AFTERWORD
FOREWORD

The Federal Labor Relations Authority’s (FLRA’s) three-Member, decisional component (the Authority) has prepared this Guide. The FLRA, an independent agency within the executive branch of the federal government, administers the labor-relations program under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) for the federal sector.

A primary responsibility of the Authority under the Statute is to resolve “negotiability” appeals. As discussed in further detail in this Guide, a union may file a negotiability appeal when: (1) an agency has claimed that the union’s bargaining proposal is outside the statutory duty to bargain; or (2) an agency head has disapproved, as allegedly contrary to law, a contract that either an agency and a union have agreed to, or the Federal Service Impasses Panel (FSIP) has imposed.

This Guide is designed to help parties understand the negotiability process and their rights and responsibilities in connection with that process. An understanding of the statutory and regulatory scheme will enhance the parties’ ability to resolve their disputes as completely and expeditiously as possible. Given the broad range of substantive issues that can arise in the negotiability process, detailed discussions of specific subject matters of bargaining are beyond the scope of this Guide. Instead, this Guide is intended to provide parties with information concerning:

- the key terms and concepts involved in negotiability cases;
- the negotiability process;
- various bases for dismissing negotiability petitions;
- some complex, substantive issues that frequently arise in negotiability cases; and
- some of the most frequently cited Authority and U.S. Court of Appeals decisions.

This Guide is not an official interpretation of the Statute or the FLRA’s Regulations, and is not the Authority’s official policy. It should not be considered as legal advice or as a substitute for adequate preparation and research by the party representatives. The case law in this area is constantly evolving. It is crucial that parties research court, Authority, and other administrative decisions that may apply to their particular cases. We encourage you to visit the FLRA’s web site, www.flra.gov.

In addition, the FLRA’s web site contains other information that may be useful to bargaining parties, such as: the Office of the General Counsel’s Unfair Labor Practice Case Law Outline, which includes additional information regarding the statutory duty to bargain; and information regarding the FSIP process.
TERMS AND CONCEPTS

1.1 Introduction

There are various terms and concepts that parties must be familiar with in order to understand the negotiability process and their responsibilities under that process. This section discusses some of the most significant of these terms and concepts.

1.2 Proposals

A proposal is any matter offered for bargaining that the parties have not yet agreed to.\(^5\) A proposal is the subject of a negotiability appeal when an agency has declared, during bargaining\(^6\) or FSIP proceedings,\(^7\) that the proposal is outside the duty to bargain.\(^8\)

1.3 Provisions

A provision is contract language that an agency and a union have agreed to include in their collective-bargaining agreement,\(^9\) or that the FSIP has imposed as part of their agreement.\(^10\) A provision is the subject of a negotiability appeal when the agency head has disapproved the agreement as allegedly contrary to law during the process of “agency-head review” under § 7114(c) of the Statute (which is discussed in section 1.12 below).\(^11\)

1.4 How the Authority Determines the Meaning of Proposals and Provisions

Before the Authority can determine whether a proposal is within the duty to bargain, or whether a provision is consistent with law, the Authority must determine what the proposal or provision means. If the parties do not dispute the meaning of a proposal or provision, and that meaning is consistent with the proposal’s or provision’s wording, then the Authority bases its negotiability determination on the undisputed meaning.\(^12\) In negotiability cases involving provisions, the Authority defers to the meaning that the agency and union negotiators ascribe to it; the Authority does not defer to the agency head’s interpretation of it.13

Where the parties dispute the meaning of a proposal or provision, the Authority looks to the proposal’s or provision’s plain wording and the union’s explanation of the proposal’s or provision’s meaning.14 If the union’s explanation is consistent with the plain wording, then the Authority adopts that explanation for the purpose of assessing the proposal’s or the provision’s negotiability.15 But when a union’s explanation is inconsistent with the plain wording, the Authority does not adopt that explanation and, instead, bases the negotiability decision on the wording.16

The meaning that the Authority adopts in resolving a negotiability case applies “in other proceedings, unless modified by the parties through subsequent agreement.”17

1.5 Mandatory Subjects of Bargaining

Mandatory subjects of bargaining are subjects that, upon request, a party must bargain over.18 These subjects include, among other things, procedures under § 7106(b)(2) of the Statute and appropriate arrangements under § 7106(b)(3) of the Statute (unless those procedures or appropriate arrangements are contrary to some other law).19

1.6 Prohibited Subjects of Bargaining

Prohibited subjects of bargaining are subjects that parties cannot agree to, even if they want to, because the law prohibits them from doing so.20 For example, parties cannot agree to matters that affect a management right under § 7106(a) of the Statute unless those matters fit within an exception to management’s rights.21

21 See NLRB Union, Local 21, 36 FLRA 853, 857-60 (1990).
1.7 Permissive Subjects of Bargaining

Sometimes parties are permitted to bargain over matters even though they are not required to do so. These matters are called “permissive” subjects of bargaining. Some common examples are matters set forth in § 7106(b)(1) of the Statute, supervisors’ and managers’ conditions of employment, and agreements to bargain below the level of the agency at which bargaining between the agency and the union is required – also known as the “level of recognition.”

Agency heads cannot disapprove agreements concerning permissive subjects of bargaining. That is, they cannot disapprove agreements merely because the agencies’ negotiators could have chosen not to bargain over the permissive subjects contained in those agreements. So once an agency’s negotiators have chosen to reach an agreement concerning a permissive subject, the agency cannot later undo that choice for the duration of the agreement.

1.8 Negotiability Disputes

A negotiability dispute is a disagreement between a union and an agency “concerning the legality of a proposal or provision.” Such a dispute exists when a union “disagrees with an agency contention that . . . a proposal is outside the duty to bargain, including disagreement with an agency contention that a proposal is bargainable only at [the agency’s] election.” A negotiability dispute concerning a proposal may arise during bargaining, or when an agency claims, during FSIP proceedings, that the proposal is outside the duty to bargain. And negotiability disputes concerning provisions arise when a union “disagrees with an agency head’s disapproval of a provision as contrary to law.”

As discussed in section 4.2 below, the Statute requires agencies to bargain only over “conditions of employment” of bargaining-unit employees, so one type of negotiability dispute may involve a claim that a proposal does not concern such a condition of employment. In addition, parties cannot reach agreements that are “inconsistent with any [f]ederal law or any [g]overnment-wide rule or regulation.”

Therefore, some examples of negotiability disputes include claims that proposals or provisions are inconsistent with: the Statute; a federal statute other than the Statute; an executive order; or a government-wide regulation. Further, as discussed in section 4.5 below, agencies are not required to bargain over proposals that conflict with an agency rule or regulation for which there is a “compelling need,” so a negotiability dispute may involve a claim that a proposal is inconsistent with such a rule or regulation.

Agencies often rely on § 7106 of the Statute to claim that a proposal or provision is nonnegotiable. Thus, some common examples of negotiability disputes include disagreements concerning whether a proposal or provision: (1) affects a management right under § 7106(a); (2) involves a permissive subject under § 7106(b)(1); (3) is a negotiable procedure under § 7106(b)(2); or (4) is a negotiable, appropriate arrangement under § 7106(b)(3). This Guide discusses § 7106 in section 4.3 below.

The Authority determines whether a negotiability dispute exists on a proposal-by-proposal or provision-by-provision basis: If some individual proposals or provisions in a negotiability appeal present negotiability disputes, but others do not, then the Authority will resolve the negotiability of only the proposals or provisions that present negotiability disputes. For example, if an agency does not challenge a particular proposal’s legality, but declares it outside the duty to bargain only on the basis of a “bargaining-obligation dispute” (defined in section 1.9 below) – such as a claim that the proposal is “covered by” the parties’ existing agreement (discussed in section 4.7(a) below) – then the Authority will not resolve whether that proposal is within the duty to bargain. Instead, the Authority will “dismiss” the union’s petition as to that proposal.

1.9 Bargaining-Obligation Disputes

A bargaining-obligation dispute is a disagreement between a union and an agency concerning whether, in the specific circumstances of a particular case, the parties must bargain over a proposal that otherwise may be negotiable.47 Bargaining-obligation disputes involve claims regarding whether the Statute requires bargaining—not claims regarding whether the parties’ collective-bargaining agreement requires bargaining.48 Examples of bargaining-obligation disputes include agency claims that: (1) a proposal concerns a matter that is “covered by” a collective-bargaining agreement; (2) bargaining is not required over a change in bargaining-unit employees’ conditions of employment because the effect of the change is “de minimis”;49 and (3) the union is attempting to bargain at the wrong level of the agency.50 Those three examples are discussed in sections 4.7(a), 4.7(b), and 4.7(c) below.

If a negotiability proceeding involves both a negotiability dispute and a bargaining-obligation dispute, then the Authority may resolve both types of disputes in the negotiability proceeding.51 If the Authority resolves the bargaining-obligation dispute, then its decision will include an order to bargain, but will not include remedies that could be obtained in an unfair-labor-practice (ULP) proceeding under § 7118(a)(7) of the Statute, such as a cease-and-desist order or an order to post a notice.52

If a case involves only a bargaining-obligation dispute, then the Authority will not resolve that dispute in a negotiability proceeding.53 Instead, the Authority will dismiss the petition, or the portion of the petition that presents only a bargaining-obligation dispute.54 Any resolution of those disputes would need to occur in other proceedings, such as ULP or grievance proceedings.55

1.10 Use of the Term “Nonnegotiable”

In the past, the Authority used the term “nonnegotiable” to refer to both prohibited and permissive subjects of bargaining.56 In AFGE, Local 32, the Authority stated that, consistent with the wording of the Statute, it would begin to describe bargaining proposals as either “within or outside the duty to bargain.” This Guide often discusses proposals (which are within or outside the duty to bargain) and provisions (which are or are not contrary to law) together. For purposes of brevity, this Guide uses the term “nonnegotiable” to describe both proposals that are outside the duty to bargain and provisions that are contrary to law.

1.11 Allegation of Nonnegotiability

An allegation of nonnegotiability is an agency claim that a union’s proposal is not within the agency’s duty to bargain in good faith. As discussed in section 2.2(a) below, an agency allegation must be in writing before it triggers the time limit for the union to file a petition for review involving a proposal. However, neither the Statute nor the Authority’s Regulations requires that an allegation of nonnegotiability be made with any particular degree of specificity.

1.12 Agency-Head Review/Disapproval

If a union and an agency reach, or the FSIP imposes, a written agreement, then the parties must submit that agreement to the agency head. The agency head then determines whether, in his or her opinion, the agreement is consistent with law. If the agency head determines that one or more of the provisions in the agreement is contrary to law, then he or she will disapprove the entire agreement in writing. This is called the “agency-head disapproval.” The agency head must issue this disapproval within thirty days of: the date on which the agency and the union executed the agreement; or, in the case of agreements that the FSIP has imposed, “the date on which the FSIP decision was issued to, and served on, the parties.” If the agency head fails to timely disapprove the agreement, then the agreement takes effect and becomes binding on the parties, subject to the provisions of the Statute and “any other applicable law, rule, or regulation.”

An agency head’s authority to disapprove an agreement is narrower than an agency bargaining representative’s authority to declare a proposal outside the duty to bargain. Specifically, the agency head “shall approve” agreements that are consistent with the Statute “and any other applicable law, rule, or regulation.”\textsuperscript{68} Thus, the agency head cannot disapprove an agreement merely because it concerns a permissive subject.\textsuperscript{69} And, as discussed in section 4.3(c)5.ii. below, in NTEU,\textsuperscript{70} the Authority held that agency heads cannot disapprove arrangements negotiated under § 7106(b)(3) of the Statute unless those arrangements “abrogate” a management right.\textsuperscript{71} (Please note that, as of the date on the front of this Guide, this issue is on appeal to the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit.\textsuperscript{72})

1.13 Union’s Petition for Review

A petition for review is an appeal that a union files with the Authority to request resolution of a negotiability dispute.\textsuperscript{73} As discussed in section 2.1 below, the union’s petition for review initiates the negotiability process before the Authority.\textsuperscript{74} The contents of, and procedural requirements involving, union petitions for review are discussed in sections 2.2 and 2.4 below.

1.14 Post-Petition Conference

After the union files its petition for review, the Authority schedules a “post-petition conference” – normally, a telephone conference – with the union and agency representatives in the case.\textsuperscript{75} Parties must: participate in these conferences (or designate someone to participate on their behalf); be knowledgeable about the dispute; and have the authority to discuss and resolve matters.\textsuperscript{76} Post-petition conferences are discussed in section 2.5 below.

1.15 Collaboration and Alternative Dispute Resolution Office (CADRO)

CADRO, an office within the Authority, “assists parties in reaching agreements to resolve disputes.”\textsuperscript{77} CADRO engages in interest-based mediation and facilitation to help parties resolve cases outside of the formal, litigative process. Participation is fully voluntary: Parties are not required to use CADRO’s services.\textsuperscript{78} However, CADRO is often successful at helping parties resolve or at least narrow their disputes, so the Authority encourages parties to consider using CADRO’s services. CADRO’s role in the negotiability process is discussed in section 2.5 below.

1.16  Agency’s Statement of Position

The agency’s statement of position is a document that the agency files after the union files its petition.\textsuperscript{79} It is typically due after the post-petition conference. The statement of position is where the agency must explain why it believes a proposal is outside the duty to bargain or why a provision is contrary to law.\textsuperscript{80} The contents of, and procedural requirements involving, agency statements of position are discussed in section 2.6 below.

1.17  Union’s Response

The union’s response is a document that the union may file after the agency files its statement of position.\textsuperscript{81} The response is where the union must set forth any disagreements that it has with claims in the agency’s statement of position.\textsuperscript{82} The contents of, and procedural requirements involving, union responses are discussed in section 2.7 below.

1.18  Agency’s Reply

The agency’s reply is a document that the agency may file after the union files its response.\textsuperscript{83} Although §7117 of the Statute does not expressly provide for the agency’s reply,\textsuperscript{84} the Authority created this additional filing by regulation because the Authority recognized that a union may raise certain arguments for the first time in its response.\textsuperscript{85} Thus, the reply is limited to responding to the arguments raised for the first time in the union’s response; it cannot raise new bases for alleging that a proposal or provision is nonnegotiable if the agency could have raised those claims in its statement of position.\textsuperscript{86} The contents of, and procedural requirements involving, agency replies are discussed in section 2.8 below.

1.19 Parties’ Burdens (and Failure to Meet Burdens)

Each party in a negotiability case is responsible for creating a record and supporting its arguments. The union has the burden of raising and supporting arguments that: (1) a proposal is within the duty to bargain (or negotiable at the agency’s election, if it is making such a claim), or a provision is not contrary to law; and (2) if the union is requesting “severance” (discussed in section 1.20 below), why severance is appropriate. The agency has the burden of raising and supporting arguments that: (1) the proposal is outside the duty to bargain, or the provision is contrary to law; and (2) where applicable, why severance is not appropriate.

Where appropriate, the Authority will consider a party’s failure to raise and support an argument to be a waiver of that argument. And, where appropriate, if one party fails to respond to another party’s argument or assertion, then the Authority will treat that failure to respond as a concession of that agreement or assertion. Further, if a party makes an argument but fails to support it, then the Authority may reject that argument as a “bare assertion.”

Absent good cause, if a union could have made, but did not make, an argument in its petition for review or its response, then the union cannot make that argument at any other stage of the negotiability proceeding, or in “any other proceeding.” Similarly, absent good cause, if an agency could have made, but did not make, an argument in its statement of position or its reply, then the agency cannot make that argument at any other stage of the negotiability proceeding, or in “any other proceeding.”

1.20 Severance

Sometimes a union may want to know – in the event that the Authority finds the union’s proposal or provision nonnegotiable as a whole – whether particular portions of its proposal or provision are nonetheless negotiable. In that situation, the union should request “severance” of the proposal or provision. Section 2424.2(h) of the Authority’s Regulations defines “severance” as the division of a proposal or provision into separate parts having independent meaning, for the purpose of determining whether any of the separate parts is within the duty to bargain or is contrary to law. In effect, severance results in the creation of separate proposals or provisions. Severance applies when some parts of the proposal or provision are determined to be outside the duty to bargain or contrary to law.

A union may request severance in either its petition for review or its response. If it does so, then it must explain how each severed portion of the proposal or provision may stand alone and operate. The union must also meet the requirements for specific information set forth in §2424.22(b) (for requests made in petitions), and §2424.25(c) (for requests made in responses) of the Authority’s Regulations.

If a union has requested severance, and the agency opposes the union’s request, then the agency must explain with specificity why it believes that severance is not appropriate. If the agency’s statement of position opposes severance, then the union’s response must respond to the agency’s arguments.

1.21 Hearing Requests and Other Factfinding Procedures

Under §2424.31 of the Authority’s Regulations, the Authority may engage in various factfinding procedures in a negotiability case, including: directing the parties to provide specific documents; directing the parties to provide answers to specific factual questions; referring the matter to a hearing; or taking “any other appropriate action.” Either party may request a hearing, but the requesting party must give the reasons for its request. And the standard for granting a hearing request is high: The Authority will do so “[w]hen necessary to resolve disputed issues of material fact.” Absent a hearing or other factfinding procedure, the Authority bases its decision on the documents in the record.

1.22 Other Avenues for Resolving Negotiability Issues

Section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Statute authorizes the Authority to “resolve issues relating to the duty to bargain in good faith under § 7117(c)” of the Statute. The Authority has held that, consistent with § 7105(a)(2)(E), only the Authority may resolve negotiability disputes that arise under § 7117(c).

Consistent with these principles, the FSIP and interest arbitrators cannot make negotiability determinations to resolve questions concerning the duty to bargain, unless the Authority previously has resolved “substantively identical” duty-to-bargain issues. By contrast, grievance arbitrators and the FLRA’s administrative law judges may resolve negotiability issues in the course of resolving duty-to-bargain questions. But their decisions must be consistent with the Statute and Authority precedent.
THE NEGOTIABILITY PROCESS

2.1 Union Files Petition for Review

A union’s petition for review initiates the negotiability process with the Authority.\textsuperscript{114} Only a union representative – not an agency representative or any other individual – may file a petition.\textsuperscript{115}

2.2 Time Limit for Filing Petition

The time limit for filing a petition depends on: (1) whether the petition involves proposal(s) or provision(s); and (2) what prompts the filing.

(a) Proposals

As explained in sections 2.2(a)1., 2.2(a)2., and 2.2(a)3. below, there are several events that can prompt the filing of a negotiability appeal of disputed proposals. But please note, at the outset, that in cases involving proposals, $ 7117(c)(2) of the Statute requires the union to file its petition with the Authority “on or before the [fifteenth] day after the date on which the agency first makes the allegation” of nonnegotiability,\textsuperscript{116} and the Authority may not extend or waive this time limit.\textsuperscript{117} So if a petition is filed too late, then the Authority will dismiss it with prejudice – in other words, the union will not be able to refile it.\textsuperscript{118}

1. Union requests, in writing, a written allegation of nonnegotiability, and agency responds

If a union asks an agency, in writing, to provide the union with a written allegation of nonnegotiability,\textsuperscript{119} and the agency provides such a written allegation,\textsuperscript{120} then the union must file its petition with the Authority within fifteen days after the date on which the agency served the union with the written allegation.\textsuperscript{121}

\textsuperscript{115} Id. $ 2424.20.

\textsuperscript{118} AFGE, Local 3529, 58 FLRA 151, 151-52 (2002) (AFGE 3529) (denying reconsideration of Authority order dismissing petition as untimely where it was filed more than fifteen days after union received agency’s written allegation of nonnegotiability).

\textsuperscript{120} Id. $ 2424.11(b).
\textsuperscript{121} Id. $ 2424.21(a); see also 63 Fed. Reg. 66,405-07 (1998) (stating Authority’s intention, in revising its negotiability Regulations, to retain procedure of both requesting and providing allegations of nonnegotiability in writing).
In cases where a union requests a written allegation and the agency provides one, the union must include with its petition: (1) a copy of the agency’s written allegation; and (2) a copy of the union’s written request, if the agency’s allegation does not indicate the date of the union’s request.

2. Union requests, in writing, a written allegation of nonnegotiability, and agency does not respond

If a union asks an agency, in writing, to provide the union with a written allegation of nonnegotiability, and the agency does not respond in writing, then the union may file a petition at any time. But the union must give the agency ten days to respond to the union’s written request.

If the union chooses to file a petition in a situation where the agency provides no written allegation of nonnegotiability, then the union must include with its petition evidence that it requested such a written allegation (for example, a copy of the union’s written request) and allowed ten days for the agency to respond. If the union doesn’t do this, then any union petition filed during that period will be considered premature. In that situation, the Authority will issue an order to show cause why the petition should not be dismissed without prejudice to the union’s right to refile at a later, appropriate time.

3. Agency provides a written, unrequested allegation of nonnegotiability

Where the union has not asked the agency to provide it with a written allegation of nonnegotiability, but the agency does so anyway, this is called an unrequested allegation of nonnegotiability. In this case, the union has two options.

The union’s first option is to file its petition. If it chooses this option, then it must file its petition (including a copy of the agency’s written allegation) within fifteen days of receiving the allegation. If it fails to file within fifteen days, then the Authority will dismiss the petition, with prejudice, as untimely. (See section 2.14 below for further discussion of what happens when parties fail to comply with the Authority’s procedural and other requirements.)

The union’s second option is to ignore the unrequested allegation, continue bargaining with the agency (if it so chooses), and later request, in writing, a written allegation of nonnegotiability from the agency.127 If the union chooses this option, then the time limit for filing its petition depends on what the agency does. If the agency provides the union with a written allegation of nonnegotiability, then the union must file its petition (including a copy of the agency’s written allegation) within fifteen days of receiving that allegation.128 But if the agency does not provide a written allegation, then the union may file its petition at any time after the ten-day period expires.129

Moreover, if an agency serves a union with an unrequested allegation of nonnegotiability while the parties are before the FSIP, then the union has the same two options: (1) respond to the unrequested allegation of nonnegotiability and timely file a petition (including a copy of the agency’s written allegation) with the Authority; or (2) ignore the unrequested allegation of nonnegotiability made before the FSIP, later make a written request for a written allegation of nonnegotiability from the agency, and timely file its petition with the Authority.130 Please note that, as discussed in section 1.22 above, the FSIP may resolve certain negotiability disputes. So if the union chooses not to file a petition in response to an agency’s unrequested allegation of nonnegotiability, then the union runs the risk that the FSIP or an FSIP-directed arbitrator may resolve the dispute. More information regarding the FSIP can be found on the FLRA’s web site.

4. Allegations of nonnegotiability, and requests for such allegations, must be in writing

If the agency claims only orally, and not in writing, that a proposal is outside the duty to bargain, then the union cannot file a petition. But a union may trigger its ability to file a petition by asking the agency, in writing, for a written allegation of nonnegotiability. And if, after ten days, the agency has not provided a written allegation, the union may file its petition with the Authority.

Union requests for agency allegations also must be in writing. If a union files a petition but provides no evidence that it made a written request for an agency allegation, then the Authority may find the union’s petition premature.

(b) Provisions

As discussed in section 1.12 above, if a union and an agency reach a written agreement, or the FSIP imposes one on them, then the agency head must review that

If the agency head timely disapproves the agreement (within thirty days of the agreement’s execution),\textsuperscript{132} then the union \textit{must} file its petition for review with the Authority within fifteen days of service of the disapproval.\textsuperscript{133} Please note that if a union files a petition for review in response to an untimely agency-head disapproval, then the Authority will dismiss the petition. This is because, without a timely agency-head disapproval, the agreement automatically goes into effect on the thirty-first day after its execution,\textsuperscript{134} and there is no negotiability dispute that the Authority may address under §7117 of the Statute.\textsuperscript{135}

\textbf{(c) Date of service of allegation of nonnegotiability or agency-head disapproval}

As discussed above, a union’s petition must be filed within fifteen days of either: service of the agency’s allegation of nonnegotiability on the union (in proposal cases),\textsuperscript{136} or service of an agency head’s disapproval (in provision cases).\textsuperscript{137} The date of service of the agency’s allegation or disapproval is the date on which the allegation or disapproval is: deposited in the U.S. mail; delivered in person; deposited with a commercial-delivery service that will provide a record showing the date on which the document was given to the delivery service; or transmitted by email (where the receiving party has agreed to be served by email).\textsuperscript{138} If the allegation or disapproval is served by mail or commercial delivery, then five days are added to the period for filing the petition (unless the allegation or disapproval also has been served on the same or previous day by a non-mail or non-commercial delivery method such as email).\textsuperscript{139} The Authority may not extend or waive the time limit for filing a petition for review.\textsuperscript{140}

2.3 Diagram Summarizing Pre-Petition Process

The following diagram summarizes the various scenarios that may lead to a union filing a petition for review:

2.4 Format and Content of the Petition

A union may file its petition by using either: (1) an Authority form, available at www.flra.gov/authority_forms (or through the FLRA’s eFiling system); or (2) plain paper, and providing the same information that the Authority form requests. Although unions are not required to use the Authority form, the Authority encourages them to do so because the form is a useful guide and reminds them to provide all of the required information. If a union fails to provide all of the required information, then the Authority may dismiss the petition.

As noted previously, in a case involving a proposal, a union must include with its petition: (1) a copy of the agency’s written allegation of nonnegotiability, if the agency has provided one; or (2) evidence that the union requested such an allegation, if the agency has not provided one. In a case involving a provision, the union must include a copy of the agency-head disapproval. And in both types of cases, the petition must also contain the following:

- The exact wording of the proposal(s) or provision(s) that has been declared nonnegotiable, and an explanation of the proposal’s or the provision’s meaning.\textsuperscript{141} If there are any special terms that would not be familiar to people who don’t work at the agency where the union represents employees, then the union must explain what those terms mean.\textsuperscript{142} The union also must explain how the proposal or provision works and what impact it would have.\textsuperscript{143}

- Citations to any laws, regulations, or decisions that support the union’s arguments.\textsuperscript{144} Although the union is not required to provide actual copies of cited materials that are easily available to the Authority (such as provisions of the U.S. Code or Authority decisions), it should provide copies of materials that may not be easily available to the Authority (such as internal agency regulations, orders, or directives).\textsuperscript{145}

- A statement as to whether the disputed wording is also involved in a ULP proceeding, a grievance, an impasse procedure, or another negotiability petition.\textsuperscript{146}

- A statement as to whether the union is requesting a hearing before the Authority, and the reasons supporting that request.\textsuperscript{147}

- A statement as to whether the union is requesting severance of any proposal or provision, and, if so, a statement of the wording, meaning, and operation of the severed portions\textsuperscript{148} (although, as noted previously, the union may wait until its response to request severance\textsuperscript{149}).

\textbf{2.5 CADRO and the Post-Petition Conference}

Generally, after the union files its petition – and corrects any procedural deficiencies in the petition – a representative of the Authority’s CADRO will contact the parties to determine whether they are interested in resolving their dispute using interest-based mediation and facilitation. But parties also may call CADRO at (202) 218-7933, or email CADRO at CADRO@flra.gov. The CADRO process is voluntary for both parties.\textsuperscript{152} If both parties agree to use it, then the Authority will hold the negotiability process “in abeyance,” and will suspend any deadlines for filing additional documents in the formal negotiability process.\textsuperscript{153} If the parties do not successfully resolve their dispute during the CADRO process (or resolve only part of it), then the negotiability process resumes.\textsuperscript{154}

In addition, almost immediately after the Authority receives the petition – assuming that there are no procedural deficiencies in the petition – the Authority schedules the post-petition conference, which is described in section 1.14 above. The Authority will fax and mail to the parties a notice of the conference, which will set forth a specific date and time for the conference – usually within ten days after the Authority receives the union’s petition.\textsuperscript{155} Post-petition conferences are normally held by telephone, so the notice of the post-petition conference typically includes a toll-free number and instructions on how to make the call. If the parties agree to use CADRO before the conference, then the Authority will cancel the conference.

\textsuperscript{151} 5 C.F.R. §§ 2424.2(g) (requiring service of all documents filed with the Authority on the other party’s principal bargaining representative, and, for unions, also on the agency head (or his or her designee)); 2424.22(d) (requiring service consistent with § 2424.2(g)) & 2429.27 (describing methods of service and requiring submission of a statement of service).

\textsuperscript{154} See, e.g., \textit{id.} (resolving remaining dispute that parties had not resolved through CADRO process).

If the parties do not agree to use CADRO, or the case is not otherwise resolved, before the conference, then the parties must participate in the conference.\textsuperscript{156} If a union fails to participate, then the Authority may, in its discretion, dismiss the union’s petition.\textsuperscript{157} And, if an agency doesn’t participate, then the Authority may, in its discretion, order the agency to bargain over the disputed proposal(s) or withdraw its disapproval of the disputed provision(s).\textsuperscript{158}

If the designated union or agency representative is not available, then the union or agency should designate another person to participate in the conference. The Authority will reschedule conferences only on very rare occasions. In those unusual circumstances where a party needs to reschedule, the requesting party must submit a written request to the Authority’s Office of Case Intake and Publication at least five calendar days before the scheduled conference, and the request must state the other party’s position on whether to reschedule the conference.\textsuperscript{159} The party may fax the request to (202) 482-6657.\textsuperscript{160} Absent extraordinary circumstances, the Authority will not consider requests to reschedule that the Authority receives fewer than five calendar days before the scheduled conference.\textsuperscript{161} If the union and the agency agree to a postponement, then the written request should set forth alternate dates and times on which both parties are available. But even if the parties agree to a postponement, the Authority may deny the request if there is not a good reason to postpone.\textsuperscript{162}

The purpose of the conference is to: (1) ensure that the parties have a common understanding of the meaning and impact of the proposal(s) or provision(s) at issue; (2) determine whether there are factual disputes concerning the proposal or provision; and (3) discuss other relevant matters.\textsuperscript{163} To those ends, the parties’ representatives to the conference must be prepared to discuss, clarify, and resolve matters including:

- The meaning of the proposal(s) or provision(s) in dispute;
- Any disputed factual issues;
- Negotiability and bargaining-obligation claims regarding the proposal(s) or provision(s); and

• Whether the proposal(s) or provision(s) is, or has been, the subject of: (1) a ULP charge under part 2423 of the Authority’s Regulations; (2) a grievance under the parties’ negotiated grievance procedure; or (3) an impasse procedure under part 2470 of the Authority’s Regulations.\textsuperscript{164}

The Authority representative’s primary role during the conference is to obtain facts regarding all of the above matters. The representative will also discuss whether the parties wish to receive assistance from the Authority’s CADRO. (Even if CADRO already has contacted the parties, and the parties have declined CADRO’s services, the Authority representative will ask them again. And even if the parties agree, during the conference, to use CADRO, the Authority representative will continue to conduct the conference.) In addition, the Authority representative will facilitate the discussion between the parties and seek out areas of possible agreement – including determining whether the wording of proposals or provisions may be modified to remove the agency’s objections.\textsuperscript{165} And although the Authority representative will discuss the agency’s objections to the proposal or provision, the agency is not bound by – and the written record of the conference will not contain – the objections that the agency raises during the conference. Instead, as discussed in section 2.6 below, the agency must raise, in its statement of position, all of its objections to the proposal or provision.\textsuperscript{166}

The Authority representative conducting the conference may grant extensions of time for future filings but may not waive time limits that have already expired. A party requesting a waiver of an expired time limit must make its request in writing to the Authority, and the request must: (1) demonstrate “extraordinary circumstances” for the waiver; and (2) state the position of the other party or parties with respect to the waiver request.\textsuperscript{167}

After the conference, the Authority representative will prepare a written record of the conference, which the Authority will serve on the parties by fax and certified mail.\textsuperscript{168} This becomes a part of the official record in the case.

\section*{2.6 Agency’s Statement of Position}

In most cases, the agency’s statement of position is due after the post-petition conference has been held.\textsuperscript{169} An agency may file its statement of position by using either: (1) an Authority form, available at \url{www.flra.gov/authority_forms} (or through the FLRA’s eFiling system); or (2) plain paper, and providing the same information that

Although agencies are not required to use the Authority form, the Authority encourages them to do so because the form is a useful guide and reminds them to provide all of the required information.

\subsection*{2.7 Union’s Response}

If the union wants to dispute any of the claims in the agency’s statement of position, then the union must file a response within fifteen days of receiving the agency’s statement.\footnote{\textit{5 C.F.R.} $\S$ 2424.24(d).\textit{Id.} $\S$ 2424.32(c)(2); \textit{Local 5}, 67 FLRA at 89. \textit{5 C.F.R.} $\S$ 2424.25. \textit{Id.} $\S$ 2424.25(c).\textit{Id.} $\S$ 2424.32(c)(2); \textit{see also AFGE, Local 1938}, 66 FLRA at 1040. \textit{E.g.}, \textit{5 C.F.R.} $\S$ 2424.32(c)(2).} The union may file its response by using either: (1) an Authority form, available at \texttt{www.flra.gov/authority\_forms} (or through the FLRA’s eFiling system); or (2) plain paper, and providing the same information that the Authority form requests.\footnote{\textit{Id.} $\S$ 2424.32(c)(2). \textit{Id.} $\S$ 2424.25(c).} If the union fails to respond to claims in the agency’s statement, then the Authority may find that the union has conceded the agency’s claims.\footnote{\textit{Id.} $\S$ 2424.32(c)(2); \textit{Local 5}, 67 FLRA at 89. \textit{5 C.F.R.} $\S$ 2424.25. \textit{Id.} $\S$ 2424.25(c).\textit{Id.} $\S$ 2424.32(c)(2); \textit{see also AFGE, Local 1938}, 66 FLRA at 1040. \textit{E.g.}, \textit{5 C.F.R.} $\S$ 2424.32(c)(2).} For example, if the agency has argued that a proposal or provision affects a management right under $\S$ 7106(a) or $\S$ 7106(b)(1) of the Statute, then the union must provide any arguments that the proposal or provision does not affect the cited rights, is a negotiable procedure under $\S$ 7106(b)(2), is an appropriate arrangement under $\S$ 7106(b)(3), or (for management rights under § 7106(a)(2)) enforces an applicable law. If the union fails to provide any of these arguments, then the Authority may find that the union has conceded that the proposal or provision is nonnegotiable on management-rights grounds. Further, if the union has not already requested severance in its petition, or wishes to modify an existing severance request, then it may do so in its response.

Although unions are not required to use the Authority form, the Authority encourages them to do so because the form is a useful guide and reminds them to provide all of the required information.

2.8 Agency’s Reply

The agency may file a reply to the union’s response within fifteen days after the agency receives a copy of the response. As noted in section 1.18 above, although § 7117(c) of the Statute does not expressly provide for an agency’s reply, the Authority created this additional filing by regulation because the Authority recognized that a union may raise certain arguments “for the first time” in its response. So the agency must limit its reply to “any facts or arguments made for the first time” in the union’s response. For example, if the union argues in its response that a proposal or provision is negotiable under § 7106(b)(2) or § 7106(b)(3) of the Statute, then the agency may reply to the union’s argument. Or if the union requests severance for the first time in its response, or modifies a severance request from its petition, and the agency opposes the request, then the agency must explain with specificity why severance is not appropriate. But an agency cannot raise new bases for alleging that a proposal or provision is nonnegotiable if the agency could have raised those claims in its statement of position.

The agency may file its reply by using either: (1) an Authority form, available at www.flra.gov/authority_forms (or through the FLRA’s eFiling system); or (2) plain paper, and providing the same information that the Authority form requests. Although agencies are not required to use the Authority form, the Authority encourages them to do so because the form is a useful guide and reminds them to provide all of the required information.

2.9 Diagram Summarizing Parties’ Filings With the Authority

The following diagram summarizes the parties’ standard filings with the Authority in a negotiability case:

2.10 Other Filings and Amicus Curiae Petitions

The four submissions described above – the union’s petition for review, the agency’s statement of position, the union’s response, and the agency’s reply – are the only submissions that the parties to negotiability cases are specifically authorized to file under the Authority’s Regulations. But if either party makes a written request and shows “extraordinary circumstances” for filing a supplemental document other than those four filings, then the Authority may consider it.188 Parties are encouraged to submit, along with their request, the supplemental document that they want the Authority to consider.

In addition, non-parties who are “interested person[s]” may petition the Authority for permission to present written or oral arguments as “amicus curiae.”189 The Authority may grant the petition if the Authority deems it “appropriate” to do so.190

2.11 Where and How to File

Parties may file all of the documents discussed above: in person;\(^{191}\) by commercial delivery;\(^{192}\) by first-class mail;\(^{193}\) by certified mail;\(^{194}\) or (for union petitions, agency statements of position, union responses, and agency replies) electronically through the FLRA’s eFiling system, which may be accessed at www.flra.gov/eFiling or through the links from the emails that the eFiling system automatically generates.\(^{195}\)

With the exception of documents that are eFiled, all documents filed with the Authority should be submitted to the Chief, Case Intake and Publication (CIP), Federal Labor Relations Authority, Docket Room, Suite 200, 1400 K Street NW, Washington, DC 20424-0001.\(^{196}\) CIP’s telephone number is (202) 218–7740, and it is open between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m. Eastern Time (E.T.), Monday through Friday (except federal holidays).

If you file documents by hand delivery, then you must present those documents in the Docket Room no later than 5 p.m. E.T., if you want the Authority to accept those documents for filing on that day.\(^{197}\) And if you want CIP to date-stamp a copy of your filing for your own records, then you must bring with you an extra copy of the filing for that purpose.

If you eFile documents, then you may file those documents on any calendar day – including Saturdays, Sundays, and federal holidays.\(^{198}\) The Authority will consider those documents filed on a particular day if you file them at any time up until midnight E.T. on that day.\(^{199}\) Please note that even though you may eFile documents on Saturdays, Sundays, and federal holidays, you are not required to do so.\(^{200}\)

You cannot file any documents with the Authority by email.\(^{201}\) And you cannot file petitions for review, statements of position, responses, and replies with the Authority by fax.\(^{202}\)

2.12 “Service” Required

If parties file anything with the Authority, then they must provide – or “serve” – each other’s principal bargaining representatives with a copy of everything they file.203 In addition, unions also must serve the agency head (or his or her designee).204 Failure to meet these requirements will result in the Authority issuing deficiency orders, which will slow down the processing of the case. As discussed in section 2.14 below, failure to comply with deficiency orders may also result in dismissal of the union’s petition or rejection of other documents.

Acceptable methods for “serving” documents on the other party are: certified mail; first-class mail; commercial delivery; in-person delivery; or email, but only if the other party has consented to email service.205 Fax is not an acceptable method of service for petitions, statements of position, responses, or replies.206 But it is an acceptable method of service for motions (for example, motions for extensions of time, requests to reschedule post-petition conferences), where fax equipment is available.207 See section 2.13 below for further discussion of the service requirement (and the requirement that parties provide a statement of service).

2.13 Additional Procedural Requirements

In addition to the requirements discussed above, when you file a petition for review, statement of position, response, or reply, you must:

- Submit one original plus four copies of anything that you file, with certain exceptions, such as eFiled and faxed documents;208

- Submit a table of contents if your document exceeds ten double-spaced pages, with the exception of fillable forms in the eFiling system;209 and

- Serve all counsel of record and submit a signed statement of service or, for eFiled documents, certify in the FLRA’s eFiling system that you have completed such service. Please note, in this regard, that if you file your document through the FLRA’s eFiling system, then you will be asked to certify that you have served the other party(ies), the manner in which you served them, and the date on which you served them before you will be able to “file” your document in the eFiling system. This allows the eFiling system to generate a statement of service for you. Also please note that, even if you eFile, you still must actually serve all counsel of record; the certification in the eFiling system is not sufficient by itself.

2.14 Noncompliance with Procedural and Other Requirements

If a party does not comply with the Authority’s Regulations or requirements, and that noncompliance is minor or technical, then the Authority may issue a deficiency order that allows the party to correct the mistake. Some examples are: failure to serve the agency head or agency head’s designee; serving the opposing representative at an incorrect address; failure to set forth the exact wording of the disputed proposals or provisions; failure to indicate whether the disputed wording is directly related to another proceeding; and failure to provide a statement of service. If a party fails to comply with a deficiency order, then the Authority will issue an order to show cause why a case should not be dismissed.

In addition to situations where a party fails to comply with a deficiency order, the Authority may issue an order to show cause why a case should not be dismissed when, for example, it appears that the union’s petition: is untimely; was filed by someone other than a union representative; is premature because the union filed it before the agency had ten days to respond to the union’s written request for an allegation of nonnegotiability; does not present a negotiability dispute because the agency’s written allegation raises only a bargaining-obligation dispute; or is directly related to a pending ULP proceeding or grievance involving a ULP, as discussed in section 3.6 below. With respect to the last example, the Authority also may issue an order to show cause if the union claims that the petition is directly related to a pending ULP or grievance involving a ULP, but the Authority is unable to determine whether that is actually the case because the union did not provide a copy of the ULP charge or the grievance.

As discussed in section 2.2(a) above, if a union’s petition is untimely, then the Authority will dismiss the petition with prejudice. And a union’s or an agency’s failure to respond to, and comply with, an Authority order may adversely affect the union or the agency. In this regard, if a union doesn’t respond or comply, then the Authority may dismiss its petition; if an agency doesn’t respond or comply, then the Authority may order it to bargain over a disputed proposal or withdraw its disapproval of a disputed provision.

2.15 Authority’s Decision and Order

The Authority will issue a written decision that explains the specific reasons for its conclusions.\(^{215}\) The decision will also include an order that varies depending on whether the case concerns proposals or provisions.\(^{216}\)

In cases involving proposals, if the Authority finds that a proposal is within the duty to bargain, then it will order the agency to bargain with the union upon request.\(^{217}\) In doing so, the Authority makes no judgment as to the proposal’s merit\(^{218}\) – in other words, the Authority will not decide whether the parties should actually agree to the proposal. If the Authority finds that a proposal is bargainable only at an agency’s election under §7106(b)(1) of the Statute, then it will issue an order stating that the proposal is only electively negotiable.\(^{219}\) If the Authority finds that there is no duty to bargain over a proposal, then it will dismiss the petition for review as to that proposal.\(^{220}\)

In cases involving provisions, if the Authority finds either that a provision is not contrary to law or that it is bargainable at an agency’s election under §7106(b)(1) of the Statute, then it will order the agency head to rescind his or her disapproval of the provision.\(^{221}\) In doing so, the Authority makes no judgment as to the provision’s merit.\(^{222}\) If the Authority determines that a provision is contrary to law, then it will dismiss the petition for review as to that provision.\(^{223}\)

2.16 After the Authority’s Decision and Order

Several different situations could occur after the Authority issues its decision and order.

First, the parties could comply with the Authority’s order. If they do, then the negotiability process is over.

Second, a party could move for reconsideration of the Authority’s order within ten days after service of that order.\(^{224}\)

\(^{224}\) Id. § 2429.17.
Third, a party could appeal the Authority’s order (or an order resolving a motion for reconsideration) to a U.S. Court of Appeals.\(^{225}\) A party has sixty days to file such an appeal, beginning on the date on which the Authority issued its order.\(^{226}\) But please note that “[n]o objection that has not been urged before the Authority, or its designee, shall be considered by the court, unless the failure or neglect to urge the objection is excused because of extraordinary circumstances.”\(^{227}\)

Fourth, an agency could refuse to comply with the Authority’s order. In that event, the union may report that failure to the appropriate FLRA Regional Director.\(^{228}\) The union must report such failure within a reasonable period of time after the sixty-day appeal period (discussed above) expires.\(^{229}\) If, on referral from the Regional Director, the Authority finds a failure to comply with its order, then the Authority will take whatever action it deems necessary to secure compliance with its order, including seeking enforcement by petitioning any appropriate U.S. Court of Appeals.\(^{230}\)

2.17 Diagram Summarizing Possible Conclusions of Authority Decisions and the Post-Decision Process

The following diagram summarizes the various conclusions that the Authority may reach in its decisions, as well as the various scenarios that may occur after the Authority issues that decision and order:
BASES FOR DISMISSING PETITIONS

3.1  Introduction

This section discusses the most common bases for dismissing negotiability petitions.

3.2  Proposal or Provision Nonnegotiable

If the Authority finds that all of the proposals or provisions in a union’s petition are nonnegotiable, then the Authority dismisses the petition.231 Similarly, if the Authority finds that some of the proposals or provisions in a union’s petition are nonnegotiable, then the Authority dismisses the petition in part.232

3.3  Failure to Comply with Certain Procedural and Other Requirements

Section 2.14 above discusses the potential consequences for failures to comply with certain procedural and other requirements. As discussed in that section, certain failures to comply may result in dismissal of the union’s petition.

3.4  No Negotiability Dispute

Where a proposal or provision in a union’s petition involves a negotiability dispute, but not a bargaining-obligation dispute, the Authority will resolve the proposal’s or provision’s negotiability.233 And where a proposal or provision raises both a bargaining-obligation dispute and a negotiability dispute, the Authority may resolve both disputes.234 But where a proposal or provision involves only a bargaining-obligation dispute, that dispute may not be resolved in a negotiability proceeding.235 Please note that, as discussed in section 1.8 above, the Authority assesses whether a negotiability dispute exists on a proposal-by-proposal, or provision-by-provision, basis: If some proposals or provisions in a petition present negotiability disputes but others do not, then the Authority will dismiss the petition as to the proposals or provisions that do not present negotiability disputes, and will resolve the negotiability of only the proposals or provisions that do present negotiability disputes.236

235 Id. § 2424.2(d).

3.5 Mootness

Section 2429.10 of the Authority’s Regulations states that the Authority will not issue advisory opinions.\(^{237}\) Thus, where the issues that led to the filing of a negotiability petition have been resolved, or where there is no longer a dispute between the parties, the Authority will dismiss the petition as “moot.”\(^{238}\) The Authority has found petitions to be moot where, for example: proposals required some action to occur by a date that had already passed, and there was no explanation in the record to show how the proposals could be implemented prospectively;\(^{239}\) or the parties had reached a valid, binding agreement about the subject matter of the proposals within the petition.\(^{240}\)

In contrast, the Authority has found petitions not to be moot where, for example: a proposal did not refer to any particular event, or require any action to occur by a date that had already passed;\(^{241}\) or the parties continued to have a “legally cognizable interest” in the outcome of the negotiability appeal because the proposal at issue could benefit employees prospectively.\(^{242}\)

Mootness is a threshold issue regarding the Authority’s jurisdiction.\(^{243}\) The burden of demonstrating mootness is heavy and falls on the party urging mootness.\(^{244}\)

3.6 Petition is “Directly Related” to ULP or Grievance

With the exception of cases where an agency has made a compelling-need claim under § 7117(a)(2) of the Statute (discussed in section 4.5 below), if a union files a ULP charge or a grievance alleging a ULP under the parties’ negotiated grievance procedure, and the charge or grievance concerns issues “directly related” to the petition for review, then the Authority will dismiss the negotiability petition.\(^{245}\) The dismissal will be without prejudice to the union’s right to refile the petition after the ULP charge or grievance has been “resolved administratively,”\(^{246}\) which can happen when, for example: the union withdraws, or the Authority resolves, the directly related ULP claim;\(^{247}\) or an arbitrator resolves the ULP claim in an award that has become final and binding.\(^{248}\) The union may refile the petition no later than thirty days after the date on which the ULP charge or grievance is resolved administratively, and the Authority will determine whether resolution of the petition is still required.249

For examples of Authority decisions addressing the “directly related” issue, see AFGE, Local 1938250 and NAGE, Local R5-168.251

3.7 Previously Filed Petition Bars Proposal or Provision

Where a negotiability petition involves a proposal or provision that has not “substantively changed” from a proposal or provision that was in a negotiability petition that the union previously filed – and with the exception of cases where the Authority dismissed the previous petition “without prejudice” to the union’s right to refile252 – “the effect of the [new] petition is to seek review of the previous allegation.”253 In that situation, the Authority will dismiss the new petition.254 By contrast, if the union has “substantively revised” the proposal or provision that was in the original petition and has submitted the revised proposal or provision in a new petition, then (assuming that all of the other filing requirements are met) the Authority will consider the new petition.255

SUBSTANTIVE ISSUES

4.1 Introduction

As discussed in the Foreword to this Guide, negotiability disputes can present a wide range of substantive issues, and agencies may also raise bargaining-obligation disputes as bases for declining to bargain over particular proposals. Given the breadth of possible substantive issues that may arise in negotiability cases, a discussion of all of those possible issues is beyond the scope of this Guide. But we discuss, below, some of the issues that are more frequent or complex.

4.2 Conditions of Employment

Under the Statute, agencies are required to bargain only over bargaining-unit employees’ “conditions of employment.” So an agency is not required to bargain over a matter unless that matter “directly affects” the conditions of employment of bargaining-unit employees. Section 7103(a)(14) of the Statute defines “conditions of employment” as “personnel policies, practices, and matters, whether established by rule, regulation, or otherwise, affecting working conditions.” However, that section provides that the following matters are not “conditions of employment”: (1) matters relating to political activities prohibited under the Hatch Act, (2) matters relating to classification, and (3) matters that are “specifically provided for by [f]ederal statute.” With respect to the third exception, the Authority has held, for example, that a proposal “requiring employees to be paid at the [General Schedule (GS)]-7 level” concerned a matter “specifically provided for by statute.” Because the agency had no discretion to bargain over wage rates established by law, the Authority found that wage rates were excluded from the definition of conditions of employment. Conversely, where a law provided an agency with discretion concerning its optical and dental plan, the Authority held that Congress had preserved the agency’s right and obligation to negotiate over this matter, and it was not excluded from the definition of “conditions of employment.”

In deciding whether a proposal involves a condition of employment of bargaining-unit employees, the Authority considers two basic factors: (1) whether the 260 Id. § 7103(a)(14)(B).

261 Id. § 7103(a)(14)(C).
263 Id.
matter pertains to bargaining-unit employees; and (2) whether there is a direct connection between the proposal and the work situation or employment relationship of those employees.265 As to the first factor, as discussed further below, a proposal that focuses principally on non-bargaining-unit positions or employees does not directly affect bargaining-unit employees’ work situations or employment relationships.266 As to the second factor, the record must establish a direct connection between the proposal and the bargaining-unit employees’ work situations or employment relationships.267 For example, the Authority found that a proposal concerning the off-duty activities of employees did not concern bargaining-unit employees’ work situations or employment relationships.268

Moreover, Authority and judicial precedent differentiate among proposals concerning the working conditions of four groups of non-unit individuals: (1) employees in other bargaining units; (2) supervisory personnel; (3) non-supervisory employees not in any bargaining unit; and (4) non-employees.269

Regarding the first group, a proposal that directly determines conditions of employment of employees in other bargaining units is outside the duty to bargain.270 This is because permitting an agency to negotiate with one union over the conditions of employment for employees represented by another union would violate “the principle of exclusive representation.”271 For example, the Authority has held that a union’s proposal requiring an agency to assign employees from a unit represented by another union to a particular facility was outside the duty to bargain.272 But proposals that only indirectly affect the conditions of employment of employees in other bargaining units are not outside the duty to bargain solely because they affect those employees.273

Concerning the second group, proposals that directly determine the conditions of employment of supervisors are outside the duty to bargain. However, as stated in section 1.7 of this Guide, matters pertaining to managers’ and supervisors’ conditions of employment are permissive subjects of bargaining. Thus, an agency may bargain over, and agree to, contract proposals that directly implicate its supervisors’ and managers’ working conditions. As with other permissive subjects, if an agency and a union reach such an agreement, and the agreement is otherwise consistent with law, then the agency head cannot disapprove it, and it is enforceable in arbitration. And proposals that relate principally to unit employees’ conditions of employment are not removed from the mandatory scope of bargaining simply because they indirectly affect supervisors.

As to the third and fourth groups, a proposal that directly affects the conditions of employment of either non-employees or employees who are not in any bargaining unit is outside the duty to bargain unless the proposal addresses matters that “vitality affect” bargaining-unit employees’ conditions of employment. “In determining whether or not a proposal vitally affects bargaining[-]unit employees, the Authority looks to whether ‘the effect of that proposal upon unit employees’ conditions of employment is significant and material, as opposed to indirect or incidental.’” For example, the Authority has held that a proposal prohibiting discrimination in the hiring process – which would directly affect non-employee applicants – was within the duty to bargain because it “relate[d] to unit employees’ significant and material interest in eliminating discrimination in the unit,” and, thus “vitality affect[ed] the conditions of employment of unit employees.”

4.3 Management Rights

(a) Introduction and General Principles

Agencies often argue that proposals are outside the duty to bargain, or provisions are contrary to law, because they are inconsistent with management rights under § 7106 of the Statute. Section 7106 provides:

§ 7106. Management rights

(a) Subject to subsection (b) of this section, nothing in this chapter shall affect the authority of any management official of any agency—

(1) to determine the mission, budget, organization, number of employees, and internal security practices of the agency; and

(2) in accordance with applicable laws—
   (A) to hire, assign, direct, layoff, and retain employees in the agency, or to suspend, remove, reduce in grade or pay, or take other disciplinary actions against such employees;
   (B) to assign work, to make determinations with respect to contracting out, and to determine the personnel by which agency operations shall be conducted;
   (C) with respect to filling positions, to make selections for appointments from—
      (i) among properly ranked and certified candidates for promotion; or
      (ii) any other appropriate source; and
   (D) to take whatever actions may be necessary to carry out the agency mission during emergencies.

(b) Nothing in this section shall preclude any agency and any labor organization from negotiating—

(1) at the election of the agency, on the numbers, types, and grades of employees or positions assigned to any organizational subdivision, work project, or tour of duty, or on the technology, methods, and means of performing work;

(2) procedures which management officials of the agency will observe in exercising any authority under this section; or

(3) appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by the exercise of any authority under this section by such management officials.

A proposal or provision may affect more than one management right, but the Authority will address only the management right(s) that a party raises. For example, if an agency claims that a proposal or provision affects management’s right to assign work, and the Authority finds no effect on that right, then that does not preclude an agency in a future case from arguing that a similar proposal or provision affects a different management right, such as the right to determine the agency’s organization.

There are management rights contained in both § 7106(a) and § 7106(b)(1) of the Statute. This Guide discusses those rights separately below.

(b) Section 7106(a)

Consistent with the principles regarding concession discussed in section 1.19 above, if a union does not dispute an agency’s claim that a proposal or provision affects a management right under § 7106(a), then the Authority finds that the union has conceded that the right is affected. If the union does dispute the agency’s claim, and the agency fails to support its claim with an explanation of how management’s rights are affected, then the Authority finds no effect on management’s rights under § 7106(a).

There are nineteen management rights contained in § 7106(a) – five in § 7106(a)(1) and fourteen in § 7106(a)(2). The rights under § 7106(a)(1) and the rights under § 7106(a)(2) are different in a significant way: While the rights under § 7106(a)(2) must be exercised in accordance with “applicable laws,” the rights under § 7106(a)(1) do not contain that limitation. The meaning of “applicable laws” is discussed in section 4.3(d) below.

For all management rights, agencies retain not only the right to exercise them, but also the right not to exercise them. And for all of these rights, there are exceptions, which are discussed in sections 4.3(c) and 4.3(d) below (although the rights discussed in section 4.3(d) apply to only some of the management rights). So a proposal or provision that affects a management right is not necessarily nonnegotiable; if it fits within an exception to a management right, then it is negotiable despite that effect.

284 See, e.g., Nat’l Ass’n of Agric. Empls., Branch 11, 57 FLRA 424, 425-26 (2001) (Branch 11) (in finding that proposal affected right to assign work, Authority distinguished AFGE, Local 1940, 37 FLRA 1058 (1990), which had addressed a different management right).

285 See, e.g., Chapter 83, 64 FLRA at 725-26.

288 E.g., Weather Serv., 63 FLRA at 452.

289 E.g., Local 723, 66 FLRA at 644.

The §7106(a) rights are as follows.

1. Mission

Management has the right “to determine the mission . . . of the agency.”\(^{292}\) This involves the right to determine what the agency’s mission will or will not include.\(^{293}\) It generally does not involve the right to determine how the agency’s mission will be carried out.\(^{294}\) But where, for example, part of an agency’s mission is to provide services to the public, a proposal or provision establishing the hours that certain agency offices would be open to the public affects this right.\(^{295}\)

2. Budget

Management has the right “to determine the . . . budget . . . of the agency.”\(^{296}\) “[A]n assertion that a proposal [or provision] would increase an agency’s costs does not, by itself, establish” that the proposal or provision affects this right.\(^{297}\) Rather, a proposal or provision affects this right only if: (1) the proposal or provision prescribes either the particular programs to be included in the agency’s budget, or the amount to be allocated in the budget; or (2) the agency “makes a substantial demonstration that an increase in costs is significant and unavoidable and is not offset by compensating benefits.”\(^{298}\) In conducting the second inquiry, the Authority looks at the proposal or provision relative to the budget of the organizational level to which the proposal or provision applies.\(^{299}\)

3. Organization

Management has the right “to determine the . . . organization . . . of the agency.”\(^{300}\) This right involves management’s authority to determine the agency’s administrative and functional structure, including the relationship of personnel through lines of authority and the distribution of responsibilities for delegated and assigned duties.\(^{301}\) For example, it includes the rights to determine: how the agency will be divided into organizational entities such as sections;\(^{302}\) the agency’s grade-level structure; and where, geographically, the agency will provide services or otherwise conduct its operations. Although it includes the right to determine where duty stations of positions will be maintained, that an agency labels an employee’s work location an “official duty station” is not, by itself, sufficient to demonstrate that this labeling involves an exercise of the right to determine the agency’s organization. Instead, the agency must establish that the asserted duty station has “a direct and substantive relationship to the [a]gency’s administrative or functional structure, including the relationship of personnel through lines of authority and the distribution of responsibilities for delegated and assigned duties.”

4. Number of Employees of the Agency

Management has the right to determine the “number of employees . . . of the agency.” This relates to “the number of employees actually employed by an agency.” So a proposal or provision that “operates within the total employee complement that has been established by” an agency – for example, by requiring an employee’s reassignment within the agency – does not affect this right. Thus, this right is distinct from the right to determine the number of employees assigned to any organizational subdivision under § 7106(b)(1), which is discussed in section 4.3(c)2 below.

5. Internal-Security Practices

Management has the right to determine the “internal[-]security practices of the agency.” This right involves the authority to determine the policies and practices that are part of the agency’s plan to secure or safeguard its personnel, physical property, or operations against internal and external risks.

To demonstrate that a proposal or provision affects this right, an agency must show: (1) a link, or reasonable connection, between its security objective and an agency policy or practice designed to implement that objective; and (2) that the proposal or provision conflicts with the policy or practice.

314 See id.
With respect to the first requirement, as long as the agency shows the required link or reasonable connection, the Authority will not review the merits of the agency’s plan in the course of resolving a negotiability dispute. Thus, the Authority will not examine the extent to which the plan will actually facilitate the accomplishment of the agency’s security objectives.

With respect to the second requirement, it is not necessary to show that the proposal or provision conflicts with or “defeat[s] the purpose” for which the agency adopted the internal-security measure; a proposal or provision that “deviates from or modifies” the agency’s policy affects the right.

The Authority has found that agencies demonstrated an effect on the right to determine internal-security practices in cases involving, for example (but not limited to), proposals or provisions that concerned: the investigative techniques that agencies would employ to attain their internal-security objectives; the implementation of agencies’ drug-testing programs; locked doors in the workplace; and the actions that management would take to ensure the security of their computer systems.

6. Hire Employees

Management has the right to “hire . . . employees in the agency.” The Authority has not specifically defined the right to hire, but has found that it includes the right to decide whether to fill positions. So proposals or provisions requiring agencies to fill vacancies affect this right.

7. Assign Employees

Management has the right to “assign . . . employees in the agency.” This right concerns the right to assign employees to positions. It involves not only the initial hiring of an individual and assignment to a position, but also post-hiring situations,\textsuperscript{328} such as reassignment of employees to different positions, and temporary assignments or details.\textsuperscript{329} It also includes the right to decide when an assignment should begin and end.\textsuperscript{330} In addition, it includes the rights to establish the qualifications and skills needed for positions and to judge whether particular employees possess those qualifications and skills.\textsuperscript{331} But (unlike the right to determine the agency’s organization) it does not include the right to decide the geographical location where employees or organizational units will conduct agency operations.\textsuperscript{332}

8. \textit{Direct Employees}

Management has the right to “direct . . . employees in the agency.”\textsuperscript{333} This involves the rights to supervise employees and to determine the quantity, quality, and timeliness of their work.\textsuperscript{334} Thus, this right includes, among other things, the rights to establish performance standards,\textsuperscript{335} to evaluate employees and hold them accountable under those standards,\textsuperscript{336} to select particular methods for supervising employees (such as by unannounced visits and spot-checking of their work),\textsuperscript{337} and to require employees to account for their duty time.\textsuperscript{338} But this right does \textit{not} include the right to decide whether to reward performance that already has been evaluated.\textsuperscript{339}

9. \textit{Layoff Employees}

Management has the right to “layoff . . . employees in the agency.”\textsuperscript{340} This right includes, for example, the rights to conduct a reduction in force and to exercise discretion in determining which positions will be abolished and which will be retained.\textsuperscript{341}

10. Retain Employees

Management has the right to “retain employees in the agency.”\(^\text{342}\) This is the right to establish policies or practices that encourage or discourage employees from remaining employed by an agency.\(^\text{343}\) The Authority has found that proposals and provisions affected this right where, for example, they required agencies to offer voluntary-separation-incentive pay,\(^\text{344}\) or required agencies to provide compensation that will encourage “special[-]rate” employees to remain employed with the agency.\(^\text{345}\)

11. Suspend

Management has the right to “suspend . . . employees.”\(^\text{346}\) The Authority has found that a proposal affected this right when the proposal gave employees the option of canceling their own previously imposed suspensions.\(^\text{347}\)

12. Remove

Management has the right to “remove . . . employees.”\(^\text{348}\) The Authority has found that proposals and provisions affected this right where, for example, they: required agencies to separate particular groups of employees before they separated other groups of employees;\(^\text{349}\) required an agency to vacate certain positions and make them available to certain categories of employees;\(^\text{350}\) or precluded management from taking actions against an employee for a particular “offense,” including unacceptable performance.\(^\text{351}\)

13. Reduce in Grade or Pay

14. Discipline

In addition to having the rights to suspend, remove, and reduce in grade or pay, management has the right to “take other disciplinary action against . . . employees.”\textsuperscript{355} This includes the rights to: discipline employees for both performance-related and nonperformance-related conduct;\textsuperscript{356} investigate and determine appropriate investigative techniques in connection with deciding whether discipline is justified;\textsuperscript{357} decide which evidence or information (including prior offenses) to use to take, or support, disciplinary actions;\textsuperscript{358} and determine what disciplinary penalty to impose.\textsuperscript{359}

15. Assign Work

Management has the right to “assign work.”\textsuperscript{360} This encompasses the rights to determine the particular duties to be assigned, when work assignments will occur, and to whom or what positions the duties will be assigned.\textsuperscript{361} It also includes the rights to establish the qualifications and skills needed for positions and duties, and to judge whether particular employees meet those qualifications and skills.\textsuperscript{362} Additionally, it includes the rights to: establish job requirements for various levels of performance;\textsuperscript{363} determine the content of performance standards and elements;\textsuperscript{364} supervise employees and determine the quantity, quality, and timeliness of their work;\textsuperscript{365} determine the particular measures of supervising employees’ work (for example, through unannounced spot checks);\textsuperscript{366} enforce established performance standards;\textsuperscript{367} and evaluate employees and hold them accountable for their work.\textsuperscript{368} (Please note that, in some respects, the right to assign work involves similar rights as the rights to assign and direct employees, discussed below in sections 4.3(b)\textsuperscript{7} and 4.3(b)\textsuperscript{8}, respectively.)

A proposal or provision does not affect the right to assign work merely because it requires the agency to take some action.\textsuperscript{369} And a proposal or provision requiring management to use seniority to select employees for assignments does not affect the right, as long as management retains the right to determine that the eligible employees are equally qualified for the assignments.\textsuperscript{370} In addition, the right to assign work does not include the right to determine whether to reward performance,\textsuperscript{371} including, for example, decisions as to whether to grant performance awards,\textsuperscript{372} or to determine eligibility for “incentive[-]pay bonus[es].”\textsuperscript{373}

\textbf{16. Contract Out}

Management has the right to “make determinations with respect to contracting out.”\textsuperscript{374} The Authority has found that proposals or provisions affected this right where, for example, they: precluded an agency from contracting out one of its functions for a specified period;\textsuperscript{375} required an agency to delay contracting-out decisions;\textsuperscript{376} or required an agency to conduct a cost study before contracting out.\textsuperscript{377}

\textbf{17. Determine Personnel}

Management has the right to “determine the personnel by which agency operations shall be conducted.”\textsuperscript{378} This includes the right to determine the particular employees to whom work will be assigned.\textsuperscript{379} So proposals and provisions that require an agency to assign particular duties to a particular individual affect this right.\textsuperscript{380}

\textbf{18. Make Selections to Fill Positions}

Management has the right, “with respect to filling positions, to make selections for appointments from—(i) among properly ranked and certified candidates for promotion; or (ii) any other appropriate source . . . .”\textsuperscript{381}

This “right to select” includes the rights to determine the qualifications, skills, and abilities needed to do the work of a position and to determine whether applicants possess those qualifications, skills, and abilities.\textsuperscript{382}

The right to select also includes the right to fill positions by selecting candidates from any appropriate source without restriction.\textsuperscript{383} So proposals and provisions that limit the sources from which management can select affect this right.\textsuperscript{384} But a requirement that expands, rather than limits, an agency’s selection options does not affect this right.\textsuperscript{385}

19. Carry Out Mission in Emergencies

Management has the right to “take whatever actions may be necessary to carry out the agency mission during emergencies.”\textsuperscript{386} This includes the rights to: (1) independently assess whether an emergency exists, and (2) decide what actions are needed to address the emergency.\textsuperscript{387} Proposals and provisions that define what constitutes an “emergency” affect this right, without regard to the content of the definition.\textsuperscript{388} So do proposals and provisions that preclude management from acting until a particular individual declares an emergency.\textsuperscript{389}

(c) Section 7106(b)

All of the rights set forth in § 7106(a) are “[s]ubject to” § 7106(b) of the Statute.\textsuperscript{390} Section 7106(b) provides that “[n]othing in [§ 7106] shall preclude any agency and any labor organization from negotiating” several types of matters.\textsuperscript{391} Those types of matters are set forth in § 7106(b)(1), (2), and (3), and are discussed separately below.

1. Section 7106(b)(1) - Generally

Section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute provides that certain matters are negotiable “at the election of the agency.” In other words, those matters are permissive subjects of bargaining: Agencies may, but are not legally required to, bargain over them. Thus, as with other permissive subjects, agency heads cannot disapprove agreements concerning these matters unless they are otherwise unlawful, and agreements regarding § 7106(b)(1) matters are enforceable in arbitration. In this connection, § 7106(b)(1) is an exception to § 7106(a), so a proposal or provision that might be unlawful under § 7106(a) becomes lawful if it also concerns a § 7106(b)(1) matter. And even if a proposal concerns a permissive subject of bargaining under § 7106(b)(1), it becomes a mandatory subject of bargaining if it also concerns a § 7106(b)(2) or § 7106(b)(3) matter. A discussion of the individual portions of § 7106(b)(1) follows.

2. Section 7106(b)(1) - Numbers, Types, and Grades of Employees or Positions Assigned to Any Organizational Subdivision, Work Project, or Tour of Duty

Section 7106(b)(1) provides that an agency may elect to negotiate on the “numbers, types, and grades of employees or positions assigned to any organizational subdivision, work project, or tour of duty.” In determining whether a proposal or provision is within the scope of this portion of § 7106(b)(1), the Authority assesses whether the proposal or provision concerns: (1) the numbers, types, and grades; (2) of employees or positions; (3) assigned to any organizational subdivision, work project, or tour of duty. This portion of § 7106(b)(1) applies to the establishment of agency staffing patterns, or the allocation of staff, for the purpose of an agency’s organization and the accomplishment of its work. We discuss the various terms below.

Numbers. The Authority has found that a proposal or provision that would increase, decrease, or maintain the number of employees or positions that an agency has assigned, or plans to assign, concerns the “numbers” of employees or positions within the meaning of § 7106(b)(1). As noted in section 4.3(b) above, the § 7106(b)(1) right to determine the number of employees assigned to a particular organizational subdivision, work project, or tour of duty is different from the § 7106(a)(1) right to determine the “number of employees . . . of the agency,” which refers to the total number of employees in the agency.402

Types. “Types” are distinguishable classes, kinds, groups, or categories of employees or positions that are relevant to the establishment of staffing patterns.403 For example, the Authority has held that dental hygienists – who were in a separate classification series and were differentiated as a group or category based on a specialized line of work and qualifications requirements – were a type of employee or position.404 And the Authority has found that where temporary employees were hired for a limited time to meet temporary employment needs, they were a type of employee because the characteristic of “limited tenure” identified them as a distinguishable class, kind, group, or category.405 The party claiming that a proposal or provision concerns “types” bears the burden of establishing a relationship between the claimed “type” and staffing patterns.406

Grades. The Authority has found that proposals and provisions concerned the grades of employees or positions when they involved the grade levels of employees or positions within the GS classification system,407 or when they concerned “entry[-]level” positions.408 Where proposals or provisions did not involve the grade level of employees assigned to do particular work, the Authority has declined to find that they involved the grades of employees within the meaning of § 7106(b)(1).409

Organizational subdivision. The Authority has found that proposals and provisions that involve which sections of an agency will perform specific agency functions, and where employees performing those functions will be assigned, concern assignments to organizational subdivisions under § 7106(b)(1).410 Although proposals or provisions that merely establish organizational subdivisions do not affect management’s rights under § 7106(b)(1), proposals or provisions that prescribe the staffing of such organizational subdivisions do affect that right.411

Work project. “Work project” means a “particular job” or “task.” For example, supervising inmates is a work project.

Tour of duty. “Tour of duty” means the hours of a day (a daily tour of duty) and the days of an administrative workweek (a weekly tour of duty) that constitute an employee’s regularly scheduled administrative workweek.

3. Section 7106(b)(1) - Technology, Methods, and Means of Performing Work

Section 7106(b)(1) provides, in pertinent part, that nothing in § 7106 shall preclude agencies and unions from negotiating, “at the election of the agency, on . . . the technology, methods, and means of performing work.”

“Technology . . . of performing work” means “the technical method that will be used in accomplishing or furthering the performance of the [a]gency’s work.” A party alleging that a proposal or provision concerns the technology of performing work must show: (1) the technological relationship of the matter addressed by the proposal or provision to accomplishing or furthering the performance of the agency’s work; and (2) how the proposal or provision would interfere with the purpose for which the technology was adopted. The Authority has found proposals to concern the technology of performing work where, for example, they required management to provide specific equipment to employees for their use in performing the agency’s work.

“Method” refers to the way in which an agency performs its work. “Means” refers to any instrumentality – including an agent, tool, device, measure, plan, or policy – that an agency uses to accomplish, or further the performance of, its work. Basically, “methods” are how an agency performs its work, and “means” are what the agency uses to perform that work.

If a proposal or provision “concerns” a method or means, then the Authority applies a two-part test to determine whether the proposal or provision affects management’s right to determine the methods or means of performing work. Specifically, the Authority assesses whether: (1) there is a direct or integral relationship between the method or means the agency has chosen and the accomplishment of the agency’s mission; and (2) the proposal or provision would directly interfere with the mission-related purpose for which the method or means was adopted. The relative importance of a particular method or means is irrelevant. In this regard, the method or means need not be indispensable to the accomplishment of the agency’s mission; rather, it need only be a matter that is used to attain or make more likely the attainment of a desired end, or used by the agency to accomplish or further the performance of its work.

4. Section 7106(b)(2) - Procedures

Section 7106(b)(2) of the Statute provides that nothing in § 7106 shall preclude agencies and unions from negotiating over “procedures [that] management officials of the agency will observe in exercising any authority under” § 7106. These “procedures” are mandatory subjects of bargaining: Agencies must bargain over them, even if they affect management rights under § 7106(a) or § 7106(b)(1).

Consistent with the principles of concession discussed in section 1.19 above, if a union argues that a proposal or provision is a procedure under § 7106(b)(2), and an agency does not dispute that claim, then the Authority will find the proposal or provision to be a procedure. If the agency does dispute the union’s claim, then the union must demonstrate that the proposal or provision is a procedure. To determine whether a particular proposal or provision is (or is not) a procedure, parties should research Authority precedent to find proposals and provisions (similar to the one in dispute) that the Authority has analyzed under § 7106(b)(2).

Please note that merely because a proposal or a provision affects a management right under § 7106(a) (or, for proposals, affects a management right under § 7106(b)(1)), and is not a procedure under § 7106(b)(2), that does not mean that the proposal or provision is nonnegotiable. It is negotiable if it is an appropriate arrangement under § 7106(b)(3), as discussed below.

5. Section 7106(b)(3) - Appropriate Arrangements

Section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute provides that nothing in § 7106 precludes agencies and unions from negotiating over “appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by the exercise of any authority under” § 7106.\textsuperscript{463} These “appropriate arrangements” are mandatory subjects of bargaining: Agencies must bargain over them, despite their effects on management rights under § 7106(a) or § 7106(b)(1).\textsuperscript{464}

i. What is an arrangement?

To determine whether a proposal or a provision is an appropriate arrangement under § 7106(b)(3), the Authority first determines whether the proposal or provision is intended to be an “arrangement” for employees adversely affected by the exercise of a management right.\textsuperscript{465} Consistent with the principles of concession discussed in section 1.19 above, if an agency does not dispute a union’s claim that a proposal or provision is an arrangement, then the Authority will find that the agency has conceded that the proposal or provision is an arrangement.\textsuperscript{466} But if an agency does dispute a union’s claim that a proposal or provision is an arrangement, then the union must demonstrate the following.

An arrangement must seek to mitigate adverse effects flowing from the exercise of a protected management right.\textsuperscript{467} To establish that a proposal or a provision is an arrangement, a union must identify: (1) the effects or reasonably foreseeable effects on employees that flow from the exercise of management’s rights; and (2) how those effects are adverse.\textsuperscript{468} Proposals and provisions that address speculative or hypothetical concerns are not arrangements.\textsuperscript{469} The alleged arrangement must also be sufficiently tailored to compensate or benefit employees suffering adverse effects attributable to the exercise of management’s rights.\textsuperscript{470} But the Authority has held that proposals and provisions intended to eliminate the possibility of an adverse effect may be appropriate arrangements.\textsuperscript{471} In particular, the Authority will find such “prophylactic” proposals and provisions to be sufficiently tailored in situations where it is not possible to draft a proposal targeting only those employees who will be adversely affected by an agency action.\textsuperscript{472}

\textbf{ii. When is an arrangement “appropriate”?}

If a proposal or a provision is an arrangement, then the Authority determines whether it is appropriate.\textsuperscript{473} The test that the Authority applies to determine whether an arrangement is appropriate depends on whether the case involves a proposal or a provision.

If the case involves a proposal, then the Authority applies an “excessive interference” test.\textsuperscript{474} Specifically, the Authority weighs “the competing practical needs of employees and managers” to ascertain whether the benefit to employees flowing from the proposal outweighs the proposal’s burden on the exercise of the management right or rights involved.\textsuperscript{475}

If the case involves a provision, however, then the Authority does not apply the excessive-interference test. Instead, in NTEU, the Authority held that it will assess whether the arrangement “abrogates” – i.e., waives – the affected management right. In determining whether a provision abrogates a management right, the Authority assesses whether the provision “precludes” the agency from exercising the affected management right. If it does not, then the arrangement is appropriate, and the Authority will direct the agency head to rescind his or her disapproval of the provision. (Please note that, as of the date on the front of this Guide, the Authority’s use of the abrogation standard is on appeal to the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit.)

(d) Section 7106(a)(2) – “Applicable Laws”

As discussed previously, agencies must exercise their management rights under § 7106(a)(2) – but not their rights under § 7106(a)(1) – in a manner that complies with “applicable laws.” Applicable laws include not only statutes, but also the U.S. Constitution, judicial decisions, executive orders, and regulations having the force and effect of law. Regulations have the force and effect of law where they: (1) affect individual rights and obligations; (2) were promulgated pursuant to an explicit or implicit delegation of legislative authority by Congress; and (3) were promulgated in accordance with procedural requirements imposed by Congress. The Statute is not an “applicable law” within the meaning of § 7106(a)(2).

Proposals or provisions that require agencies to comply with applicable laws when they exercise their § 7106(a)(2) rights are negotiable. But proposals or provisions that require agencies to comply with applicable laws when they exercise their § 7106(a)(1) rights are not negotiable (unless they are procedures under § 7106(b)(2) or appropriate arrangements under § 7106(b)(3)).

Agency Discretion and “Sole and Exclusive” Discretion

Generally, if a matter is within an agency’s discretion – and not outside the duty to bargain on some other ground, such as it being “covered by” an existing collective-bargaining agreement – then the agency must bargain over it.488

But where a law or an applicable regulation gives an agency “sole and exclusive discretion” over a matter, the Authority has found that it would be contrary to law to require the agency to exercise that discretion through collective bargaining.489 In resolving an agency’s claim that a proposal or provision is not negotiable because the agency has sole and exclusive discretion, the Authority examines the plain wording and legislative history of the statute or regulation that the agency relies on.490 The Authority has found that wording such as “without regard to the provisions of other laws” and “notwithstanding any other provision of law” shows that an agency has sole and exclusive discretion.491 But a law or regulation need not use any specific phrase or words in order to give an agency sole and exclusive discretion.492

Agency Rules and Regulations – “Compelling Need”

Agencies may prescribe rules, regulations, and official declarations of policy (agency rules and regulations) that govern the resolution of matters within their particular agencies.493 Generally, agencies must bargain over proposals that conflict with agency rules and regulations.494

But § 7117(a)(2) of the Statute provides, in pertinent part, that the duty to bargain “extend[s] to matters [that] are the subject of any agency rule or regulation . . . only if the Authority has determined under [§ 7117(b)] that no compelling need (as determined under regulations prescribed by the Authority) exists for the rule or regulation.”495 So an agency need not bargain over a union’s proposal if the agency: (1) identifies a specific agency-wide or primary-national-subdivision-wide rule or regulation; (2) shows that the proposal conflicts with the rule or regulation; and (3) demonstrates that there is a compelling need for the rule or regulation under the standards set forth in § 2424.50 of the Authority’s Regulations. That section provides:

A compelling need exists for an agency rule or regulation concerning any condition of employment when the agency demonstrates that the rule or regulation meets one or more of the following illustrative criteria:

(a) The rule or regulation is essential, as distinguished from helpful or desirable, to the accomplishment of the mission or the execution of functions of the agency or primary national subdivision in a manner that is consistent with the requirements of an effective and efficient government.

(b) The rule or regulation is necessary to ensure the maintenance of basic merit principles.

(c) The rule or regulation implements a mandate to the agency or primary national subdivision under law or other outside authority, which implementation is essentially nondiscretionary in nature.

If an agency claims that a proposal conflicts with an agency rule or regulation for which there is a compelling need, then the compelling-need claim must be resolved in a negotiability proceeding; it cannot be decided in other proceedings, such as ULP proceedings.

4.6 Irrelevance of Prior Agreements and Existing Agency Requirements

That an agency has agreed to a proposal in the past does not mean that it must bargain over similar – or even identical – proposals in the future.499 For example, prior bargaining over permissive subjects does not make future bargaining over those subjects mandatory.500 In addition, that an agency already follows a particular practice – for example, where that practice is embodied in an agency rule or regulation – does not, by itself, make that practice negotiable.501 But, as discussed above, agencies cannot rely on agency rules and regulations to decline to bargain unless there is a compelling need for those rules or regulations.502

4.7 Common Bargaining-Obligation Disputes

As discussed in section 1.9 above, when the Authority resolves negotiability disputes, the Authority may also resolve bargaining-obligation disputes.503 Three types of bargaining-obligation disputes involve claims that: (1) the subject matter of a proposal is “covered by” a collective-bargaining agreement; (2) a union is attempting to bargain over changes in conditions of employment that are only “de minimis”;504 and (3) a union is attempting to bargain at the wrong “level” of the agency – specifically, below the level of recognition.505 We discuss these three examples in more detail here.

(a) “Covered By” Doctrine

Under the Authority’s “covered by” doctrine, a party is not required to bargain over conditions of employment that already have been resolved by bargaining.506 This doctrine applies to any collectively bargained agreement between the parties, including not only term agreements,507 but also more limited agreements such as memoranda of understanding.508 To assess whether a particular proposal is “covered by” the parties’ agreement, the Authority applies a two-prong test.509

Under the first prong, the Authority examines whether the agreement expressly contains the subject matter of the proposal. The Authority does not require an “exact congruence” between the proposal’s subject matter and the agreement’s text; if a “reasonable reader” would conclude that the agreement settles the matter in dispute, then the matter is covered by the parties’ agreement. For example, the Authority has found that an agreement did not expressly contain the subject matter of a proposal where the agreement concerned the same general range of matters as the proposal, but the proposal did not modify or conflict with the agreement’s express terms.

If the agreement does not expressly contain the subject matter of the proposal, then, under the second prong of the “covered by” doctrine, the Authority determines whether the matter is “inseparably bound up with, and . . . thus [is] plainly an aspect of . . . a subject expressly covered by the [agreement].” In order to satisfy the second prong, a proposal must be “more than tangentially related to” a contract provision. Rather, the party asserting the “covered by” argument must demonstrate that the subject matter of the proposal is so commonly considered to be an aspect of the matter set forth in the agreement that the negotiations that resulted in the agreement are presumed to have foreclosed further bargaining over the matter.

(b) “De Minimis” Doctrine

An agency is not required to bargain over a change that has only a “de minimis” effect on conditions of employment. When determining whether a change has only a de minimis effect, the Authority looks to the nature and extent of either the effect, or the reasonably foreseeable effect, of the change on bargaining-unit employees’ conditions of employment. The number of employees affected by a change is not dispositive of whether the change is de minimis.

(c) Attempts to Bargain at Wrong Level

There is no statutory duty to bargain below the level of recognition (which, as stated in section 1.7 above, is the level of the agency at which the bargaining obligation between the agency and the union exists). But bargaining below the level of recognition is a permissive subject of bargaining, so parties at the level of recognition may authorize lower-level bargaining. And note that if the level of recognition is at a lower level in an agency, then the agency cannot decline to bargain solely because the matters over which the union requests bargaining are, or may be, also subject to negotiations at a higher organizational level.
