE Local 1858 was recognized as the exclusive representative of employees in a unit described as: "All current and future eligible civilian employees of DCASO Huntsville, Alabama, . . . excluding management officials (as defined by Executive Order 11491), employees engaged in personnel work in other than purely clerical positions, supervisory employees, professional employees, consultants, co-operative students, employees under the category as defined in 10 USC 1581 (a) as amended through PL-87-267 dated 4 October 1961 and PL-85-322 dated 11 February 1958 (formerly PL-313 Type Positions) and supergrade employees, and temporary employees (appointment for 90 days or less)."

3/ The American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3024, herein called AFGE Local 3024, was recognized as the exclusive representative of employees in a unit described as: "All eligible employees in the Defense Contract Administration Services District, Birmingham, Alabama, area, excluding Defense Contract Administration Services Office, Huntsville, Alabama, . . . /and excluding/ management officials or supervisors as defined by /Executive Order/ 11491, as amended, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, guards, professional employees, employees serving on temporary appointments of 90 days or less, consultants and experts, part-time employees, co-op students, /and/ employees whose assigned duties require that they represent the interest of DCASR Atlanta in consultation or negotiations with the union."

Attached to DCASD Birmingham were four DCASOs: DCASO Hayes (Birmingham, Alabama), DCASO Hayes (Dothan, Alabama), DCASO New Orleans, Louisiana, and DCASO Huntsville, Alabama. The unit represented by AFGE Local 1858 was restricted to nonprofessional employees assigned to DCASO Huntsville, while the unit represented by AFGE Local 3024 included all other nonprofessional employees of DCASD Birmingham, including DCASO Hayes (Birmingham), DCASO Hayes (Dothan) and DCASO New Orleans.

As a result of the reorganization, the Activity abolished the DCASDs and the DCASOs and created DCASMAs and DCASPROs, each of which is independently responsible to the Activity Commander. The record reveals that subsequent to the reorganization, the Activity is composed of six DCASMAs, among which are DCASMA Birmingham and DCASMA New Orleans, and six DCASPROs, among which are DCASPRO Hayes (Birmingham) and DCASPRO Hayes (Dothan). The former DCASO Huntsville ceased, after the reorganization, to constitute a separate organizational component of the Activity with certain employees being transferred to DCASMA Birmingham and the employees remaining at Huntsville becoming organizationally and operationally integrated into DCASMA Birmingham.

Under the new organizational structure, all Huntsville employees are subject to the supervision of the DCASMA Birmingham Commander and make operational reports to the Activity through the DCASMA Birmingham organization. 4/ The record further reveals that all employees of DCASMA Birmingham, including employees assigned to Huntsville, Alabama, enjoy essentially similar job classifications, skills, and duties pursuant to policies and procedures established by the Activity, and enjoy uniform personnel and labor relations policies and practices administered by the Activity's Personnel Office.

Under all the foregoing circumstances, I find that the Activity's employees assigned to Huntsville, Alabama, do not enjoy a clear and identifiable community of interest separate and distinct from other employees of DCASMA Birmingham and that a unit limited to employees at that location will not promote effective dealings or efficiency of agency operations. Thus, as noted above, as a consequence of the 1976 reorganization, the employees assigned to Huntsville became organizationally and operationally integrated with the employees of DCASMA Birmingham; and thereafter all employees of DCASMA Birmingham enjoy common supervision, essentially similar working conditions, and are subject to the same personnel policies and practices administered by the same Personnel Office.

In these circumstances, I find that the employees assigned to Huntsville accreted to the bargaining unit represented exclusively by AFGE Local 3024 and that such unit, subsequent to the reorganization, includes employees who share a clear and identifiable community of interest separate and distinct from other employees of the Activity and will promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations.

4/ As part of the reorganization, a Resident-in-Charge was appointed at Huntsville. The Resident-in-Charge is responsible only for certain housekeeping and administrative matters attendant upon maintaining the office at Huntsville.

Accordingly, I shall clarify the unit represented by AFGE Local 3024 by including in such unit the employees formerly represented by AFGE Local 1858 and by changing the unit description to reflect the organizational changes resulting from the December 3, 1976, reorganization.

ORDER

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the unit sought to be clarified herein, for which the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3024 was recognized in 1969 as the exclusive representative, be, and it hereby is, clarified by including in said unit employees assigned to Huntsville, Alabama, and by substituting and adding certain designations to reflect the organizational elements in said unit. The unit description, as clarified, is as follows:

> All employees of Defense Contract Administration Services Region, Atlanta, assigned to DCASMA Birmingham, DCASMA New Orleans, DCASPRO Hayes (Birmingham), and DCASPRO Hayes (Dothan), excluding professional employees, management officials, confidential employees, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, and supervisors as defined by the Order.

SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY,
INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE,
IRS CHICAGO DISTRICT
A/SLMR No. 942

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by the National Treasury Employees Union (NTEU) and NTEU Chapter 010 (Complainants) alleging that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) of the Order by a supervisor questioning one of his employees who had been engaged in a conversation with other employees, including NTEU stewards, during a coffee break. The supervisor allegedly inquired as to whether the employee was seeing the stewards on union business. If so, he allegedly indicated that the employee was required to have the supervisor's permission in advance.

The Administrative Law Judge concluded that the supervisor's inquiry was reasonable under the circumstances, that his statement to the employee with respect to the necessity for advanced permission before meeting with the steward was meant to apply to meetings during working time, in accordance with the parties' negotiated agreement, and that the employee so understood the comment. The Administrative Law Judge, therefore, recommended that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety.

Noting particularly the absence of exceptions, the Assistant Secretary adopted the findings, conclusions and recommendation of the Administrative Law Judge and ordered that the complaint be dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER

On August 16, 1977, Administrative Law Judge Milton Kramer issued his Recommended Decision and Order in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had not engaged in the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint and recommending that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety. No exceptions were filed to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order and the entire record in this case, and noting particularly that no exceptions were filed, I hereby adopt the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendation.

RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

Preliminary Statement

This case arises under Executive Order 11491 as amended. It was initiated by a complaint dated May 20, 1976 and filed May 21, 1976 alleging that on October 15, 1975 the Respondent had violated Section 19(a)(1) of the Executive Order. The violation was alleged to consist of a supervisor of the Respondent approaching a group of employees including several NTEU representatives and one of his supervisees, who were engaged in conversation during a coffee break, asking whether the representatives were talking to his supervisee about a union matter, and taking the supervisee aside and telling him "if you are discussing union business, you should let me know first." On June 24, 1976 the Respondent filed a response to the complaint which contained a motion to dismiss.

On November 16, 1976 the Regional Administrator issued a Notice of Hearing to be held January 18, 1977 in Chicago, Illinois. On January 4, 1977 he issued an Order Rescheduling Hearing to March 7, 1977. A hearing was held in Chicago on that date. Both sides were represented by counsel. Both sides produced witnesses who were examined and cross-examined, offered exhibits which were received in evidence, made closing arguments, and filed briefs.

Facts

The IRS Chicago District has a Facility on the south side of Chicago known as the South Area Office. The Facility consists principally of revenue officers and revenue agents. A revenue officer is responsible for collecting delinquent accounts and obtaining delinquent returns. A revenue agent verifies the accuracy of returns that are filed. It is uncommon for revenue agents and revenue officers to have conferences with each other on official business.

It is an established practice at the Facility to permit a morning coffee break and an afternoon coffee break. No particular time or duration is prescribed for such breaks. They usually last about ten minutes and it is expected that they will not go beyond fifteen minutes. They are usually taken in an area about fifteen feet square containing a coffee dispensing machine, soft drink and candy vending machines, and tables and chairs. Sometimes an employee may obtain his coffee from the coffee dispenser and take his break elsewhere but that is not the usual practice.

The Facility is located on one floor. Most of the floor is open space containing desks. The revenue agents and revenue officers have desks in the open space. Some supervisors have private offices. There are four or five conference rooms. There is one bank of six private rooms running almost the entire width of the floor; two of them are conference rooms and four are private offices. Conference rooms are used for interviews with taxpayers. They are used also by revenue agents to prepare their reports in better privacy and less commotion than obtain at their desks in the open area. One of them, identified at the hearing as Conference Room B, is used also as a passageway through the bank of six offices referred to above to avoid walking around the entire bank when going from one open area to another.

Six people were involved in the incident on October 15, 1975 that the Complainant contends culminated in an unfair labor practice prohibited by Section 19(a)(1) of the Executive Order. Four were members of the unit and two were supervisors.

Richard Kaczmarek was a revenue agent who was using the room identified as Conference Room B to write a report. He was also a union steward. Errol A. Anderson was also a revenue agent. He had been a union steward but had relinquished that office on October 10, 1975 because of the pressure of other work. He had unsuccessfully suggested to Stephen Barkauskas that Barkauskas succeed him as a steward. Barkauskas was a revenue officer. A few days after October 15, 1975 Barkauskas did succeed Anderson as a steward. Thomas O'Malley was a revenue agent. During the conversation involved he left and re-entered Conference Room B several times. Thus three of the members of the unit involved in the conversation described below were revenue agents and one, Barkauskas, was a revenue officer.

Richard Lovejoy was a supervisor but not a supervisor of any of the aforementioned employees. His office was adjacent to Conference Room B. The two doors on opposite sides of his office were adjacent to the two doors to Conference Room B, separated from them only by the wall separating the two rooms. Eugene T. Liberty was also a supervisor and the supervisor of Barkauskas. His office was adjacent to Lovejoy's office on the end opposite to Conference Room B.

NTEU Chapter 010 is the recognized representative of a unit of employees of the IRS Chicago District, 1/ which includes the Facility. It is party to a Multi-District Agreement with IRS. The parties agree, and I find, that that Agreement provides that when an employee wishes to speak to a union steward on a union matter during working hours the permission of his supervisor must first be obtained.

On October 15, 1975 Kaczmarek was using Conference Room B to prepare a report. Some time between 9:A.M. and 10:A.M. Anderson went to the coffee machine, obtained a cup of coffee, and went to Conference Room B to pass his coffee break with Kaczmarek. O'Malley had either preceded him or followed him into that room by a minute or two. All three were revenue agents. They engaged in usual coffee-break chit-chat for a few minutes. Barkauskas then entered with a cup of coffee and the discussion changed to a union subject. 2/ During the conversation O'Malley left and re-entered the room several times, sometimes closing the door.

Lovejoy, a supervisor, was working in his adjacent office the doors of which are adjacent to the doors of the Conference Room. He noticed what he thought was unusual activity in the conference room, with people entering and leaving and much discussion. He knew that Kaczmarek and Anderson were revenue agents and that Barkauskas was a revenue officer, and that agents and officers seldom have occasion to confer on business matters. He knew also, or thought he knew, that Kaczmarek and Anderson were union stewards. It did not occur to him that they were on a coffee break because breaks were rarely taken in a conference room and it seemed to him the conversation continued far longer than a coffee break. He was not the supervisor of any of the participants but he knew that Liberty, whose office was adjacent to Lovejoy's on the side opposite the conference room, was Barkauskas' supervisor. After what he thought was about twenty-five minutes 3/ he went to Liberty's office and told him that one of his men was having some kind of a meeting with Kaczmarek and Anderson, two union stewards, for the last half hour.

It was what happened in the next two minutes that is contended to have been an unfair labor practice committed by Liberty.

Liberty went to the door of the conference room, which was open, and saw Anderson near the door. He beckoned Anderson over and asked him if they were discussing union business. Anderson told him that he was no longer a steward, and

---

2/ The testimony of Barkauskas and the testimony of Anderson differ radically on the union subject that was discussed. It is unnecessary to resolve this conflict. It is necessary to find, as I have, only that it was a union matter. The testimony of Barkauskas and Anderson differ sharply also in other inconsequential respects.

3/ Barkauskas and Anderson both testified that the entire discussion was well under fifteen minutes. It is unnecessary to resolve this conflict. It is necessary to decide, as I have found, only that Lovejoy thought it was about twenty-five minutes.

to ask Kaczmarek. Liberty then beckoned Kaczmarek and asked him whether he was discussing union business with Barkauskas, his supervisee. Kaczmarek's response was to ask Liberty whether he had been eavesdropping. This angered Liberty who said he would speak to the chief steward about such a remark. Kaczmarek said that would be fine. Barkauskas was then asked to step outside the conference room. Liberty asked him whether he was discussing union business with the steward. Barkauskas stated that he was at the tail end of his coffee break. Liberty indicated doubt and said either "if you are discussing union business, you should let me know first" (as quoted in the complaint) or that if he was seeing the stewards on union business he was required to have Liberty's permission (as testified to by Liberty).

Liberty then went back to his office at the suggestion of another supervisor who was passing by. A few minutes later Kaczmarek came to Liberty's office and told him that he had news for Liberty, that what Liberty had just done was an unfair labor practice. A few days later Barkauskas succeeded Anderson as a steward.

Discussion and Conclusions

The Complainant contends that Liberty's conduct violated Section 19(a)(1) in two respects. First, the employees were on coffee break and therefore on their own time, and asking them whether they were engaged in union business clearly implied that conducting union business on break time was unacceptable to management. Second, urges the Complainant, Liberty's statement that if Barkauskas was engaging in union business he should let Liberty know in advance was overly broad because he did not qualify it by stating "during working hours". I find both positions untenable.

The parties agree that their collective agreement requires that an employee obtain permission from his supervisor to discuss a union matter with a steward during working time. The Respondent concedes, for the purpose of this case, that coffee break time is not working time and that an employee need not obtain permission to discuss a union matter with a steward during a coffee break.

Liberty was told by a fellow supervisor, Lovejoy, that Barkauskas, an employee in the unit he supervised, had been in a discussion with two union stewards for the last half hour in Conference Room B. It was not incumbent on Liberty, as the Complainant seems to believe, to conduct an investigation into the accuracy of Lovejoy's statement before asking the participants, including Barkauskas, whom he supervised, whether they were discussing union business. He reasonably believed that they had been talking in the Conference Room for half an hour, well beyond any permissible coffee break, and in a room where coffee breaks were not usually taken, and that Kaczmarek and Anderson were union stewards. Such inquiry was not a violation of Section 19(a)(1), and if it were it was well within the de minimis doctrine. 4/

Liberty's statement to Barkauskas that if he wanted to speak to stewards on a union matter he should first advise Liberty was simply a statement of fact. In this aspect this case is quite similar to Long Beach Naval Shipyard and Federal Employees Metal Trades Council, A/SLMR No. 352 (1974). The Complainant argues that the statement was unqualified by "during working hours" and therefore, could be understood to mean that an employee needed permission to discuss a union matter with a steward even on his own time. A supervisor is not required to phrase his off-the-cuff observations with the studied niceties of a common-law conveyance. He meant this comment to apply to working time, and I have no doubt Barkauskas so understood it. Cf. Long Beach Naval Shipyard, supra.

RECOMMENDATION

The complaint should be dismissed.

A/SLMR No. 943

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 3347 (AFGE) alleging that the Respondent Agency and Respondent Activity violated Section 19(a)(1), (5) and (6) of the Order. In essence, the AFGE alleged that the Respondent Agency violated the Order by delaying and failing to provide the Respondent Activity with the expertise and freedom to negotiate freely and without restraint, causing delays by either withholding or failing to furnish necessary information in a timely manner and by the failure of Respondent Agency's Administrator to make a timely determination under Section 11(c) of the Order. The AFGE also alleged that the Respondent Activity violated the Order by delaying and withholding appropriate documents and instructions, by failing to make timely determinations of negotiability and applicability of Agency orders and directives, and by creating other delays causing contract negotiations to be drawn out over a long period of time. Prior to the hearing, the AFGE withdrew the 19(a)(5) portion of the complaint against both the Respondent Agency and Respondent Activity and the 19(a)(6) portion of the complaint against the Respondent Agency.

The Administrative Law Judge concluded that the Respondent Agency had not violated Section 19(a)(1) of the Order and that the Respondent Activity had not violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order. In this regard, the Administrative Law Judge found that the AFGE's withdrawal of the Section 19(a)(6) allegation against the Respondent Agency was equivalent to a withdrawal of that part of the complaint against the Respondent Activity as well since the only basis set forth in the complaint for the violation of Section 19(a)(6) was the asserted failure of the Respondent Agency to make a timely determination on the AFGE's request for a negotiability determination. He also found that Section 11(c) of the Order did not impose a direct time limitation on the Respondent Agency in issuing a negotiability determination. Further, he found that there was no evidence to indicate that either of the Respondents violated Section 19(a)(1) of the Order. In this regard, he concluded that the evidence established that Respondents bargained in good faith, attended all bargaining sessions when called, submitted counter proposals, and promptly answered all of the AFGE's requests for information and documents.

Noting particularly the absence of exceptions, the Assistant Secretary adopted the findings, conclusions, and recommendations of the Administrative Law Judge and ordered that the complaint be dismissed.

RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

Statement of the Case

This case arises under Executive Order 11491, as amended (hereinafter also referred to as the "Order"). It was initiated by a charge, filed on September 28, 1976, and, the Complaint filed on November 5, 1976 (Asst. Sec. Exh. 1). In view of the subsequent withdrawal of a portion of the Complaint and Respondent's Motion to Dismiss, it is necessary at the outset to set forth the parties named and the allegations of the Complaint. 1/

Paragraph 1 of the Complaint under name of activity and/or agency reads "Environmental Protection Agency"; under address states "Research Triangle Park, N.C. 27711 and Washington, D.C. 20460"; as person to contact, "John H. DeFord, Acting Director of Administration [Research Triangle Park]; and under subparagraph F, if complaint is made against an activity, names the agency as "Environmental Protection Agency". The Complaint alleged violations of Section 19(a)(1), (5) and (6) of the Order and stated:

> "It is the contention of AFGE Local 3347 that beginning on or about the week beginning November 3, 1975, that EPA Management, under direction of Assistant Administrator Alvin L. Alm, has delayed and withheld appropriate documents and instructions, failed to make timely determinations of negotiability and applicability of EPA Orders and Directives, and in other ways created delays causing contract negotiations to be drawn out from November 17, 1975 to and including the current date.
> "It is our contention that in violation of E.O. 11491, EPA Headquarters personnel interferred with contract negotiations being conducted by AFGE Local 3347 by delaying and failing to provide local management at Research Triangle Park, North Carolina with the expertise and the freedom to negotiate freely and without constraint. EPA also failed to make timely determinations as required by Section 11 of E.O. 11491. Delays were created by Alvin L. Alm, Edward T. Rhodes, Stanley Williams, and Richard Cocozza, all of whom have the address of Environmental Protection Agency, Washington, D.C. 20460. These delays began in November, 1975, and continued through November 1976. Examples establish that on February 10, 1976, local negotiators sought the view and instructions of EPA Headquarters, and that this information was not furnished in a timely manner and was furnished in bits and pieces of information in April and May, 1976. These delays and others of which we have been advised were apparently contrived to thwart negotiations by Local 3347.

1/ I am aware of the Council's decision, FLRC No. 76A-37, issued May 4, 1977, in Naval Air Rework Facility, Pensacola, Florida, et al., also discussed infra at n.4; but in view of the withdrawal of the 19(a)(6) allegations against Respondent/Agency, it is assumed that the allegations of 19(a)(6) violation against the Respondent/Agency are no longer present. It is also assumed for the purpose of this decision, but without deciding, that 19(a)(6) allegations against Respondent/Agency would, if true, also constitute a 19(a)(1) violation. This is merely an assumption and does not constitute a determination and is prompted, in part by FLRC No. 76A-37.

"EPA Administrator Russell Train was requested on July 27, 1976, to make a timely determination required under Section 11(c) of E.O. 11491. That determination was not received by AFGE Local 3347 until September 30, 1976. It is our contention that it should have been furnished within fifteen days.

"We believe the above clearly demonstrates interference in negotiations by the named individuals." (Asst. Sec. Exh. 1).

By letter dated February 3, 1977, the Regional Administrator, Lem R. Bridges, advised the parties, in part, as follows:

"Complainant has requested withdrawal of 19(a)(5) against both Respondent/Agency and Respondent/Activity. Complainant has requested withdrawal of 19(a)(6) against Respondent/Agency. The Area Administrator, under my direction, has approved the withdrawal requests." (Asst. Sec. Exh. 2).

The Notice of Hearing, which issued February 3, 1977 (Asst. Sec. Exh. 3), directed a hearing with reference to alleged violations of Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order but, stated:

"Notice of hearing with respect to 19(a)(1) is herein issued against Respondent/Agency.

Notice of hearing with respect to 19(a)(1)(6) is hereby issued against Respondent/Activity." (Asst. Sec. Exh. 3, n. 1).

The only basis set forth in the Complaint for violation of 19(a)(6) of the Order was the asserted conduct of EPA Headquarters (Agency) personnel. Withdrawal of the 19(a)(6) allegations against the Agency with approval of the Regional Administrator was equivalent to dismissal of that part of the Complaint. Norfolk Naval Shipyard and Tidewater Virginia Federal Employees Metal Trades Council, AFL-CIO, A/SLMR No. 708 (1976). With the portion of the Complaint dismissed which asserted conduct by the Agency, and not by the Activity, (Research Triangle Park) in violation of 19(a)(6), it may well be that there is no basis in the Complaint for a 19(a)(6) violation against the Activity. The fact that American Federation of Government Employees, Local 3347 (hereinafter "Union") was certified for a unit of non-professional, non-supervisory employees at the Activity and for a unit of professional, non-supervisory employees at the Activity; and that the dismissal was solely because there was no bargaining relationship between the Union and the Agency to support a 19(a)(6) violation, does not cure the failure, if there were a failure, of the Complaint to allege a basis for a 19(a)(6) violation against the Activity, nor does the issuance of a Notice of Hearing cure any defect in the Complaint. United States Air Force, 380th Combat Support Group, Plattsburgh Air Force Base, N.Y., A/SLMR No. 557 (1975).

With respect to the allegation concerning the Agency's failure to make a timely negotiability determination, Complainant's asserted time frame is without direct basis in the Order. Moreover, assuming unreasonable delay by the Agency head, Complainant's remedy clearly was not by unfair labor practice complaint alleging violations of Section 19(a)(6). Section 11(c) provides that if a negotiability issue arises it shall be resolved as specified therein:

"(1) An issue which involves interpretation of a controlling agreement at a higher agency level is resolved under the procedures of the controlling agreement, or, if none, under agency regulations;

"(2) An issue other than as described in subparagraph (1) of this paragraph which arises at a local level may be referred by either party to the head of the agency for determination;

"(3) An agency head's determination as to the interpretation of the Agency's regulations with respect to a proposal is final.

"(4) A labor organization may appeal to the Council for a decision when --

(i) it disagrees with an agency head's determination that a proposal would violate applicable law, regulation of appropriate authority outside the agency, or this Order, or

(ii) it believes that an agency's regulations, as interpreted by the agency head, violate applicable law, regulation of appropriate authority outside the agency, or this Order, or are not otherwise applicable to bar negotiations under paragraph (a) of this section."

The Order directly places no time limitations on action pursuant to Section 11(c); but the Regulations of the Council, in this regard, provide, in part, as follows:

"(c) Review of a negotiability issue may be requested by a labor organization under this subpart without a prior determination by the agency head, if the agency head has not made a decision -

"(1) Within 45 days after a party to the negotiations initiates referral of the issue for determination, in writing, through prescribed agency channels; or

"(2) Within 15 days after receipt by the agency head of a written request for such determination following referral through prescribed agency channels, or following direct submission if no agency channels are prescribed." (5 C.F.R. § 2411.24(c)).

In short, Complainant had the right, if the Agency did not issue its determination within the time frame noted, to obtain review of the negotiability issue by the Council. Quite early, the Assistant Secretary ruled,

"It was concluded that the intent of Section 19(a)(6) is to provide a labor organization an opportunity to file a complaint when it believes that management has been arbitrary or in error in excluding a matter from negotiation which has already been determined to be negotiable through the procedures set forth in Section 11(c) of the Order." (Report No. 26 (March 18, 1971), 1 Decisions and Reports on Rulings of the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations 618).

cf., United States Department of Agriculture and Agricultural Research Service and National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1552, A/SLMR No. 519 (1975). Accordingly, as the remedy for agency delay in issuing a determination of negotiability and the intent of 19(a)(6) is limited, as to Section 11(c), to matters which have already been determined to be negotiable through the procedures set forth in Section 11(c), such delay, if any, was not a violation of 19(a)(6) of the Order.

Nevertheless, the Complaint alleges sufficient basis for a 19(a)(1) violation by the Agency. Although it can be argued with considerable force that if delay in issuing a negotiability determination does not violate 19(a)(6), the bargaining obligation aside, it cannot constitute an independent 19(a)(1) violation, it is unnecessary to decide that question and, therefore it has not been decided, inasmuch as a) the negotiability determination was issued on September 30, 1976; b) the parties did reach agreement and did execute a new agreement on October 26, 1976 (Jt. Exh. 3-D); and c) the negotiations, as more fully set forth hereinafter have been considered both from the standpoint of the 19(a)(1) allegations as to the Agency, and from the standpoint of the 19(a)(6) allegations at to the Activity and no basis for a violation has been found.

The portion of Respondent's Motion to Dismiss asserting the failure of the Complaint to set forth clearly and concisely facts constituting an unfair labor practice, as required by Section 203.3(a)(3), is particularly applicable to the alleged violation of 19(a)(6) against the Activity. At the commencement of the hearing the sufficiency of the Complaint as to any 19(a)(6) violations in view of Complainant's withdrawal of the allegations as to the Agency was discussed at length. At that time I stated that as the same basis was asserted in support of the 19(a)(1) violation against the Agency as had been alleged in support of the 19(a)(6) violation by the Agency and, on the assumption that the allegations of Paragraph 1 of the Complaint "that EPA management ... has ... created delay causing contract negotiations to be drawn out from November 17, 1975 to and including the current date", were sufficient to constitute a basis for a 19(a)(6) violation against the Activity, Complainant was permitted to proceed. Under the circumstances, this portion of Respondents' Motion to Dismiss is denied.

The other portion of Respondent's Motion to Dismiss concerned the asserted failure to name the Activity. This portion of the Motion to Dismiss was denied at the hearing and is fully affirmed hereby. As the Complaint shows, the Activity was shown as fully as the form permits or requires. The name of the Agency and the Activity is the same; but separate addresses were shown (Washington, D.C. and Research Triangle Park), the person to contact was Mr. DeFord, at Research Triangle Park; and the Agency was shown in Paragraph 1F. If there were any doubt, and I have none, pursuant to § 206.9 of the Regulations, the Regulations must be construed liberally to effectuate the purpose and provision of the Order, and where a complainant has well and fully complied with the prescribed forms and has supplied all relevant data in an obvious good faith effort to name both an agency and an activity, any doubts must be resolved in favor of the Complainant. Moreover, for reasons more fully set forth in my decision in Department of The Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Brookhaven Service Center and National Treasury Employees Union and NTEU Chapter 009, Case No. 30-612(CA)(1976), if it were necessary and as stated above, in this case, in my view, it is not necessary as Complainant did sufficiently name both the Agency and the Activity against whom the Complaint was directed, I believe that even if only the agency is named in a complaint, unfair labor practices clearly alleged at an activity may be reached and remedied, even though I am fully aware that the Assistant Secretary in the Brookhaven case, A/SLMR No. 814 (1977), stated:

> "In view of the disposition herein, I find it unnecessary to pass upon the Administrative Law Judge's conclusion that is is sufficient to name the Activity in a complaint in order to adjudicate the alleged violation of the Order, even though the conduct alleged as the basis of the complaint was committed by an unnamed subordinate installation of the named Activity."

Pursuant to the Notice of Hearing, which issued February 3, 1977, a hearing was duly held before the undersigned on March 1, 1977, in Research Triangle Park, North Carolina. All parties were represented, were afforded full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witnesses and to introduce evidence bearing on the issues involved and briefs, timely filed, have been carefully considered. Upon the basis of the entire record, including my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following findings, conclusions and recommendation:

FURTHER PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

Complainant has filed a Motion To Rehear and a Memorandum In Support of Motion To Rehear and Brief Re Merits. Complainant's motion for rehearing is denied for the reasons set forth hereinafter.

1. The assertion that the undersigned had predetermined the case and that the hearing was not conducted in a manner to permit Complainant to present his case in a fair and just manner must, necessarily, be judged on the basis of the record 2/and, more appropriately by appeal from the Recommended Decision to the Assistant Secretary.

2/ The following colloquy occurred:

> "Administrative Law Judge Devaney (hereinafter ALJ): I understand, but leaving that out for a moment, the fact that locally you have negotiated an agreement; does that not render moot the allegation that there has been delay in negotiations?
>
> "Mr. Blair: It does not render moot the question of 19(a)(1), as to whether or not and to what extent EPA Agency Headquarters has been involved in delaying interferring with and restraining my rights, and the rights of the EPA employees in North Carolina in negotiating an agreement free and without restraint.
>
> "(ALJ) I understand what you are saying. As a pure hypothetical, Mr. Blair, it is conceivable that you are right. But in a very practical sense, it seems to me that you are arrogating unto yourself a burden of proof that becomes almost insurmountable. In other words, you are saying that they delayed it and would not negotiate, and then, yet the fact is that they in fact did negotiate and did sign an agreement. It is a little bit of not being able to "have your cake and eat it too." (Tr. 71-72)

2. The parties, by Joint Exhibits 1 through 3, presented extensive documentation of matters leading up to the commencement of negotiations, the negotiations, and completion of negotiations. In addition, seven witnesses testified concerning

> "[ALJ] I certainly do not rule out the possibility that you can prove your case. I merely point out that I think that it becomes more difficult to prove the Unfair Labor Practice where an agreement has been locally reached and the allegation is really in the nature of delay and interference with those negotiations.
> "I certainly do not mean to go beyond that rather narrow comment, that it strictly in terms of what the Complaint has alleged, of the delay, the interference and the drawing out of negotiations, that the ultimate conclusion of the negotiations has increased your burden of proof.
>
> "Without having looked at the Joint Exhibits at all, I am aware from your prior comments that the procedure from the negotiation as I understand it, has gone first to your agreeing on the rules for negotiation; second, the proposals, and my recollection is that they were fairly long in number of Union proposals. Then the meetings and eventually the agreement -- it may very well be that within this framework, you have an absolutely perfect case of their using an iron bar when they ought to have been using the gloved hand. And if that is true, by all means, show me." (Tr. 81).

With reference to Complainant's request for compensation for negotiators' time asserted to have been excessive the following comment is pertinent.

> "[ALJ] There are areas in which you can award back pay where there has been an unlawful discharge for engaging in activities protected by the Order. That is very clear. But beyond this, I really am not at all certain in my own mind as to the authority. I do not rule it out. I simply say to you quite frankly that I am not aware that I would have the authority to grant such an Order.
> "If you can show me that the authority exists, you certainly are entirely free to do so." (Tr. 85).

the negotiations and related matters. From the exhibits and testimony it appears that all issues were adequately, indeed fully, litigated; but if all issues were not fully litigated it can be attributed only to Complainant's failure, as no limitation was imposed on Complainant. Accordingly, Complainant's request for rehearing for the reason that Complainant did not present the full evidence, which assertion is wholly without proffer, identification or other support as to what evidence Complainant contends was not presented, is without merit and is, therefore, denied.

3. At the hearing, it was specifically stated that the Complaint did not encompass any question of Section 15, Approval of agreements; that such issue was not before me; and was not litigated. 3/ Complainant's request for rehearing for the purported reason that subsequent to March 1, 1977, Agency refused to approve the agreement without just cause, is denied. As noted, Section 15 was not asserted in the Complaint. Complainant's present assertion cannot be reached under the Complaint herein. Complainant is free, of course, to file a new charge concerning any conduct asserted to be in violation of the Order not covered by the present Complaint and Notice of Hearing.

FINDINGS

1. The Union was certified as the exclusive representative for a unit of non-professional, non-supervisory employees at the Activity on July 21, 1972, and for a unit of professional non-supervisory employees at the Activity on July 22, 1972. A negotiated agreement covering both units became effective on November 14, 1972; a second negotiated agreement became effective on August 19, 1974; and on June 20, 1975, the Union gave notice of desire to renegotiate the contract.

2. On July 25, 1975, the Union and the Activity entered into a Memorandum of Understanding For the Netotiation of a Collective Bargaining Agreement. This Memorandum of Understanding provided for the exchange of proposals on, or before,

3/ Joint Exhibit 3N, dated February 24, 1977, states, in part,

> "... we are now in agreement on revised language in each area of dispute ... the parties reached agreement on Article 7, Section 2, and Article 20, Section 8, on February 23, 1977. The remaining disputed areas were resolved on December 13, 1976."

September 15, 1975; negotiations to commence on November 17, 1975; and no earlier than November 3 nor later than November 10, 1975, by mutual agreement, review of proposals for clarification, etc., prior to the beginning of formal negotiations (Jt. Exh. 1-A-5).

3. On September 12, 1975, Activity agreed to extension of the date for exchange of proposals from September 15 to September 17, 1975; and, on the same date, September 12, 1975, Activity confirmed the mutual agreement to extend the current agreement until a new agreement was negotiated.

4. Proposals were exchanged on September 17, 1975, and on the same date, September 17, 1975, the Union submitted a copy of the proposals to Mr. Russell E. Train, Administrator of the Agency and asked for a declaration of "compelling need" if any proposal were deemed in conflict with any Agency regulations, which request was denied by the Agency in November (the date is not legible), 1975, as premature. Agency's reply, stated, in part, as follows:

> "If, during negotiations, the management negotiating team considers that an agency regulation bars negotiation on a particular union proposal and a compromise cannot be reached, the question of compelling need will be presented to the Director of the Personnel Management Division, and a decision will be made at that time. Further, for your information the amendments to Section 11(a) of Executive Order 11491 pertaining to internal agency policies and regulations based on compelling need are not effective until December 23, 1975." (Jt. Exh. 1A-13).

5. The parties met on November 6, 1975, for clarification of proposals; and negotiations began on November 17, 1975. The Union's proposals consisted of 167 pages. At the first meeting, Activity stated that in one or more regards Complainant's proposals were contrary to the Agency's Labor-Management Relations Manual and Complainant asserted that the provisions of the Manual did not apply. Activity made counter-proposals on every union proposal (Article) but after 10 days of negotiations, agreement had been reached on only two of twenty-nine articles. The Union refused to move from their original proposals and had made no counterproposals on the open articles. Accordingly, on December 11, 1975, the Union stated that it had requested that FMCS supply a mediator and the parties, at Union's initiation, agreed to defer further negotiations until January 5, 1976, when the mediator was scheduled to be present. A mediator was present when negotiations resumed on January 5, 1976, and the mediator was present at negotiating sessions on January 5, 6, 7, 19, and 20, February 23 and 24, 1976 (See, Jt. Exh. 2-C for a complete resume of negotiating meetings held from November 17, 1975, through December 13, 1976 - a total of 41 meetings).

6. On February 6, 1976, the Union's Chief Negotiator and President, Mr. Quesnell, requested a list of the items believed to be non-negotiable. By letter dated February 17, 1976, Activity's Chief Spokesman, Mr. Brothers, responded to Mr. Quesnell and supplied a list which listed each specific item that Activity believes non-negotiable and stated in detail Activity's reasons (Jt. Exh. 1-B-5). Mr. Brothers further stated that this list had been forwarded to Mr. Cocozza, Agency Personnel Management Division for their review and analysis (See, Jt. Exh. 1-B-4). In all, there were 33 items listed involving 15 Articles. Mr. Quesnell stated that Complainant made no attempt to negotiate alternate language, however, negotiations did continue on other open items. By letter dated April 1, 1976, Mr. Williams, Director, Personnel Management Division of Agency, responded to certain portions of Mr. Brothers' letter of February 10, 1976. Mr. Williams stated that Union's proposal, Section 3, Art. 8, was negotiable (Jt. Exh. 1-A-8). Mr. Williams further responded by letters dated April 7 (Jt. Exh. 1-A-8a); April 26, 1976 (Jt. Exh. 1-A-9) and May 8, 1976 (Jt. Exh. 1-A-10), finding in some instances that Union proposals were negotiable and in other instances they were not.

7. Netotiations disposed of most of the "non-negotiable" items, that is, Agency had found the Union proposal negotiable and the parties had negotiated or the Union, because Agency had agreed that Union proposal was non-negotiable had withdrawn the proposal (Mr. Quesnell could not remember although he admitted that they negotiated on something). However, there were some outstanding items considered non-negotiable and by letter dated May 28, 1976, Mr. Quesnell asked Acting Director DeFord for a further list of issues then in Union's proposals considered non-negotiable. Mr. Brothers responded by letter dated June 1, 1976, which listed six items (Art. 19, Sec. 8; Art. 20; Art. 23; Art. 25; Art. 27) (Jt. Exh. 1-A-12).

8. By letter dated July 27, 1976, the Union requested a negotiability determination by the Administrator, Mr. Train (Jt. Exh. 1-A-28) which determination was issued by Administrator Train on September 24, 1975 (Jt. Exh. 1-A-38). Union took no appeal from the Administrator's determination to the Council.

9. Also on July 27, 1976, the Union wrote Mr. Howard W. Soloman, Executive Secretary, U.S. Federal Service Impasses Panel, and stated, inter alia, that a mediator on June 8, 1976, concluded that the parties were at impasse (Jt. Exh. 1-A-27).

10. On October 20, 1975, Dr. Burton Levy, then Administrator for the Activity, pursuant to the Memorandum of Understanding of July 25, 1975, designated Mr. Brothers as Activity's Chief Negotiator and designated the members of Activity's bargaining team with designated alternates. The record is clear that Mr. Brothers, as Chief Negotiator, and the Activity's bargaining team, had full authority to act for the Activity and that the Activity had full authority to negotiate an agreement with the Union. Neither the presence of Ms. Wanda Thompson at the beginning of negotiations and at the final negotiation, nor the keeping of Agency posted on progress of negotiations demonstrates the slightest limitation on the authority of the Activity to negotiate and certainly fails to demonstrate any interference in negotiations by Agency. The Activity, acting through Mr. Brothers made its own determination as to items it deemed non-negotiable. The Union was advised in the course of negotiations of negotiability issues, as Mr. Quesnell readily conceded, and on February 17, 1976, at the request of the Union, Mr. Brothers gave the Union a complete list of the items the Activity considered non-negotiable and, in detail, the reasons therefor. On February 10, 1976, Mr. Brothers had forwarded the same information to Agency. The Agency thereafter responded, agreeing with the Activity in some instances and disagreeing in other instances.

11. Mr. Quesnell, following the June 8, 1976, meeting, believed that the parties were at impasse and that further meeting with Mr. Brothers would not be productive. The Union sought to by-pass Mr. Brothers and to meet with the Directors. On July 16, 1976, Mr. Quesnell stated in a letter to Mr. Brothers (Jt. Exh. 1-B-24),

> "If you have changed your position since our meeting with the mediator on June 8, 1975, please advise us of the articles where you think we may reach some meaningful agreement and provide us with any suggestion that you may have."

12. On July 28, 1976, Mr. Quesnell was advised by the Directors that:

> "... Mr. Willis Brothers has been designated as the Chief Spokesman for Management and is fully authorized to 'speak for' management during current negotiations. We, the undersigned wish to re-express the fact that Mr. Willis E. Brothers is empowered, with our full support, to act as Chief Spokesman for EPA Management at RTP in the conduct of negotiations with Local 3347." (Jt. Exh. 1-B-29).

13. The Directors declined to meet with the Union and by letter dated August 4, 1976, advised Mr. Quesnell, with respect to his comments about the composition of the management negotiating team,

> "... We can assure you that we have no intention of making any change. The team members were designated to represent us and we feel they have done a commendable job in this endeavor. Our support for the team has been recently echoed by Mr. Rhodes and Mr. Alm, and you may be sure the team will continue to have our full support through the completion of the current contract negotiations.

Activity's position on various unresolved issues was reviewed and the Directors' letter concluded,

> "... Again we would like to emphasize that our management negotiating team is the proper body in dealing with the Union in contract negotiating matters and we are hopeful that the parties will be able to return to the negotiating table and reach a final agreement on the contract." (Jt. Exh. 1-B-30).

Again on September 10, 1976, the Directors stated, in part,

> "... we cannot emphasize too strongly the importance of the negotiating team returning to the bargaining table to pursue what may well be elusive, but not necessarily impossible resolutions to difficult issues ...

> "Perhaps then it is a question of initiative. We are asking our chief spokesman to contact you within the next week to suggest a date and time for returning to the bargaining table. ..." (Jt. Exh. 1-B-32).

14. Mr. Brothers, on behalf of Activity, suggested negotiating on September 20, 1976, but Mr. Quesnell declined, stating,

> "... we do not believe that there has been any significant reason for our continued use of time away from our families unless you, the Directors, are sufficiently involved to warrant our participation. ..." (Jt. Exh. 1-B-36).

15. No bargaining was requested, other than Mr. Quesnell's repeated attempts to by-pass the Activity's designated negotiators and meet with Activity's Directors, and no further negotiations were held until October 13, 1976. With a mediator, Mr. Jerome L. Ross, present on October 13, 14, and 15, the parties reached agreement on October 15, 1976; Union advised the Federal Service Impasses Panel on October 18, 1976, that the parties had reached agreement on the articles at impasse on October 15, 1976 (Jt. Exh. 3-A); the Federal Service Impasses Panel on October 21, 1976, acknowledged the Union's letter withdrawing its request for Panel assistance, granted the request for withdrawal and closed case No. 76 FSIP 47 (Jt. Exh. 3-C); the new agreement was executed on October 26, 1976 (Jt. Exh. 3-D); on November 18, 1976, the Director, Mr. John H. DeFord, advised Mr. Quesnell that beginning December 2, 1976, orientation beiefings would be conducted on the new agreement and invited Mr. Quesnell to speak at each session (Jt. Exh. 3-E); Mr. DeFord advised all supervisors of the orientation, stated that each supervisor was required to participate, and further stated that, "Management officials at all levels of the organization must be fully prepared to implement the agreement when it is approved, properly administering the agreement throughout its terms." (Jt. Exh. 3-F); on November 29, 1976, the agreement was conditionally approved subject to certain changes and/or deletions found not to be in accord with the Order, law or regulations; further negotiations were held on December 13, 1976, and the parties reached agreement on all items not approved on November 29, 1976, on December 13, 1976, except Art. 7, Sec. 2 and Art. 20, Sec. 8 which were resolved by agreement on February 23, 1977 (Jt. Exh. 3-N).

16. Mr. Quesnell, in his testimony, made no mention of documents withheld. The only reference called to my attention, or which I have noted in the voluminous documents constituting the Joint Exhibits is an assertion in an affidavit by Mr. Quesnell submitted in support of the Complaint in which he asserted that FPM Letter 551-10 was "withheld to bolster Management's position of non-negotiability" of Union's proposal requiring adjustments in the basic work week. Such self-serving statement are, at best, entitled to little probative weight; and especially, where, as here, no testimony was offered at the hearing and the statement appears only as part of a composite exhibit of documents filed after the charge herein was filed on September 28, 1976, it is entitled to little, if any probative weight. Moreover, even if it were considered as some evidence that Activity withheld some documents, there is no showing whatever that the document, or information requested, was in any way necessary, or even appropriate, for the purpose of negotiation.

CONCLUSIONS

Complainant would clothe its bargaining demands with an imperious propriety that the failure to accept would constitute bad faith. This is scarcely the essence of collective bargaining which contemplates give and take by both parties to the negotiations. At some point, every negotiator must exercise caution lest pride of authorship, or fondness for particular language, thwart agreement when other words would serve as well, for even the smartest man in the world, as the story goes, may in haste jump from the burning plane with a back pack instead of a parachute.

The record shows that the Activity presented counter proposals to each union proposal and in an effort to reach agreement incorporated much of Union's proposed language; but Union insisted on its proposals, as Mr. Copeland, Vice President of the Union stated and when negotiability issues arose Union continued to insist on its proposals rather than try to arrive at some compromise. When the Union concluded an impass had been reached, it consistently demanded some change of position by Activity as a condition precedent to the resumption of negotiations while maintaining its own uncompromising stance. Union was, of course, free to adopt a hard bargaining position; but the record utterly fails to establish any possible bad faith by Activity. Without doubt Union engaged in hard bargaining and at the most, perhaps, both parties engaged in hard bargaining. U.S. Department of Commerce, U.S. Merchant Marine Academy, Kings Point, New York, A/SLMR No. 620 (1976). Certainly the Activity met at reasonable times, made concessions and negotiated in good faith and the Order does not necessarily compel any party to agree or to make concessions. Headquarters, United States Army, Aviation Systems Command, A/SLMR No. 168 (1972).

In the course of negotiations, Activity took the position that certain portions of Union's demands were not negotiable. Activity stated in the course of the negotiations its reasons and on February 17, 1976, more than six months prior to the charge, Section 203.2(a)(2) of the Regulations, Activity set forth in writing its position on each of the negotiability issues as requested by Union. At this point, pursuant to Section 11(c)(2) of the Order, either party could have referred the matter to the head of the Agency for determination; but neither party did, although Activity had, on February 10, 1976, submitted its position to Richard A. Cocozza, Agency's Assistant Director for Training and Policy Development, for whatever action deemed "necessary and for subsequently providing us with an Agency determination concerning negotiability." Mr. Quesnell was advised in Activity's covering letter of February 17, 1976, of the referral to Mr. Cocozza.

Neither the assertion of negotiability by Activity nor its referral of its position to Agency for review would have constituted a violation of 19(a)(6) even if within the 6 month period of the filing of the charge. As the Assistant Secretary has stated,

> "In my view, Section 11(c) of the Order provides the exclusive method for resolving such dispute. ..." Army and Air Force Exchange Service, Keesler Consolidated Exchange, A/SLMR No. 144 (1972)

Thereafter, the parties negotiated around the negotiabilty issues, although on the proposals in dispute Union adhered to its original proposals. Activity had stated its position on negotiability, which was not conditioned on the subsequent review by Agency, so it cannot be said that Activity delayed negotiations while seeking advice of Agency. While it is true that the Agency's Director, Personnel Management Division, responded on April 1, 7, 26 and May 8, 1976 - in bits and pieces as Complainant alleged; nevertheless Activity had not rested its position on the advice of Agency, bargaining had not been deferred, and, certainly, the response by Agency did not interfer with, restrain, or coercean employee in the exercise of the rights assured by this Order. 4/ To the contrary, Agency did not agree in all respects with Activity's position on negotiability. Activity promptly bargained on these items and the number of negotiability disputes were substantially reduced, in part because the parties bargained on the items Agency advised were negotiable and in part because the Union withdrew some of its demands. There remained some outstanding items considered non-negotiable and, at Union's request, a further list of issues considered non-negotiable was furnished by Activity on June 1, 1976.

Again, Activity's position was clear; but neither party requested a determination by the Agency head pursuant to Section 11(c) of the Order until Complainant did so on July 27, 1976. Section 11(c) imposes no direct time limitation on the Agency in issuing a negotiability determination, but, rather, the Council's Rules and Regulations permit a Union to request review of a negotiability issue by the Council without a prior determination by the agency head if the agency head has not made a decision within 15 days after receipt by the agency head of a written request for such determination. Union's request was 4/ As noted above, Complainant withdrew, with approval of the Regional Administrator, the 19(a)(6) allegations against Agency. I am aware of the Council's decision in Naval Air Rework Facility, Pensacola, Florida and Secretary of the Navy, Department of the Navy, Washington, D.C. and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1960, FLRC No. 76A-37 (May 4, 1977), in which the Council concluded, in part, as follows:

> "(1) The acts and conduct of agency management at a higher level of an agency's organization may provide the basis for finding a violation of any part of section 19(a) of the Order by 'agency management,' but may not, standing alone, provide the basis for finding a separate violation by 'agency management' at a lower organizational level of the agency where a unit of exclusive recognition exists. ..."

But even if Agency could be found guilty of a 19(a)(6) violation by directing or requiring Activity to refuse to bargain in violation of the Order, there is no basis for such a finding in this case as Agency did nothing to require Activity to fail or to refuse to bargain. To the contrary, Agency advised Activity that on some items it was required to negotiate and Activity promptly did so.

received by Administrator Train on July 30, 1976, and the Administrator did not issue his determination until September 24, 1976; but Complainant did not, as it was authorized by the Council's Rules and Regulations to do, seek the direct review of the dispute by the Council. As the provisions of Section 11(c) are exclusive, Army and Air Force Exchange Service, Keesler Consolidated Exchange, supra, Agency's delay in issuing its negotiability determination was not a violation of the Order.

From June 8, 1976, Union had refused to resume bargaining despite Activity's efforts to return to the bargaining table. Union had no right to interfere with Activity's choice of authorized and appropriate bargaining representatives and the refusal of Activity's Directors to meet with the Union was wholly proper.

Following the Administrator's determination of the negotiability issues on September 24, 1976, the parties did resume bargaining and initially concluded an agreement on October 26, 1976, and reached final agreement on February 23, 1977. 5/

Accordingly, as no basis for any violation of 19(a)(1) and (6) has been shown, it will be recommended that the Complaint be dismissed in its entirety.

RECOMMENDATION

Having found that Respondent Activity and Respondent Agency have not engaged in certain conduct prohibited by Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, I recommend that the Complaint herein be dismissed in its entirety.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR
ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS
SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE,
OGDEN SERVICE CENTER
A/SLMR No. 944

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by the National Treasury Employees Union (NTEU) and NTEU, Chapter 67 (Complainants) alleging that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by forming a committee of bargaining unit employees for the purpose of evaluating the 1975 tax filing season and for soliciting recommendations for improvement for the 1976 tax filing season, including recommendations concerning personnel policies and practices and general working conditions. The Complainants alleged that this action was an improper bypass of NTEU Chapter 67, and deprived it of its rights under the Order as the exclusive representative of the Respondent's employees.

In May 1975, the Respondent's Chief of the Examination Branch decided that a critique by unit employees of the 1975 tax filing season might be helpful in finding ways to "improve the operations" for 1976. He unilaterally formulated critique guidelines, the criteria for selecting members of the critique committee, the critique structure and the types of meetings to be held. Although the Complainant Chapter 67, the exclusive representative of the Respondent's employees, was offered an opportunity to be present when the critique committee met prior to formulating its critique and recommendations and also to be present when the critique committee presented its recommendations, the Complainant rejected the Respondent's plans as it was denied the right to participate in selecting members of the critique committee or to participate in its deliberations.

The Assistant Secretary concluded, contrary to the Administrative Law Judge, that the Respondent's conduct violated Section 19(a)(6) and (1) of the Order. He found that, although the basic purpose of the critique committee was to consider suggestions on how to improve procedures for processing tax returns, the Respondent "anticipated" and, in fact, the critique committee discussed and made recommendations on matters covered by the parties' negotiated agreement as well as related personnel policies and practices and general working conditions of employees in the unit. He noted further that the Respondent rejected the request of Complainant Chapter 67 to participate in the selection of the members of the critique committee and rejected also its participation in the committee's deliberations.

The Assistant Secretary noted that under Section 10(e) of the Executive Order, agency management is obligated to deal solely with its employees' exclusive representative in matters concerning terms and conditions of their employment but that in the instant case the Respondent, in effect, and contrary to the requirements of the Order, bypassed the Complainant and dealt directly with unit employees by soliciting their recommendations on matters covered by the parties' negotiated agreement as well as related personnel policies and practices and general working conditions. He concluded that the Respondent's bypassing of Complainant Chapter 67 was in derogation of its rights as the exclusive representative of the unit employees, and undermined its status as their exclusive representative.

Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary ordered that the Respondent cease and desist from the conduct found violative of Section 19(a)(6) and (1) of the Order and that it take certain affirmative remedial actions.

DECISON AND ORDER

On June 14, 1977, Administrative Law Judge Milton Kramer issued his Recommended Decision and Order in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had not engaged in the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint and recommending that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety. No exceptions were filed to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order and the entire record in the subject case, I hereby adopt the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions, and recommendations, only to the extent consistent herewith.

This case arose as a result of a complaint filed by the National Treasury Employees Union and the National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter 67 (Complainants) alleging that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by forming a committee of bargaining unit employees for the purpose of evaluating the 1975 tax filing season and for soliciting recommendations for improvement for the 1976 tax filing season, including recommendations concerning personnel policies and practices and general working conditions. The Complainants allege that the Respondent's actions in soliciting the above information improperly bypassed the Complainant Chapter 67, and deprived it of its rights under the Order as the exclusive representative of the Respondent's employees.

Sometime in May 1975, the Respondent's Chief of the Examination Branch, Harvey Eager, concluded that a critique by unit employees of the Respondent's 1975 tax filing season might be helpful in finding ways to "improve the operations" for the 1976 season. Eager unilaterally formulated critique guidelines, the criteria for selecting a cross-section of employees for a critique committee, the critique structure and the types of meetings to be held. He also suggested that each person selected to be on the critique committee solicit suggestions from his or her unit. Supervisors from various units selected one employee, in accordance with the criteria formulated by Eager, to be on the critique committee from his or her unit and then met with that person to explain the program.

Eager revealed his plans to the Complainant's Chapter 67 President, informing her that when the critique committee met prior to formulating its critique and recommendations, the Complainant Chapter 67 would be invited to be present and also would be invited to be present when the committee presented its recommendations, but that neither the Respondent nor the Complainant would be present when the committee met to formulate its critique and recommendations. The Complainant rejected the Respondent's plans inasmuch as they did not allow the Complainant to participate in selecting the members of the critique committee or to participate in its deliberations. The Respondent informed the Complainant that if the recommendations included any matters concerning personnel policies or practices or other matters affecting general working conditions, there would be no implementation of such recommendations without discussing such matters with the Complainant.

The critique committee meeting was held on May 23, 1975. The Complainant rejected the invitation to attend the "opening" and "closing" sessions. The committee's recommendations were received by the Respondent at the closing session and were later typed and a copy forwarded to the Complainant. Some of the recommendations made by the committee involved matters covered by the parties' negotiated agreement, i.e. training, promotion evaluations, and furloughs and recalls of when-actually-employed (WAE) employees. 1/

The Administrative Law Judge found that the Respondent did not violate Sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by its establishment of, and its activities with respect to, the critique committee. Under the particular circumstances herein, I disagree.

1/ The Administrative Law Judge found that only one minor change was made as a result of the critique committee's recommendations. This involved a new procedure under which the supervisor in the Examination Branch would now meet with Branch employees before inserting changes in their handbook.

The evidence establishes that although the basic purpose of the critique committee was to consider suggestions on how to improve procedures for processing tax returns, the Respondent "anticipated" and, in fact, the committee discussed and made recommendations on matters covered by the parties' negotiated agreement as well as related personnel policies and practices and general working conditions of employees in the unit.

Under Section 10(e) of the Executive Order, agency management is obligated to deal solely with its employees' exclusive representative in matters concerning the terms and conditions of their employment. 2/ Nevertheless, in the instant case, the Respondent rejected the Complainant's request to participate in the selection of the members of the critique committee and rejected also its participation in the committee's deliberations. In effect, and contrary to the requirements of the Order, the Respondent bypassed the Complainant and dealt directly with unit employees, soliciting their recommendations on matters relating to personnel policies and practices and general working conditions, for which the Complainant was the exclusive bargaining representative. 3/ In my view, this bypassing of the Complainant Chapter 67 was in derogation of its rights as the exclusive representative of the unit employees, and tended to undermine its status as their exclusive representative. 4/ Accordingly, I find that the Respondent's conduct was violative of Section 19(a)(6) and (1) of the Order 5/.

2/ See United States Army School/Training Center, Fort McClellan, Alabama, 1 A/SLMR 225, A/SLMR No. 42.

3/ Cf. Veterans Administration, Veterans Administration Hospital, Muskogee, Oaklahoma, 3 A/SLMR 491, A/SLMR No. 301.

4/ It is immaterial whether or not any of the critique committee recommendations were implemented. Thus, the gravamen of the violation herein consists of the solicitation of views and recommendations from unit employees, selected by the Respondent, on matters for which the Complainant under the Order was entitled to be dealt with exclusively.

5/ Contrary to the Administrative Law Judge I do not find the instant case analogous to National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) Washington, D.C. and Lyndon B. Johnson Space Center (NASA), Houston, Texas, FLRC No. 74A-95. That case involved the solicitation of factual information by agency headquarters-level management on the effectiveness of an agency-wide program, the Agency's Equal Employment Opportunity program, which existed totally apart from the collective bargaining relationship. However, in the instant case, the Respondent did not represent agency headquarters-level management. Its concern was only with the program operation at the level of exclusive recognition and it did more than receive the critique and recommendations; it actually solicited recommendations from unit employees on matters covered by the parties' negotiated agreement and related personnel policies and practices and general working conditions of unit employees.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 6 (b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, and Section 203.26 (b) of the Regulations, the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations hereby orders that the United States Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Ogden Service Center, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Unilaterally soliciting recommendations from employees of a critique committee established by the Ogden Service Center, with respect to matters set forth in the negotiated agreement between the Ogden Service Center and National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter 67, or with respect to personnel policies and practices or other matters affecting general working conditions of employees in the unit, when such employees are represented exclusively by the National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter 67, or any other labor organization.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights assured by Executive Order 11491, as amended.

2. Take the following affirmative actions in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of Executive Order 11491, as amended:

(a) Post at its facility at the United States Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Ogden Service Center, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix" on forms to be furnished by the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Director, Ogden Service Center, and shall be posted and maintained by him for 60 consecutive days thereafter in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. The Director shall take reasonable steps to insure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(b) Pursuant to Section 203.27 of the Regulations, notify the Assistant Secretary, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this order as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

Preliminary Statement

This case arises under Executive Order 11491 as amended. It was initiated by a complaint dated November 19, 1975 and filed November 26, 1975. The complaint alleged a violation of Sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Executive Order. The violation was alleged to consist of a Branch Chief of the Respondent having a committee of employees evaluate the 1975 filing season and make recommendations for improvments for the 1976 filing season; the recommendations included matters concerning personnel policies and practices and this allegedly constituted a bypassing by the Respondent of the exclusive representative.

On August 13, 1976 the Regional Administrator issued a Notice of Hearing to be held in Ogden, Utah on September 21, 1976. Pursuant to Orders Rescheduling Hearing a hearing was held in Ogden on Decmeber 7, 1976. Both sides were represented by counsel. Both sides produced witnesses who were examined and cross-examined, offered exhibits which were received in evidence, made closing arguments, and filed briefs.

Facts

National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter 67 is the certified exclusive representative of Respondent's employees (with the usual exceptions) and has been recognized as the representative since 1965. At all times relevant to this proceeding there was a collective bargaining agreement in effect between the parties. That agreement was a nationally negotiated agreement (denominated the "Multi-Center Agreement") negotiated by the Internal Revenue Service on behalf of nine Service Centers (including the Respondent), one Data Center, and one Computer Center. It was negotiated nationally by the National Treasury Employees Union on behalf of eleven NTEU Chapters that had exclusive recognition at those eleven Centers. The employees involved in this proceeding are all members of the bargaining unit at the Respondent Service Center.

The Multi-Center Agreement ("MCA") in effect at all times relevant was executed April 13, 1973 to become effective (with certain irrelevant exceptions) July 1, 1973. In addition to other provisions, it contained provisions concerning training, evaluation of performance, and furlough and recall of WAE ("when actually employed") employees who are gradually added to the work force as the filing of income tax returns picks up as April 15 approaches and are gradually furloughed as April 15 recedes into the past.

Harvey Eager was in 1975 the Chief of the Examination Branch of the Respondent. Dorothy L. Vest was the President of Chapter 67 and was a Tax Examiner in one of the sections in the Examination Branch. Michael Allen was the Chief of a Division of which the Examination Branch was a part. The Examination Branch is divided into a number of Sections, and the Sections are composed of a number of units. Each unit has about 15 employees.

In May 1975 Eager was completing his first full year as Chief of the Examination Branch. He had observed that many of the procedures and practices in the operation of the Branch had uncritically been carried over from the procedures and practices employed in earlier years and he wanted to see if he could learn if he could improve the operations. For this purpose he decided to have a committee of a cross-section of rank and file employees to make a critique of, to evaluate the operation of the 1975 filing season and make suggestions on how the performance could be improved for the 1976 season. He was especially interested in two of the Sections under him, a Section that dealt with individual tax returns and a Section that handled the individual taxpayer master file. He decided to have the supervisors of some of the units select one employee to be a member of the critique committee, with each supervisor given different criteria in making the selection so that the committee would be a cross-section of the rank and file employees.

Eager spoke to the supervisors of the units in the Sections in which he was particularly interested and gave each of them different criteria for selecting a member of the unit to be on the critique committee so that the entire critique committee would be a cross-section of employees. He suggested that each of them have a meeting of his respective unit and explain the program to them. He also suggested that each person selected to be on the committee solicit suggestions from his or her unit. It was Eager's plan to have a meeting of the individuals selected from the eight units involved plus one from Quality Control (who would also be a member of the critique committe), give his explanation of the purpose, after which the committee would meet and formulate its recommendations, after which they would present them to Eager.

He also spoke to Vest, the Chapter President, about his plan. She expressed her opposition to the entire program as conceived by Eager and took the position that the program should be carried out through the union. It was Eager's plan that when the committee met prior to formulating their critique and recommendations the union would be invited to be present and would also be invited to be present when they presented their recommendations, but that neither management nor the union would be present when the committee met to formulate their critique and recommendations; he wanted them to formulate their own ideas uninfluenced by anyone outside the members of the committee.

Eager discussed the matter also with Allen, the Chief of the Division of the Respondent of which the Branch was a part. He approved. Allen also spoke to Vest about it on May 22, 1975. She expressed her disapproval and wanted the union to participate in selecting the members of the critique committee and to participate in its deliberations, else, she said, the Respondent would be bypassing the Chapter as the representative of the employees. She also advised Allen that there was to be a meeting that night of the Chapter's officials and stewards. Allen went to the meeting and explained the critique plan. He told them that the Chapter was invited to be present during the opening and closing sessions of the critique committee but not when it was in its deliberations to formulate its critique and recommendations. He told them also that if the recommendations included any matters concerning personnel policies or practices or other matters affecting general working conditions, there would be no implementation of any such recommendation without taking it up first with the Union. Vest declined the invitation for the Union to be present at the opening and closing sessions; she was of the view that the program would constitute an unfair labor practice in violation of Section 19(a) of the Executive Order and that the Chapter's attendance at the sessions might be construed as condoning such conduct.

On May 22 the eight unit supervisors had their unit meetings. Eager told Vest that those meetings were to be held that day and invited the Union to be present at as many as it could; they were all going to be held at about the same time that day. Vest at first declined but changed her mind and sent her deputy who attended three of the unit meetings with Eager.

The next morning, May 23, the critique committee met. The Union had been invited to attend but did not do so. Eager explained the purpose of the committee and that they could make any recommendations and not concern themselves with feasibility and the like but just give whatever ideas they had on any subject. The committee then went into its deliberations which lasted most of the day. The "feedback" or closing session was then held. The Union had been invited but did not attend. Linda McKinstry, a member of the committee, had made a handwritten rough draft of the committee's recommendations. The committee made its recommendations. Eager was present with two of his Section Chiefs to receive them. Allen was not present. McKinstry's draft was given to Eager. The recommendations were received without comment from Eager and were written up later in more formal fashion. A copy was given to the Union. It did not request a meeting concerning it.

Some of the recommendations dealt with matters covered by the collective agreement. Although Vest testified generally that some of the recommended changes were adopted, the only specific change on which there is any evidence is that in Vest's unit, which was not included on the critique committee but is included in the Examination Branch, a variation of one of the recommendations was put into effect, and that is the only change which I find was made as a result of the recommendations of the critique committee. In her unit, prior to the critique committee's recommendations, amendments to the handbook furnished the employees in the Examination Branch were distributed to the employees and simply inserted by them in the handbook. Since then, before inserting the changes in the handbook the employees in Vest's unit have a unit meeting with the unit supervisor to see if they all have the same understanding of the change before they insert it in their copies of the handbook.

Discussion and Conclusions

The exclusivity of a bargaining representative designated under Executive Order 11491 was early expounded by the Assistant Secretary. In United States Army School/Training Center, Fort McClellan, Alabama, A/SLMR No. 42, he said:

> "Once a bargaining representative has been designated ... the obligation ... to deal with such representative ... becomes exclusive and carries with it a correlative duty not to treat with others." 1/

But such exclusivity does not extend to every subject concerning which an agency or activity may be called upon to deal with its employees. It applies only to "personnel policies and practices and other matters affecting working conditions" 2/ and, under certain circumstances, grievances. 3/

1/ Remarkably similar in phraseology to the language of the Supreme Court in Virginian Railway Co. v. System Federation No. 40, 300 U.S. 515, 57 S.Ct. 592 (1937), in which the Supreme Court said with respect to the analogous obligation under the Railway Labor Act: "The obligation ... to treat with the true representative of the employees ... is exclusive. It imposes the affirmative to treat only with the true representative, and hence the negative duty to treat with no other." 300 U.S. at 548, 57 S.Ct. at 600.

2/ Executive Order 11491, Sec. 11(b).

3/ Executive Order 11491, Sec. 10(e).

It expressly does not apply to, among other subjects, "matters with respect to the mission of an agency ... its organization ... the technology of performing its work. ..." 4/ Also, management expressly retains the right "to determine the methods, means, and personnel by which [such] operations are to be conducted." 5/

The purpose of the critique program was to obtain suggestions on how to improve the procedures in processing tax returns from a cross-section of those who did the day-by-day processing. To be sure, as Allen, the Division Chief, recognized, when two or more employees working in the same Branch get together, whether on a committee to discuss operating procedures or over a cup of coffee, personnel policies almost inevitably will come up. But he assured the Union that if the critique committee's recommendations included any change in personnel policy such recommendations would not be implemented without meeting and conferring with the Union about it. There is no evidence that such assurance was not honored. Indeed, there is no such evidence that any personnel policy was changed.

The committee's recommendations included, among other subjects, recommendations concerning three matters that were subjects of the collective bargaining agreement.

One group of recommendations pertained to training. The collective agreement had an article on training. 6/ Section 6 of that article established an Advisory Training Committee composed of six members appointed by the Union. Its function was to advise the Respondent on certain aspects of training. It does not follow that the Respondent was thereby precluded from seeking or accepting advice elsewhere. And if it should ultimately be determined that that Section precludes the Respondent from seeking or accepting advice elsewhere, the contrary is reasonably arguable, and so a breach of that section would be a simple breach of contract not rising to the seriousness of an unfair labor practice. 7/

Another recommendation pertained to the recall of WAE employees. An article of the collective agreement dealt with that subject. 8/

4/ Executive Order 11491, Sec. 11(b)

5/ Executive Order 11491, Sec. 12(b)(5).

6/ Exh. J-1, Article 10.

7/ General Services Administration, Region 5, Public Buildings Service, Chicago Field Office, A/SLMR No. 528, p. 4 of ALJ Decision.

8/ Exh. J-1, Article 26.

Other recommendations pertained to performance reports and evaluations of employees, also subjects of the collective agreement. These were beyond the purpose of the critique committee, but the committee was told by Eager, the Branch Chief, to make suggestions on anything at all. There is no evidence that anything was done about these recommendations.

With respect to these recommendations, indeed with respect to all the recommendations, the evidence is unpersuasive that there was any discussion or "dealing" with them between the committee and management. 9/ Eager and his Section Chiefs simply received the critique and recommendations perhaps with some explanation or amplification and took them under advisement. 10/ The only action taken on any recommendation reflected in the record was a variation of one of the recommendations. In one unit in one Section, a unit which did not have a representative on the committee, when amendments to the handbook were received the employees in the unit met with the unit supervisor and discussed the change before inserting it in their handbooks to see if they all had the same understanding of the amendment, instead of simply immediately inserting it in the handbook. This was hardly a subject on which the Respondent was required to bargain and confer or a bypassing of the Complainant.

The establishment and activities of the critique committee were not substantially different from an employer placing a suggestion box accessible to its employees into which they could drop suggestions. (Here nine employees were directed to make suggestions.) Of course, employees could drop into the box suggestions on every conceivable subject. The fact that some such suggestions might deal with subjects of mandatory bargaining or covered by the collective agreement would not convert the placing of the suggestion box and reading its contents into a bypassing of the Union and a violation of Sections 19(a)(1) and/or (6).

9/ cf. Department of the Navy, Naval Air Station, Fallon, Nevada, FLRC No. 78-80 (October 24, 1975).

10/ The situation here is thus more analogous to National Aeronautics and Space Administration, Washington, D.C. and Lyndon B. Johnson Space Center (NASA), Houston, Texas, FLRC No. 74A-94 (September 26, 1975).

SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION, BUREAU OF HEARINGS AND APPEALS
A/SLMR No. 945

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3615 (AFGE) alleging that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) of the Order when its agent, Julian Brownstein, improperly interrogated unit employees about internal AFGE matters. The Respondent denied any violation, contending that Brownstein was not a supervisor or a management official. It further contended that any interrogations conducted by Brownstein were not violative of the Order.

The Administrative Law Judge found that Brownstein was a management official and that his interrogation of four employees about internal AFGE matters was violative of the Order. Noting particularly the absence of exceptions, the Assistant Secretary adopted the findings, conclusions and recommendations of the Administrative Law Judge, citing with respect to Brownstein's status, Department of the Navy, Office of the Secretary, Washington D. C., 4 A/SLMR 341, A/SLMR No. 393 (1974). Under these circumstances, he ordered the Respondent to cease and desist from the conduct found violative of the Order and that it take certain affirmative actions.

DECISION AND ORDER

On August 3, 1977, Administrative Law Judge William Naimark issued his Recommended Decision and Order in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had engaged in certain unfair labor practices and recommending that it cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative actions as set forth in the attached Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order. No exceptions were filed to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order and the entire record in the subject case, and noting particularly that no exceptions were filed, I hereby adopt the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions 1/ and recommendations.

1/ As indicated by the Administrative Law Judge, during the course of the Respondent's negotiations with the Complainant, Julian H. Brownstein was the chief negotiator for the Respondent. Under these circumstances, I find that he is a representative of management within the meaning of Section 2(f) of the Order. See Department of the Navy, Office of the Secretary, Washington, D. C., 4 A/SLMR 341, 343, A/SLMR No. 393 (1974).

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 6(b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, and Section 203.26(b) of the Regulations, the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations hereby orders that the Social Security Administration, Bureau of Hearings and Appeals, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Interrogating its employees as to their membership in, or activities on behalf of, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3615, or any other labor organization.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights assured by Executive Order 11491, as amended.

2. Take the following affirmative actions in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of Executive Order 11491, as amended:

(a) Post at its facility at the Bureau of Hearings and Appeals, Arlington, Virginia, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix" on forms to be furnished by the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations. Upon receipt of such forms they shall be signed by the Director of the Bureau of Hearings and Appeals, Social Security Administration, Arlington, Virginia, and shall be posted and maintained by the Director for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. The Director shall take reasonable steps to insure that such notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(b) Pursuant to Section 203.27 of the Regulations, notify the Assistant Secretary, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this order as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

Statement of the Case

Pursuant to a Notice of Hearing on Complaint issued on January 17, 1977 by the Acting Regional Administrator for Labor-Management Services Administrations, U.S. Department of Labor, Philadelphia Region, a hearing was held before the undersigned on March 8, 1977 at Washington, D.C.

This proceeding was initiated under Executive Order 11491, as amended (herein called the Order) by the filing of a complaint on September 16, 1976 by American Federation of Government Employees, Local 3615 (herein called the Complainant) against Social Security Administration, Bureau of Hearings and Appeals (herein called the Respondent). It was alleged therein that Respondent violated Sections 19(a)(1) and (2) of the Order by reason of Julian Brownstein having unlawfully interrogating employees about their union activities, and by Brownstein's withholding information during the investigation of the charge herein. 1/

Respondent denies the commission of any unfair labor practice under the Order. It contends that: (a) Brownstein is not a management official within the meaning of Section 2(f) of the Order; (b) any interrogation conducted by Brownstein was not only non-coercive in nature, but constituted an informal inquiry that cannot be deemed interference under the Order.

Both parties were represented at the hearing, were afforded full opportunity to be heard, to adduce evidence and to examine as well as cross-examine witnesses. Thereafter, briefs were filed with the undersigned which have been duly considered.

Upon the entire record in this case, from my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, and from all of the testimony and evidence at the hearing, I make the following findings, conclusions and recommendations:

Findings of Fact

1. At all times since about July 1975 Complainant has been, and still is, the recognized collective bargaining representative of an appropriate unit of Respondent's employees.

2. Subsequent to July 1975, the parties herein entered into negotiations for a collective bargaining agreement. An agreement providing for a voluntary dues check off of members of Complainant union was signed on August 5, 1975, effective by its terms on August 19, 1975 with an expiration date of June 5, 1976.

1/ Complainant's request to withdraw the 19(a)(2) allegation was approved on October 4, 1976 by the Area Administrator. The Regional Administrator, on November 23, 1976, dismissed that aspect of the complaint which alleged Respondent impeded an informal resolution of the charge by withholding information during the investigation stage.

3. During the course of continued bargaining for a general agreement the Complainant requested Respondent to extend the dues check off agreement until October 5, 1976. Management refused to continue the dues agreement, and Complainant learned on June 17, 1976 that said agreement would not be renewed.

4. Complainant then held a meeting at 12:15 p.m. on June 30, 1976 to advise the employees of management's decision and discuss possible courses of action as a result thereof.

5. During the course of management's negotiation with Complainant herein, Julian H. Brownstein acted as chief negotiator 2/ for Respondent. Brownstein is classified as, and occupies the position of, supervisory technical advisory specialist. 3/ The functions of the advisory staff is to plan, direct, and coordinate division-wide review and technical assistance programs. Under the job description the purpose of Brownstein's position is to perform an analysis of benefit programs, make recommendations to improve the overall quality of work products and reduce case processing time, and to supervise a staff of professionals employees. 4/ His duties encompass planning and directing a program to evaluate all technical aspects of appellate determination made on benefit claims, including analyses which recommend action concerning decisions of administrative law judges. Brownstein is charged with responsibility, inter alia, of consulting with other Bureau components to assure that management and policy decisions are implemented in accord with the Bureau's needs.

6. On June 30, 1976 at about 12:15 p.m. Brownstein stopped at the desk of Aurelio A. Avelleyra, an analyst with the civilian action branch, who was working in the Disability Appeals Operation Branch on the 3rd floor of Boston Tower II building. Brownstein asked Avelleyra if he attended the special union meeting, and the latter replied he did not attend since he forgot about it. Avelleyra then called to Linda Baehr, another analyst who occupied a desk nearby, and asked her if she went to the meeting.

2/ Brownstein was not engaged in negotiations with the union as chief negotiator on June 30, 1976.

3/ Complainant's Exhibit No. 1.

4/ The record reflects Brownstein was required to supervise two professionals on his staff and one clerical. The professional positions however, were never filled, and at the date of the hearing the clerical postion had been transferred to another location.

Brownstein came over to Baehr's desk, and the latter stated she had not gone to the meeting. Whereupon Brownstein inquired if Baehr knew "how many people were there and what happened." The employee replied she didn't know anything about it. 5/

7. In addition to speaking with the foregoing employees, Brownstein also spoke to James E. Marshall and Milton Kraft on June 30, 1976 re the union meeting held that day.

(a) At about 4:00 p.m. on this date Brownstein approached Marshall, who worked as a disability analyst in the Boston Tower Building II and was assistant chief steward of the union, and asked him several questions. Brownstein inquired as to "how the meeting went", and "how many attended that day." Upon being told that over 100 were present, Brownstein remarked that the turnout was excellent. He then asked Marshall how many employees paid their dues by check, and the union official said it was none of Brownstein's business.

(b) Brownstein asked Kraft 6/ whether he attended the meeting, and he also inquired as to the number in attendance thereat.

8. Subsequent to the union meeting on June 30, 1976 Brownstein spoke to Douglas Kershaw, national representative of AFGE and chief negotiator for Local 3615. Brownstein mentioned that the union was losing many members because of dues cancellation and people not joining nor renewing membership. Kershaw said he had attended the meeting, saw the checks turned in, and did not believe the union had been hurt. Brownstein remarked he had conversation with people who told him of this and that he had spoken to various employees who told him what took place at the meeting.

Conclusions

Respondent takes the position that it has engaged in no conduct violative of Section 19(a)(1). It contends: (1) Julius Brownstein is neither a supervisor nor a management official so as to bind Respondent for his actions; (2) any questioning conducted by Brownstein was isolated in nature, and had no coercive nor restraining effect upon employees.

5/ The versions given by Brownstein and Complainant's witnesses differ as to what transpired during the discussions between Brownstein and each employee. The findings of fact, in each instance, are the credited versions of what occurred.

6/ Kraft died on February 16, 1977. Those facts are taken from a statement signed by him on July 20, 1976 which was received in evidence (C8) by way of stipulation.

(1) While the record reflects that Brownstein was authorized to exercise supervisory authority over two professional employees and one clerical, those positions were vacant and unoccupied. Moreover, it does not appear, from the record, that there was any reasonable expectation they would be filled in the near future. Hence, I am constrained to conclude Brownstein was not, at the material time herein, acting in a supervisory capacity.

Nevertheless, I do not agree that Brownstein was not performing as a management official on June 30, 1976. Respondent asserts that the term "management official" as defined in Department of the Air Force, Arnold Engineering Development Center, et. al, A/SLMR No. 135 does not encompass the duties performed by its technical advisory specialist.

In the cited case the Assistant Secretary found that a civilian safety engineer, who rendered advice and made recommendations re safety problems, acted as an effective influencer who participated in policy determinations and was a management official. This latter term was described as referable to any employee having authority to make, or influence effectively the making of, policy re personnel procedures or programs.

The job description which lists Brownstein's duties and responsibilities, together with his role as chief negotiator for Respondent in labor relations, convinces me that this individual plays a significant role in influencing and affecting personnel policies and programs for management. His evaluations and recommendations involving benefit programs and case processing must necessarily influence policies adopted by the employer. I conclude, therefore, that Julius Brownstein is at least a management official, and that, under the Order, Respondent is responsible for his actions during the course of his employment. 7/

(2) In contending that no unlawful interrogation occurred in the case at bar, Respondent relies heavily upon the fact that no threats were made to employees by Brownstein. Moreover, it is asserted that no intimidatory conduct was shown. The questioning is deemed by Respondent to constitute "curiosity" and far removed from acts proscribed by the Order.

7/ Cf. Department of Transportation, National Highway Safety, A/SLMR No. 193; FAA, Department of Transportation, A/SLMR No. 173. The analysts involved in these cases are, in my opinion, distinguishable from the technical advisory specialist herein. The employees in the cited cases performed duties limited, for the most part, to rendering information after gathering information. Little or no role was played in the decision making process or in policy participation.

I do not agree. While it is true that Brownstein uttered no threats during the interrogations herein, the record reflects that he did approach and question four employees regarding the union meeting held on June 30, 1976. Further, his questions went beyond the framework of a general query concerning the meeting. Thus, he inquired as to the number of people who attended, what occurred thereat, and how many employees paid their dues by check. Such inquiries are not, as urged by Respondent, isolated in nature. Contrariwise, they are akin to systematic interrogation re union affairs which has been deemed unlawful by the National Labor Relations Board, See Blade Tribune Publishing Co. 161 NLRB 1512.

No legitimate reason appears for the questioning by Brownstein of employees regarding the union meeting, nor was any explanation offered to them by the management representative as to why such interrogation was conducted. In such a posture, and without assurances from Respondent that no ill effects would result from such queries, interrogation of a number of employees might well tend to restrain and be coercive. See Vandenberg Air Force Base et. al, A/SLMR No. 383.

On the basis of the record facts I am persuaded that the interrogation by Julius Brownstein of four employees was not merely a "display of the supervisor's curiosity", but constituted an infringement of the employees' rights under the Order. 8/ This persistent questioning, under the circumstances, of employees regarding the union meeting amounted to interference, restraint and coercion under the order and was violative of Section 19(a)(1) thereof.

Recommendation

Having found that Respondent has engaged in certain conduct which is violative of Section 19(a)(1) of the Order, I recommend that the Assistant Secretary adopt the following order designed to effectuate the purposes of Executive Order 11491, as amended.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR
ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS
SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

DIRECTORATE OF FACILITY ENGINEERS,
FORT RICHARDSON, ALASKA
A/SLMR No. 946

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1712, AFL-CIO (AFGE) alleging that the Respondent, one of several directorates located at Fort Richardson, Alaska, violated Section 19(a)(6) of the Order when it changed a past practice regarding retention of certain unit employees during a snow emergency closure of the base without affording the AFGE an opportunity to negotiate.

The evidence disclosed that prior to the alleged incident, it was the unwritten, though observed, policy of the Respondent to allow all nonessential nonemergency personnel to leave work early in the event inclement weather conditions necessitated a closure of the base. On the day in question, the Commanding General declared Fort Richardson closed except for emergency personnel and those residing on the base. The Respondent's Deputy Director, however, made a decision to retain the majority of the Respondent's employees, contrary to the previous policy.

The Administrative Law Judge found that the Respondent had not engaged in conduct violative of the Order, concluding that the decision made by the Respondent's Deputy Director was a one-time exercise of a right reserved to management under Section 11(b) of the Order, and recommended that the complaint be dismissed.

The Assistant Secretary concluded, contrary to the Administrative Law Judge, that the Respondent had engaged in conduct violative of Section 19(a)(6) of the Order. He found that while the decision to close the base is not a subject for negotiations because it is a reserved management right under Section 12(b) of the Order, the Respondent was obligated to afford the exclusive representative the opportunity to meet and confer over the implementing procedures and the impact of the change in the previous policy designating certain employees as essential and requiring them to remain on duty during a snow emergency closure. Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary found that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(6) of the Order by failing to meet and confer with the AFGE over the impact and procedures of the base closing, including the change in policy.

DECISION AND ORDER

On July 21, 1977, Administrative Law Judge Robert L. Ramsey issued his Recommended Decision and Order in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent, Directorate of Facility Engineers, Fort Richardson, Alaska, had not engaged in the unfair labor practice alleged in the complaint and recommending that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety. No exceptions were filed to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. Except as modified, 1/ the rulings are hereby affirmed.

1/ In U.S. Department of Air Force, Norton Air Force Base, 3 A/SLMR 175, A/SLMR No. 261, the Assistant Secretary noted that it is improper to admit into evidence offers of settlement. Thus, in order to foster and afford an atmosphere conducive to the settlement of unfair labor practice allegations, it is considered beneficial and necessary to assure to parties involved in settlement discussions that matters raised in connection with their deliberations ultimately will not be admitted into evidence. A contrary policy would, in my view, inhibit the settlement of unfair labor practice allegations and thereby possibly encourage needless litigation. Under these circumstances, in reaching a decision in this matter no consideration has been given to the offers of settlement which the Administrative Law Judge permitted to be introduced into the record.

Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order and the entire record in the subject case, I hereby adopt the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendations, only to the extent consistent herewith.

This case arose as a result of a complaint filed by the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1712, AFL-CIO (Complainant) alleging that the Respondent Directorate violated Section 19(a)(6) of the Order by failing to negotiate with the Complainant before changing a policy affecting unit employees.

The essential facts of the case, set out in detail in the attached Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order, are not in dispute. The Respondent Directorate is one of several directorates located at Fort Richardson, Alaska. The Complainant is the exclusive representative of a unit of employees in the Directorate. Prior to March 18, 1976, it was the unwritten, though observed, policy of the Respondent to allow all non-essential personnel to leave work early in the event inclement weather conditions necessitated a closing of the base. From the record, it appears that essential personnel during a snow closure were those persons needed to maintain the health and safety of the base or for snow removal.

On March 18, 1976, the Commanding General declared Fort Richardson closed except for essential emergency personnel and those residing on the base. The Respondent Directorate, through its Deputy Director, Walter Bagley, received official notification of the base closure at approximately 11:00 a.m. At this time, Bagley made a decision to retain the majority of the Respondent's employees except those in car pools with other base employees and those in hardship situations. The employees of the Directorate who remained were required to stay on the job performing their normal duties until approximately 3:00 p.m. All other nonessential base personnel were allowed to leave at approximately noon.

The Administrative Law Judge noted the agreement of the parties that the decision to close the base was a reserved management right. He determined that the decision as to who are essential employees also is a right reserved to management under Section 11(b) of the Order. In this connection, he concluded "that the failure of the Respondent to release all but truly essential employees. . .was not a change in policy, but was a one-time exercise of the reserved management rights contained in section 11(b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended." I disagree.

While management's decision to close the facility in a snow emergency is a reserved management right (under Section 12(b), rather than Section 11(b) as indicated by the Administrative Law Judge), I find that the procedures utilized to implement this decision, including questions related to the identity of essential and nonessential employees, is a matter subject to the obligation to bargain under the Executive Order where, as here, such decision represents a change in past policy. Thus, it is well established that agency management is obligated to bargain concerning the implementing procedures and impact on adversely affected employees of such a management decision even though the subject matter of the decision is non-negotiable under Section 12(b) of the Order. Cf. Tidewater Virginia Federal Employees Metal Trades Council and Naval Public Works Center, Norfolk, Virginia, FLRC No. 71A-56, and Bureau of the Mint, U.S. Department of the Treasury, 6 A/SLMR 640, 641, A/SLMR No. 750. Accordingly, in the absence of evidence that bargaining on procedures and impact in this instance would have had the effect of negating the authority reserved to management, I find that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(6) of the Order by failing to afford the Complainant the opportunity to meet and confer over the procedures utilized to implement its decision to close the facility, including matters relating to a change in policy as to the identity of essential and nonessential employees, and on the impact of its decision on adversely affected employees.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 6(b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, and Section 203.26(b) of the Regulations, the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations hereby orders that the Directorate of Facility Engineers, Fort Richardson, Alaska, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

Instituting a change in policy of retaining certain employees represented by the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1712, AFL-CIO, during a snow emergency closure without affording such representative an opportunity to meet and confer, to the extent consonant with law and regulations, on the procedures which management will observe in effectuating such policy and on the impact of such policy on adversely affected employees.

2. Take the following affirmative actions in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of Executive Order 11491, as amended:

(a) Upon request by the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1712, AFL-CIO, meet and confer, to the extent consonant with law and regulations, concerning the procedures involved and the impact on adversely affected employees of a change in policy designating certain employees as essential and requiring them to remain on duty during a snow emergency closing.

(b) Post at all Directorate of Facility Engineers, Fort Richardson, Alaska, facilities, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix" on forms to be furnished by the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Director of the Directorate of Facility Engineers, Fort Richardson, Alaska, and they shall be posted at all Directorate of Facility Engineers, Fort Richardson, Alaska, facilities and maintained by the Director for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. The Director shall take reasonable steps to insure that such notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

Statement of the Case

This is a hearing on a complaint filed by the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1712, AFL-CIO, Fort Richardson, Alaska, hereinafter referred to as the Complainant, against the Directorate of Facility Engineers Headquarters, 172nd Infantry Brigade (Alaska), Department of the Army, Fort Richardson, Alaska, hereinafter referred to as Respondent, charging Respondent with an Unfair Labor Practice in violation of section 19(a)(6) of Executive Order 11491, as amended.

A formal hearing was held on the tenth day of June, 1977 at Anchorage, Alaska, pursuant to notice from the Assistant Secretary for Labor-Management Relations dated the 21st day of March, 1977. All parties were afforded and took full advantage of the right to call witnesses and to examine and cross-examine the same, to produce documentary evidence, and to argue their respective positions. Following the foregoing, the opportunity was given each of the parties to submit a brief; however, the right to submit such brief was waived by each party. Thereupon the record was closed and the matter now stands ready for decision.

Although the formal written complaint herein (Assistant Secretary Exhibit 1(a)) charged violations of section 19(a)(1) and (6) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, the Complainant at the formal hearing stated that no allegation or violation of section 19(a)(1) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, was intended, nor was such an allegation urged by the Complainant. Thus, the sole matter in dispute is whether the action of the Respondent constituted an Unfair Labor Practice under section 19(a)(6) of Executive Order 11491, as amended.

Having heard and considered the testimony of witnesses and having observed their demeanor, and having read and considered the exhibits admitted into evidence, and based on the entire record in this cause, I make the following findings of fact, conclusions of law and recommended decision:

Findings of Fact

The Complainant became the exclusive bargaining unit with respect to the Respondent in approximately 1966 and has been the exclusive bargainning unit since that time.

Prior to March 18, 1976, it was the unwritten, though observed, policy of the Respondent to allow all non-essential personnel to leave work early in the event inclement or adverse weather conditions necessitated a closing of the base. On March 18, 1976, at approximately 10:30 a.m., due to a heavy snow storm, the Commanding General declared Fort Richardson closed except for essential emergency personnel and those residing on the base. At approximately 11:00 a.m. on that date, Respondent, through Mr. Walter Bagley, Deputy Director of the Respondent, received official notification of the base closure. At this time Mr. Bagley made a decision to retain the majority of the Respondent's employees; however, the Respondent's Division Chiefs were instructed to inform their foremen that employees in car pools with other employees on the base that had been excused would be allowed to leave. In addition, the foremen were advised that if an employee lived in a remote area and a hardship would be created by requiring said employee to remain on the job, he too could be excused. Several of the Respondent's employees fell into these categories and were excused from their jobs at approximately 12 o'clock noon. The remainder of Respondent's employees were required to remain on the job until approximately 3:00 p.m., when all were released with the exception of those employees needed to maintain the health and safety of the base. Normal quitting time for the affected employees was approximately 5:00 p.m.

On March 25, 1976, the Complainant's President, Mrs. Dorothy Hefner, met with Mr. Bagley to register a complaint that the Respondent's employees were not released at the same time as the rest of the employees on Fort Richardson. Mrs. Hefner and Mr. Bagley met again with regard to this problem on April 13, 1976, in an attempt to resolve the difficulty. At this time, Mr. Bagley agreed to inform all employees of the Respondent, through their respective foremen, that no change in policy with respect to the release of personnel in the event of base closure had been made or intended by Mr. Bagley's actions on March 18, 1976. On or about April 15, 1976, Mr. Bagley informed his foremen as agreed and directed them to so advise the employees under their supervision. The majority of the employees received such notice; however, some employees who were members of the Complainant Union were not informed as directed by Mr. Bagley. Thereafter, on or about May 25, 1976, Mrs. Hefner and Mr. Bagley met again to discuss the matter, which by then was becoming a controversy. During this meeting, Mr. Bagley informed Mrs. Hefner that he had fulfilled his April 13, 1976, agreement; however, Mrs. Hefner was adamant in her position that he had not.

On or about August 3, 1976, Mrs. Hefner, in a letter (Joint Exhibit J-1), charged the Respondent with an Unfair Labor Practice for failure to negotiate a change in policy with regard to release of employees when the base was ordered closed by the Commanding General. As a resolution, Mrs. Hefner demanded that Mr. Bagley post a notice on all bulletin boards within the Respondent facility admitting that Mr. Bagley committed an Unfair Labor Practice and advising that in the future only employees needed in an emergency would be designated as essential. In response, Mr. Bagley offered (Joint Exhibit J-4, page 5) to post a notice (Joint Exhibit J-4, page 6) explaining that no change in the emergency release policy had been made, but he impliedly refused to admit the commission of an Unfair Labor Practice.

On September 20, 1976, Mr. Smith Box, acting for the Complainant, wrote to Mr. Berry McBride, Labor-Management Relations Specialist at the Civilian Personnel Office, and informed Mr. McBride that Mr. Bagley's offer was unacceptable to the union because: (1) it did not admit nor state that management had committed an Unfair Labor Practice; (2) it did not identify those employees considered "essential" in case of an emergency closure of the base; and (3) it did not state what would happen when the base was next closed on an emergency basis due to weather (Joint Exhibit J-4, page 7).

On October 18, 1976, Mrs. Hefner filed a complaint which is the basis of this proceeding.

It is agreed by all parties that the decision to close the base is not a subject for negotiation between the Respondent and the Complainant inasmuch as such a decision is a reserved management right under section 11(b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended. I likewise find and conclude that the decision as to who are "essential" employees in the event of a base closure due to inclement weather is a reserved management right under the "work project" and or "tour of duty" exception contained in section 11(b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended. Thus, I find and conclude that the failure of the Respondent to release all but truly essential employees on March 19, 1976, after the base had been ordered closed by the Commanding General was not a change in policy, but was a one-time exercise of the reserved management rights contained in section 11(b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended. This finding is, I believe, supported by the offer of Mr. Bagley to post either of two separate notices of "no policy change" (Joint Exhibit J-4, pages 5 and 6, and Joint Exhibit J-5).

It is most unlikely that a repetition of this incident will occur, inasmuch as the Respondent on November 1, 1976, in a document identified as "S.O.P. NO. DFAE 110-176" (Joint Exhibit J-2), identified those employees of the Respondent facility who would be retained in the event of an early dismissal of nonessential personnel under adverse weather conditions.

Based on the above, I make the following conclusions:

Conclusions

1. Prior to March 18, 1976, there existed at Fort Richardson, Alaska, an unwritten, but observed, policy to allow all non-essential personnel to leave work early in the event inclement or adverse weather conditions necessitated a closing of the base.

2. Prior to March 18, 1976, there was no universally recognized listing of those who constituted essential personnel at Fort Richardson.

3. The decision made by the Respondent's Assistant Director, Mr. Walter Bagley, on March 18, 1976, was the exercise of a right reserved to Management under section 11(b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended.

4. The actions of the Respondent's Assistant Director, Mr. Walter Bagley, on March 18, 1976, did not constitute a violation of section 19(a)(6) of Executive Order 11491, as amended.

Recommendation

I recommend that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety.

A/SLMR No. 947

This case involved an Application for Decision on Grievability-Arbitrability filed by the Rhode Island Association of Civilian Technicians (Applicant). The Applicant contends that a grievance filed by two unit members concerning the procedures used in the selection of an Aircraft Mechanic Foreman position is grievable and arbitrable under the parties' negotiated agreement. In response, the Rhode Island National Guard, Providence, Rhode Island (Agency) contends that the grievance regarding the selection procedures used for the Aircraft Mechanic Foreman position is not grievable or arbitrable because the aforementioned position is a supervisory one and the selection procedures for filling the position are not subject to the grievance and arbitration procedures of the negotiated agreement.

The Administrative Law Judge found that the issue raised by the grievance was not grievable or arbitrable under the parties' agreement. He found it uncontroverted that the position involved was a first-line supervisory position and as he concluded that the procedures for filling such a position were outside the scope of the negotiated agreement, he found that the grievance was not grievable or arbitrable under the negotiated agreement.

Noting particularly the absence of exceptions, the Assistant Secretary adopted the findings, conclusions and recommendation of the Administrative Law Judge.

DECISION ON GRIEVABILITY-ARBITRABILITY

On August 22, 1977, Administrative Law Judge Rhea M. Burrow issued his Recommended Decision on Grievability in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the grievance herein was not grievable or arbitrable under the parties' negotiated agreement. No exceptions were filed to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision on Grievability.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision on Grievability and the entire record in the subject case, and noting particularly the absence of exceptions, I hereby adopt the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendation.

FINDING

IT IS HEREBY FOUND that the grievance in Case No. 31-09847(AP) is not subject to the grievance and arbitration procedures set forth in the parties' negotiated agreement.

RECOMMENDED DECISION ON GRIEVABILITY

This proceeding is pursuant to an application for Decision on Arbitrability filed January 20, 1976 and amended April 14, 1976, under Section 13 of Executive Order 11491, as amended, (hereinafter called the Order) by the Rhode Island Association of Civilian Technicians, Incorporated, (hereinafter called RIACT and/or the Union and applicant). The matter concerns the grievability of the Agency's alleged failure to abide by its collective bargaining agreement with the Union in filling a vacant position (Aircraft Mechanic Foreman); the agency maintains the position is a supervisory one outside the collective bargaining unit. A Notice of Hearing on Application for Decision on Grievability or arbitrability was issued by the Regional Administrator, New York Region on January 13, 1977.

A hearing was held before the undersigned in Providence, Rhode Island on June 7, 1977. All parties were afforded a full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross examine witnesses and to introduce evidence bearing on the issues involved herein. Subsequent to the close of the hearing both parties filed briefs which have been duly considered. 1/

Upon the basis of the entire record, including my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following findings of fact, conclusions and recommendation:

Findings of Fact

A. Background Information

1. The Union, at all times material herein, has been the collective bargaining representative of a unit composed of all federally paid technician employees of the Rhode Island Army and Air National Guard except for the following: management officials, supervisors and employees engaged in federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity. 2/

2. The controversial position in issue was established in late 1972 with the official title of Aircraft Mechanic Foreman. The job provides for supervision of several employees assigned to the Allied Shops, services section, and Avionics section of an Army Aviation Support Facility. 3/

1/ The request for extension of time to file briefs is considered to have been timely in the circumstances of this case for the following reasons: (1) I was notified on June 27 by phone that a written request for extension of time was being sent to me on that date, (2) the written request was dated and mailed on that date; (3) the delay in delivery on July 15, 1977 was through no fault of the agency and I had prior notice of the matter; (4) the Union was advised of the request and interposed no objection.

2/ See Agency Exhibit No. 1 (Collective Bargaining Agreement 1973-1976), Article I, Sections 1 and 2.

3/ Agency Exhibit No. 2.

The position by job description and evidence presented at the hearing clearly establishes that it is a supervisory one with specified education and qualification requirements and supervisory duties and responsibilities. There was no controversy offered by the Union that the job was other than a supervisory one and evidence was presented that it has been so recognized since it was established. 4/

There are two different types of Aircraft Mechanic Foremen; there is one foreman that controls aircraft maintenance and another that controls the allied shop. The latter is the one involved in this proceeding. While both have the same title, their duties are somewhat different. The maintenance foreman controls general aircraft maintenance and the other, (allied shop foreman), control the allied shop, avionics and the different shops in the facility. At the time of the hearing nine men were reported to be under the supervision of the allied shop foreman. The Aircraft Mechanic Foreman position had been established and was operative at the time the collective bargaining agreement was entered into on July 10, 1973.

3. After establishment of the position Aircraft Mechanic Foreman (allied shop) Sergeant Francis Patrick Cook and Jack Jessey were selected to fill the position. They were followed by Zane Sherman and Bruce Wilcox, the latter being the present incumbent on the job. When Sherman was selected in 1974 a rating panel was held and it certified the names of several persons from a list of nine as being qualified for the position to the selecting official. The names certified included Zane Sherman, Eugene J. Sabetta, John C. Caffeso and Joseph Bouchard. In June 1975, Bouchard, Wilcox, Caffeso and Sabetta were the persons referred to the Technician Personnel Officer as fully qualified for the position. There was no additional Panel rating made and when Wilcox was subsequently selected Caffeso and Sabetta initiated grievances when they learned that the names forwarded to the selecting official were not again ranked or evaluated as specified in Article XII, Section 11 of the Agreement. 5/ Article XII of the negoti-

4/ The duties of the Aircraft Mechanic Foreman (allied shops) are reported in detail on pp 62, 63, 64 and 65 of the transcript by testimony of Russell J. Johnson, Facilities Support Commander, Rhode Island National Guard.

5/ In the Statement of Facts leading to the Grievance it was also stated: "The Grievants felt that the Technical Personnel Officer violated their rights under the agreement by not allowing an evaluation (rating) Panel to properly evaluate and rank the applicants as to whether they were qualified or unqualified as required in the agreement."

ated agreement relates to Merit Promotion and Sections 6 and 11 are as follows: "Section 6, Promotions shall be made on the basis of qualifications, merit and fitness. The selecting supervisor of the activity or unit concerned shall select candiates on the basis of their inclusion on lists of best qualified, in accordance with the spirit and intent of governing regulations, consideration will be given to personnel in the minimum areas of consideration when it is determined that the minimum area of consideration will yield a sufficient number of qualified candiates. Exceptions are voluntary applicants, currently members of the National Guard, who will be referred to the selecting authority in accordance with applicable regulations, if the merit inclusion on lists of best qualified." "Section 11, Candiates will be evaluated and ranked in accordance with the scoring of the Evaluation Board into one of the categories below: a. Best Qualified, b. Highly Qualified, c. Qualified, d. Unqualified."

While there was no new rating panel ranking and evaluation of the candidates made when Wilcox was selected in June 1975, the selection was made from names considered, evaluated by the panel in 1974 when a previous selection from qualified candidates had been made. Sabetta and Caffeso, the parties who filed grievances regarding selection of the successful candidate were among the four referred for selection as being fully qualified both in 1974 and 1975.

B. Merit Promotion Programs.

1. The State Plan. The policy and procedures for the merit promotion and internal placement of technicians employed by the Rhode Island Army and Air National Guard are contained in a letter from the Office of the Adjutant General dated January 15, 1970, Subject: Technician Letter 70-A. 6/ Section 5(e) of the State Merit Promotion Plan sets forth that evaluation of candidates knowledge, skills, abilities and personal characteristics will be performed by an evaluation panel or panels appointed by the Adjutant General; Section 6(a) provides that the candidates will be ranked by the panel in the following categories: (1) Best qualified; (2) Highly qualified; and, (3) Qualified. Section 6(b) states that three to five of the best qualified candidates will be certified to the selecting official.

6/ Attachment to Asst. Secretary's Exhibit 1-E.

2. The Negotiated Agreement Provisions. 7/ Article I, Section 2 of the negotiated agreement states: "The unit to which this AGREEMENT is applicable is composed of all federally paid technician employees' of the Rhode Island Army and Air National Guard except for the following: management officials, supervisors and employees' engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity."

Article X, relating to Grievance Procedure, Sections (b) and (c) state: "(b) Grievances initiated by an employee or group of employees in the unit on matters other than the interpretation or application of the existing agreement and/or not subject to appeal procedures contained in Executive Orders or Regulations may be presented under the procedure published by the Adjutant General, State of Rhode Island."

"(c) Questions arising pertaining to the interpretation of published agency policies or regulations of appropriate authorities outside of the Agency shall not be subject to the negotiated grievance procedure regardless of whether such policies, laws, or regulations are quoted, cited, or otherwise incorporated or referenced in this agreement."

Article XII of the negotiated agreement relating to "Merit Promotion" Sections 2 and 3 provide: "Section 2. Selections for filling positions within the unit covered by this agreement will be made from the best of the qualified without discrimination for any non-merited reasons such as age, race, sex, color, religion, national origin, lawful political affiliation marital status, or labor organization membership."

"Section 3. The employer shall have posted on designated official bulletin boards within the unit, notices of all promotional opportunities and vacancies for positions within the units...."

7/ Agency Exhibit No. 1.

Position of the Parties

The Applicant through Counsel states in its brief that through oral and documentary evidence presented at the hearing the Agency Violated Article XII of the negotiated agreement and Technician Letter 70-A, Section 5(e), in that no rating panel was held for the position in issue. It recommends a decision issue holding that the case is grievable under the negotiated procedure and that it be allowed to proceed to step 4 and invoke arbitration in accordance with Article XIX so that a third and final decision may be made.

The position of the Agency as expressed by Counsel in his brief is that the position of Aircraft Mechanic Foreman (allied shop) is a supervisory one and is not subject to grievance and arbitration procedure under the negotiated agreement. It is not denied that a grievance was presented but it is urged that it must be processed under other instructions published by the Agency which are available for settling disputes of this nature.

Discussion and Conclusions

The Agency selected Bruce Wilcox for the position of Aircraft Mechanic Foreman (allied shop) in June 1975 from four candidates that had been evaluated by a panel when a previous vacancy occurred in 1974 and all were certified as being full qualified for the position. Aircraft Mechanic Foreman is a first-line supervisory position, has been so recognized since it was established in 1972 and this was not controverted at the hearing.

There is no obligation under the Executive Order to bargain over procedures for filling vacancies outside the bargaining unit. However, there is no prohibition against doing so and if an agreement on the subject is reached, it is a valid agreement. 8/

It must be concluded from the oral and documentary evidence presented that the position of Aircraft Mechanic Foreman (WS-8852-10) is a supervisory position and, hence, excluded from the exclusive unit under the Order.

8/ Texas ANG Council of Locals, AFGE and State of Texas National Guard, FLRC No. 74- A-71; Community Services Administration and National Council of CSA Locals, AFGE, AFL-CIO, A/SLMR No. 749.

Having found that the position in issue is a supervisory one, the intent of the parties with respect to the scope of Article XII of the negotiated Agreement and whether the Agency Merit Promotion Plan had been incorporated by reference or otherwise into the Agreement must be considered. Certainly, the oral testimony presented at the hearing did not show or indicate any intent on the part of the Agency to include the State Merit Promotion Plan as applicable to supervisory positions in the negotiated agreement. In fact its inclusion was contra to being applicable in the negotiated agreement. In this connection the Applicant offered no testimony other than one adverse Agency witness, Rocco DeAngelis, who was the Technician Personnel Officer who handled the promotion in question; his testimony was not supportive of a supervisory position being one included or intended to be included in the unit under the negotiated agreement.

The negotiated agreement between the parties in Article 1, Section 1, provides in substance that the Employees recognizes that the Association is the exclusive representative of all the employees in this unit excluding management officials, supervisors and employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity; and, Section 2 provides that the unit to which this agreement is applicable is composed of all federally paid technician employees' of the Rhode Island Army and Air National Guard except for management officials, supervisors and employees' engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity.

Looking further, Article XII, Section 2 of the negotiated agreement which the Applicant claims the Agency Violated, states: "Selection for filling positions within the unit covered by this agreement will be made from the best of the qualified, without discrimination for any non-merited reasons such as age, race, sex, color, religion, national origin, lawful political affiliation, maritial status or labor organizational membership." (Underscoring supplied). Section 3 states: "The Employer shall have posted on designated official bulletin boards within the unit, notices of all promotional opportunities and vacancies for positions within the unit..." (Underscoring supplied).

Pursuant to the Executive Order, it is obligatory to determine whether, Applicant's grievance is subject to the negotiated grievance procedure. As the Federal Labor Relations Council has stated:

> "Section 6(a)(5) of the Order provides in pertinent part that the Assistant Secretary shall:
>
> (5) decide questions as to whether a grievance is subject to a negotiated grievance procedure... as provided in Section 13(d) of the Order
>
> "Section 13(d) provides that 'questions that cannot be resolved by the parties as to whether or not a grievance is a matter for which a statutory appeal procedure exists, shall be referred to the Assistant Secretary for decision. Section 13(d) further permits a party to refer to the Assistant Secretary questions '...as to whether or not a grievance is on a matter subject to the grievance procedure in an existing agreement...'
>
> "It is clear from the express language in these provisions that in resolving a grievability dispute, if as here, an issue is presented concerning the applicability of a statutory appeal procedure, the Assistant Secretary must decide that question. Further, in any dispute referred to the Assistant Secretary concerning whether a grievance is on a matter subject to a negotiated grievance procedure, the Assistant Secretary must decide whether the dispute is or is not subject to the negotiated grievance procedures... In making such a determination, the Assistant Secretary must consider relevant provisions of the Order...and relevant provisions of the negotiated agreement, including those provisions which describe the scope and coverage of the negotiated grievance procedure, as well as any substantive provisions of the agreement which are being grieved. Further the Assistant Secretary must also consider '...existing laws and regulations of appropriate authorities...."
> Department of the Navy, Naval Ammunition Depot, Crane, Indiana, and Local 1415, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, FLRC No. 74 A-19, Report No. 63 (1975).

See, also, Department of the Navy, Naval Ammunition Depot, Crane, Indiana, A/SLMR 684 (1976); NAGE Local R8-14 and Federal Aviation Administration, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, FLRC No. 74 A 38, Report No. 79, 1975.

One of the same issues is apparent in this case as was evident in Texas ANG Council of Locals, AFGE and State of Texas National Guard FLRC No. 74A - 71. That is, that the merit promotion procedures negotiated for the filling of positions within the bargaining unit must be the merit promotion procedures which management must use to fill supervisory positions, outside the bargaining unit. It was found... "that the union's proposal is outside the bargaining obligation established by Section 11(a) of the Order. That is, the agency may, at its option, bargain on the proposal, but is is not obligated to do so under the Order."

Further, the decision stated: "To avoid any possible misunderstanding we must emphasize that our decision herein does not, of course, mean that all proposals in any way related to the filling of supervisory positions would be outside the obligation to bargain under Section 11(a)-- for example, proposals dealing with notification of unit employees eligible for consideration under agency regulations. However, the instant proposal goes beyond assurance of notification by seeking to prescribe the procedures, themselves, which must be used by management in filling supervisory position outside the bargaining unit."

Also, for resolution is the question of whether the procedures used in the filling of threshold supervisory position for which unit employees are eligible is subject to the negotiated grievance procedure? As applied to this case, the Agency utilized the candidates certified by the panel as being fully qualified in late 1974 when it made its selection of Bruce Wilcox in June 1975 and the certified list included Grievant's Sabetta and Cafesso. There was no question raised as to procedure by grievants in 1974 and they were on the same list of candidates that had been certified as fully qualified when selection was made in June 1975. At least, by inference, the Applicant urges that a rating panel be convened every time a promotion is made to rank the same candidates previously evaluated. Such involves a proposal that must be used by management in filling a supervisory position outside of the bargaining unit and not shown to be comprehended within the negotiated agreement. I make no determination as to whether a grievance was presented that is subject to be processed under Agency procedure and instructions.

Recommendation

On the basis of the foregoing, I recommend to the Assistant Secretary of Labor Management Relations that he find the grievance was not grievable on a matter subject to the parties negotiated grievance procedure and arbitration may not be invoked.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR
ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS
SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER AMENDING RECOGNITION AND CLARIFYING UNIT OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

GENERAL SERVICES ADMINISTRATION,
REGION 3, FEDERAL PROTECTIVE SERVICE DIVISION
A/SLMR No. 948

This case involved a petition for clarification of unit (CU) and amendment of recognition (AC) filed by the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1733, AFL-CIO (AFGE) seeking to amend and clarify the unit for which it was granted exclusive recognition on August 18, 1966, to reflect changes brought about by a reorganization. The AFGE sought to amend the description of its exclusively recognized unit by changing the designation "Central Protection Force" to "Federal Protective Service Division" and adding the designation "Federal Protective Officers." It also sought to clarify its unit by including certain job classifications created subsequent to the reorganization and by including employees classified as "Supervisory Federal Protective Officer, GS-083-07," (Sergeant), arguing that such employees are not supervisors within the meaning of Section 2(c) of the Order.

The Intervenor, National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1800, Independent (NFFE) argued, and the Activity agreed, that the employees in the newly created job classifications sought by AFGE should be included in the NFFE's bargaining unit, and the Activity also took the view that the Sergeants are supervisors within the meaning of the Order and, thus, should be excluded from the AFGE's unit.

The Assistant Secretary found that the employees classified as Supervisory Federal Protective Officer, GS-083-07, (Sergeant) are supervisors within the meaning of Section 2(c) of the Order as they have the authority to adjust grievances, transfer, discipline or reward employees or to effectively recommend such action utilizing independent judgment. Accordingly, he excluded employees classified as Supervisory Federal Protective Officer, GS-083-07, (Sergeant) from the AFGE's unit.

The Assistant Secretary further found that the employees in the job classifications of Contract Specialist, Protection Specialist, Equipment Specialist (electronic), Training Instructor (law enforcement), Training Instructor (firearms), General Communications Operator, and Federal Protection Inspector are functionally and administratively integrated with the Federal Protective Officers and Guards and have a clear and identifiable community of interest with the employees in the unit represented by AFGE. He also found that the AFGE's unit, with the inclusion of the disputed classifications, continues to be appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under the Order as in addition to composing a functionally cohesive grouping of employees sharing a clear and identifiable community of interest separate and distinct from other GSA employees, the unit will continue to promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary amended the AFGE's recognition and clarified its unit to include the employees in the disputed job classifications.

DECISION AND ORDER AMENDING RECOGNITION AND CLARIFYING UNIT

Upon a petition duly filed under Section 6 of Executive Order 11491, as amended, a hearing was held before Hearing Officer Brigitte Sisson. The Hearing Officer's rulings made at the hearing are free from prejudicial error and are hereby affirmed.

Upon the entire record in this case, including briefs filed by the Activity, the Petitioner, American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1733, AFL-CIO, hereinafter called AFGE, and the Intervenor, National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1800, Independent, hereinafter called NFFE, the Assistant Secretary finds:

In this proceeding, the AFGE seeks to amend and clarify the unit for which it was granted exclusive recognition 1/ to reflect changes brought about by a reorganization occurring on or about January 11, 1971. In essence, the AFGE seeks to amend the description of its exclusively recognized unit by changing the designation "Central Protection Force" to "Federal Protective Service Division" and adding "Federal Protective Officers," and including certain specific job classifications created subsequent to the January 1971, reorganization. In addition, the

1/ On August 18, 1966, the AFGE was granted recognition as the exclusive representative of a unit described as: "All nonsupervisory Guards (U.S. Special Police) in classification grades below that of the rank of Lieutenant in the Central Protection Force, Public Buildings Service, Region 3, GSA. This unit does not include Guards (U.S. Special Police) in classification grades of the rank of Lieutenant and above."

AFGE seeks to clarify its unit by including employees classified as "Supervisory Federal Protective Officer, GS-083-07" (Sergeant) arguing that such employees are not supervisors within the meaning of Section 2(c) of the Order. Thus, the AFGE seeks to amend and clarify the unit description to read, in essence,

> All Guards, Federal Protective Officers, Training Instructors, Contract and Protection Specialists, General Communication Operators, and Federal Protection Inspectors assigned to the Federal Protective Service Division, Public Buildings Service, Region 3, General Services Administration, in the Washington Metropolitan Area, excluding professional employees, management officials, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, and supervisors as defined by the Order.

The NFFE opposes that portion of the AFGE's petition which seeks to include within the AFGE's unit the job classifications which were created subsequent to the reorganization. In this connection, the NFFE argues that such employees should be included in the bargaining unit it represents exclusively. 2/ The NFFE contends that these employees do not share a community of interest with guards and Federal Protective Officers, but, rather, because of their classifications, job functions and location in the Activity's organization, they share a community of interest with the employees in its unit.

In agreement with the NFFE, the Activity contends that the disputed employee classifications more properly belong in the NFFE's unit rather than in the AFGE's unit. It further takes the position that the Sergeants are supervisors within the meaning of the Order and should be excluded from the AFGE's unit.

Region 3, headquartered in Washington, D.C., is one of 10 regional offices of the General Services Administration (GSA). Under the direction of a Regional Administrator, Region 3 is responsible for the achievement of the GSA's multiple missions within the geographical area of the states of Pennsylvania, Virginia, West Virginia, Maryland and Delaware, and the District of Columbia. To accomplish its mission, Region 3 is composed of five program services: the Automated Data and Telecommunications Service; the Office of Operating Programs; the Federal Supply Service; the National Archives and Records Service; and the Public Buildings Service (PBS).

2/ On October 28, 1971, the NFFE was certified as the exclusive representative of a unit of the Activity's employees described as: All nonsupervisory GS employees in GSA Region 3, Washington Metropolitan Area not covered under exclusive recognition, excluding all supervisors, managerial officials, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, WB employees, guards and professionals.

The Activity is one of the several divisions of the PBS, and is responsible for the protection of personnel and property under the control or jurisdiction of the GSA within Region 3. Under the command of its Director, the Activity is composed of seven branches: the Training Branch; the Federal Protection Branch; the Inspection Branch; the Records and Communications Branch; the Enforcement Branch; the Planning and Development Branch; and the Technical Services Branch.

Prior to the 1971 reorganization, all employees engaged in Federal protection activities in the Washington Metropolitan Area were assigned to the Central Protection Force, which was an organizational component of the PBS. The employees engaged in duties directly related to furnishing protection services were classified as Guards (U.S. Special Police). Subsequent to the reorganization, the Central Protection Force was redesignated as the Federal Protection Service Division (Activity) and employees classified as Guards (U.S. Special Police) were reclassified as Federal Protective Officers (FPO). 3/ In addition, subsequent to the reorganization, the classification of Supervisory Federal Protective Officer, GS-083-07 (Sergeant) was created, and certain employees classified as FPO's who performed specialized duties were reclassified as Contract Specialists, GS-1102-07; Protection Specialists, GS-301-07, 09, or 11; Equipment Specialists (electronic), GS-1670-09, or 11; 4/ Training Instructors (law enforcement), GS-1712-05, 07, or 09; Training Instructors (firearms), GS-1712-07; General Communications Operators, GS-392-05, or 06; or Federal Protection Inspectors, GS-083-11. The eligibility of employees in the foregoing classifications is the subject of the AFGE's petition to clarify its exclusively recognized unit.

There are approximately 1275 FPO's and guards assigned to duty within the Washington Metropolitan Area. These employees are assigned to the Activity's Enforcement Branch and are posted among the various buildings in the Metropolitan Area under GSA control. They wear special uniforms and, if qualified, carry firearms in the performance of their duties, which include patrolling, assuring the security of personnel and property, responding to emergency situations, and investigating bomb threats and other crimes occurring in buildings under GSA control. Among these employees are the approximately 130 employees classified as "Sergeants." The other seven disputed classifications include approximately 51 employees who are assigned throughout the other six branches of the Activity.

3/ In this connection, it appears that the classification of guard is still utilized and held by certain employees. The distinction between guards and FPO's is that guards have not completed an eight week academy training course, which is required of FPO's. In other respects, guards have similar duties and responsibilities and are subject to the same supervision as FPO's.

4/ Although this position was not included in the AFGE's petition as one of the disputed positions sought to be clarified, the eligibility of employees classified in this position was fully litigated at the hearing by all parties and, therefore, I will rule upon the eligibility of such employees to be included in either of the exclusively represented bargaining units.

The record reveals that the Director of the Activity has been delegated full authority to direct the day-to-day operations of his Division, including the authority to handle labor relations and personnel matters affecting the Activity. Overall personnel and labor relations services affecting employees in the Washington Metropolitan Area are provided by a central GSA Personnel Office. The area of consideration for reduction-in-force procedures is confined to the Washington Metropolitan Area.

Based on the foregoing, and noting the absence of an objection by any party herein, I shall amend the recognition accorded to the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1733, AFL-CIO, in August 1966, by changing the unit description from "Central Protection Force" to "Federal Protective Service Division," and by adding the classification "Federal Protective Officers."

Eligibility Issues

Supervisory Federal Protective Officers, GS-083-07 (Sergeants)

As noted above, the Activity contends that employees in the subject classification are supervisors within the meaning of Section 2(c) of the Order, and should be excluded from the AFGE's unit. The AFGE disputes this contention by the Activity, and contends that such employees should be included in its unit.

The record reveals that employees in the subject classification are in charge of squads of approximately 25 FPO's and guards, and, in this regard, responsibly assign and direct the work of employees in their respective squads. In addition, they have been delegated the authority to grant leave and to adjust the grievances of employees under their supervision. The record also discloses that employees in the subject classification have made effective recommendations with respect to disciplinary actions, transfers, incentive awards and commendations affecting employees under their supervision.

Under these circumstances, I find that employees in the subject classification are supervisors within the meaning of Section 2(c) of the Order as they have the authority to adjust grievances and to transfer, discipline or reward employees, or to effectively recommend such actions utilizing independent judgment. Accordingly, I shall clarify the unit for which the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1733, AFL-CIO is recognized as the exclusive representative, by excluding from such unit employees classified as Supervisory Federal Protective Officer, GS-083-07 (Sergeant).

Contract Specialist, GS-1102-07

The incumbents in this job classification are responsible for handling the contracting out of security services. They draft specifications for particular buildings involved and handle the necessary paper work sent in by the contractor. They also are responsible for assuring that the contractors are providing the appropriate services. This job classification was established in 1974 because of the large number of contract buildings which were being utilized by the U.S. Government in the Washington Metropolitan Area. Contract Specialists are assigned to the Technical Services Branch and work out of the Regional Office. There are eight incumbents in this job classification and the record reveals that the majority of them were at one time either FPO's or guards.

Protection Specialist, GS-301-07, 09, 11; Equipment Specialist (electronic), GS-1670-09, 11

The incumbents in these job classifications are responsible for making surveys of newly constructed or newly leased buildings to determine the security measures needed to adequately protect the building, the contents, and its personnel. They also periodically check the buildings to see if there are breaches of security. The equipment specialist handles special problems involving special types of alarm systems and other security equipment. The incumbents are assigned to the Technical Services Branch and work out of the Regional Office. There are currently seven Protection Specialists and four Equipment Specialists, the majority of whom were at one time either FPO's or guards.

Training Instructor (law enforcement), GS-1712-05, 07, 09; Training Instructor (firearms), GS-1712-07

The incumbents in these job classifications are involved in the actual training of FPO's and guards as well as a development of training methods and materials for use in their training. The incumbents are assigned to the Training Branch, which is located at the Navy Yard. There currently are two Training Instructors (law enforcement) and five Training Instructors (firearms), all of whom were at one time either FPO's or guards.

General Communications Operator, GS-392-05, 06

The incumbents are responsible for handling of the security communications network covering the FPO's and guards within the Washington Metropolitan Area. They also monitor the various security alarms systems found in U.S. Government buildings throughout the Washington Metropolitan Area. The general communications operators are assigned to the Enforcement Branch and work shifts covering the 24-hour day. This function, which at one time was handled by FPO's, was converted in 1973 into a civilian function. The majority of the nine General Communications Operators were at one time either FPO's or guards.

Federal Protection Inspector, GS-083-11

The incumbents are responsible for the inspection of security personnel and security systems at the U.S. Government buildings as well as the contract buildings. Federal Protection Inspectors are assigned to the Inspection Branch and work out of the Regional Office. The 16 incumbents were at one time either FPO's or guards.

Under all the foregoing circumstances, I find that the employees in the above classifications do not have a clear and identifiable community of interest separate and distinct from the FPO's and guards employed by the Activity in that they are functionally and administratively integrated with the FPO's and guards. 5/ Thus, the disputed employees and the FPO's and guards enjoy a common mission, common overall supervision, uniform personnel policies and practices, and a high degree of integrated operations. In addition, a substantial degree of transfer of personnel from the classification of FPO or guard to the disputed classifications has occurred. Indeed, as noted above, it would appear that the movement of personnel to the disputed classifications is tantamount to a career progression or "ladder" for employees classified as FPO's or guards.

In addition, I find that the AFGE's unit, with the inclusion of the disputed classifications, continues to be appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under the Order. 6/ Thus, in addition to comprising a functionally cohesive grouping of employees sharing a clear and identifiable community of interest separate and distinct from other GSA employees, I find that the unit will continue to promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. In this regard, I note that the Activity's Director has been delegated authority for personnel and labor relations matters, as well as for all operational matters.

Accordingly, I shall clarify the unit for which the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1733, AFL-CIO has been recognized as the exclusive representative by including in such unit employees classified Contract Specialist, GS-1102-07; Protection Specialist, GS-301-07, 09, 11; Equipment Specialist (electronic), GS-1670-09, 11; Training Instructor (firearms), GS-1712-07; General Communications Operator, GS-392-05, 06; and Federal Protection Inspector, GS-083-11.

ORDER

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that exclusive recognition granted on August 18, 1966, to American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1733, AFL-CIO, be, and it hereby is, amended by adding the designation "Federal Protective Officers," and by substituting the designation "Federal Protective Service Division, Public Buildings Service, Region 3, General Services Administration, in the Washington-Metropolitan Area" for the designation "Central Protection Force, Public Buildings Service, Region 3, GSA."

5/ Cf. General Services Administration, Federal Supply Service, 6 A/SLMR 452, A/SLMR No. 699 (1976).

6/ Cf. Department of the Army, Fort McPherson, Georgia, FLRC No. 76A-82.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the unit exclusively represented by American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1733, AFL-CIO, be, and it hereby is, clarified by including in the said unit employees classified as Contract Specialist, GS-1102-07; Protection Specialist, GS-301-07, 09, 11; Equipment Specialist (electronic), GS-1670-09, 11; Training Instuctor (law enforcement), GS-1712-05, 07, 09; Training Instructor (firearms), GS-1712-07; General Communications Operator, GS-392-05, 06; and Federal Protection Inspector, GS-083-11, assigned to the Federal Protective Service Division, Public Buildings Service, Region 3, General Services Administration, and by excluding from said unit employees classified as Supervisory Federal Protective Officer, GS-083-07 (Sergeant).

The unit description, as clarified, is as follows:

> All Federal Protective Officers, Guards, Contract Specialists, Protection Specialists, Equipment Specialists (electronic), Training Instructors (law enforcement and firearms), General Communications Operator and Federal Protection Inspectors assigned to the Federal Protective Service Division, Public Buildings Service, Region 3, General Services Administration, in the Washington-Metropolitan Area, excluding management officials, professional employees, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, and supervisors as defined in the Order.

SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY,
U.S. CUSTOMS SERVICE, REGION I,
BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS
A/SLMR No. 949

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by the National Treasury Employees Union and National Treasury Employees Union Chapter 181 (NTEU) alleging that the Respondent violated Sections 19(a)(1), (2) and (6) of the Order by refusing, contrary to past practice, to extend the assignment of certain named employees in the Toronto, Canada, Office, and/or grant requests from other named employees for transfers to specific locations in Region I, because the employees involved were active members of the Union.

The Administrative Law Judge recommended that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety. With respect to the alleged Section 19(a)(6) violation, he found insufficient evidence to establish the existence of a past practice of automatically granting extensions of assignment. Rather, he found that requests for extensions had been considered only when accompanied by a favorable recommendation from the employee's supervisor. The Administrative Law Judge further noted that, while it was true that in the past most requests for extensions had been granted, the employees in the past had been highly experienced and had been specially selected for assignment to the office, while the employees involved herein were newly hired and inexperienced employees.

With respect to the Section 19(a)(2) allegations, the Administrative Law Judge found that the evidence established that the decisions to extend the assignment or transfer the named employees were made prior to their union activity. Moreover, a comparison of the employees who were allowed to extend their assignments with the employees whose requests to extend were denied revealed no disparity attributable to union activity.

The Assistant Secretary adopted the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendations.

DECISION AND ORDER

On July 15, 1977, Administrative Law Judge Burton S. Sternburg issued his Recommended Decision and Order in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had not engaged in the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint and recommending that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety. Thereafter, the Complainant filed exceptions and a supporting brief, and the Respondent filed an answering brief, with respect to the Complainant's exceptions.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order and the entire record in the subject case, including the Complainant's exceptions and brief and the Respondent's answering brief, I hereby adopt the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendations.

DECISION AND ORDER

Statement of the Case

Pursuant to a complaint filed on June 16, 1976, under Executive Order 11491, as amended, by National Treasury Employees Union and NTEU Chapter 181, (hereinafter called the Union or NTEU), against the U.S. Customs Service, (hereinafter called the Respondent or Activity), a Notice of Hearing on Complaint was issued by the Regional Administrator for the New York, New York Region on January 26, 1977.

The complaint alleges that the Respondent violated Sections 19(a)(1), (2) and (6) of the Executive Order by virtue of its actions in refusing, contrary to past practice, to extend the tours of duty of certain named employees in Toronto, Canada, and/or grant requests from other named employees for transfers to specific locations in Region I, because the employees involved were active members of the Union. 1/

A hearing was held in the captioned matter on February 22, 23, and March 3, 1977, in Boston, Massachusetts. All parties were afforded full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and to introduce evidence bearing on the issues involved herein.

Upon the basis of the entire record, including my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following findings of fact, conclusions and recommendations.

Findings of Fact

Respondent, United States Customs Service, operates a preclearance station in Toronto, Canada, wherein it inspect travelers to the United States prior to the travelers boarding United States bound planes. The Toronto preclearance branch, at the time of the events underlying the instant complaint, had a total staff of 51, which included 44 inspectors, 6 supervisory inspectors and 1 branch chief.

Bureau of Customs Headquarters' Circular PER-5-PER, dated June 18, 1965, which is applicable to the Toronto pre-clearance operation, established a basic two-year tour of duty for all U.S. citizens employed by the Customs

1/ The employees involved are Donald Sokolowski, Marilyn Cohen, Charles Sorces, Martin Brucker, Robert Barnes, Robert Nardini, Robert Bigelow, Kevin Feely, William McGuire, Robert Wallace, Paul McCarty and William Broderick. Paul McCarty and William Broderick were not granted their first choice of ports. The remaining 10 named employees were denied their requests for two year extensions at Toronto.

Service and stationed in a foreign territory. The circular further provides that the basic two year tour of duty may be extended for an additional period of two years if the extension is determined to be in the best interest of the Bureau. The aforementioned policy is reiterated in the Personnel Form 50 of each inspector assigned to the Toronto pre-clearance center. According to a vacancy announcement dated 8/2/74 for the Toronto preclearance branch, "Assignments will be for a 2 year period, and may be extended for 1 additional period of 2 years. At expiration of tour, selectee will be reassigned within Region I."

Prior to 1974, due to the quasi-diplomatic nature of the customs inspectors working foreign soil, the Respondent attempted to, and in fact did, man the preclearance station in Toronto with experienced GS-9 inspectors. Due to the fact that the inspectors were tightly screened prior to selection and possessed experience in the inspection field most if not all inspectors had their requests for two year extensions of duty granted. The extensions were not automatic, however, and were granted only after a request by the inspector and a recommendation submitted to the Regional Office by the branch chief.

In early 1974 the staffs of the Canadian preclearance stations under the Respondent's jurisdiction were increased. Thus, the Montreal and Toronto preclearance branches were increased by 17 and 31 inspectors, respectively. Filling the aforementioned 48 newly created positions as well as those other positions in the preclearance centers which became vacant due to periodic rotation created a problem for Respondent since there were not enough inspectors then available in customs. Accordingly, Respondent was forced to abandon its policy of sending only experienced inspectors to Toronto and Montreal and resort to hiring inexperienced individuals from the Civil Service Commission Register. In late 1975 and early 1976 the initial two year tours of duty of the above mentioned newly hired inspectors were due to expire. Additionally, other seasoned inspectors who had already served two tours of duty in Toronto were up for reassignment to other ports within Region I. It is these reassignments and the refusal to extend the tours of duty of the various named employees in the Toronto preclearance center which is the basis of the instant complaint.

In late 1975 and early 1976 when the two year tours of duty of the aforementioned inspectors were about to expire the inspectors in the Toronto preclearance branch were instructed to submit their respective preferences as to extensions and reassignments to branch chief Casey. Mr. Casey would then forward the requests along with his recommendations concerning same to the Regional Personnel Office in Boston. Mr. Casey in making his recommendations regarding extensions and transfers relied upon the evaluations of each employee made by his supervisory staff.

Thus, the record reveals that on September 5, 1975, the six supervisors employed in the Toronto preclearance center held one of their usual monthly meetings wherein they generally discussed each inspector in the Toronto Region. At this time in anticipation of a scheduled visit from Regional Commissioner Griffin, they decided to, and did, evaluate each inspector from the standpoint recommending either an extension of duty at Toronto or a transfer to another duty station within Region I. The supervisors evaluated each inspector, reached agreement on whether or not the inspector should be recommended for a second tour in Toronto and conveyed their general consensus thereon to Mr. Casey later the same day. Subsequently, Mr. Casey, who agreed with all the recommendations, conveyed the information to Regional Commissioner Griffin in the first week of October 1975. In those instances where it was recommended that a particular inspector be transferred, the decision on where to transfer was left up to Mrs. Ramsey, Chief Personnel Staffing Specialist, who in turn followed the priorities established in weekly meetings in the Region, contact with District Directors and Mrs. Ramsey's own personal knowledge of the situation in the various offices in Region I.

Prior to September 1975 there was no union activity conducted in the Toronto preclearance station. Sometime in September 1975, Paul McCarty, William Broderick, Frank Mazzoni and Robert Barnes circulated a petition among the employees for purposes of forming a chapter of the National Treasury Employees Union. The petition was circulated on only one day. Upwards of 40 of the 44 inspectors in the Toronto preclearance center signed the petition establishing Chapter 181, NTEU.

On September 17, 1975, four inspectors, McCarty, Mazzoni, Dray and Broderick approached branch chief Casey and informed him that they had chartered Chapter 181 of the National Treasury Employees Union and that they were President, Vice-President, Secretary and Treasurer, respectively. There was no other significant union activity between September 17, 1975 and Regional Commissioner Griffins visit to the Toronto preclearance station in October 1975. In fact the only significant activity on behalf of the Union between September 1975 and January - February 1976, when the inspectors were beginning to receive word of their next assignments, amounted to discussions with management and grievances concerning the assignment of GS-5 and GS-7 inspectors to the pool of employees available for overtime assignments. 2/

During the course of the hearing Respondent presented a statistical analysis of the Toronto transfers and extensions during the period October 1975 through August 1976. This analysis which was introduced and accepted into evidence with no significant contest, revealed the following:

1. 39 inspectors were eligible for a second tour of duty.

2. 32 of the 39 inspectors requested a second tour of duty in Toronto.

3. 22 of the 32 inspectors requesting extensions were granted extensions of at least one year in Toronto.

4. 18 inspectors were reassigned.

5. 7 of the 18 inspectors requested reassignment, 10 of the 18 inspectors were reassigned after their request to extend had been denied, and 1 inspector, Mr. McCarty was not eligible for extension since he had already spent two tours in Toronto.

6. 7 of the 18 transferees were granted short term extensions of one to four months.

7. 5 of the 7 short term extensions were granted to

2/ Although it was alleged by Complainant that the assignment of GS-5 and GS-7 inspectors to the overtime pool would result in less overtime being worked by supervisory inspectors and a resultant diminution in wages, the record testimony failed to support such a conclusion. In fact the record indicates that the addition of GS-5 and GS-7 inspectors to the overtime pool would have no effect on the supervisors wages.

inspectors involved in the instant case.

8. 10 of the 18 transferees were transferred to their first or second choices within Region I.

With respect to the Union activity of the 12 alleged discriminatees, the record reveals that Mr. Sokolowski's only union activity consisted of signing the original petition in early September.

Charles Sorce's union activity consisted of joining the NTEU, attending union meetings and discussing the equalization of overtime with his fellow inspectors.

Ms. Cohen's union activity consisted of signing the organizing petition, signing another petition along with about forty other employees which authorized the Union to inspect their overtime records, and filing a number of grievances. 3/

Robert Bigelow, Kevin Feely, William McGuire and Robert Wallace's union activity appears to have consisted solely of joining the union.

William Broderick along with inspectors McCarty, Mazzoni and Dray became an officer of Chapter 181, NTEU shortly after its formation. In addition to aiding in the circulation of the original petition among the employees of the Respondent he participated in discussions with management concerning the allocation of overtime. Mr. Broderick also participated in the filing and processing of number of grievances between February and April 1976, subsequent to the time when most if not all employees had been notified of their transfers and reassignments. Mr. Mazzoni and Ms. Dray were granted second tours of duty in Toronto. Mr. McCarty who had already served two tours of duty in Toronto also was denied an extension and was subsequently transferred. Mr. Mazzoni on occasion participated in the processing or discussion of grievances with the Respondent.

3/ Although Ms. Cohen's request to extend in Toronto was subsequently refused, the record indicates that such refusal was unrelated to Mr. Casey's recommendation. Mr. Casey recommended that Ms. Cohen be extended. However, personnel officer Ramsey, following an interview with Ms. Cohen, overruled Mr. Casey's recommendation on the ground that she did not display the proper attitude. There was no probative evidence indicating that Ms. Ramsey was aware of Ms. Cohen's union affiliation.

The record is silent as to the Union status of Robert Nardini. In fact the only evidence indicating any relationship between Mr. Nardini and the Union evolves around a conversation between Mr. Broderick, Mr. McCarty and Mr. Casey concerning an overtime assignment involving Mr. Nardini. The record is not clear as to whether Mr. McCarty and Mr. Broderick were representing Mr. Nardini as union officers or just as friends. In any event, Mr. Casey's uncontroverted testimony indicates that when he later discussed the matter with Mr. Nardini, Mr. Nardini made it clear that he was not interested in union representation.

Martin Brucker was a member of Chapter 181, NTEU, contributed to its development and solicited the membership and participation of his fellow employees. Additionally Mr. Brucker filed several grievances and on at least one occasion attempted to review the Respondent's records for purposes of checking overtime assignments. One grievance involved an altercation with his supervisor and the other or remaining grievances concerned the participation of supervisors in overtime work.

Robert Barnes was a member of Chapter 181, NTEU, filed several grievances on his own behalf and on behalf of other employees, and served as Secretary of the Union during the latter part of his assignment in Toronto. According to Mr. Barnes, he spoke to management on several occasions concerning the overtime distribution policy at Toronto. Additionally, Mr. Barnes alleged that various supervisors had commented to him that his participation in union activities would affect his career with the U.S. Customs service. The supervisors involved credibly denied making any such remarks.

Paul McCarty was one of the initial supporters of Chapter 181, NTEU, and participated in the circulation of the August 1975 petition, and subsequently became president of Chapter 181 NTEU. Additionally, Mr. McCarty filed grievances on behalf of various employees in the unit. Mr. McCarty, at the time of the events involved herein was completing his second tour of duty in Toronto. Although Mr. McCarty had made it known that his first preference for a new assignment was Boston, he was eventually reassigned to Buffalo, New York. According to the credited testimony of Mary Ramsey, Chief of Personnel the reassignment was based solely on the priority needs of Respondent's respective districts.

With respect to the reassigment of the employees who were either denied an extension in Toronto or were not otherwise eligible for extension due to the fact that they had already served two terms, Regional Commissioner Griffin and Mary Ramsey, Chief of the Personnel Staffing Branch, both testified without contest that the reassignments were at all times based upon priorities established at weekly meetings of the District Directors and other supervisory personnel. While Respondent attempted to reassign employees in accordance with their listed preferences, Respondent was guided primarily by Regional priorities established weekly. The fact that a certain employee was not assigned to a particular preferential location instead of another employee was dependent solely upon the date of the assignment and the particular priority established for that week.

Discussion and Conclusions

Section 203.15 of the Regulations imposes upon the Complainant the burden of proving the allegations of the complaint by a preponderance of the evidence. The Complainant has failed in this endeavor.

With respect to the 19(a)(6) aspect of the complaint concerning the alleged unilateral change in a past practice of automatically granting a second two year extension of duty in Toronto, the evidence falls considerably short of establishing the existence of such past practice. In fact the testimony of the witnesses for both the Respondent and the Complainant indicate that extensions of duty at the Toronto preclearance center were at all times predicated upon a request for extension by the affected employee and a favorable recommendation from the branch chief. While it is true that in the past most, if not all requests for extensions in Toronto were granted, it must be noted in this regard that the employee complement in the past was always composed of experienced inspectors who had been thoroughly screened on the basis of past performance etc., prior to their initial assignments to Toronto. Accordingly, in these circumstances, barring some unforeseen event, it would be expected that a request to extend would be favorably considered by the branch chief. However, this was not the case in the latter part of 1975 and early 1976 when the newly hired inexperienced Toronto employees were completing their first and only tours of duty with the Customs Service.

With respect to the 19(a)(2) aspect of the complaint concerning the alleged refusal to extend and/or grant requests for transfers to specific locations because of the affected employees union activity, the record as a whole fails to support such a conclusion. Thus, the record establishes that the decisions and/or recommendations to extend or transfer the individual employees were made prior to the circulation of the petition which led to the establishment of the Union. Additionally, a comparison of the union activity of those employees who were allowed to extend with the union activity of those employees whose request to extend were denied reveals very little or no significant difference. Thus with respect to the Union officers, whose affiliation and activity were definitely known to management, two out of the three who were eligible for extension were allowed to extend. The fourth officer, Mr. McCarty was subsequently transferred to Buffalo. Although Mr. McCarty had expressed a preference for transfer to Boston, the record indicates that Boston was not a priority location at the time Mr. McCarty's tour of duty in Toronto was at an end.

As to a number of the other alleged discriminatees the record fails to disclose any significant union activity on their part which would cause the Respondent to single them out for transfer. This is particularly true in the case of inspectors Sorce, Bigelow, Feely, McGuire, Wallace and Cohen, whose activity consisted solely of joining the union like upwards of forty of the forty-four employees then employed in the Toronto preclearance center.

Accordingly, based upon the record as a whole, including the above mentioned considerations, I find insufficient evidence to sustain the allegations of the complaint.

Recommendation

It is hereby recommended that the complaint herein be dismissed in its entirety.

SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF AUTOMATED DATA SYSTEMS,
NEW ORLEANS COMPUTER CENTER
A/SLMR No. 950

This case involved an RA petition filed by the U.S. Department of Agriculture, Office of Automated Data Systems, New Orleans Computer Center (Activity) seeking a determination whether, subsequent to a reorganization of March 30, 1972, a bargaining unit represented exclusively by Local 2341, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO (AFGE) remained appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under the Order.

The Assistant Secretary found that as a consequence of the reorganization the character and scope of the certified unit had been substantially and materially altered, rendering it no longer appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under the Order. In this regard, the Assistant Secretary noted that, subsequent to the reorganization, the employees involved were transferred to the Office of Automated Data Systems (ADS), a new organizational entity, and that, thereafter, they were charged with a different mission, and were subject to new overall supervision, personnel policies and practices, and were functionally integrated with the new organizational entity. Further, the Assistant Secretary noted that in an earlier case involving essentially the same circumstances, petitioned for units of employees of individual computer centers of ADS were found inappropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition, as such units did not encompass employees who share a community of interest separate and distinct from other employees of the ADS, and could not reasonably be expected to promote effective dealings or efficiency of agency operations.

Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary ordered that the subject petition be dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER

This matter is before the Assistant Secretary pursuant to Regional Administrator for Labor-Management Services Cullen P. Keough's Order Transferring Case to the Assistant Secretary, dated June 2, 1977, in accordance with Section 206.5(a) of the Assistant Secretary's Regulations.

Upon consideration of the entire record in the subject case, including the stipulation of facts and accompanying exhibits, the Assistant Secretary finds:

On July 8, 1971, Local 2341, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, herein called AFGE, was certified as the exclusive representative for a unit of all employees assigned to the New Orleans Data Processing Center, herein called NODPC, and the New Orleans Commodity Office, herein called NOCO. 1/ On December 22, 1971, the parties executed a dues withholding agreement and, although the agreement was not renewed after it expired on December 22, 1972, dues withholding continued and is still in effect. 2/

The Activity filed the instant petition seeking, in essence, a determination by the Assistant Secretary whether, subsequent to a reorganization, the unit represented exclusively by the AFGE remained appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under the Order. Prior to March 30, 1972, the NODPC and the NOCO were organizational components of the Agricultural Stablization and Conservation Service, herein called ASCS. In this regard, the NOCO was responsible for the administration of the price support program for cotton, and the NODPC was responsible for all automated data processing services for the ASCS.

1/ At the time of certification there were 147 eligible employees in the unit.

2/ The parties never consummated a negotiated agreement for this unit.

Pursuant to a reorganization on March 30, 1972, the Office of Information Systems, herein called OIS, was established to provide a more efficient data processing system within the Department of Agriculture to meet management's information needs. To meet this objective, the data processing facilities at various Department of Agriculture offices throughout the country were consolidated into an integrated computer network under the direction of the newly created OIS. This consolidation involved the computer centers located at Washington, D.C.; New Orleans, Louisiana; Fort Collins, Colorado; and Kansas City, Missouri. 3/ All of the computer centers are tied into an integrated computer network which allows for an even distribution of work among the centers and assures sufficient back-up support in cases where an individual center may not be able to handle a project, or in the event of an equipment failure at any one of the centers.

On April 30, 1973, all automated data processing functions, personnel and property assigned to the NODPC were transferred to the OIS and the NODPC was redesignated as the New Orleans Computer Center, herein called NOCC. On September 30, 1973, the NOCO was abolished and its function was assumed by the commodity office at Kansas City, Missouri. In this latter connection, all of the 138 NOCO employees were separated from the rolls of the NOCO either through transfer or through retirement, and, of this number, approximately 55 were transferred to the NOCC. On March 3, 1974, the OIS was redesignated as the Office of Automated Data Systems, herein called ADS.

The Central Office of the ADS is in Washington, D.C., and includes the Office of the Director and the various branches which assist him in the operation of the ADS computer network. The Director, who is the chief executive officer of the ADS, exercises close control and has final authority over all aspects of the ADS operation, including all procurements and formal grievances. The Assistant Director of the ADS assists the Director and is directly responsible for the coordination of the operational policy and procedures among the computer centers and between the centers and other organizational elements of the ADS. In this connection, the Assistant Director is in constant contact with the computer centers and he meets monthly with the computer center Directors.

Each of the computer centers is headed by a Center Director who is responsible for the day-to-day operation of the center. The Center Director has the authority to initiate all personnel actions and has final authority for promotions and the hiring of employees GS-11 and below. Further, the Center Director handles grievances at the informal stages, approves travel, and reviews individual employee performance evaluations. The computer centers are divided into 3 branches: The Agency Liaison Branch, the Computer Resources Branch, and the System Engineering Branch. The work, skills, training and education of the ADS employees in all of the computer centers are similar and, except for minimal training in certain job categories resulting from slightly different or newer equipment, the record reveals that employees of any one center could perform similar work at any other center.

Because of the highly integrated nature of the ADS, there is substantial interchange between the employees of the various computer centers. In this regard, the evidence establishes that the ADS maintains an extensive cross-training program where employees from one center will be sent to another center for the purpose of specialized training in either new equipment and methods, or to correct a deficiency in the operations of the other center. Further, the ADS utilizes a "special teams" concept which involves employees from different centers being brought together to solve a particular problem. These projects may last from one week to several months in duration. Also, because of the nature of the work and the common problems experienced by the centers, there is frequent contact between the employees of the various centers in order to resolve mutual problems.

The ADS has its own Personnel Office which provides all personnel services for the computer centers in Washington, D.C. and Fort Collins. The personnel services for the Kansas City and New Orleans Computer Centers have been contracted out to other Department of Agriculture agencies under a special delegation. Although these other agencies perform the day-to-day personnel services for these centers, the record reveals that they do so under guidelines established by the ADS Office of Personnel, which retains final authority in the area of labor relations, formal grievances and promotions, and hiring above the GS-11 level. All employees are subject to ADS-wide merit promotion, reduction-in-force and Equal Employment Opportunity plans, and they enjoy the same fringe benefits and grievance procedures. All job vacancies are announced through the ADS Personnel Office and all vacancies above GS-11 must be approved there. Further, all job vacancies GS-7 and above, which include the majority of the jobs found in the computer centers, are posted on an ADS-wide basis.

Based on all the foregoing circumstances, I find that, as a result of the reorganization of March 30, 1972, the character and scope of the bargaining unit represented exclusively by the AFGE has been substantially and materially altered, rendering it no longer appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under Section 10 of the Order, as the unit no longer encompasses employees who share a clear and identifiable community of interest separate and distinct from other ADS employees, nor continues to promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. 4/ Thus, as noted above, as a consequence of the reorganization, the NOCO was abolished and its functions transferred to the commodity office in Kansas City, Missouri, and the NODPC, redesignated as the NOCC, was transferred, with its functions, personnel and equipment, to a new organizational entity, the ADS. As a component of the ADS, the NOCC was charged with a different mission, became subject to new overall supervision and new personnel policies and practices, and was functionally integrated with the new organizational entity. Moreover, in an earlier case involving essentially similar circumstances, 5/ the Assistant Secretary held that petitioned for units composed of employees of individual computer centers were not appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under the Order, finding that such units did not include employees who share a clear and identifiable community of interest separate and distinct from other employees of the ADS, and that such units could not reasonably be expected to promote effective dealings or efficiency of agency operations.

Accordingly, based on the above noted circumstances, and for the reasons set forth in Department of Agriculture, Office of Automated Data Systems, St. Louis, Missouri and Kansas City, Missouri, cited above, I find that, as a consequence of the 1972 reorganization, the subject bargaining unit no longer remains appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition under the Order, and I shall dismiss the instant petition.

SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY,
U.S. CUSTOMS SERVICE, REGION I,
BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS
A/SLMR No. 951

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by the National Treasury Employees Union (NTEU) alleging that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by failing to timely notify the NTEU of its intention to curtail annual leave at the Montreal Preclearance Station during the period of the 1976 Olympics, and thereby failing to afford the NTEU an opportunity to request bargaining on the impact of the decision on unit employees.

The Administrative Law Judge found that on September 17, 1975, a meeting was held between the Respondent and the NTEU's regional representatives at which time the Respondent indicated that curtailment of annual leave in its border districts, which included the Montreal Preclearance Station, was definite. Additionally, the Administrative Law Judge found that the local NTEU president was notified of the change on a date subsequent to this meeting, and, further, that there was no request made, nor evidence shown to indicate that the Respondent refused to bargain on the impact of the change. Accordingly, the Administrative Law Judge recommended dismissal of the complaint.

Noting particularly the absence of exceptions, the Assistant Secretary adopted the findings, conclusions and recommendation of the Administrative Law Judge, and ordered that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety.

DECISION AND ORDER

On August 25, 1977, Administrative Law Judge William B. Devaney issued his Recommended Decision and Order in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had not engaged in the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint and recommending that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety. No exceptions were filed to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order and the entire record in the subject case, and noting particularly that no exceptions were filed, I hereby adopt the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions, 1/ and recommendation.

RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

Statement of the Case

This case arises under Executive Order 11491, as amended (hereinafter also referred to as the "Order"). It was initiated by a charge filed on, or about, March 15, 1976, and a complaint which was filed on June 1, 1976 (Asst. Sec. Exh. 1), which alleged violations of Sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order as as the result of exclusion of annual leave for the period of July 11, 1976, through August 21, 1976, during which period the summer Olympics were to be held in Montreal, for Customs employees at the Montreal Preclearance Branch, Durval International Airport, Montreal Canada, without prior notice to Complainant, National Treasury Employees Union (hereinafter also referred to as "NTEU"). A Notice of Hearing issued February 9, 1977 (Asst. Sec. Exh. 2), pursuant to which a hearing was duly held before the undersigned on March 22, 1977, in Boston, Massachusetts.

All parties were represented, were afforded full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and to introduce evidence bearing on the issues involved herein. At the close of the hearing May 6, 1977, was fixed, at the request of the parties, as the date for the filing of briefs and April 5, 1977, was fixed as the date for submission by Respondent of leave application forms for calendar year 1976 as used in three ports within the Ogdensburg, New York District of Customs. On April 4, 1977, Respondent, as requested, filed and served the leave chart used in the Port of Massena, New York, in 1976, which counsel advised was the same form used by the Ports of Champlain and Rouses Point, New York; however, counsel advised that the Port Director had been unable to locate the actual forms used at the Ports of Champlain and Rouses Point in 1976. A copy of the form used in calendar year 1977, which, except for the change of date, was identical to the form used at the Ports of Champlain and Rouses Point in 1976, was also submitted. I hereby incorporate as part of the record counsel's letter dated April 4, 1977, which I have marked for identification as Asst. Sec. Exh. 4, together with Attachments A and B.

On April 26, 1977, at the joint request of the parties and for good cause shown the time for filing of briefs was extended to June 6, 1977, and extremely helpful briefs, timely filed, have been received from both parties and have been carefully considered. Upon the basis of the entire record, including my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following findings, conclusions and recommendation:

PRELIMINARY MATTER

In its brief, Respondent asserts that there was no obligation to notify the Complainant "since there was no evidence produced at the hearing indicating that the Complainant was the exclusive representative of the Respondent's employees." (Res. Brief, p. 6, ¶ II).

There is no question, as Respondent states, that the obligation imposed by Section 11(a) of the Order attaches only when a labor organization has been accorded exclusive recognition and that the burden of proof rests with the Complainant, 29 C.F.R. § 203.15; but the record does not support Respondent's assertion that there was no evidence produced at the hearing indicating that NTEU was the exclusive representative of Respondent's employees.

Mr. Thomas A. Gleason, Chief of the Labor and Employees Relations Branch, Boston Region, United States Customs Service testified,

> "Q. Why were you going to notify the union at this point? [September 8, 1975]
>
> "A. We were well aware of our obligations under the Executive Order to give the exclusive representative changes in policies, plans, the like.
>
> "Q. Under the Executive Order, what is the level of recognition under the U.S. Customs Service?
>
> "A. In the U.S. Customs Service the level of recognition is at the Regional level, the Boston Region.
>
> "Q. Did you indicate Mr. Montpelier was a Regional Officer?
>
> "A. Mr. Montpelier was the Regional Officer. Thus, he was the, you might say, proper representative for the Union at that point." (Tr. 1-57) 1/

By letter dated September 9, 1975, Mr. William J. Lawless, Director, Personnel Management, wrote Mr. Melvin Monpelier, Jr., Vice President, Region 1, National Customs Services Association, in part, as follows:

> "This will confirm your telephone conversation with Mr. T.A. Gleason on September 8, 1975. In accordance with Article VII of the Basic Agreement between the Regional Commissioner and the National Customs Service Association, it is proposed that a meeting between the parties take place at 1 p.m. on September 17, 1975 ...
>
> "The following agenda items are proposed by the Regional Commissioner for discussion at that time:
>
> 1. Olympics
> * * * *" (Res. Exh. 1)

Mr. Montpelier responded by letter dated September 11, 1975, on the letterhead of the National Customs Service Association which under the printed letterhead had the typed statement "AFFILIATED WITH THE NATIONAL TREASURY EMPLOYEES UNION" and Mr. Montpelier after agreeing to the proposed meeting and agendum and stating that "In accordance with Article VII of the Basic Agreement, it is expected that two representatives in addition to myself will be in attendance for the union at subject meeting" and signed as "National Vice President, NCSA/NTEU, Region I" (Res. Exh. 2). See, also, Mr. Montpelier's letter dated November 23, 1975 (Res. Exh. 3). The summary of the meeting of September 17, 1975, prepared by Respondent, is titled,

> "SUMMARY OF MEETING BETWEEN NATIONAL CUSTOMS SERVICE ASSOCIATION (AFFILIATED WITH NTEU) AND THE REGIONAL COMMISSIONER, REGION I, U.S. CUSTOMS SERVICE ON SEPTEMBER 17, 1975" (Comp. Exh. 1)

The first paragraph of the Summary provided, in part,

> "... The agenda items had been proposed by Management in correspondence ... in accordance with Article VII of the current agreement between Region I and NCSA."

Mr. Leo Grachow, an employee of Respondent and stationed at the Montreal Preclearance Branch since 1974, testified that he was elected President of the Montreal Chapter of National Customs Service Association (NCSA) in April, 1974; that in August, 1975, NCSA merged with the National Treasury Employees Union (NTEU); and that he continued to serve as Chapter President of NTEU until his term expired on January 25, 1977. The record shows correspondence from Mr. Grachow as President of NTEU Chapter 148 to Mr. William L. Thornton, District Director (Comp. Exhs. 2 and 3) and is replete with repeated instances of meetings, notices, etc.

1/ The reporter does not indicate any reason for the unorthodox method of numbering the pages of the transcript with the number "1" preceding the actual page number and there is a single transcript volume.

involving first NCSA and later NTEU and Respondent's Branch Chief of the Montreal Preclearance operation and Respondent's District Director for the Vermont (St. Albans) District. Contrary to Respondent's assertion, the record is clear that NCSA was accorded exclusive recognition by Respondent; that there was a collective bargaining agreement between NCSA and Respondent; that NCSA merged with NTEU; that Respondent was aware of the affiliation of NCSA with NTEU; and that Respondent recognized and dealt with NTEU as the exclusive bargaining representative pursuant to the Order. Moreover, Respondent did not challenge or dispute Complainant's status as exclusive bargaining representative at the hearing and, as the record clearly and affirmatively shows that NCSA merged with NTEU and that NTEU was accepted by Respondent as the successor representative and was accorded recognition as the exclusive bargaining representative, Respondent's assertion is rejected and I find that NTEU is the recognized exclusive bargaining representative for Region I.

FINDINGS

1. On September 8, 1975, Mr. Gleason called Mr. Montpelier with regard to several agenda items and in particular voiced the Regional Commissioner's concern about the planning surrounding the Olympics and the impact it was going to have on operations and personnel to handle the anticipated heavy volume of traffic. Mr. Lawless confirmed Mr. Gleason's conversation by his letter of September 9, 1975, to Mr. Montpelier which set forth the agenda items proposed by the Regional Commissioner, Mr. Griffin, as follows:

"1. Olympics
"2. Non-Reimbursable Overtime" (Res. Exh. 1)

Mr. Montpelier agreed to the agendum by his letter dated September 11, 1975 (Res. Exh. 2); the meeting was held, as scheduled, on September 17, 1975, with Messrs. Montpelier and Sutin (Chairman of Complainant's Wage & Hour Committee) in attendance for NTEU and Messrs. William J. Griffin, Regional Commissioner, John DeRomoet, Regional Counsel, Lawless and Gleason in attendance for Respondent.

2. Following the meeting of September 17, 1975, Mr. Gleason prepared a Summary (Comp. Exh. 1) which was mailed to Mr. Montpelier. By letter dated November 23, 1975, Mr. Montpelier advised Mr. Lawless that Complainant was "in basic accord with the draft of the summary" (Res. Exh. 3) and requested that Complainant, as the Exclusive Representative, be furnished with four copies of the summary for dissemination within the Region.

3. On their return from the Boston meeting, Messrs. Montpelier and Sutin reviewed the meeting with Mr. Grachow in Montreal. Mr. Grachow testified that he was told by Messrs. Montpelier and Sutin that annual leave for Montreal had been touched on at the meeting; that they reported that Mr. Griffin had stated that he had not received any budgetary indications from Washington as to how he would be staffing for the Olympics; that Mr. Griffin had stated there was a possibility that leave might have to be curtailed; but when they knew more definitely the Union would be consulted. Mr. Grachow testified that he received a copy of the minutes (summary) (Comp. Exh. 1) approximately at the end of October and that the minutes reflected what he had been told by Messrs. Montpelier and Sutin.

4. The Summary stated, in part, as follows:

> "ITEM 1. Summer Olympics, Montreal, 1976, and attendant personnel considerations.
> "The Regional Commissioner announced that it may be necessary to curtail Annual Leave for all Regional personnel during the five week period in July and August of 1976 because of increased operational commitments in connection with the Summer Olympics in Montreal. Implementation of such a plan for the border Districts is quite definite. Mr. Griffin added, however, that Customs planning and funding in connection with the Olympics had not been finalized. Once firm guidance has been formulated, management will request another meeting with the exclusive representative to discuss definitive plans. Management acknowledged the desirability of an early decision regarding the use of Annual Leave in 1976. ..." (Comp. Exh. 1).

5. Mr. Hubert Papelian, Branch Chief of the Montreal Preclearance Operation, Montreal, Canada, which is located in the Vermont District for which Mr. William Thornton is District Director, and which is part of Region 1, testified that he had had meetings with Regional and District officials; that there was no decision on augmentation of manpower; and that, in the absence of augmentation, he would have to go with existing manpower. Mr. Papelian further testified that the normal procedure in Montreal is to distribute leave applications the first week in December; that on November 25, 1975, he had a supervisory staff meeting and, as no information relative to additional funds or manpower had been received, an administrative decision was made not to schedule leave for the weeks of July 11 through August 21; that the following day, November 26, 1975, Mr. Grachow came to the office on another matter and that he stated to Mr. Grachow,

> "Leo, I want to tell you we are not going to schedule leave during the Olympic period until such time as we know what our manpower situation will be. At that time we will open it up for scheduling."
>
> "Q. What was his reaction?
>
> "A. Mr. Grachow concurred that this was an excellent idea because there was no sense of scheduling and having to cancel it.
>
> "Q. Did he offer objection to your non-scheduling of leave?
>
> "A. None whatsoever. As I stated earlier, he thought it was an excellent idea. I also told him at the same time, I notified him that we were doing this, that there would be a general staff meeting when all inspectors would be informed as to what our plans were currently relative to leave." (Tr. 1-110)

6. Mr. Grachow testified that he did not recall a meeting with Mr. Papelian on November 26, 1975; and stated that the first indication he had that leave would not be scheduled during the Olympics was when he received the memorandum of December 2, 1975.

7. Mr. Papelian issued a memorandum on December 2, 1975, addressed to all Inspectors (Res. Exh. 4) with an attached Application for Annual Leave for 1976 on which the weeks July 11 through August 21 were blocked out with the notation "no leave will be scheduled" (Res. Exh. 5).

8. Also on December 2, 1975, Mr. Papelian issued a further memorandum to all Inspectors announcing a general staff meeting to be held on December 4 and 5 to discuss, inter alia "4. Annual Leave". Mr. Grachow was scheduled to attend the session on December 4, 1975 (Res. Exh. 6).

9. Mr. Grachow testified that he did not recall any discussion of the non-scheduling of leave during the Olympics at any staff meeting in December.

10. Mr. Grachow testified that after he received his leave schedule and people came to him and asked about it he approached Mr. Papelian who told him that he was the officer in charge and could institute any policy change he wished and he (Grachow) could go to the District Director, Mr. Thornton, if he wished to challenge his action. Mr. Papelian categorically denied having made any such statement and stated that he had no discussion with Mr. Grachow after November 26, 1975, about the non-scheduling of annual leave until 1977 when advised by the Regional Office that this matter was scheduled for hearing; that, being under the impression the matter had been withdrawn when leave had been scheduled during the July-August period, he contacted Mr. Grachow, who, he stated, shared the same impression, but Mr. Grachow commented, "maybe the Union wants to pursue it further because you did not meet and confer" whereupon Mr. Papelian testified that he reminded Mr. Grachow that "I had told him I was going to block out this leave until such time as I heard what my manpower situation would be", to which Mr. Grachow responded, "Do you think this constituted meeting and conferring""; that he (Papelian) stated "I do" and, with that, Mr. Grachow walked away.

11. Mr. Grachow testified that he had asked Mr. Papelian in December, 1975, if this was final, "if this was to be the final rendering of our annual leave decision for the year"; that he had called the District Director, Mr. Thornton, in late December, 1975, and had asked to sit down and discuss why this was done, what our alternatives were, and whether it was a definite policy; that Mr. Thornton stated that because of the Christman holiday he was extremely busy but would get back to Mr. Grachow in January. Mr. Grachow stated that Mr. Thornton did not get back to him in January; but in his letter dated February 6, 1976, to Mr. Thornton, Mr. Grachow refers to an informal discussion with Mr. Thornton in late January, 1976 (Comp. Exh. 2).

12. Mr. Grachow, and other representatives of NTEU, met with District Director Thornton and Mr. Papelian on February 5, 1976, and on April 15, 1976. As to the April 15, 1976, meeting, Mr. Grachow stated:

> "As to your question as to whether this was resolved or not, all that was resolved was that I was now meeting with the District Director to negotiate a plan that he had put into effect. But it was not the finalized definitive plans that Mr. Griffin had stated would be forthcoming concerning the Olympics." (Tr. 1-34)

Mr. Grachow stated that neither in the January discussion or February 5, 1976, meeting with Mr. Thornton did he discuss annual leave.

13. Mr. Papelian testified that at the February 5, 1976, meeting Mr. Grachow asked Mr. Thornton if he had received any word relative to additional manpower during the Olympic period and that Mr. Thornton told him he had received no additional information. Mr. Papelian further stated that the same inquiry was made by Mr. Grachow, or by another NTEU representative, at the April 15, 1976, meeting and that Mr. Thornton had given the same response.

14. The Ogdensburg District (Ports of Champlain, Rouses Point and Massena) did not restrict the scheduling of annual leave during the weeks of July and August 1976.

15. In the first part of June, 1976, Mr. Papelian was advised that he would have additional personnel and he, in turn, informed Mr. Grachow that leave would be allowed during the July-August period and would be awarded, in accordance with established practice, on the basis of seniority. There is no dispute that leave was, in fact, scheduled during the July-August period.

CONCLUSIONS

There is no dispute that the decision not to schedule annual leave during the Olympic period was a reserved right of management under the Order, Department of The Navy, Marine Corps Supply Center, Barstow, California, A/SLMR No. 692 (1976); indeed, both at the hearing and in its Brief, Complainant made it clear that it "... does not contend that the agency must negotiate its decision not to schedule annual leave during the Olympic period of 1976 ... Sections 11(b) and 12(b) shields Customs from the duty to negotiate such decision." (Complainant's Brief, p. 9). Nor is there any dispute that "... even if a particular decision to change working conditions is not negotiable under the Order, agencies remain obligated to inform the union prior to a change in working conditions, and negotiate in good faith if requested, regarding the impact of the decision on adversely affected employees. Army and Air Force Exchange Service, A/SLMR No. 454 (1974); Pennsylvania Army National Guard,

A/SLMR No. 475 (1975); Boston Air Force Base, A/SLMR No. 261 (1973); National Labor Relations Board, A/SLMR No. 246 (1973)." (Complainant's Brief, p. 9); and Respondent fully concurs (Respondent's Brief, p. 6).

The sole question is whether Respondent gave notice to NTEU prior to implementation of its decision and whether it afforded NTEU an opportunity to negotiate, upon request, regarding the impact and implementation of that decision. For reasons set forth below, I conclude that Respondent did give NTEU notice prior to implementation of its decision not to schedule leave during the Olympic period at its Montreal Preclearance Branch and that Respondent did not fail or refuse to bargain with regard to impact or implementation of that decision.

Regional Commissioner Griffin on September 17, 1975, gave notice to Complainant that,

> "... it may be necessary to curtail Annual Leave for all Regional personnel during a five week period in July and August of 1976 because of ... the Summer Olympics in Montreal. Implementation of such a plan for the border Districts is quite definite. . . " (Comp. Exh. 1) Emphasis supplied.)

At this point, September 17, 1975, there was no question that Respondent had given adequate notice to NTEU of its definite intention to implement the curtailment of Annual Leave in the border Districts, notwithstanding that Commissioner Griffin made it clear that application of such curtailment of Annual Leave to other Regional personnel was not definite; that Customs planning and funding in connection with the Olympics had not been finalized; and that once firm guidance has been formulated, Respondent would meet further with Complainant to discuss definitive plans.

Complainant emphasized the portion "it may be necessary to curtail Annual Leave for all Regional personnel"; "planning and funding ... had not been finalized"; and "Once firm guidance has been formulated, management will request another meeting ... to discuss definitive plans" and ignored the statement of Commissioner Griffin that "Implementation of such a plan for the border Districts is quite definite." While Commissioner Griffin gave notice on September 17, 1975, that implementation of the curtailment of Annual Leave for the border District was quite definite, in point of fact, the plan was not implemented for the border Districts which gave credence to Complainant's assertion that the September 17, 1975, notice was merely notice of a possible action.

Assuming that the notice given by Respondent on September 17, 1975, was, or became, simply notice of possible action, nevertheless, the notification given by Mr. Papelian to Mr. Grachow on November 26, 1975, that, was a clear, direct and unequivocal notice by Respondent's Branch Chief, Mr. Papelian, to the President of Complainant's Montreal Chapter, Mr. Grachow, that annual leave would not then be scheduled during the Olympic period. The fact that this decision was made by the Branch Chief of the Montreal Preclearance Operation did not make the decision any less a reserved right of management. Whatever the impact of the Olympics on operations elsewhere, there could be no doubt that the summer Olympics would directly increase the operational commitments of Respondent in Montreal. Accordingly, Mr. Papelian, faced with the necessity of determining the personnel by which such operations were to be conducted, notified Complainant that leave would not be scheduled for employees at the Montreal Preclearance Operations until such time as it was known what their manpower situation would be. I fully credit Mr. Papelian's testimony that he did give notice to Mr. Grachow on November 26, 1975, of this decision. Not only was Mr. Papelian a convincing and credible witness but his testimony was wholly consistent with all other testimony and evidence. By contrast, Mr. Grachow's testimony on this and immediately related matters was not convincing. Indeed, Mr. Grachow's denial of his acquiescence to, if not agreement with, Mr. Papelian's notification on November 26, 1975, is belied by his failure on December 2, 1975, when he received the memorandum with the attached application for annual leave; on the same date when he received the memorandum with respect to the General Staff meeting; or on December 4, 1975, when he attended the General Staff Meeting, to mention the subject. I do not, therefore, credit Mr. Grachow's testimony and find, as credibly testified by Mr. Papelian, that notice of the decision to curtail annual leave at the Montreal Preclearance Operation was given to Complainant on November 26, 1975.

> "... we are not going to schedule leave during the Olympic period until such time as we know what our manpower situation will be. At that time we will open it up for scheduling."

Nor do I credit Mr. Grachow's testimony that after he received his leave schedule he approached Mr. Papelian who told him, in effect, that he could institute any policy changes he liked and if Mr. Grachow didn't like it he could go to the District Director. First, Mr. Papelian categorically denied having made any such statement. Second, Mr. Grachow stated, at one point, that he told fellow Inspectors that this was "solely a management implementation policy" which strongly suggests that Mr. Grachow accepted this action as implementation of the policy announced by Commissioner Griffin on September 17, 1975. Third, while Mr. Grachow stated that he told District Director Thornton in a telephone conversation during the Christmas holiday period that he wanted to discuss why this (curtailment of annual leave) had been done, Mr. Grachow insisted that he did not discuss the matter with Mr. Thornton in their informal discussion in January, 1976, or at the February 5, 1976, meeting. Fourth, the asserted response by Mr. Papelian is wholly at odds with Mr. Grachow's description of negotiations with Mr. Papelian on other matters. Accordingly, I fully credit Mr. Papelian's denial.

From all of the testimony and evidence I conclude that Mr. Grachow was given notice of the curtailment of annual leave on November 26, 1975; that with knowledge of the proposed implementation Mr. Grachow did not request bargaining on impact of the decision not to schedule leave during the Olympic period until such time as the manpower situation was known; and that at the February 5, and April 15, 1976, meeting Mr. Grachow, or another representative of NTEU, asked Mr. Thornton if he had received any word relative to additional manpower and when informed by Mr. Thornton that he had received no additional information the matter was dropped. I further conclude that Mr. Grachow's only expressed concern was to insure Complainant's right to participate in discussion of definitive plans. Thus, Mr. Grachow stated,

> "So when I wrote Mr. Thornton after our annual leave had been curtailed, it was apparent to me that either there were definitive plans or there were not definitive plans. If there were definitive plans, there definitely should have been a meeting ..." (Tr. 1-33)

* * * *

> "As to your question as to whether this was resolved or not, all that was resolved was that I was now meeting with the District Director to negotiate a plan that he had put into effect. But it was not the finalized definitive plans that Mr. Griffin had stated would be forthcoming concerning the Olympics." (Tr. 1-34)

Consistent with this concern, at least at the February 5 and April 15, meetings, inquiry was made of Mr. Thornton as to whether he had received any word relative to additional manpower and when Mr. Thornton stated that he had not, the matter was dropped. Certainly the record is devoid of any credible evidence or testimony that Respondent ever refused to negotiate with regard to the impact of the curtailment of annual leave. Moreover, when Mr. Papelian was advised in the first part of June, 1976, that he would have additional personnel, he informed Mr. Grachow that leave would be allowed during the July-August period and would be awarded, in accordance with established practice, on the basis of seniority.

For all of the foregoing reasons, I find that Respondent did not violate its bargaining obligations under the Order and shall recommend that the Complaint be dismissed in its entirety. UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR
ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS
SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

VETERANS ADMINISTRATION HOSPITAL,
SHERIDAN, WYOMING
A/SLMR No. 952

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1219, AFL-CIO (AFGE) alleging that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) when it refused to bargain about the establishment of a new tour of duty in the nursing service. The AFGE contended, in this regard, that the establishment of the new tour was essentially a change of work hours over which the Respondent had an obligation to bargain. The Respondent, on the other hand, considered the establishment of the new tour to be within the ambit of Section 11(b) of the Order. The Respondent noted its obligations to bargain concerning the impact and implementation of the new tour of duty, but contended that it had met its obligations in this regard by giving adequate notice to the AFGE regarding the establishment of the tour.

The Administrative Law Judge noted first that the establishment of the new tour of duty herein was required by the mission of the Respondent within the meaning of Section 11(b) of the Order. While he found that some changes in tours of duty must be negotiated, the Administrative Law Judge cited AFGE Local 1940 and Plum Island Animal Disease Laboratory, Department of Agriculture, Greenport, N.Y., 1 FLRC 101, FLRC No. 71A-11, as holding that there was no requirement to negotiate with respect to the number or duration of work shifts that constitute an essential and integral part of staffing patterns necessary to perform the work of the agency. Therefore, he concluded that as the mission of the Respondent dictated the establishment of the additional tour of duty, the determination with respect to the tour of duty was integrally related to and determinative of the staffing pattern required and, thus, was a management right within the meaning of Section 11(b) of the Order.

The Administrative Law Judge also agreed with the Respondent that it had afforded the AFGE a reasonable opportunity to meet and confer concerning the impact and implementation of its decision to establish the tour. Therefore, he concluded that the Respondent did not violate the Executive Order in this regard.

The Assistant Secretary, noting specifically that the establishment of the new shift was integrally related to and determinative of the Respondent's staffing pattern, adopted the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions, and recommendation. Accordingly, he ordered that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety.

DECISION AND ORDER

On July 18, 1977, Administrative Law Judge Randolph D. Mason issued his Recommended Decision and Order in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had not engaged in the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint and recommending that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety. Thereafter, the Complainant filed exceptions and a supporting brief with respect to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order and the entire record in the subject case, including the Complainant's exceptions and supporting brief, I hereby adopt the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions, and recommendation.

Under the particular circumstances of this case, I agree with the Administrative Law Judge's conclusion that the establishment of a new tour of duty herein, which was dictated by the mission of the Respondent, was integrally related to and determinative of the Respondent's staffing pattern and, therefore, was a matter exempted from the obligation to bargain under Section 11(b) of the Order. 1/

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the complaint in Case No. 61-3226(CA) be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

Preliminary Statement

This proceeding was heard in Sheridan, Wyoming, on May 24, 1977, and arises under Executive Order 11491, as amended. Pursuant to the Regulations of the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations (hereinafter called the Assistant Secretary), a Notice of Hearing on Complaint was issued on April 8, 1977, with reference to alleged violations of sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order.

This case was initiated by a complaint filed on August 23, 1976, by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1219 (hereinafter the "Union"). The complaint alleged that the Veterans Administration Hospital (hereinafter the "respondent") engaged in violations of sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order. The issues presented for decision are as follows:

(1) Was respondent required to negotiate with the Union regarding the establishment of an additional tour of duty from 9:30 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. for Nursing Service employees?

(2) Did the respondent violate the Order by failing to meet and confer with the Union regarding the impact and implementation of the decision to establish the additional tour of duty?

(3) Was the complaint filed within nine months of the occurrence of the alleged unfair labor practice as required by section 203.2(b)(3) of the Regulations of the Assistant Secretary?

At the hearing, all parties were represented and were afforded full opportunity to be heard, adduce evidence, examine and cross-examine witnesses, and argue orally. Thereafter, both parties filed briefs which have been duly considered. Upon the entire record in this case, from my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, and from all of the testimony and evidence adduced at the hearing, I make the following findings, conclusions, and recommendations.

Findings of Fact

At all times relevant to this proceeding, the Union was the exclusive representative of various nonprofessional

Nursing Service employees at the Veterans Administration Hospital, Sheridan, Wyoming. The negotiated agreement between the Union and the respondent pertaining to the period in question is dated February 14, 1974.

During 1976, Hugh A. McGeowan was the chief of the respondent's Nursing Service. As such, he was responsible for all nursing care of the patients in the hospital. One of his duties was to ensure that all wards were adequately covered by Nursing Service personnel in order to properly care for the patients. During the spring of 1976, the following tours of duty (shifts) were in effect for all Nursing Service personnel:

12:00 p.m. to 8:00 a.m.
6:00 a.m. to 2:30 p.m.
7:30 a.m. to 4:00 p.m.
1:30 p.m. to 10:00 p.m.
3:30 p.m. to 12:00 p.m.

During this period of time, it became clear to McGeowan that the wards would be more adequately covered by the addition of a 9:30 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. shift. Although he testified that there were many reasons for establishing this new tour of duty, he primarily wanted to increase the number of employees working between the hours of 4:00 p.m. and 6:00 p.m., and thereby improve nursing assistance to hospitalized veterans prior to and during the evening meal. The need for more employees during these hours for this purpose was brought to McGeowan's attention by a head nurse who was responsible for a large number of patients who were unable to feed or dress themselves.

On May 4, 1976, McGeowan wrote a memorandum to Floyd E. Burrows, president of the local Union, stating that he intended to ask the Hospital Director for approval to establish a new 9:30 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. tour of duty. He explained that the new shift would provide better dinner coverage for the hospitalized veterans and would enable the nurses in the outpatient department to see veterans whose jobs necessitate appointments between the hours of 4:00 p.m. and 6:00 p.m. He asked Burrows for comments by May 19, 1976, and stated that he would like to institute the new tour as soon as possible after that date.

Burrows responded in a memorandum dated May 6, 1976, that he had no objection to the new tour as long as it did not affect the bargaining unit employees. He also stated, in part, that the employees were already dissatisfied with the hospital's practice of reassigning them to different established shifts (and implied that the establishment of an additional tour of duty would aggravate this problem). He admitted, however, that the underlying cause for the hospital's problems was an insufficient number of employees to adequately cover the wards.

By memorandum dated May 10, 1976, McGeowan told Burrows that the determination of tours of duty is a management right under the Executive Order. However, he asked Burrows to provide him with "further clarification" of the impact that a new tour of duty would have on the members of the bargaining unit.

Representatives from the Union and the respondent met on June 8, 1976, to discuss the proposed 9:30 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. tour of duty. The Union was represented by Burrows and the chief steward; McGeowan and a personnel officer attended the meeting on behalf of the respondent. McGeowan explained to the Union why the new tour of duty was needed. The Union simply objected to the new tour and would not discuss its impact on the employees or its implementation. On June 11, 1976, Burrows stated that "since management wants to initiate this change in an established tour of duty, we feel it the hospital's obligation to ask for reopening of the Contract." He further stated that if the respondent made a unilateral decision, the Union would consider filing an unfair labor practice complaint.

On June 18, 1976, McGeowan wrote a memorandum to Burrows in which he stated that he was planning to submit a memorandum to the Hospital Director requesting his approval for the establishment of the new 9:30 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. tour of duty for Nursing Service. He stated that he would appreciate receiving any comments Burrows may have on the impact this change might have on members of his units by July 6, 1976, and that he would like to institute the change as soon as possible after that date. The Union responded by memorandum dated June 28, 1976, that its position had not changed.

On July 19, 1976, McGeowan officially requested and received approval from the Hospital Director for the establishment of the new 9:30 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. tour of duty for all Nursing Service personnel. A copy of the memorandum of approval was sent to the Union. On July 21, 1976, McGeowan informed the Union by memorandum that the new tour of duty would be established effective August 15, 1976. The subject of the memorandum was "Establishment of an additional Tour of Duty." It stated as follows:

> 1. I have carefully considered your views on the porposed (sic) change in Tour of Duty as requested in my memorandum dated June 18, 1976, to you. Although you objected to the establishment of this tour of duty (9:30 a.m. [to] 6:00 p.m.), you did not make any comments regarding its impact or method of implementation. We maintain that the contract does not need to be re-opened (sic) in order to establish this additional tour of duty and have no intention to request reopening of the contract.
>
> 2. This Tour of Duty is being established to carry out the mission of this hospital and to provide more effective patient care.
>
> 3. This additional Tour of Duty will be established effective August 15, 1976. As stated previously to you, I am still willing to discuss the impact of this additional Tour of Duty with you.

The Union did not respond to this memorandum. McGeowan's decision to establish the new shift effective August 15, 1976, constituted a final decision which was never revoked. On August 13, 1976, however, he informed the Union that he was still willing to meet with respect to the impact and method of implementation.

The Union filed its complaint against the respondent on August 23, 1976. The complaint stated, in part, that "no further meetings have been set with management since we have their final rejection based on their contention that we may only negotiate on the impact of their decision."

The names of the first employees to be assigned to the 9:30 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. shift were posted in the hospital in the early part of September, 1976. Although it appears that only two employees were assigned to this shift during 1976, the new shift was more frequently used by the respondent during 1977 up to the time of the hearing on May 24, 1977.

Conclusions of Law

1. The first issue for consideration is whether the respondent violated sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Executive Order by refusing to negotiate with the complainant Union with respect to the establishing of an additional tour of duty (shift) from 9:30 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. Respondent contends that it had the right to establish the new shift without being required to negotiate pursuant to section 11(b) of the Order. Section 11(b), in pertinent part, provides:

> However, the obligation to meet and confer does not include matters with respect to the mission of an agency; ... and the numbers, types, and grades of positions or employees assigned to an organizational unit, work project or tour of duty ....

Respondent's decision to establish an additional tour of duty effective August 15, 1976, directly concerned the mission of the agency within the meaning of section 11(b). Although some changes in tours of duty must be negotiated,1/ an agency is not required to negotiate with respect to the number of work shifts, and the duration of shifts, when they constitute an essential and integral part of the "staffing patterns" necessary to perform the work of the agency. AFGE Local 1940 and Plum Island Animal Disease Laboratory, Dept. of Agriculture, Greenport, N.Y., FLRC No. 71A-11 (1971). In another case,2/ the Federal Labor Relations Council stated:

> ... [A] proposal relating to the basic workweek and hours of duty of employees is not excepted from an agency's bargaining obligation under section 11(b) unless, based on the special circumstances of a particular case ..., the proposal is integrally related to and consequently determinative of the staffing patterns of the agency, i.e., the numbers, types, and grades of positions or employees assigned to an organizational unit, work project or tour of duty of the agency.

1/ Southeast Exchange Region of the Army and Air Force Exchange Service, Rosewood Warehouse, Columbia, South Carolina, A/SLMR No. 656.

2/ American Federation of Government Employees, National Joint Council of Food Inspection Locals and Office of the Administrator, Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service, U.S. Department of Agriculture, FLRC No. 73A-36 (Supplemental Decision, 1975) (Report No. 73).

In the present case, the mission of the agency dictated the necessity of establishing the additional tour of duty. Some of the wards had experienced difficulty in providing adequate patient care due to an insufficient number of employees, particularly between the hours of 4:00 p.m. and 6:00 p.m. The new 9:30 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. shift was established, in part, to alleviate this problem. Therefore, I must conclude that the determination with respect to the additional tour of duty was integrally related to and determinative of the staffing pattern required, that is, the numbers, types, and grades of positions or employees assigned to the organizational unit, work project, or tour of duty of the agency. Accordingly, the decision to establish the additional shift was a management right within the meaning of section 11(b).

2. It is clear that respondent gave the exclusive representative a reasonable opportunity to meet and confer concerning the impact and implementation of its decision to establish the 9:30 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. tour of duty, but complainant did not request consultation or bargaining on these matters. Since there was ample opportunity for complainant to request such bargaining or consultation prior to implementation of the decision, and complainant never requested such bargaining or consultation, I conclude that respondent did not refuse to consult, confer, or negotiate with respect to the impact of its decision. Department of Air Force, 4392 Aerospace Support Group, Vandenberg Air Force Base, California, A/SLMR No. 350 (1974); United States Air Force Electronics Systems Division (AFSC), Hanscom Air Force Base and Local 975, National Federation of Federal Employees, A/SLMR No. 571 (1975).

3. Although it is clear from the foregoing conclusions that the complaint should be dismissed in its entirety, a brief comment should be made with respect to an additional argument raised by the respondent for the first time at the hearing. Respondent made a motion that the complaint be dismissed as untimely under section 203.2(b)(3) of the Regulations of the Assistant Secretary. That section requires that a complaint be filed within nine months of the occurrence of the alleged unfair labor practice. Respondent argues that the complaint filed on August 23, 1976, was premature because no employee was actually assigned to the 9:30 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. tour of duty until September of 1976. I have concluded, however, that prior to the filing of the complaint a final decision was made to establish the new tour of duty, and that this shift became effective on August 15, 1976. Since the new shift was established prior to August 23, 1976, I must conclude that the complaint was not premature and deny respondent's motion to dismiss on this ground.3/

Recommendation

Having found that respondent has not engaged in certain conduct prohibited by sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, I recommend that the complaint herein be dismissed in its entirety.

Administrative Law Judge

3/ Furthermore, assuming arguendo that the complaint was premature, it should be noted that respondent did not raise this objection until the day of the hearing. In a letter (which has not been considered as evidence in this case) written by respondent's counsel to the Area Administrator dated September 17, 1976, respondent took the contrary position that the new shift was "implemented" on August 15, 1976. Since the complaint could easily have been amended if the alleged procedural deficiency had been raised earlier, it would be patently unfair to dismiss the complaint on this ground.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR
ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS
SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY,
INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE,
JACKSONVILLE DISTRICT
A/SLMR No. 953

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by the National Treasury Employees Union (NTEU) alleging that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by unilaterally implementing furloughs of "when actually employed" (WAE) taxpayer service representatives (TSR's) without notifying the NTEU and affording it an opportunity to bargain over the impact and implementation of the furlough procedure. The Respondent contended that the decision to furlough WAE's fell within those rights reserved to management under Section 12(b)(3) and (5) of the Order and that its action represented a continuation of a previously existing policy.

The Administrative Law Judge found that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by unilaterally implementing a new furlough procedure during the 1976 filing season without notifying the NTEU and affording it an opportunity to bargain over the impact and implementation of the new procedure. In this regard, he noted that during previous filing seasons WAE's were not furloughed before temporary TSR's were laid off.

The Assistant Secretary adopted the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions, and recommendations. He noted that although there was no obligation under the Order to meet and confer on the decision to reduce the work force to meet budgetary needs, there was an obligation to bargain on matters relating to the implementation and impact of such decision on unit employees. Thus, he found that the Respondent was obligated to provide the Complainant with an opportunity to meet and confer on the procedures to be utilized in reducing the work force and/or the impact of such decision on adversely affected unit employees. Accordingly, he ordered that the Respondent cease and desist from the conduct found violative of the Order and that it take certain affirmative actions.

DECISION AND ORDER

On June 23, 1977, Administrative Law Judge Peter McC. Giesey issued his Recommended Decision and Order in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had engaged in certain unfair labor practices and recommending that it cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative actions as set forth in the attached Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order. Thereafter, the Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief with respect to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order and the Complainant filed an answering brief with respect to the Respondent's exceptions.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order and the entire record in this case, including the exceptions and supporting brief filed by the Respondent and the answering brief filed by the Complainant, I hereby adopt the Administrative Law Judge's findings, 1/ conclusions and recommendations.

The Administrative Law Judge concluded that the Respondent violated

1/ The Administrative Law Judge found that the Complainant and the Internal Revenue Service were engaged in agency-wide negotiations in late Fall 1975 and early 1976 concerning, among other other things, furlough and recall procedures for temporary and "when actually employed" (WAE) taxpayer service representatives. The parties agree, and the record indicates, however, that those negotiations were concerned solely with WAE employees.

Section 19 (a)(1) and (6) of the Order by unilaterally instituting a new furlough policy for WAE employees without giving the Complainant an opportunity to meet and confer on the impact and implementation thereof. I agree. Although there was no obligation under the Order to meet and confer on a decision to reduce the work force to meet budgetary needs, in my view there was an obligation to bargain on matters relating to the implementation and impact of such a decision on unit employees. Thus, when the Respondent herein failed to provide the Complainant with an opportunity to meet and confer on the procedures to be utilized in reducing the work force, and/or the impact of such decision on adversely affected unit employees, I find that it was in violation of Section 19 (a)(1) and (6) of the Order. See United States Department of the Navy, Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, Great Lakes Naval Hospital, Illinois, 3 A/SLMR 375, A/SLMR No. 289 (1973).

ORDER 2/

Pursuant to Section 6 (b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, and Section 203.26(b) of the Regulations, the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations hereby orders that Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Jacksonville District, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Unilaterally implementing a new furlough policy for "when actually employed" taxpayer service representatives represented exclusively by the Florida Joint Council of the National Treasury Employees Union without first affording such representative an opportunity to meet and confer concerning the implementation and impact of such policy.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights assured by Executive Order 11491, as amended.

2. Take the following affirmative actions in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Order.

(a) Upon request by the Florida Joint Council of the National Treasury Employees Union, meet and confer, to the extent consonant with

2/ In his Recommended Order, the Administrative Law Judge provided that the WAE employees furloughed in January, February and March 1976, be reimbursed for wages lost during the period of the furlough. However, the Federal Labor Relations Council has noted that in order to make a valid award of backpay, it is necessary not only to find that an employee has been adversely affected by an activity's improper action, but also that "but for" the improper action the employee would not have suffered a loss or reduction in pay, allowances, or differentials. See Mare Island Shipyard and Mare Island Navy Yard Metal Trades Council, AFL-CIO, FLRC No. 74A-64. As the record does not show whether or not any or all of WAE employees would have been furloughed "but for" the Respondent's improper conduct herein, I shall modify the remedial order accordingly.

law and regulations, concerning the impact of its 1976 furlough policy on adversely affected unit employees.

(b) If, following negotiations with the Florida Joint Council of the National Treasury Employees Union in accordance with paragraph 2 (a) above, it is determined that any employee was adversely affected by the failure to meet and confer concerning the implementation and impact of the 1976 furlough policy, such employee shall be made whole, including reimbursement for any loss of monies occasioned by such failure to meet and confer, consistent with applicable laws, regulations, and decisions of the Comptroller General.

(c) Post at its Jacksonville, Florida, District Office, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix" on forms to be furnished by the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Director of the District and shall be posted and maintained by him for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. The Director shall take reasonable steps to insure that such notices are not altered, defaced or covered by any other material.

(d) Pursuant to Section 203.27 of the Regulations, notify the Assistant Secretary, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this order as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

This is a proceeding brought under Executive Order 11491, as amended, (hereafter, "the Order") by National Treasury Employees Union (hereafter, "the Union") against Jacksonville District, Internal Revenue Service (hereafter, "Jacksonville IRS"). The Union asserts that Jacksonville IRS violated sections 19(a)(1) and 19(a)(6) of the Order by unilaterally implementing furloughs of when-actually-employed employees (WAE's) without notifying the Union and affording it an opportunity to confer concerning the implementation and impact of this assertedly new procedure.

A hearing was held in Jacksonville, Florida on November 30, 1976. Briefly, the record shows the following circumstances.

Statement of the Case

The following facts are undisputed unless otherwise indicated.

The Florida Joint Council of the Union is the exclusive bargaining agent of employees in an appropriate unit of the Jacksonville IRS.

During late 1975 and early 1976, the Union and IRS were engaged in agency-wide negotiations concerning, among other things, furlough and recall procedures for temporary (limited to 700 hours) and WAE (when actually employed) TSR's (taxpayer service representatives) employed during the "filing season"-January to April.

Without notifying the Union, Jacksonville IRS, early in 1976, began a rotating furlough policy for twelve WAE TSR's. Temporary employees continued to work during January, February and March while eight WAE TSR's were furloughed for three weeks and four WAE TSR's were furloughed for two weeks.

The Chief of Taxpayers' Service Division of the Jacksonville District testified that during the week of 19 January, 1976, management's decision to furlough WAE TSR's was made because it was found that the District had "slightly overspent in the latter part of December ...[and] that if we kept this...number of employees on the rolls...we would have been out of funds by March 31st...."

Although temporary TSR's had been separated from employment before WAE TSR's were furloughed during previous filing seasons, WAE's had been furloughed on a rotating basis following the 1975 filing season.

An employee testified that he had been a temporary TSR in 1974 and "took the position as a WAE [in 1975] because in the previous season...I was laid off before the WAE's were furloughed...."

Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law

The facts are as set forth, supra.

IRS takes the position that it was under no obligation to notify or meet and confer with the Union concerning the furloughing of WAE TSR's in 1976, because the action represented a continuation of a previously existing policy and procedure, that the decision to furlough is a reserved management right under section 12(b) of the Order and that, in any case, an "overriding exigency," i.e. a budgetary limitation, existed which would justify unilateral change in terms and conditions of employment.

I disagree, not because the Agency has misstated the legal principles, but because it has misinterpreted the facts.

First, as pointed out by counsel for the Union in its reply brief, WAE's were not furloughed before temporary employees during previous filing seasons. That they were furloughed in rotation after the filing season establishes nothing since the WAE classification was established to allow agencys to vary the workforce to accomodate seasonal or non-recurring needs. Second, while I agree that section 12(b)(3) of the order reserves to management the right "to relieve employees from duties because of lack of work or for other legitimate reasons," it does not relieve management from the obligation to notify the exclusive bargaining agent and to meet and confer on request concerning the impact and implementation of that management decision. E.g., Army and Air Force Exchange Service, Pacific Exchange System, Hawaii Regional Exchange, A/SLMR No. 454 (1974); U.S. Department of Transportation, Federal Highway Administration, Office of Federal Highway Projects, Vancouver Washington,

A/SLMR No. 612 (1976). Third, the "overriding exigency" could have been met by laying off temporary employees as the agency had done during past filing seasons. In any case, notice could have been given. Nor does the record support the unstated argument that, because only short notice could be given to the exclusive bargaining agent, none need be given. Failure to give notice plainly violates sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Act. United States Army Corps of Engineers, Philadelphia District, A/SLMR No. 673 (1976), p.3 1/

Because the violation of section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order involved events during the 1976 filing season only and because the record shows that, following the unilateral action, agreement was reached between the parties, it would be inappropriate to order IRS to meet and confer with the Union. Although the parties resolved these matters in multi-unit negotiations, the events violating the Order occurred in and affected only the Jacksonville District to which the recommended order is limited.

Finally, IRS asserts that any determination concerning the particular WAE TSR's who would not have lost time but for the unilateral implementation of the furlough policy would have to be based upon"mere speculation." For that reason, it asserts that the backpay remedy is inappropriate.

The argument cannot prevail, for it ignores the larger truth that the assumption that the same employees would have lost the same amount of time had no violation of the Order occurred must also be based upon "mere speculation." To base the remedy upon resolving all doubts in favor of the wrongdoer requires that important principles of administrative

1/ This decision of the Assistant Secretary is cited by the agency as the sole precedent for its assertion that "the existence of [an 'overriding exigency'] would allow an agency to implement a unilateral change...." In fact, the Assistant Secretary remarked in that opinion only that the Order does not require an agency to maintain the status quo after notice and negotiation to impasse "in the absence of an overriding exigency." id. at p. 4.

fairness be ignored. Accordingly, in light of the violation of 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order, it is proper that the employees furloughed in consequence of the violation be reimbursed for wages lost, less amounts earned, if any, during those periods. Small Business Administration, Richmond, Virginia, District Office A/SLMR No. 674 (1976)

Recommendation

Having found that Jacksonville IRS engaged in conduct in violation of section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by unilaterally instituting a furlough policy without giving the Union notice and opportunity to confer concerning the impact and implementation thereof, I recommend that the Assistant Secretary adopt the following order:

Recommended Order

Pursuant to Section 6(b) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, and Section 203.36(b) of the Regulations, the Assistant Secretary for Labor-Management Relations hereby orders that Department of the Treasury Internal Revenue Service, Jacksonville District, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Unilaterally implementing a new furlough policy for WAE taxpayers' Service Representatives without first notifying the Florida Joint Council of the National Treasury Employees Union and affording it opportunity to confer concerning the impact and implementation of such policy.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of rights assured by Executive Order 11491, as amended.

2. Take the following affirmative actions in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Order.

(a) Reimburse the following persons for wages lost during the periods appearing opposite their names, less wages earned, if any, during those periods.

L. Bockus	January 23, 1976 to February 17, 1976
G. Hanas	January 23, 1976 to February 17, 1976

SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

INTERNATIONAL BROTHERHOOD OF ELECTRICAL WORKERS, LOCAL 2301
A/SLMR No. 954

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by Ora Mauk, a member of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Local 2301 (IBEW) alleging that the IBEW violated Section 19(b)(1) of the Order by disciplining him, and taking other action against him which was designed to prevent him from exercising rights guaranteed by Section 18(a)(1) of the Order. Moreover, he alleged that continued dues deductions during the period of his suspension, which was part of the discipline, was in violation of Section 21(a)(2) of the Order, and that, based on his suspension, he was denied membership in violation of Section 19(c) of the Order.

The Administrative Law Judge noted that the Complainant appealed to the International with respect to the discipline imposed on him and such discipline, including the suspension, was voided because an improper board had been constituted by the Respondent Local to try him. Therefore, the Administrative Law Judge concluded that the Complainant's arguments regarding his suspension were moot. The Administrative Law Judge concluded further that as the suspension was, in fact, voided dues deductions were not continued improperly. Finally, with respect to the Complainant's arguments concerning alleged undemocratic and improper internal union procedures taken against him, the Administrative Law Judge concluded that the record did not support such allegations.

The Assistant Secretary adopted the findings, conclusions, and recommendation of the Administrative Law Judge. He noted, however, that allegations of violations of the Standards of Conduct for labor organizations as set forth in Section 18 of the Order, such as those which were alleged in this matter, are more appropriately raised under the procedures set forth in Section 204 of the Assistant Secretary's Regulations, rather than under the unfair labor practice procedures.

DECISION AND ORDER

On August 15, 1977, Administrative Law Judge Peter McC. Giesey issued his Recommended Decision and Order in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had not engaged in the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint and recommending that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety. Thereafter, the Complainant filed exceptions with respect to the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order.

The Assistant Secretary has reviewed the rulings of the Administrative Law Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Administrative Law Judge's Recommended Decision and Order and the entire record in the subject case, including the Complainant's exceptions, I hereby adopt the Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions, and recommendation. 1/

Recommended Decision and Order

This is a proceeding brought under Executive Order 11491, as amended (hereafter,"the Order") by Ora Mauk against Local 2301, I.B.E.W. Mr. Mauk complains that Local 2301 violated section 19(b)(1) of the Order 1/ by suspending him from

---

1/ A labor union shall not -
Interfere with, restrain, or coerce an employee in the exercise of his rights assured by this Order;

membership in the Union for three years because he exercised his right to vote in an election of officers of the Federal Employees Metal Trades Council of Charleston. He asserts that this action was taken in order to coerce and intimidate him in an effort to prevent him from exercising rights guaranteed by the provisions of section 18(1) of the Order. 2/ He also complains that the Union,after taking the action set forth above, continued to accept dues deductions as a further "punishment and reprisal" and in violation of the terms of section 21(a)(2) of the Order. 3/ Further, he asserts that the Union, by suspending his membership, denied him membership in violation of section 19(c) of the Order. 4/

A hearing was held in Charleston, South Carolina, on February 24, 1977. Briefly, the record shows the following circumstances.

2/ Standards of Conduct for Labor organizations. (a) An agency shall accord recognition only to a labor organization that is free from corrupt influences and influences opposed to basic democratic principles.

The maintenance of democratic procedures and practices, including provisions for periodic elections to be conducted subject to recognized safeguards and provisions defining and securing the right of individual members to participation in the affairs of the organization, to fair and equal treatment under the governing rules of the organization, and to fair process in disciplinary proceedings;

3/ Allotment of dues. (a) When a labor organization holds exclusive recognition, and the agency and the organization agree in writing to this course of action, an agency may deduct the regular and periodic dues of the organization from the pay of members of the organization in the unit of recognition who make a voluntary allotment for that purpose. Such an allotment is subject to the regulations of the Civil Service Commission, which shall include provision for the employee to revoke his authorization at stated six-month intervals. Such an allotment terminates when * * * the employee has been suspended or expelled from the labor organization.

4/ Unfair labor practices. (c) A labor organization which is accorded exclusive recognition shall not deny membership to any employee in the appropriate unit except for failure to meet reasonable occupational standards uniformly required for admission, or for failure to tender initiation fees and dues uniformly required as a condition of acquiring and retaining membership. This paragraph does not preclude a labor organization from enforcing discipline in accordance with procedures under its constitution or by-laws which conform to the requirements of this Order.

Statement of the Case

The following facts are undisputed.

On November 17, 1975, there was a regular meeting of Local 2301. At the meeting, it was moved and seconded that the president be directed to cast Local 2301's one and one half votes at the coming meeting of the Federal Employees' Metal Trades Council of Charleston, an "intermediate body" composed of delegates from a number of locals of different unions representing employees in Charleston.

At the time that the membership delegated sole responsibility for the casting of council votes, Ora Mauk, having earlier been elected by the membership of the Local as a delegate to the Council, was a trustee of that body and was, together with five other delegates, entitled to cast Local 2301's one and one half votes.

On December 8, 1975, the Council met for the purpose of electing officers. Local 2301's president cast one and one quarter votes and cast the remaining one quarter vote as directed by Mr. Mauk.

On January 13, 1976, the local president, in his dual capacity as business manager, removed Mr. Mauk from his position as a shop steward. On January 19, 1976, a member of the Union filed charges against Mr. Mauk, asserting that he had refused to cast his vote at the Council meeting in accordance with the stated desires of the membership. On that day, a meeting of the Local was held for the purpose of electing delegates to the Council. Mr. Mauk was not among those elected.

Later, the executive board of Local 2301 met as a trial board, found the charge against Mr. Mauk to be true, suspended his membership in the Local for three years commencing March 1, 1976, and levied a fine against him. Upon review by a vice-president of the International Union, the Board which took action against Mr. Mauk was found to have been improperly constituted and the local was ordered in June, 1976, to refund monies collected from Mr. Mauk and remove the suspension imposed.

Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law

Having considered the entire record, including the testimony, exhibits and briefs 5/ of the parties and having observed the demeanor of the witnesses, I make the following findings of fact, conclusions of law and recommended decision and order based thereon.

The facts are as set forth in the statement of the case.

The events and actions which are alleged to violate the Order are, to a great degree, intertwined and dependent one upon the other. Nevertheless, in order to consider them in an orderly fashion, each must be separately considered.

Thus, the suspension and fine, now rescinded 6/ and refunded, may be regarded as moot. I so regard them since it is a policy under the Order to encourage the adjustment of such matters within the organization. 7/ In any case, where a violation to be found, the remedy would be no more than that already received. Moreover, the International vice-president indicated that, in reversing the action of the Local's executive board, he regarded the orginal action as void ab initio because of the improper composition of the trial board. It follows that dues deductions during the "suspension" were proper because there was never an effective suspension and Mr. Mauk was continuously a member of the Union.

5/ Mr. Mauk protested the untimely filing of respondent's brief. I have elected to accept it, in part because an extension of time was requested and granted over the telephone. In any case, the brief is intended to assist the trier of fact and to limn the applicable law and in no way prejudices the rights of the opposing party.

6/ At the hearing, the Union president indicated that, because Mr. Mauk received the letter of the International vice-president and accepted the repayment of the fine, no other action by the Local was required. Nevertheless, counsel for the Local stated that a formal notice of the removal of the suspension would be provided Mr. Mauk.

7/ Any member of a labor organization whose rights under the provisions of §204.2 or §204.37 are alleged to have been infringed or violated may file a complaint in accordance with §204.55: Provided, however, that such member may be required to exhaust reasonable hearing procedures...within such organization. 29 C.F.R. 204.54.

I need not decide at this time whether, if Mr. Mauk were subjected to another trial on the same matters and subjected to discipline upheld by the International, he might then have a viable case or controversy forming a basis for proceedings under the terms of the Order and Regulations.

Complainant asserts that the Regulation requiring that labor organizations "shall conduct periodic elections of officers in a fair and democratic manner [and]...be governed by the standards prescribed in sections 401(a),(b),(c),(d), (e),(f) and (g) of the LMRDA..." (29 C.F.R. 204.29) is violated by the local president's occupation of the office of business agent although not elected to that post. He supports this position by further reference to the regulations promulgated under the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act (29 U.S.C. 401, et seq.) which provide, in pertinent part that;

* * *

> ... a directing business representative or a business manager usually exercises such a degree of executive authority as to be considered an officer and therefore, must be elected. * * *

29 C.F.R. 452.19

The short answer to this assertion is that the Local's president is elected and the members are aware that the Local's constitution and bylaws provide that the president shall also be the business agent. Thus, the purpose of the election requirement of the LMRDA - "... to assure that persons in positions of control in labor organizations will be responsive to the desires of the members" (29 C.F.R. 452.20(b)) appears to be well served by the election of the president to a dual office. If the membership desires to change this feature of the internal affairs of the organization, it is not beyond their power to do so. In any case, it does not offend the Order.

Similarly, the membership's decision in November, 1975, in no way conflicts with section 18(a)(1) of the Order's requirement that "democratic procedures and practices" be maintained. Since it was the membership's right to elect delegates to the Council, it is axiomatic that it is their right to instruct those delegates in carrying out duties on behalf of the membership. Although it is arguable that, in the instant case, the action may have been taken in such a way as to produce a result inconsistent with the bylaws of the Council, that is a thicket I need not enter. 8/ It involves the purely internal affairs of the Local and the Council and, on its face, represents a democratic, if irregular, procedure and practice.

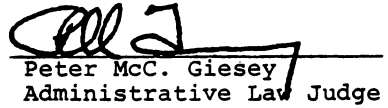
Finally, Mr. Mauk has asserted, and it is undisputed, that the Local's president removed him from his position as shop steward. Much of the record is devoted to the president's reasons for doing so. However, Mr. Mauk does not dispute the president's unreviewable authority to name and remove stewards. In light of this, it is plain that the president may remove a steward for a good reason, a bad reason or no reason so long as it is not a reason which violates the Order. The latter is not claimed nor is there any evidence on this record which would support such a claim.

Accordingly, I recommend that the Assistant Secretary dismiss the complaint in its entirety.



Peter McC. Giesey
Administrative Law Judge

8/ I.e., although the delegates, including Mauk, were elected by secret ballot and their names certified to the Council, the record is silent concerning whether the president, who cast one and one quarter of the local's votes, was properly certified to the Council and, if he was not, whether he was required to be.

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, AFL-CIO (Complainant) alleging that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) of the Order when a payroll supervisor made certain remarks to a union member and a union steward during the course of discussions concerning the union member's dual pay status.

Based on credited testimony, the Administrative Law Judge found that the Respondent's conduct was not violative of Section 19(a)(1) of the Order. RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

Statement of the Case

This case, heard in San Francisco, California, on June 30, 1977, arises under section 19 of Executive Order 11491, as amended.

This proceeding was initiated by the Grand Lodge Representative of the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, AFL-CIO, (hereinafter referred to as Complainant), filing an unfair labor practice complaint on December 7, 1976, as amended March 28, 1977, against the Department of the Navy, U.S. Naval Air Station, Alameda, California (hereinafter referred to as the Respondent). Pursuant to the Regulation of the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations, a Notice of Hearing on Complaint was issued on May 9, 1977. The hearing was postponed until July 5, 1977, pursuant to a request by Respondent, concurred in by Claimant's representative.

The amended complaint alleged that the Activity violated section 19(a)(1) of the Order when a payroll supervisor made certain remarks to a union member and steward.

At the hearing both parties were afforded full opportunity to be heard, to adduce evidence, to examine and cross-examine witnesses and to make oral argument. A post-hearing brief was received from Respondent only. Claimant has failed to file a brief after being afforded ample opportunity to prepare and file the document.1/

Findings of Fact

The International Association of Machinists, Lodge No. 739 has been and is the certified representative for approximately 3,200 employees of the Naval Air Repair Facility at the United States Navy Air Station, Alameda, California. The parties have had a comprehensive written agreement since October 15, 1975.

1/ The Office of Administrative Law Judges, United States Department of Labor, telephonically contacted the office of Complainant's representative on August 15, 1977, to ascertain if their brief had been mailed. That office informed the Office of Administrative Law Judges that no brief was mailed and, to their knowledge, none was prepared.

The alleged violation of section 19(a)(1) of the Order involved an incident in which a unit supervisor, Ms. Pat Foster, reportedly made threats to have a security guard remove Shop Steward, Ethan Gums, Jr., and employee J. A. Salter from the building and refused to provide requested information.

John A. Salter, an aircraft instrument mechanic, which is a wage-grade position at the Naval Air Rework Facility, Alameda, was deemed by Respondent to be in a dual payroll status. It appears that the dual status resulted from his receiving advanced paid sick leave plus compensation he elected to receive from the Department of Labor, resulting in the receipt of double payments for the same leave period. Respondents requested repayment, and apparently Mr. Salter received a letter from the Department of Labor indicating to him that he had to pay the money back to both entities. Mr. Salter did not understand the admitted intricacies of his payroll problems. After several attempts to personally resolve the problem of six to seven months duration in which he personally met with several clerks of the payroll office, on September 29, 1976, he requested the assistance of a union steward, Mr. Gums. Mr. Gums immediately called the payroll office and contacted Ms. Joy Gay. Ms. Gay informed Mr. Gums that it would be best to meet in person, and an appointment was arranged for the following day, September 30, 1976. Both Messrs. Salter and Gums went to the payroll office for the appointment. At this time and all other relevant times Mr. Gums was wearing a Union Steward's Badge. Ms. Gay was late returning from lunch when Messrs. Gums and Salter arrived, but a clerk offered her assistance. The clerk got Mr. Salter's payroll record but was unable to resolve the problem. A few minutes thereafter Ms. Gay returned and invited Messrs. Salter and Gums to her desk. After approximately five to ten minutes of discussion without being able to resolve the problem to Mr. Salter's satisfaction, Ms. Foster, the unit supervisor, entered into the discussion and what she said is conflicting and is the keystone of the complaint. Therefore, this testimony will be set forth in detail.

Mr. Salter testified:

> ... [W]e went back to her desk [Ms. Gay's] and we [Messrs. Salter and Gums and Ms. Gay] began to go over one of the leave records and--let's see--there was Mrs. Gay present and another clerk but I don't know her name, you know, but there was another clerk present at that time too. As we > were going over the records, this lady came up and put a piece of paper down in front of me and told me that if I would pay this or take care of this that the whole problem would be resolved, which I questioned her because, you know, I did not understand what she had placed in front of me nor did I know who she was. So, we got nowhere from this. All right, in between, you know, exactly at what point I don't remember, she made the statement as to, "What are trying to do, cause trouble?" and you know, looking at Mr. Gums she said, "I can see by your badge that you are a union representative." She asked me what did I need with the union rep and and I told her that I had been over this several times trying to get this problem resolved and I had just been going around and around in circles. This was Mrs. Foster who made all of these remarks, that is who [sic] we found out who it was later on, and then there was communication but it wasn't pertaining to the subject in which I had gone over to payroll about. It was between myself and Mrs. Foster because when Mrs. Foster spoke, Mrs. Gay just--she was no longer in the conversation and after she and I--like I say, we were not getting anywhere so she turned to Mr. Gums and told him that if he would come with her she would explain it to him. At this time, I interrupted and asked that she not just explain it to him but show the both of us, since it was my problem. She left, she told me that she did not have to explain anything to me and left for a few minutes and I guess she went over to her desk and then came back and said that she did not appreciate--well, it was more of, as I take it, some kind of reprimand and in conclusion, to get out of her [sic]--get out of the office or she would call security. Well, I could not believe that she would say something like this and I just sat there for a little while and whether anything was said at that point, I don't know but I know Mr. Gums told me to just cool off and come on and we left the office and this is about the best of my knowledge that I can remember concerning this. (Tr. pp. 28-29)

Mr. Gums testified as follows:

> While Mrs. Joy [Gay] was trying to figure out what the problem was with the record, using the machine to try and determine where they had run into a problem, John [Salter] and I were sitting there talking with another lady. At that time I did not know who she was, it turned out to be Mrs. Foster. She came to the desk with a sheet of paper in her hand and she placed the sheet of paper on the desk and turned to John and said, "If you would just pay this, this would just pay this then this would solve all of your problems.", looking at me and still talking to John, she said, "What did you bring him for, are you trying to start some trouble?" and at that time John said, no, he said something to the effect that he is here to help me out-- (Tr. p. 18)

Mr. Gums further testified:

> Ignoring her statements, [regarding causing trouble and union affiliation] I asked her if he paid that bill how would that clarify him with the compensation office in San Francisco and in our discussion of this, she said, "If you will come to my desk, I will show you how this works." At that time, John interrupted the conversation and said, "Don't show him, I am involved, show us." and that is when he and Mrs. Gay got into a discussion of his problem and why-- what he wanted to know about the compensation record. Mrs. Gay [Foster] ended up saying to the effect, "I don't have to show you anything," and she walked away from us and went back to her desk which was across the room. John and I then turned and started to talk to Mrs. Foster [Ms. Gay] again, because we still had not come to any conclusions as to-- (Tr. p. 19)

Mr. Gums also testified that Ms. Foster failed to sign the pass.

Ms. Foster testified that she was familiar with the case and that Ms. Gay called her over to her desk to help her out because she wasn't familiar with the matter. Ms. Gay's desk is situated approximately two feet from Ms. Foster's. She further testified:

> I went over and we had all of his records there and I was explaining to him, the advanced sick leave, that he would have to pay this back. First of all, he had gotten a letter from the Bureau of Compensation asking him to make the payment that they had paid him for the same time that we had paid him for leave ... This was the question that he was asking, how he could work this out so I went through his leave record with him and for that one-week period of time that he was charged and I figured out how much money he would owe for that, for those hours and compared with what he owed the compensation, it was less. I told him that it would probably be better if he had paid the station the money as far as the amount goes. I continued explaining to him about the dual-pay status because two agencies had paid him for that same week so I tried very hard to tell him to explain to him and he did not seem to understand so I asked Mr. Gums to come over in back of Joy's (Ms. Gay) desk, not to my desk, and explain to him and if he could help me explain to Mr. Salter. (Tr. pp. 43-44)

Ms. Foster stated that she attempted to explain to Mr. Gums alone for she felt, once he fully understood the matter, he could assist in explaining the intricacies to Mr. Salter. Ms. Foster described Mr. Salter's attitude as not being too happy "it was just his mannerisms and his voice tones." (Tr. p. 46) When she attempted to explain to Mr. Gums the manner in which the dual-payroll status arose, Mr. Salter stated to her "You should have children of your own." (Tr. p. 46) At this point Ms. Foster testified she asked them to please leave the office and make another appointment. She described the manner of making that statement as a very bad attitude that "I did not know what he meant by it and I did not feel that we needed to carry the conversation on any more." (Tr. pp. 46-47) She further testified his voice was raised a little. Ms. Foster does not remember making any statement about calling in for security.

Ms. Foster normally deals with employees and their union representatives, and there is no evidence of record indicating any other incidents involving her.

Ms. Foster often deals with the union representatives, recognizing them by the badges they wear. She considers the union representatives as a representative of the employee. On page 50 of the transcript Ms. Foster testified that she asked Messrs. Gums and Salter to leave "[b]ecause I got upset when he told me that I should have children of my own and I did not feel that we needed to carry on our conversation."

> Q. At that time that you asked them to leave, did you feel if they had stayed that you could have done anymore to successfully explain the situation to Mr. Salter?
>
> A. No.
>
> Q. Do you feel that you have exhausted your attempts to explain it.
>
> A. Yes.

Later in her testimony, on page 53 of the transcript, Ms. Foster testified that she was not aware that Messrs. Gums and Salter were coming over to see Ms. Gay and in answer to the question of how she came by the paper that Messrs. Salter and Gums testified she brought over to the desk, she stated she did not recall bringing over a paper to the desk but, rather, went over to help Ms. Gay explain to Mr. Salter his dual-pay status. (Tr. p. 54)

On page 55 of the transcript Ms. Foster testified that she remembers Mr. Gums giving his pass releasing him and sending him back to work and she remembers signing the pass.

On page 58 of the transcript Ms. Foster stated that when being called by the Safety Office for a new appointment for Messrs. Salter and Gums she made the appointment for the week following on approximately Wednesday. At the time of the subsequent meeting she did not know that an unfair labor practice charge had been filed. Both Messrs. Salter and Gums testified that there was a great change in Ms. Foster's behavior at the subsequent meeting.

Ms. Joy Gay testified (Tr. p. 60) that she was unfamiliar with Mr. Salter's account and that when she looked at that file and noted her lack of familiarity she looked for Ms. Foster to come to her aide and explain the situtation. Ms. Gay knew that Ms. Foster was familiar with the problem. While Ms. Foster was attempting to explain the situation to Messrs. Salter and Gums, a Ms. Peggy Crabtree was waiting to talk to Ms. Gay about one of her own accounts and was standing beside the desk. On page 62 of the transcript, Ms. Gay states that when Ms. Foster came over to the desk after she attempted to explain and understand the problem for about five minutes, Ms. Foster engaged in a conversation with both gentlemen attempting to resolve the problem. Ms. Gay does not remember any derogatory references made about the union. She specifically does not remember Ms. Foster making any references to call security. (Tr. p. 63)

Ms. Gay's testimony was very vague and indicated she did not have a clear memory of what had transpired. This lack of accuracy is pointed up in the disparity in her testimony and her statement, Complainant's Exhibit No. 6, wherein Ms. Gay stated that Ms. Foster passed by the desk and asked what the problem was. Yet Ms. Gay testified that Ms. Foster might have come over because she looked at Ms. Foster in a perplexed manner, thereby inducing her to come to her assistance and, as indicated previously, also testified, she called Ms. Foster over for her assistance. The witnesses admitted lack of memory regarding the incident warrants the conclusion that her evidence is entitled to little or no weight.

The last witness to testify as to what transpired at the meeting is Margaret J. Crabtree, who is currently employed in the Data Processing Center, Pacific Fleet at the Naval Air Station, Alameda (Center); however, the same personnel department does the payroll work. Ms. Crabtree testified that she went to the payroll office to see Ms. Foster and when she arrived Ms. Foster was > ... sitting at her desk, there were two men standing there, one of them was extremely angry and she was trying to explain to him that she told him he had signed a paper and that when he signed that, it was out of her hands and there was nothing more that she could do about it and he would have to contact another department or something. I wan't paying that much attention to who they were to contact. [sic] The other gentleman that was with him seemed to try to calm him down and get him away from the desk

because he was being very loud and they walked over nearer to where I was standing and he was explaining to him that he signed the papers and that there wasn't anything more she could do. (Tr. p. 72)

Ms. Crabtree further testified that she was there only for a very short period of time but during her presence of only two to three minutes she heard no mention of the union. She did overhear the men state to one another "Come on, we better get out of here or she will call security." (Tr. p. 73) Ms. Crabtree indicated she was very close to the site of the conversation and could overhear all that was spoken but she did not hear Ms. Foster say anything about calling security.

Discussion and Conclusions

Section 203.15 of the Regulations imposes upon the Complainant the burden of proving the allegations of the Complainant by a preponderance of the evidence. The Complainant has failed in this endeavor.

The circumstances surrounding the September 20, 1976, meeting indicated a frustration on the part of Mr. Salter to understand the intricacies of his dual-pay status. Mr. Salter admitted that he lost his temper when he testified that Mr. Gums told him "to just cool off." (Tr. p. 29) The finding that Mr. Salter lost his temper leads to the crediting of Ms. Foster's testimony that Mr. Salter did make a personal comment to her to the effect that she should have children of her own. That the personal attack took place was not denied by either Messrs. Gums or Salter, Complainant's sole witnesses.

The personal verbal attack caused Ms. Foster to become upset. I find she did threaten to call a security guard, based on the testimony of Messrs. Gums and Salter. Margaret Crabtree also stated she overheard either Gums or Salter say "Come on, we better get out of here or she will call security." (Tr. p. 73). However, it is found that the threat occurred after both Ms. Gay and Ms. Foster attempted to explain why Mr. Salter was in a dual-pay status. This conclusion is repeatedly supported by the testimony of record. Then they apparently left.

Messrs. Gums and Salter admitted that Ms. Gay attempted for five to ten minutes to resolve the problem and that Mr. Salter became upset when Ms. Foster offered to explain the problem to Mr. Gums. This testimony refutes any allegation that there was a refusal to provide information. Furthermore, this testimony lends credence to Ms. Foster's statement that she "tried very hard to tell him [Mr. Salter], to explain to him, and he did not seem to understand so I asked Mr. Gums to come over in back of Joy's [Mr. Gay] desk ... and explain to him and if he could help me explain to Mr. Salter ...." (Tr. p. 44)

It appears that it was at this point in the discussions that Mr. Salter became upset and stated he wanted the matter clarified to him also, not just Mr. Gums. It also appears it was at this juncture that Mr. Salter made the personal verbal attack upon Ms. Foster. (Tr. p. 46)

If the hostilities commenced immediately after the meeting began or immediately upon Ms. Foster's arrival at Ms. Gay's desk, rather than after the admitted repeated attempts to give the requested information, then some foundation for the claimed union animous could be found. However, based upon the preceding recitation of the sequence of events that transpired during the September 30, 1976, meeting, it cannot be found that Ms. Foster's threat to call the security guard was based on union animous. Rather, it is apparent that the discussion included several attempts to explain the situation but devolved into a verbal altercation which was terminated with a request to leave accompanied by a threat to call a security guard if that request was not met. Ms. Foster, whose testimony I credit on this point, determined that further discussions at that time would not be fruitful. That tempers were short at that time was substantiated by Ms. Crabtree's testimony. The need to meet with employees and union representatives does not require that meetings be unending or that altercations be extended ad infinitum.

Approximately six days after the September 30, 1976, incident, another meeting was held in which Ms. Foster's behavior was characterized as very acceptable to Messrs. Gums and Salter. Ms. Foster testified that at the time of the second meeting she was not aware that a complaint had been filed. Ms. Foster's testimony is credited inasmuch as Complainant failed to clearly establish that the complaint was filed prior to the second meeting or that Ms. Foster had knowledge that the complaint was to be filed or was actually filed. The Complainant's described change in attitude can only be attributed to the need for a cooling off period. Ms. Foster did fail to sign Messrs. Salter's and Gum's passes, but this is found to have been an oversight due to her agitation. Ms. Foster did take the pass back to her desk and put the date in the place designated for her signature. There was no showing of an outright refusal to sign the pass.

The final factor which could support a finding of union animous was the alleged statements by Ms. Foster describing Mr. Salter as a troublemaker and referring to Mr. Gums' status as a union representative. As Mr. Salter testified, he does not remember at what point in the meeting the statements were made. The probable explanation for the characterization of Mr. Salter as a troublemaker was his comment to Ms. Foster regarding her need to have children of her own. It is clear that these statements were made after several attempts to explain Mr. Salter's dual-pay status to both Messrs. Salter and Gums. Furthermore, after making the statements about Mr. Gums being a union representative, Ms. Foster offered to explain the problem to Mr. Gums, an offer that would not have been made if the alleged union animous was the cause of the hostilities. (Tr. p. 29)

The evidence demonstrates that Ms. Foster's actions recognized Mr. Gums as a union representative acting in the course of his responsibilities and, in fact, her attempt to explain the problem to him was to enable him to clarify the matter for Mr. Salter. There was no by-passing of the exclusive representative to deal directly with an employee.

In conclusion, the evidence of record fails to demonstrate any union animous or action which threatened to deprive an employee of the rights guaranteed under the Order. There were several attempts during the meeting to provide the requested explanation as to why Mr. Salter was in a dual-pay status. There was no evidence that Ms. Foster's actions interfered with, restrained, or coerced Mr. Salter's or any other employees. Accordingly, under the facts developed in this proceeding, I find no violation of section 19(a)(1) of the Order.

RECOMMENDATION

In view of the foregoing, I hereby recommend to the Assistant Secretary that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety.

READINESS COMMAND,
REDSTONE ARSENAL, ALABAMA AND
U.S. ARMY MISSILE RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT COMMAND,
REDSTONE ARSENAL, ALABAMA
A/SLMR No. 956

This case involved petitions for clarification of unit (CU) filed by the U.S. Army Missile Materiel Readiness Command (MIRCOM) and the U.S. Army Missile Research and Development Command (MIRADCOM), both located at Redstone Arsenal, Alabama, seeking to clarify existing bargaining units represented exclusively by the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1858, AFL-CIO (AFGE). The record revealed that the AFGE was certified as the exclusive representative in separate units of professional and nonprofessional employees in the U.S. Army Missile Command which was subsequently disestablished and reorganized into two separate commands, MIRCOM and MIRADCOM. By the subject petitions, each Command was seeking to divide the two bargaining units into four units, i.e., two separate units of professional employees and two separate units of nonprofessional employees to conform with the reorganization. The AFGE initially took the position that the proposed clarifications would fragment its existing units, but subsequently concurred with the petitions and the parties submitted a joint stipulation in support of the proposed unit clarifications.

The Assistant Secretary found that the certified units continued, after the reorganization, to remain appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition. In this regard, it was noted that the reorganization did not result in significant changes in the day-to-day terms and conditions of employment of the employees involved and that the employees continued to perform the same type of work, for the most part, under the same immediate supervision. Additionally, the Assistant Secretary found that altering the units involved in the manner sought by the Activity-Petitioners, where a history of collective bargaining existed, would tend to promote fragmentation and inhibit effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations, particularly since both Commands continued to report to the same organizational Command, and were serviced by the same Civilian Personnel Office.

Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary ordered that the petitions be dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER

Upon petitions duly filed under Section 6 of Executive Order 11491, as amended, a consolidated hearing was held before Hearing Officer Adam J. Conti. The Hearing Officer's rulings made at the hearing are free from prejudicial error and are hereby affirmed.

Upon the entire record in the subject cases, the Assistant Secretary finds:

The American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1858, AFL-CIO, herein called AFGE, was certified as the exclusive representative in separate units of professional and nonprofessional employees of the U.S. Army Missile Command (MICOM). 1/ A three-year negotiated agreement covering nonprofessional employees was entered into by MICOM and the

1/ The record reveals that the AFGE was granted exclusive recognition in the nonprofessional unit in March 1967, under the provisions of Executive Order 10988, and that this recognition was subsequently amended in June 1975. The AFGE was certified as the exclusive representative in the professional unit in September 1976.

AFGE on March 6, 1975. Pending the outcome of the instant petitions, the parties are continuing the application of this agreement to all nonprofessional employees within its coverage. 2/

Effective January 31, 1977, pursuant to a reorganization, MICOM was disestablished and two separate commands were created: the U.S. Army Missile Materiel Readiness Command (MIRCOM) and the U.S. Army Missile Research and Development Command (MIRADCOM). By their petitions herein each of these Commands is seeking to divide the two bargaining units currently represented by the AFGE into two separate units of nonprofessional employees and two separate units of professional employees, to conform with the reorganization. In this regard, the Activity-Petitioners contend that the reorganization resulted in the creation of two separate commands, each having a separate mission, separate functions, and policies, and subject to separate components of the U.S. Army Materiel Development and Readiness Command (DARCOM). The AFGE initially took the position that the Activity-Petitioners' proposals would fragment its existing units, but subsequently agreed with the Activity-Petitioners and the parties submitted a stipulation in support of the proposed unit clarifications.

Prior to the reorganization, MICOM, under the authority of the DARCOM, encompassed two major program areas, missile project research and development, and missile project readiness. A study completed by higher agency authority disclosed weaknesses in the research and development area and it was determined that by establishing separate commands, problem areas could be identified and measures taken to ameliorate the situation.

Thus, subsequent to the reorganization, the Deputy Commander of MICOM assumed the position of Commander of MIRADCOM, while the Commander of MICOM became the Commander of MIRCOM. The various missile projects in MICOM were divided between MIRCOM and MIRADCOM depending upon the stage of the project's life cycle. Those in the research and development stage went to MIRADCOM, while those which had progressed through research and development and were in the readiness stage went to MIRCOM.

The record reveals that as a project moves through its life cycle, it will shift from MIRADCOM to MIRCOM, though the shift will be limited to the project itself and not to the employees working on it. As a result of the reorganization, other organizational components were divided depending upon the nature of their functions. A few components went outside both MIRCOM and MIRADCOM into completely different commands and still other components, for example, the comptroller and the systems analysis offices, were split so that these functions now appear in both Commands. Each Command supplies a variety of services to the other and, in this connection, the record reveals that services such as finance and accounting, legal and safety support, Equal Employment Opportunity support and the Civilian Personnel Office (CPO), while organizationally located in MIRCOM, provide services to MIRADCOM and other commands located at Redstone Arsenal. Both MIRCOM and MIRADCOM continue to report to DARCOM, but through separate DARCOM Deputy Commanders.

2/ The parties never consummated a negotiated agreement covering the professional employees.

The record reveals that most of the employees in the existing units are performing the same type of work under the same immediate supervision under the two Commands as they did prior to MICOM's disestablishment. In some cases, employees have moved to a different physical location and there are some buildings on the Activity-Petitioners' premises which house components of both Commands. As was the situation prior to the reorganization, the record reveals that there is limited interaction between employees of the two Commands.

The Commanders of both MIRCOM and MIRADCOM have the authority to develop and implement personnel policies, including hiring, firing, training and recruitment, and to enter into negotiations with the exclusive representative of their employees. However, the record reveals that both Commanders, as well as those of other commands located at Redstone Arsenal, have authorized the same CPO to handle personnel matters and, when performing such duties, the CPO becomes responsible to the commander it is serving rather than to the Commander of MIRCOM wherein the CPO is organizationally located.

There are separate areas of consideration for the two Commands in reduction-in-force proceedings. The area of consideration in filling vacancies varies and is dependent upon the anticipated number of qualified applicants for any given position. Each Command develops its own budget which is submitted to higher agency authority. However, actual disbursements for purchases made by each of the Commands are made by the Finance and Accounting Division located in MIRCOM. This office also handles pay for both Commands and the processing and payment of travel vouchers.

Under all the above circumstances, I find that the certified units continue, after the reorganization, to remain appropriate for the purpose of exclusive recognition. 3/ In this regard, noted particularly was the fact that the reorganization did not result in significant changes in the day-to-day terms and conditions of employment of the employees involved in that they continue to perform the same type of work, for the most part, under the same immediate supervision. Moreover, in view of the history of collective bargaining in the units involved, and the fact that such units remain generally intact following the reorganization, to alter them in the manner sought herein by the Activity-Petitioners clearly would not have the desired effect of promoting effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. Rather, the result sought by the Activity-Petitioners, i.e., the establishment of four bargaining units, under the circumstances herein, would, in my judgment, tend to promote fragmentation and inhibit effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations. In this latter regard, it was noted particularly that both Commands continue to report to the same organizational command, DARCOM, and are serviced by the same CPO. Based on the foregoing considerations, I shall order that the petitions herein be dismissed.

ORDER

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the petitions in Case Nos. 40-7893(CU) and 40-7894(CU) be, and they hereby are, dismissed.

PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

A/SLMR No. 957

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1760 (AFGE) alleging that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by refusing to meet and confer regarding downgradings of unit employees. It was also alleged that the Respondent committed an independent violation of Section 19(a)(1) by ejecting a union representative from a meeting where questions were raised regarding potential downgradings in such a manner as to undermine the status of the AFGE.

The Administrative Law Judge recommended that the complaint be dismissed. He found that the fact that questions regarding potential downgradings were posed during the course of a meeting called for an unrelated purpose did not transform the meeting into a formal discussion within the meaning of Section 10(e) because the Respondent neither raised the issue of proposed downgradings nor sought to discuss the issues raised by employees and, for the most part, abstained from discussing the issues since the Respondent's representative was unable to answer the employees' queries. The Administrative Law Judge also found that the evidence did not support the allegation that the ouster of the AFGE's representative undermined the AFGE's status.

The Assistant Secretary adopted the findings, conclusions and recommendations of the Administrative Law Judge and ordered that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety.

RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

Statement of the Case

Pursuant to a Notice of Hearing on Complaint issued on March 16, 1977 by the Regional Administrator for Labor Management Services Administration, U.S. Department of Labor, New York Region, a hearing was held before the undersigned on April 21, 1977 at Flushing, New York.

The proceeding was initiated under Executive Order 11491, as amended (herein called the Order). It was based on an amended complaint filed on August 25, 1976 by American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1760 (herein called the Complainant) against Department of Health, Education and Welfare, Social Security Administration, BRSI, Northeastern Program Service Center (herein called the Respondent). It was alleged in the amended complaint that Respondent violated Sections 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by refusing to meet and confer with Complainant regarding downgradings and by ejecting James Armet, acting president of the union, from a formal discussion. A response to the amended complaint was filed by Respondent on September 10, 1976 wherein it denied having violated the Order. 1/

Both parties were represented at the hearing, were afforded full opportunity to be heard, to adduce evidence and to examine as well as cross-examine witnesses. Thereafter, briefs were filed with the undersigned which have been duly considered.

Upon the entire record in this case, from my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, and from all of the testimony and evidence adduced at the hearing, I make the following findings, conclusions and recommendations:

Findings of Fact

1. At all times material herein Complainant has been, and still is, the exclusive bargaining representative of Respondent's non-supervisory employees.

2. In early May 1976 three members of the Quality Appraisal staff at the Northeastern Program Service Center, Etta Burke, Sandra Robbins (analysts) and Karen Augenbaum (reviewer), were sent to different district offices in the New England area to attend meetings re orientation on the quality appraisal study system. At these meetings the managers made suggestions concerning the feedback forms known as the "DO Feedback Report".

1/ Respondent also moved to dismiss the amended complaint on procedural grounds. No disposition thereon appears in the formal papers. In light of the subsequent issuance of a Notice of Hearing the motion is deemed denied.

This form was sent from the service center to the District Managers, and it contained findings of the Quality Appraisal section as to social security cases reviewed with mention being made of incorrect action taken thereon. The form was utilized to prevent recurrence of incorrect actions taken in respect to cases handled. At the meetings suggestions were made re the improvement of the form through more comprehensive explanation of the problems involved as well as modification of the form itself.

3. In order to acquaint the Quality Appraisal staff with the suggestions made at the District meetings, Harry Bagon, Respondent's Assistant Director of Quality Appraisal, called a special purpose technical meeting 2/ on May 19, 1976. This meeting, which commenced at 4:00 p.m., was attended by nearly all of the Quality Appraisal staff, which consisted of about 23 case reviewers and 5 analysts. Both Etta Burke and Karen Augenbaum gave an oral report to the group concerning the discussions at the New England meetings.

4. During the aforesaid meeting questions were asked by the employees regarding the teletype received from Baltimore about the survey made at the Philadelphia Program Center involving grade structures and the possible downgrading of jobs. Concern was manifested as to what might happen to both the jobs at Northeastern and the pay received by the job holders. Whereupon Bogan read relevant portions of the teletype to the staff. He advised the employees that they should remain calm; that BRSI was looking into the matter; and that he had no answer but the technical staff would answer the questions as to the effect of the survey upon the Northeastern Center. 3/president of Complainant, that a meeting was being conducted by Bagon in Quality Appraisal re the downgrading in the Philadelphia Program Center. Armet agreed to look into it, and he walked from the union office to the meeting. When Armet arrived at the meeting Bagon was reading the teletype to the staff. Armet remained in the back of the room and listened to the questions from the employees and the replies given by the management official. He then called James O'Leary, vice-president of Complainant for grievances, and advised him of what he heard at the meeting. O'Leary told Armet to return and participate in the meeting as a union representative.

Whereupon Armet went back to the meeting and advanced to the front of the room. Ruth Finkelstein, Acting Chief Officer, approached Armet and asked what he was doing there. The latter said he was the union representative and was entitled to be there since the subject under discussion involved personnel policies and general working conditions. When Finkelstein reported back to Bagon, the assistant director stated that Armet should leave since he was not invited to attend the meeting. Armet protested and stated he had a right to be there as a representative of the Complainant. Bagon insisted that Armet was not entitled to be there, and the union representative then left under protest.

Conclusions

It is contended by Complainant that Respondent violated 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order by not affording it, as the bargaining representative of the employees, an opportunity to be present at the meeting on May 19. The union insists that it should have received proper notification thereof, and that the meeting itself was a formal discussion involving working conditions under Section 10(e) of the Order, which entitles Complainant to be present and represent the employees thereat. Moreover, in addition to having acted in derogation of the union, the Respondent's actions constituted a denigration of the labor organization before the employees.

It is provided in Section 10(e) of the Order that a labor organization, which is the exclusive bargaining agent, shall be given the opportunity to be represented at formal discussions between management and employees re grievances, personnel policies and practices, or other matters affecting general working conditions of unit employees. Whether or not a discussion is "formal" or not depends on the circumstances of each case. On the basis of the record herein, I am persuaded that the meeting held on May 19 cannot be properly characterized as a formal discussion within the meaning of 10(e). The purpose of said meeting was to render reports to the Quality Appraisal group concerning the feedback forms which were sent to the district office. It was a special technical meeting called by Bagon to permit the staff representatives, who attended the sessions in New England, to report back the suggestions made by the management officials in respect to improving said forms. The discussion focused on that subject, and consideration was given to the recommendations made at the New England conferences. No evidence supports the view that Respondent convened the analysts and reviewers on May 19 to discuss conditions of employment.

Complainant urges that, since there ensued a discussion re downgrading of employees, the meeting then dealt with working conditions and became a "formal discussion" under 10(e) of the Order. I do not agree. The fact that questions were posed, during the meeting, regarding the teletype received from the Philadelphia Service Center and possible downgrading of the unit employees did not transform the meeting into a formal discussion regarding working conditions. Management neither raised the issues of downgrading or pay, nor attempted to deal with employees regarding same. In this posture, I consider the circumstances quite dissimilar from situations where an employer summons employees to obtain input and thereby confers with the latter in derogation of the bargaining representative. Cf. FAA, Springfield Tower, Springfield, Missouri, A/SLMR No. 843. Moreover, there is no indication that Respondent even sought to discuss the issues raised by the employees of the Quality Appraisal unit on May 19. For the most part, Bagon abstained from discussing the issues since he was unable to answer their queries.

Complainant deems the communications with the group re downgrading and the possible effect upon the employees as being in derogation of its status as bargaining agent. But the Order does not outlaw all communication with employees relating to the collective bargaining relationship. There must be an attempt by the agency to by-pass the representative and negotiate directly with employees.

See Department of the Navy, Naval Air Station, Fallon, Nevada, FLRC No. 74A-80, (October 24, 1975). Despite the fact that management herein read the telegram to the employees re the action taken at the Philadelphia Program Center, I do not construe that conduct as tantamount to by-passing the union. It was an attempt to respond to a question raised by the employees as to the telegram and was, in my opinion, nowise an attempt to negotiate with the group re the downgrading or other working conditions. Under those circumstances there was no obligation to either notify the Complainant, or bargain with it, regarding the subject matter raised during the May 19 meeting. Accordingly, the exclusion of Armet from the meeting, based on his not belonging to the Quality Appraisal group, was proper and within the prerogative of management.

Moreover, I find no merit in Complainant's argument that the ouster of Armet from said meeting either undermined or denigrated the union. Bagon made no disparaging remarks about the bargaining representative, nor did he refer to the latter with disdain. He merely stated that Armet had no right to attend the meeting and asked him to leave. Such conduct is scarcely akin to utterances which indicate to employees that management views the bargaining agent with contempt so as to constitute interference under 19(a)(1) of the Order. Cf. Vandenberg Air Force Base, California, A/SLMR No. 383; and Army Training Center, Infantry, Laundry Facility, Ft. Jackson, S.C., A/SLMR No. 242.

Accordingly, and in view of the foregoing I conclude that Respondent neither engaged in a formal discussion with employees re working conditions in intravention of 10(e), nor by-passed the union representative in an effort to deal with employees as to such matters. Further, I am constrained to conclude the ouster of union agent Arnet from the meeting on May 19 was not, under the circumstances, an act of interference, restraint, or coercion under the Order. Therefore, I find Respondent did not violate 19(a)(1) and (6) of the Order.

RECOMMENDATION

It having been found that Respondent engaged in a conduct violative of Section 19(a)(1) or (6) of the Order, it is recommended that the complaint herein be dismissed in its entirety.

SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

DEFENSE LOGISTICS AGENCY,
DEFENSE CONTRACT ADMINISTRATION
SERVICES REGION, LOS ANGELES
A/SLMR No. 958

This case involved a twice amended unfair labor practice complaint filed by Paul Yampolsky (Complainant) alleging that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) and (2) of the Order by giving the Complainant a performance rating based on his activities as a labor union representative, rather than as an employee of the Respondent.

At the hearing, the Complainant requested a continuance of the hearing on the following grounds: (1) The evidence adduced at the hearing could have had an impact upon a statutory appeal hearing scheduled for later in the month concerning his removal from the Federal service; and (2) his appointed representative was not present at the instant hearing due to a personal emergency of an unknown nature. The Respondent opposed the motion, contending, in part, that the Union official present at the hearing was qualified to represent the Complainant in the absence of his appointed representative. The Administrative Law Judge denied the Complainant's motion for a continuance as, in his view, neither the fact that another proceeding was pending, nor the unsupported statement that the Complainant's appointed representative had a personal emergency, was a showing of good cause. Moreover, in the view of the Administrative Law Judge, the Complainant failed to establish that the Union official present at the hearing was not capable of representing the Complainant. Thereafter, the Complainant refused to proceed.

Finding that the Complainant had failed to sustain his burden of proof in establishing that Respondent had violated the Order as alleged in the complaint, the Administrative Law Judge recommended that the complaint be dismissed.

Noting particularly the absence of exceptions, the Assistant Secretary adopted the findings, conclusions, and recommendation of the Administrative Law Judge and ordered that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety.

RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

Statement of the Case

Pursuant to a second amended complaint filed June 6, 1977, alleging the Defense Logistics Agency, Defense Contracts Administration Services Region, Los Angeles ("Respondent") violated sections 19(a)(1) and (2) of Executive Order 11491, as amended, the Regional Administrator, San Francisco Region, June 20, 1977, issued a notice scheduling a formal hearing for July 11, 1977. At the request of Mr. Paul Yampolsky, complainant, an order rescheduling the hearing for August 3, 1977, was sent July 7, 1977.

The complaint alleged Mr. Yampolsky was given a performance rating as a labor union representative rather than as an employee of the agency.

Findings of Fact and Conclusions

August 3, 1977, respondent appeared through its counsel, ready to proceed, with numerous witnesses present. Mr. Yampolsky appeared with his representative, Mr. Thomas O'Leary. The hearing was opened, and several documents were received into evidence. A recess was then taken while the parties attempted to settle the matter. The settlement discussion was not fruitful.

During the recess Mr. Yampolsky talked to his attorney by telephone. It was reported the attorney advised him to request a continuance for the reason evidence adduced at the hearing could have an impact upon another hearing scheduled for August 24, 1977, which was an appeal of his removal from federal service. A second ground for the requested continuance was that Mr. Bill Shoats was complainant's usual representative, and Mr. Shoats could not be present due to a personal emergency of an unknown nature.

The motion for continuance was denied as not only untimely, but for the reasons there was an inadequate showing concerning absence of the usual representative and the mere pendancy of another hearing was an inadequate basis for continuance.

A one and one-half hour recess was taken to enable Mr. Yampolsky to present a greater showing of emergency.

Following the recess, no greater showing of emergency was made. Except for a delay to await the appearance of a witness, the motion for continuance was denied.

Then, using as a reason the possible effect of testimony on the scheduled removal hearing, Mr. Yampolsky refused to go forward with any evidence.

Respondent then moved for dismissal of the charges of complainant.

The Administrative Law Judge has the authority to rule upon a request for continuance. 29 C.F.R. §§ 203.16(j) and 203.19(3). As in any proceeding, a continuance should be granted only upon a showing of good cause. Prejudice must be shown to justify a continuance, and the judge's decision may not be arbitrary or capricious. Treasury Department, Bureau of Customs, Region IV, A/SLMR No. 152.

The mere fact another proceeding is pending is not a showing of good cause. Neither was there a showing Mr. O'Leary was not capable of representing the complainant. And, the unsupported statement that the usual representative had a personal emergency is not good cause.

When complainant refused to go forward with proof to substantiate his charges, he failed in his burden of proof as required by 29 C.F.R. § 203.15.1/ See 4500 Air Base Wing, Langley Air Force Base, Virginia, A/SLMR No. 760, where the Assistant Secretary adopted the Administrative Law Judge's recommendation that respondent's motion to dismiss be granted for failure of complainant to proceed with the hearing.

Recommended Order

Having found complainant has failed to prove tne allegations of the complaint, I recommend that the complaint herein be dismissed in its entirety.

SUMMARY OF DECISION AND ORDER OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
PURSUANT TO SECTION 6 OF EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491, AS AMENDED

SOUTHERN REGION,

A/SLMR No. 959

This case involved an unfair labor practice complaint filed by an individual (Complainant) alleging that the Respondent violated Section 19(a)(1) of the Order by dealing with the exclusive representative, rather than the Complainant as an individual, in processing the Complainant's prior unfair labor practice charge.

The Administrative Law Judge concluded that the Respondent had not engaged in conduct violative of the Order. He noted that the Respondent, at worst, had mistakenly, for a brief time, dealt with the wrong party to resolve the complaint and that the Respondent, once advised of the mistake, attempted to deal with the Complainant within the prescribed 30 day period. Accordingly, the Administrative Law Judge recommended that the complaint be dismissed.

Noting particularly the absence of exceptions, the Assistant Secretary adopted the findings, conclusions and recommendations of the Administrative Law Judge and ordered that the complaint be dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER

On October 26, 1977, Administrative Law Judge Edward C. 1/ At the hearing, the Administrative Law Judge overruled the Respondent's objection to his determination that the record herein would remain open for ten days subsequent to closing of the hearing, so that a witness of the Complainant could be allowed to testify by affidavit. Subsequent to adjournment, a statement was received into evidence by the Administrative Law Judge. In view of the fact that no apparent weight was given to the statement by the Administrative Law Judge, and that no exceptions were filed herein, I find that no prejudice was suffered by the Respondent as a result of the Administrative Law Judge's ruling. Cf. National Weather Service, A/SLMR No. 847, at footnote 1 (1977).

2/ In reaching my conclusion herein, I specifically do not adopt the Administrative Law Judge's interpretation of the decision in Veterans Administration Hospital, Charleston, South Carolina, 1 A/SLMR 400, A/SLMR No. 87 (1971) that the dilatory processing of an unfair labor practice complaint is a violation of the Order. In this regard, I note particularly that the violative conduct found in the above cited decision pertained specifically to the Respondent Activity's dilatory tactics in the processing of a grievance under the negotiated grievance procedure.

RECOMMENDED DECISION AND ORDER

Statement of the Case

Pursuant to a complaint filed November 26, 1976, under Executive Order 11491, as amended ("The Order") by Orvil Robinson against the Southern Region, National Weather Service, a Notice of Hearing on Complaint was issued by the Regional Administrator for the Kansas City Region on June 29, 1977. The Complaint alleged that by letter dated August 4, 1976, mailed to Carl Tyozandlak, Acting Chairman, Southern Region Council of Locals, NAGE, respondent did interfere, coerce and restrain complainant from exercising his right to file an Unfair Labor Complaint as guaranteed by the Order and in violation of section 19(a)(1) of that Order. The crux of the complaint is that respondent allegedly refused to deal directly with Mr. Robinson and instead attempted to deal with the union, thus hindering Mr. Robinson in his desire to prosecute this complaint. A hearing was held in El Paso, Texas, August 9, 1977, at which time exhibits were received and witnesses examined.

Following the hearing the unsworn statement of Alan J. Whitney, entitled "Affidavit" was received. It has been marked and received as Complainant's Exhibit No. 7(C-7). In addition, the complaint has been marked and received as ALJ Exhibit No. 1.

Upon the basis of the entire record the following findings of fact, conclusions and recommendations are made.

Findings of Fact and Conclusions

Two complaints have been filed by complainant alleging Unfair Labor Practices, of which this is the second. This complaint alleges a violation occurred in the way the first complaint was handled.

It is contended respondent "actively pursued a course during the processing of the (first) pre-complaint charge filed by Mr. Robinson which necessarily had a chilling effect on Mr. Robinson...."

Complainant alleges respondent's tactics were dilatory and were intended to interfere, restrain, and coerce complainant in violation of section 19(a)(1) of the Order.

The regulations, 29 C.F.R. § 203.1 "Who May File Complaint," provide:

> "A complaint that an activity, agency or labor organization has engaged in an act prohibited under section 19 of the Order or has failed to take any action required by the Order, may be filed by an employee, an activity, agency, or a labor organization."

Hence, it is clear a complaint may be filed by an individual, and it is clear that individual need not file through a labor organization.

July 18, 1976, complainant sent the first pre-complaint letter (C-1). The letter read as follows:

> "This is an Unfair Labor Practice charge against the National Weather Service for violation of Executive Order 11491 §§ 19(a)(4) and 19(a)(2).
>
> On or about July 13, 1976, at 1:10 p.m. in the National Weather Service office, El Paso, Texas, Robert Orton, meteriologist in charge, handed me a written admonishment for the record in order to discriminate against me for my union activities. Orvil Robinson"

Complainant, at the time, was the grievance coordinator and the president of the National Weather Service local.

The letter that gives rise to the complaint in question (Exhibit C-5) was dated August 4, 1976, was from B. B. Boatman, Labor Management Relations Specialist for the southern region of the National Weather Service, and was directed to Mr. Carl V. Tyozandlak, Acting Chairman for the Southern Region Council of Locals, NAGE, a carbon copy was sent to complainant, and it contained a copy of complainant's letter of July 18, 1976.

It is to be noted that the day complainant sent his letter of July 18, 1976, he went on leave and was not available until August 4, 1976. It is to be further noted that under the agreement between the respondent and the union exclusive recognition was at the regional level.

Mr. Boatman testified that he was aware complainant was both the grievance coordinator and the local union president when the letter of July 18, 1976 was sent. Mr. Boatman believed complainant was filing a union, and not an individual, complaint. Mr. Boatman further testified he had received an indication Mr. Tyozandlak was working with Mr. Robinson in preparing an unfair labor practice complaint. The basis of this belief was a letter from Mr. Tyozandlak to complainant dated July 12, 1976, (Exhibit R-3). It was for these reasons Mr. Boatman wrote the letter of August 4, 1977. I found Mr. Boatman to be a believable and forthright witness, and I credit his testimony.

It was during an August 9, 1976, telephone conversation between Mr. Tyozandlak and Mr. Boatman that the latter was advised that the former believed the complaint to be an individual complaint and not a union complaint. Mr. Boatman thereafter treated the complaint of Mr. Robinson as an individual complaint and not as one made by a union official. Thereafter correspondence was direct with Mr. Robinson.

August 11, 1976, Mr. McCutcheon, personnel officer for the Southern Region of the National Weather Service, wrote to Mr. Robinson and suggested resolution under the informal agency grievance procedures.

29 C.F.R. § 203.3 provides as follows:

> "A party desiring to file a complaint alleging an Unfair Labor Practice under section 19 of the Order ... must take the following action first: ...
> "(b)(1) if the parties are unable to dispose informally of the charge within thirty days the charging party may file a complaint...."

Thus, complainant was unable to file a formal complaint until August 18, 1977. Long before that date Respondent was dealing with complainant individually. And, as noted previously, it was not possible to deal with complainant until he returned from leave after August 4, 1976.

Of course, dilatory processing of an Unfair Labor Practice complaint is a violation of the Order. Veterans Administration Hospital, Charleston, A/SLMR No. 87. As pointed out by the Assistant Secretary at page 404 of that decision, however, "a test of reasonableness must be applied on a case by case basis."

So viewing the instant case not only do the actions of respondent appear reasonable, but I do not believe they had a "chilling effect" upon the complainant.

The worst that can be said of respondent is that respondent mistakenly, for a brief time, dealt with the wrong party in an attempt to resolve the complaint. In U. S. Department of the Army, U. S. Army Missle Command, Huntsville, Alabama, A/SLMR 367, a similar situation arose. Respondent there questioned that the union representative was the correct agent with whom respondent was to negotiate. Upon being advised the agent was indeed the correct person, respondent then met and attempted informal resolution within the prescribed thirty-day period. The Assistant Secreatary there concluded:

> "In my view, such circumstances do not warrant a finding that the Respondent improperly sought to obstruct, prevent, or delay the processing of the unfair labor charge."

The facts of this case warrant a similar result.

Recommendation

Having found that respondent has not engaged in conduct violative of section 19(a)(1) of the Order, I recommend that the complaint herein be dismissed in its entirety.
